2. There was a general coldness of devotion among them, v. 7. The measure was filled by the abounding iniquity of the people, and nothing worse; for they were very neglectful of all prayer. A man is not informed by neglecting; There is none that calls on thy name, none that seeks to thee for grace to reform us, and take away sin, or for mercy to relieve us, and take away the judgments which our sins have brought upon us. Therefore people are so bad, because they do not pray; compare Ps. xiv. 3, 4. They are altogether become filthy, for they call not upon the Lord. It grieves all the people, when prayer is restrained among them. (2.) It was very negligently performed; if there was here and there one that called on God's name, it was with a great deal of indifference; There is none that stirs up himself to take hold of God. Note, [1.] To pray is to take hold of God, by faith to take hold of the promises, and the declarations God has made of his good-will to us, and is pleased to do it for us; and what he has promised to give us of himself as of one who is about to depart from us, earnestly begging of him not to leave us; or of one that is departed, soliciting his return; to take hold of him, as he that wrestles takes hold of him he wrestles with; for the seed of Jacob wrestle with, and so prevail. But when we take hold of God, it is as the pleader with his book takes hold of the shore as if he would pull the shore to him, but really it is to pull himself to the shore; so we pray, not to bring God to our mind, but to bring ourselves to his. [2.] These that would take hold of God in prayer so as to prevail with him, must stir up themselves to do it; all that is within us must be employed in the duty, and (all little enough) our affections must be stirred up to the work.

3. All that was within us must be engaged, and summoned into the service; we must stir up the gift that is in us, by an actual consideration of the importance of the work that is before us, and a close application of mind to it; but how can we expect that God should come to us in ways of mercy, when we are apprehensive that this, when those that profess to be intercessors are professed of religion widers, and we grow dry and sapless; our prosperity withers and comes to nothing; we fall to the ground, as despicable and contemptible; and then our iniquities like the wind have taken us away, and hurried us into captivity, as the winds in autumn blow off, and then blow away, the faded, withered leaves," Ps. l. 16. We are left to be the instrument of our own destruction; and then carried away, by the malignant and violent wind of our own iniquity; it withers them, and then ruins them.

2. God brought their troubles upon them by his wrath, (v. 7.) Thou hast hid thy face from us; been displeased with us, and refused to afford us any succour. When they made themselves as an unclean thing, no wonder that God turned his face away from them, as loathing them. Yet this was not all; Thou hast consumed us because of our iniquities. This is the same complaint with that, (Ps. xc. 7, 8.) We are consumed by thine anger; thou hast melted us, so the word is. God had them in the furnace, not to consume them as dross, but to melt them as gold, that they might be refined and new-cast.

3. They claim relation to God as their God, and humbly plead it with him, and in consideration of it cheerfully refer themselves to him; (v. 8.) "But now, O Lord, thou art our Father; though we have conducted ourselves very undutifully and ungratefully toward thee, yet still we have owned thee as our Father; and though thou hast corrected us, yet thou hast not cast us off; foolish and careless are as the grass, and ready to wither and despire, and trampled upon as we are, as our enemies; and therefore, O Lord, our Father; to thee therefore we return in our repentance, as the prodigal arose, and came to his father; to thee we apply ourselves by prayer; from whom shall we expect relief and succour but from our Father? It is the wrath of a Father that we are under, who will be reconciled, and not keep his anger for ever. God is their Father, 1. By creation; he gave them their being, formed them into a people, shaped them as he pleased; We are the clay, and thou our Potter, therefore we will not quarrel with thee, however thou art pleased to deal with us, Jer. xviii. 6. Nay, therefore we will hope that thou wilt deal well with us, that thou who madest us will now-make us, new-form us; though we have weared thee, yet we are all thy people, and therefore we are all as an unclean thing, but we are all the work of thy hands, therefore do away our uncleanness, that we may be fit for thy use, the use we were made for. We are the work of thy hands, therefore forsake us not, Ps. cxxxviii. 8. 2. By covenant; this is pleaded, v. 9. "Behold, see, we beseech thee, we are all thy people, all the people thou hast in the world that make open profession of thee and thine; we are called thy people, our neighbours look upon us as such, and therefore what we suffer reflects upon thee; and the relief that our case requires is expected from thee. We are thy people; and should not a people seek unto their God? ch. viii. 19. We are thine; save us," Ps. cxix. 94. Note, When we are under providential rebukes from God, it is good to keep fast hold of our covenant relation to him.

IV. They are importunate with God for the turning away of his anger; and the pardoning of their sins; (v. 9.) "Be not wrath very sore, O Lord, though we have deserved that thou shouldest, neither remember iniquity for ever against us." They do not expressly pray for the removal of the judgment they were under, as to that, they refer themselves to God. But, 1. They pray that God would be reconciled to them, and then they can be easy, with which they close, or rather mean, "Be not wrath to extremity, but let thine anger be mitigated by the clemency and compassion of a father." They do not say, Lord rebuke us not, for that may be necessary, but, Not in thine anger, not in thy hot displeasure. It is but in a little wrath that God hides his face. 2. They pray that they may not be dealt with according to the desert of their sin, No. Neither remember iniquity for ever against us, Sin is the evil of sin, that it deserves to be remembered for ever; and this is that which they deprecate, that consequence of sin, which is for ever. Those make it to appear that they are truly humbled under the hand of God, who are more afraid of the terror of God's wrath and the fatal consequences of their own sin, than of any judgment whatsoever, looking upon these as the sting of death; it was a most magnificent representation, or memorial of the melancholy condition they were in, and the ruins they were growing under.

1. Their own houses were in ruins, v. 10. The cities of Judah were destroyed by the Chaldeans, and the inhabitants of them were carried away, so that there was none to repair them or take any notice of them; which in a few years make them look like perfect deserts; Thy holy cities are a wilderness. The cities of Judah are called holy cities, for the people were unto God a kingdom of priests. The cities had synagogues in them, in which God was served; and therefore they lamented the ruins of them, and insisted upon this in pleading with God for them, not so much that they were stately cities, richly adorned or furnished, but that they were the holy cities in which God's name was known, professed, and called upon; these cities are a wilderness, the beauty of them is sullied, they are neither inhabited nor visited, as formerly; They have burnt up all the synagogues of God in the land, Ps. lxxiv. 8. Nor was it only the lesser cities that were thus left as a wilderness unfrequented, but even Zion is a wilderness, the city of David itself lies in ruins, Jerusalem, that was beautiful for situation and the joy of the whole earth, is now deformed, and is become the scorn and scandal of the whole earth; that noble city is a desolation, a heap of rubbish. See what devastations sin brings upon a people; and an external profession of sincerity will be no fence against them; holy cities, if they become wicked cities, will be soonest of all turned into a desert, Amos, v. 18.

2. God's house was in ruins, v. 11. This they lament most of all, that the temple was burned with fire; but, as soon as it was built, they were told what their sin would bring it to; (2 Chron. vii. 21.) This house which is high shall be an astonishment. Observe how pathetically they bewail the ruins of the temple; (1.) It was their holy place, generationbeguiling, but the holiness of it was, in their eye, the greatest beauty of it, and, consequently, the profanation of it was he saddest part of its desolation, and that which grieved them most, that the sacred services which used to be performed there, were discontinued. (2.) It was the place where their fathers praised God with their sacrifices and songs; what pity it is that that should lie in ashes, which had been for so many ages the glory of their nation! It aggravated the present desolation of the house, that their fathers had so often praised God with them. They interest God in the cause, when they plead that it was the house where he had been praised, and put him in mind too of his covenant with their fathers, by taking notice of their fathers praising him. (3.) With it all their pleasant things were laid waste; all their desires and delights, all those things which were employed by them in the service of God, which they had so often praised; things bright in; not only the furni- niture of the temple, the altars and table, but especially the sabbaths and new moons, and all their religious feasts, which they used to keep with gladness; their ministers and solemn assemblies, these were all a desolation. Note, God's people reckon their sacred things their most delectable things; rob them of holy ordinances and the means of grace, and you lay waste all their pleasant things. What have they more? Observe here how God and his people have their interests twisted and interchanged; when they speak of the cities for their own habitation, they call them thy holy cities, for to God they were dedicated; when they speak of the temple wherein God dwelt, they call it our beautiful house, and its furniture our pleasant things, for they had heartily expected and looked for the enjoyment of them, and all the interests of it. If thus we interest God in all our concerns by devoting them to his service, and interest ourselves in all his concerns by laying them near our hearts, we may with satisfaction leave both with him, for he will perfect both.

VI. They conclude with an affectionate exposition, humbly arguing with God concerning their present complaints; (v. 12.) With whom shall I confide myself for these things? Or, Canst thou contain thyself at these things? Canst thou see thy temple ruined, and not resent it, not revenge it? Has the jealous God forgotten to be jealous, (Ps. lxxiv. 22.) Arise, O God, plead thine own cause. Lord, thou art insulted, thou art blasphemed; and will thou hold thy peace, and take no notice of it? Shall the highest affronts that can be done to heaven, pass thy deafness or thy eyes; and will thou suffer thy house, thy temple, to be thus profaned and profaned, while the enemies of the Lord, and the enemies of his cause, are not punished for it? What have the nations of the earth to do with this, thy holy place, or thy holy city, or thy holy temple, which is thy house? or with these thy judgments, which thou hast set in the midst of them; or with these thy zealous causes? The Lord is thy judge, and he will give thee justice in all these things. When God is unjust, he is still a God, and the upright under such a dispensation may with security and confidence appeal to him, and expect his judgment and vindication.

We are now drawing toward the conclusion of this evangelical prophecy, the last two last chapters of which direct us to look forward to the future dispensation, when God is to form the new earth, the new world which the gospel-dispensation should bring in, and the separation that should by it be made between the precious and the vile; For judgment (says Christ) am I come into this world. And why should it seem absurd that the prophet here should speak of that to which all the prophets bare witness? 1 Pet. L.
10, 11. The rejection of the Jews, and the calling in of the Gentiles, are often mentioned in the New Testament, as that which was foreseen and foretold by the prophets, Acts x. 43.—xiii. 40. Rom. xvi. 26. In this chapter, we have, 1. The preventing of the Gentiles with the gospel, ch. v. 11. The rejection of the Jewish nation, and the unbelief of the Jews, v. 2. 7. III. The saving of a remnant of them, by bringing them into the gospel church, v. s. 10. 14. The judgments of God, that should pursue the rejected Jews, v. 11., 16. V. The blessings reserved for the Christian church, which should be its joy and glory, v. 17—23. But these things are here prophesied of under the type and figure of the difference God made between the Gentiles and Israel, which was preceded by the fifteen chapters, and by the former parts of the prophecy, which are sometimes called the first book of the prophecy, which was written by the hand of the prophet Isaiah.}

1. I AM sought of them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not: I said, Behold me, behold me, unto a nation that was not called by my name, 2. I have spread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people, which walketh in a way that was not good, after their own thoughts. 3. A people that provoketh me to anger continually to my face; that sacrificeth in gardens, and burneth incense upon altars of brick; 4. Which remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments; which eat swine's flesh, and brood of abominable things is in their vessels; 5. Which say, Stand by thyself, come near not to me; for I am holier than thou. These are a smoke in my nose, a fire that burneth all the day. 6. Behold, it is written before me; I will not keep silence, but will recompense, even recompense into their bosom: 7. Your iniquities, and the iniquities of your fathers together, saith the Lord, which have burnt incense upon the mountains, and blasphemed me upon the hills: therefore will I measure their former work into their bosom.

The apostle Paul (an expositor we may depend upon) has given us the true sense of these verses, and told us what was the event they pointed at, and were fulfilled in, namely, the calling in of the Gentiles, and the rejection of the Jews, by the preaching of the gospel, Rom. x. 20, 21. And he observes, that herein Exod. is very bold, not only in foretelling a thing so improbable ever to be brought about, but in foretelling it to the Jews, who would take it as a gross affront to their nation, and therein Moses's words would be made good, (Deut. xxxii. 21.) I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are not.

I. It is here foretold that the Gentiles, who had been afar off, should be made nigh, v. 1. Paul reads it thus, I was found of them that sought me not, I was made manifest to them that asked not for me. Observe what a wonderful and blessed change was made with them, and how they were surprised into it. 1. Those who had long been without God in the world, shall now be set a-seeking him; those who had not said, Where is God my Maker? shall now begin to inquire after him: neither they nor their fathers had called upon his name, but either lived without prayer, or prayed to stocks and stones, the work of men's hands. But now they shall be baptized, and call on the name of the Lord, Acts ii. 21. With what pleasure does the great God here speak of his being sought unto, and how does he glory in it; especially by those who in time past had not asked for him! For there is joy in heaven over great sinners who repent. 2. God shall prevent their prayers with his blessings; I am found of them that sought me not. This happy acquaintance and correspondence between God and the Gentile world began on his side; they came to know God because the word of God was preached to them, (Acts x. 14, 15.) and the Jews after their return out of captivity, between those that feared God and those that did not; with reproofs of the sins then found among them, and promises of the blessings then in reserve for them. every imagination of the thought of our hearts is only evil. God had told them his thoughts, what his mind and will were, but they would walk after their own thoughts, would do what they thought best. [2.] They were very provoking! this was God's complaint of them all along—they grieved him, they vexed his Holy Ghost with their continance, would make him their Enemy. They provoked me to anger continually to my face. They cared not what affront they gave to God, though it were in his sight and presence, in a downright contempt of his authority, and defiance of his justice; and this continually! it had been their way and manner ever since they were a people; witness the day of temptation in the wilderness. This was the sin that brought them into captivity, and, though the captivity pretty well cured them of it, yet, when the final ruin of that nation came, that was again brought into the account against them; for in the day when God visits, he will visit that, Exod. xxxii. 34. Perhaps there were many, long after the captivity, who, though they did not worship other gods, were yet guilty of the disorders here mentioned; for God's institution, than an altar of bricks in comparison with the golden altar which God appointed them to burn incense on: or upon tiles, so some read it; such as they covered their flat-roofed houses with, and on them sometimes they burned incense to their idols, as appears, 2 Kings xxxiii. 12. where we read of altars on the top of the upper chamber of Ahaz, and Jer. xix. 13. of their burning incense to the host of heaven, then upon their altars. 3. They use necromancy, or consulting with the dead, and, in order to that, they remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments, to seek for the living to the dead, (ch. viii. 19.) as the witch of Ender. Or, They used to consult the evil spirits that haunted the sepulchres. 4. They violated the laws of God about their meat, and broke through the distinction between clean and unclean, before it was taken away by the gospel. They ate swine's flesh; some indeed chose rather to die than to do it, as Eleazer and the seven brethren in the story of the Maccabees. But it is probable that many ate of it, especially when it came to be a condition of life. In our Saviour's time, we read of a vast herd of swine among them; which gives us cause to suspect that there were many then who made it their law to eat swine's flesh, for which they were justly punished in the destruction of the swine. And the broth, or pieces, of other forbidden meats, called here abominable things, was in their vessels, and made use of for food. The forbidden meat is called an abomination, and they that meddle with it are said to make themselves abominable, Lev. xi. 44. Those that durst not come near to the house of the Lord, how, indeed, they would come as near as might be to that which was forbidden, to show how they contrived the forbidden fruit. Perhaps this is here put figuratively for all forbidden pleasures and profits which are obtained by sin, that abominable thing which the Lord hates; they loved to be dallying with it, to be tasteing of its birth. But those who thus take a pride in venturing upon the borders of sin, and the brink of it, are in danger of falling into the depths of it. But

Secondly, The most provoking iniquity of the Jews in our Saviour's time, was, their pride and hypocrisy, that sin of the scribes and Pharisees, against which Christ den unced so many woes, v. 5. They say, "Stand by thyself; keep off!" (get thee to thine, so the original is) keep to thy own companions, but come not near me, lest thou pollute me; touch me not, lest thou be defiled. How many families (says God,) such a smoke as comes not from a quick fire, which soon becomes glowing and pleasant, but from a fire of wet wood, which burns all the day, and is nothing but smoke. Note, Nothing in men is more odious and offensive to God than a proud conceit of themselves, and contempt of others; for commonly these are most unholy of all, that think themselves better than they are. [2.] The controversy God had with them for this. The proof against them is plain; Behold, it is written before me, v. 6. It is written, to be remembered against them in time to come; for they may not perhaps be immediately reckoned with. The sins of sinners, and particularly the vain-glorious boasts and scorns of hypocrites, are laid up in store with God, Deut. xxxiii. 54. And what is written shall be read and proceeded upon; "I will not keep silence always, though I may keep silence long." They shall not think him altogether such a one as themselves, as sometimes they have done; but he will recompense, even recompense into their bosom. Those basely abuse religion, that honourable and sacred thing, who make their profession of it the matter of their pride, or the jealous and fearful for God's name; will be made amply answerable for it; their boast of shall but serve to aggravate their condemnation. [1.] The iniquity of their fathers shall come against them; not but that their own sin, deserved whatever judgments God brought upon them, and much heavier; and they owned it, Ezra ix. 13. But God would not have wrought so great a desolation upon them, if he had not therein had an eye to the sins of their fathers. Therefore in the last destruction of Jerusalem God is said to bring upon them the blood of the Old Testament martyrs, even that of Abel, Matth. xxiii. 35. God will reckon with them, not only for their fathers' idolatry but for their high places, their burning incense, upon the mountains and the hills, though perhaps it was to the true God only. This was blaspheming or profaning God's name, and God was angry at it. The people upon the choice he had made of the place where he would record his name, and the promise he had made, that there he would meet them, and bless them. [2.] Their own with that shall bring ruin upon them: Your iniquities, and the iniquities of your fathers together, the one aggravating the other, constitute the former work, which though it may seem to pass over the eyes of men and be in the measure into their bosom. God will render into the bosom, not only of his open enemies, (Ps. lxxix. 12.) but of his false and treacherous friends, the reproach wherewith they have reproached him.
3. Thus saith the Lord, As the new wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not; for a blessing is in it: so will I do for my servants' sakes, that I may not destroy them all. 9. And I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains: and mine elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there. 10. And Sharon shall be a fold of flocks, and the valley of Achor a place for the herds to lie down in, for my people that have sought me.

This is expounded by St. Paul, Rom. xi. 1—5, where, when upon occasion of the rejection of the Jews, it is asked, Hath God then cast away his people? he answers, No; for, at this time there is a remnant according to the election of grace. This prophecy has reference to that distinguished remnant. When that hypocritical nation is to be destroyed, God will separate and secure to himself some from among them; some of the Jews shall be brought to embrace the Christian faith, shall be added to the church, and so be saved. And our Saviour has told us, that for the sake of these elect, the days of the destruction of the Jews should be shortened, and a narrower lot be cast upon them. Which would have proceeded to that degree, that no flood should be saved, Matth. xxiv. 22.

1. This is illustrated here by a comparison, v. 8. When a vine is so blasted and withered, that there seems to be no sap or life in it, and therefore the dress of the vineyard is inclined to pluck it up, or cut it down, yet, if ever so little of the juice of the grape is fit to make new wine, be found, though in one cluster, a lover of its berries, and says, Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it; there is life in the root, and hope that yet it may become good for something. Good men are blessings to the places where they live; and sometimes God spares whole cities and nations for the sake of a few such in them. How ambitious should we be of this honour, not only to be distinguished from others, but serviceable to others?

2. Here is a description of those that shall make up this saved remnant; (1.) They are such as serve God; It is for my servant's sake, (v. 8.) and they are my servants that shall dwell there, v. 9. God's faithful servants, however they are looked upon, are the best friends their country has; and those who serve him, therein serve his generation. (2.) They are such as seek God; as make it the end of their lives to glorify God, and the business of their lives to call upon him. It is for my people that have sought me. They that seek God shall find him, and shall find him their bountiful Rewarder.

3. Here is an account of the mercy God has in store for them. The remnant that shall return out of captivity shall have a happy settlement again in their own land, and that by an hereditary right, as a seed out of Jacob, in whom the family is kept up and the entail preserved; and from whom, as from the seed sown, shall spring a numerous increase; and these typify the remnant of Jacob that shall be incorporated into the gospel-church by faith. (1.) They shall have a good portion for themselves. They shall inherit my mountains, the holy mountains on which Jerusalem and the temple were built; or, the mountains of Canaan, the land of promise, typifying the covenant of grace, which all God's servants, his elect, both inhabit and inherit; they make it their refuge, their rest and residence, so they dwell in it, are at home in it; and they have taken it to be, their heritage for ever, and it shall be to them an inheritance incorruptible.

4. God's choicest, the spiritual seed of praying Jacob, shall be the inheritors of his mountains of bliss and joy, and shall be carried safe to them through the vale of tears. (2.) They shall have a greater protection for their flocks. v. 10. Sharon and the valley of Achor shall again be as well replenished as ever they were, with cattle. Sharon lay westward, near Joppa. Achor lay eastward, near Jordan; which intimates, that they shall recover the possession of the whole land, that they shall have wherewith to stock it all, and that they shall peaceably enjoy it, and there shall be none to disturb them, or make them afraid. God's ordinances are the fields and valleys where the sleep of Christ shall go in and out, and find pasture. (John x. 9.) and where they are made to lie down, (Ps. xxiii. 2.) as Israel's herds in the valley of Achor, Hos. ii. 15.

11. But ye are they that forsake the Lord, that forget my holy mountain, that prepare a table for that troop, and that furnish the drink-offering unto that number. 12. Therefore will I number you to the sword, and ye shall all bow down to the slaughter: because when I called, ye did not answer; when I spake, ye did not hear: but did evil before mine eyes, and did choose that wherein I delighted not. 13. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry; behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty; behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed: 14. Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit. 15. And ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen: for the Lord God shall slay thee, and call his servants by another name: 16. That he who blesseth himself in the earth, shall bless himself in the God of truth; and he that sweareth in the earth, shall swear by the God of truth; because the former troubles are forgotten, and because they are hid from mine eyes.

Here the different states of the godly and wicked, of the Jews that believed, and of those that still persisted in unbelief, are set the one over against the other, as life and death, good and evil, the blessing and the curse.

1. Here is the fearful doom of those that persisted in their idolatry after the deliverance out of Babylon, and in infidelity after the preaching of the gospel of Christ. This doom is the same upon both; (v. 12.) "I will number you to the sword, as sheep for the slaughter, and there shall be no escaping, no standing out, ye shall all bow down to it." God's judgments come, 1. Regularly, and are executed according to the commission. Those fall by the sword, that are numbered or counted out to it, and none besides. Though the sword seems to devour promiscuously one as well as another, yet it is made to know its number, and shall not exceed. 2. Irresistibly; the strongest and most stout-hearted sinners shall be forced to bow before them; for none ever hardened their hearts against God, and prospered. Now observe what the sins are, that number them to the sword.
counted his life madness, and his end without honour; but now, how is he numbered with the saints, and his lot is among the chosen?

Now the difference of their states here lies in two things.

(1.) In point of comfort and satisfaction, [1.] God's servants shall eat and drink; they shall have the bread of life to feed, to feast upon continually, shall be abundantly replenished with the goodness of his house, and shall want nothing that is good for them. Heaven's happiness will be to them an everlasting feast of loving kindness, and to them which are nigh to God shall the bread of life be given; and none shall hunger and thirst after. But those who set their hearts upon the world, and place their happiness in that, shall be hungry and thirsty, always empty, always craving; for it is not bread, it surfeits, but it satisfies not. In communion with God, and dependence upon him, there is full satisfaction, but in sinful pursuits there is nothing but disappointment.

[2.] God's servants shall rejoice and sing for joy of heart; they have constant cause for joy, and there is nothing that may be an occasion of grief to them, but they have an alay sufficient for it. As far as faith is an act and exercise, they have a heart to rejoice, and their joy is their strength. They shall rejoice in their hope, because it shall not make them ashamed. Heaven will be a world of ever-lasting joy; the things that are now seed time shall be harvest time, and those who are sowers of seed in the field, shall reap the harvest. But, on the other hand, they that forsake the Lord shut themselves out from all true joy, for they shall be ashamed of their vain confidence in themselves, and their own righteousness, and the hopes they had built thereon. When the expectations of bliss, wherewith they had flattered themselves, are frustrated, O what confusion will fill their faces! Then shall they cry for sorrow of heart, and howl for vexation of spirit; perhaps in this world, when their laughter shall be turned into mourning and their joy into heaviness; at furthest, in that world, where the torment will be endless, careless, and remediless; nothing but weeping and wailing, and gnashing of teeth, to eternity. Let these two be compared; Now he is comforted, and Thou art tormented; and which of the two will we choose to take our lot with?

(2.) In point of honour and reputation, v. 15, 16. The memory of the just is, and shall be, blessed, but the name of the wicked shall rot. [1.] The name of the idolaters and unbelievers shall be left for a curse, shall be loaded with ignominy, and made for ever infamous. It shall be used in giving bad advice; You are a godly man?—God make thee as miserable as a Jew. It shall be for a curse to God's chosen, for a warning to them; they shall be afraid of falling under the curse upon the Jewish nation; of perishing by the same example of unbelief. The curse of those whom God rejects, should make his chosen stand in awe. The Lord God shall slay thee; he shall quite put to death all their favourite projects; the hope of their lives being taken off them being a people, they shall no longer live as a nation, nor ever be incorporated again. [2.] The name of God's chosen shall become a blessing; He shall call his servants by another name. The children of the covenant shall no longer be called Jews, but Christians; and to them, under that name, all the promises and privileges of the new covenant shall be secured. But they are called out of the old name; it shall not be confined to one nation, but with it men shall bless themselves in the earth, all the world over. God shall have servants out of all nations, that shall all be dignified with this new name. First, They shall give honour to God both in their prayers and in their solemn oaths; in their addresses for his favour as their felicity, and their appeals to his justice as their judge. This is a part of our homage we owe to God; we must bless our-
For, behold, I create new heavens, and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. 18. But be you glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. 19. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying. 20. There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die a hundred years old; but the sinner, being a hundred years old, shall be accursed. 21. And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. 22. They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands. 23. They shall not labour in vain, nor bring forth for trouble: for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them. 24. And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear. 25. The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord.

If these promises were in part fulfilled when the Jews, after their return out of captivity, were settled in peace in their own land, and brought as it were into a new world, yet were they to have their accomplishment in the gospel-church, militant first, and at length triumphant; The Jerusalem that is from above is free, and is the mother of us all. In the graces and comforts which believers have in and from Christ, we are to look for this new heaven and new earth. It is in the gospel that old things are fast away, and all things are become new, and by it that those who are in Christ are new creatures, 2 Cor. v. 17. It was a mighty and happy change that was accomplished. In this their former troubles were forgotten; but here it rises much higher, that the former world shall be forgotten, and shall no more come in mind. They that were converted to the Christian faith were so transported with the comforts of it, that all the comforts they were before acquainted with, became as nothing to them; not only their foregoing griefs, but their foregoing joys, were lost and swallowed up in this. The glorified saints will therefore have forgotten this world, because they will be entirely taken up with the other. For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth. See how inexhaustible the divine power is; the same God that created one heaven and earth, can create another. See how entire the happiness of the saints is: it shall be all of a piece; with the new heavens God will create them (if they have occasion for it to make them happy) a new earth too. The world is yours, if you be Christ's, 1 Cor. iii. 22. When God is reconciled to us, which gives us a new heaven, the creatures too are reconciled to us, which gives us a new earth. The future glory of the saints will be so entirely different from what they ever knew before, that it may well be called creation. I make all things new, Rev. xxi. 5. 1. There shall be new joys. For, (1.) All the church's friends, and all that belong to her, shall rejoice; (v. 18.) You shall be glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create. The new things which God creates in and by his gospel, are, and shall be, matter of everlasting joy to all believers. My servants shall rejoice; (v. 13.) at last they shall, though now they mourn. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord. (2.) The church shall be the matter of their joy; so pleasant, so prosperous, shall her condition be: I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. The church shall not only rejoice, but be rejoiced in. These that have sorrowed with the church, shall rejoice with her. (3.) The prosperity of the church shall be a joy to God himself, who has pleasure in the prosperity of his servants; (v. 19.) I will rejoice in Jerusalem's joy, and will rejoice in my people; for in all their affliction he was afflicted. God will not only rejoice in the church's well-doing, but will himself rejoice to do her good, and rest in his love to her, Zech. iii. 17. What God rejoices in, it becomes us to rejoice in. (4.) There shall be no alloy of this joy, nor any alteration of this happy condition of the church: The voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her. If this relate to any state of the church in this life, it means... no more than that the former occasions of grief shall not return, but God's people shall long enjoy an uninterrupted tranquility. But in heaven it shall have a full accomplishment, and both of the periods of the perpetuity of the promised rest; there all tears shall be wiped away.

2. There shall be new life, v. 20. Untimely deaths by the sword or sickness shall be no more known as they have been, and by this means there shall be no more the voice of crying, v. 19. When there shall be no more death, there shall be no more sadness, Rev. xx. 4. As death has rest in God, so life shall reign by righteousness, Rom. v. 14, 21.

(1.) Believers through Christ shall be satisfied with life, though it be ever so short on earth. If an infant end its days quickly, yet it shall not be reckoned to die untimely, for the shorter its life is, the longer will its rest be; though death reign over them that have not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, yet they, dying in the arms of Christ, the second Adam, and belonging to his kingdom, are not to be called infants of days, but even the child shall be reckoned to die a hundred years old, for he shall rise again at full age, shall rise to eternal life. Some understand it of children who in their childhood are so eminent for wisdom and grace, and by death nipt in the blossom, that they may be said to die a hundred years old.

And as for our children, though they shall fill the earth with the fruits of righteousness, which they shall still bring forth in old age; to show that the Lord is upright, and then it is a good old age. An old man, who is wise, and good, and useful, may truly be said to have filled his days. Old men, who have their hearts upon the world, have never filled their days, never have enough of this world, but would still carry on in action, as long as their lives and strength permit; but the true believer is well satisfied with life; he never is obliged to cry, Why my days are the days of a tree, are the days of my people; as the days of an oak; (ch. vi. 13.) whose substance is in it, though it cast its leaves; though it be stripped every year with its fruits, yet there is some life in it, as the days of the tree of life; so the LXX. Christ is to them the tree of life, and in him believers enjoy all those spiritual comforts which are typified by the abundance of temporal blessings here promised; and it shall not be in the power of their enemies to deprive them of these blessings, or disturb them in the enjoyment of them.

3. There shall be a new generation rising up in their stead, to inherit and enjoy these blessings; (v. 23.) They shall not labour in vain, for they shall not only enjoy the work of their hands themselves, but they shall leave it with satisfaction to those that shall come after them, and not with such a melancholy prospect as Solomon did; (Eccl. ii. 18, 19.) They shall not beget and bring forth children for trouble; for they are themselves the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and there is a blessing entailed upon them by descent from their ancestors, which their offspring with them shall partake of, and shall be, as well as they, the seed of the blessed of the Lord. They shall not bring forth for trouble; for, (1.) God will make their children that rise up come, begets to them; they shall have the joy of seeing them walk in the path of truth. (2.) He will make the times that come after correspond to those that are past, as they shall be good, so it shall be well with them; they shall not be brought forth to days of trouble; nor shall it ever be said, Blessed is the womb that bare not. In the gospel-church Christ's name shall be borne up by a succession; A seed shall serve him, (Ps. xxii. 30.) the seed of the blessed of the Lord.

4. There shall be a good correspondence between the seed of God and the children of the world; for as they call, I will answer. God will prevent their prayers with the blessings of his goodness; David did but say, I will confess, and God forgave, Ps. xxxiii. 5. The father of the prodigal met him in his return; While they are yet speaking, before they have finished their prayer, I will give them the very thing they pray for, or the assurances and blessings of it. These are high expressions of God's readiness to hear prayer; and this appears much more in the grace of the gospel than it did under the law; we owe the comfort of it to the mediation of Christ as our Advocate with the Father, and are obliged in gratitude to give a ready ear to God's calls.

6. There shall be a good correspondence between them and their neighbours; (v. 23.) The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, as they did in Noah's ark. God's people, though they are as sheep in the midst of wolves, shall be safe and unhurt; for God will not so much break the power, and tie the hands, of their enemies, as formerly; but he will turn their hearts, will alter their dispositions by his grace. When Paul, who had been a persecutor of the disciples, (who, being of the tribe of Benjamin, ravened as a wolf, Gen. xlix. 27.) joined himself to them and became a great lover of them; and the wolf fed together with the lamb fed together. So also when the enmity between the Jews and Gentiles was slain, all hostilities ceased, and they fed together as one shepherd under Christ the great Shepherd, John x. 16. The enemies of the church ceased to do the mischief they had done, and its members ceased to be so quarrelsome with, and injurious to, one another as they had been, so that there was no quarrelling without or from within to hurt or destroy, none to disturb it, much less to ruin it, in all the holy mountain; as was promised, ch. xi. 9. For, (1.) Men shall be changed; the lion shall no more be a beast of prey, as perhaps he never would have been if sin had not entered, but shall eat straw like the bullock, shall know his owner, and his master's crib, as the 309 was 12. 1 Cor. 15. 2. The Jews in the prophet's time, and afterward, in Christ's time, gloried much in the temple, and promised themselves great things from it; to humble them therefore, and to shake their vain confidence, both the prophecies and Christ foretold the ruin of the temple, that God would leave it, and then it would soon be desolate. After it was destroyed by the Chaldeans, it soon recovered itself, and the ceremonial services were re-revived with it; but by the Romans it was made a perpetual desolation, and the ceremonial law was abolished with it. That the world might be pre-prepared for this, they were often told, as here, of what little account the temple was with God.

1. That he did not need it. Heaven is the throne of his glory and government; there he sits, infinitely exalted in the highest dignity and dominion, above all blessing and praise. The earth is his footstool, on which he stands, overthrowing all the affairs of it according to his will. If God has so bright a throne, so large a footstool, where then is the house they can build unto God, that can be the residence of his glory, or, where is the place of his rest? What sa-tection and blessing is given him? Eternity itself is made with men's hands? What occasion has he, as we have, for a house to repose himself in, who faithful, not, neither is weary, who neither slumbers nor sleeps? Or, if he had occasion, he would not tell us, (Ps. I. 12.) for all these things hath his hand made, heaven and all its courts, earth and all its borders, and all the hosts of both. All these things have been, and are, and shall be, for ever.

CHAP. LXVI. The scope of this chapter is much the same as that of the foregoing chapter, and many expressions of it are the same; it therefore looks the same way, to the different state of the prophetic prophetic and among the Jews, at their return out of captivity; but that typifying the rejection of the Jews in the days of the Messiah, the conversion of the Gentiles, and the setting up of the gospel kingdom in the world, was the chapter applied by the Chaldeans to the dismantling of the temple by the planting of the Christian church; (Acts vii. 49, 50.) which may serve as a key to the whole chapter. We have here, I. The prophet's forericht, (v. 1.) the comparison with moral and religious, and an intimation therein of his purpose shortly to put an end to the temple and sacrifice, and reject those that adhered to them, v. 1. - 4. II. The salvation God will in due time work for his people, out of the hands of their oppressors, (v. 5.) speaking terror to the persecutors, (v. 6.) and comfort to the persented, a speedy and complete deliverance, (v. 7. - 9.) a joyful settlement, (v. 10, 11.) the accession of the Gentiles to them, and abundance of satisfaction therein, v. 12. - 14. III. The terrible vengeance which God will bring upon the enemies of his church and people, v. 15. - 18. IV. The happy establishment of the church, upon large and sure foundations, its constant attendance on God, and triumph over its enemies, v. 19. - 25. And we may well expect that this evangelical prophet, here, in the close of his prophecy, should (as he does) look as far forward to the latter days, to the last day, to the days of eternity.

I. THUS saith the Lord, The heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool; where is the house that ye build unto me? and where is the place of my rest? 2. For all those things hath my hand made, and all those things have been, saith the Lord: but to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word. 3. He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man; he that sacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck; he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered swine's blood; he that burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol: yea, they have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighteth in their abominations. 4. I also will choose their delusions, and will bring their fears upon them; because when I called, none did answer; when I spake, they did not hear: but they did evil before mine eyes, and chose that in which I delighted not.

Here.

1. The temple is slighted in comparison with a gracious soul, v. 1, 2. The Jews in the prophet's time, and afterward, in Christ's time, gloried much in the temple, and promised themselves great things from it; to humble them therefore, and to shake their vain confidence, both the prophecies and Christ foretold the ruin of the temple, that God would leave it, and then it would soon be desolate. After it was destroyed by the Chaldeans, it soon recovered itself, and the ceremonial services were re-revived with it; but by the Romans it was made a perpetual desolation, and the ceremonial law was abolished with it. That the world might be prepared for this, they were often told, as here, of what little account the temple was with God.

2. That he would not need it. Heaven is the throne of his glory and government; there he sits, infinitely exalted in the highest dignity and dominion, above all blessing and praise. The earth is his footstool, on which he stands, overthrowing all the affairs of it according to his will. If God has so bright a throne, so large a footstool, where then is the house they can build unto God, that can be the residence of his glory, or, where is the place of his rest? What sau-tection and blessing is given him? Eternity itself is made with men's hands? What occasion has he, as we have, for a house to repose himself in, who faithful, not, neither is weary, who neither slumbers nor sleeps? Or, if he had occasion, he would not tell us, (Ps. I. 12.) for all these things hath his hand made, heaven and all its courts, earth and all its borders, and all the hosts of both. All these things have been, and are, and shall be, for ever.

How detectable their sacrifices were to God. The carnal Jews, after their return out of captivity, though they relapsed not to idolatry, grew very careless and loose in the service of God; they brought the torn, and the lame, and the sick, for sacrifice, (Mal. I. 8, 13.) and this made their servi-cices abominable to God; they had no regard to their sacrifices, and therefore how could they think God should have any regard to them. The unbelieving Jews, after the gospel was preached, and in it notice given of the offering up of the great Sacrifice, which put an end to all the ceremonial services, continued to offer sacrifices, as if the law of Moses had been still in force, and could have made the scenes thereunto perfect: this was an abomination; He that kills an ox for his own table, is welcome to do it; but he that now kills it, and thus kills it for God, brings a maimed, a broken, a gory, offensive to God as murder itself; he that does it, does in effect set aside Christ's sacrifice, treads under foot the blood of the covenant, and makes himself accessory to the guilt of the body and blood of the Lord; setting up what Christ died to abolish. He that sacrifices a lamb, if it be a corrupt thing, and not the male in his flock, the best he has, if he think to put God off, or touch the brass neck, instead of pleasing him; it is as if he cut off a dog's neck; a creature in the eye of the law so vile, that whereas an ass might be redeemed, the price of a dog was never to be brought into the treasury; Deut. xxiii. 18. He that offers an oblation, a meat-offering, or drink-offering, is as if he thought to make atonement with swine's blood; a creature that must be eaten or touched, and an offering made abominable, (ch. lxv. 4.) much more the blood of it. He that burns incense to God, and so puts contempt upon the incense of Christ's intercession, is as if he blessed an idol; it was as great an affront to God as if they had paid their devotion to a false god. Hypocrisy and profaneness are as provoking as idolatry.

What their wickedness was, which made their sacrifices thus detestable; it is because they have chosen their own ways, the ways of their own wicked hearts, and not only their hands do, but their soul delights in, their abominations; they were vicious and inmoral in their conversations, chose the way of sin rather than the way of God's commandments, and took pleasure in that which was provoking to God; this made their sacrifices so offensive to God, ch. 1. 11.-15. Those that pretend to honour God by a profession of religion, and yet live wicked lives, put an affront upon him, as if he were the Patron of sin. And that which was an aggravation of their wickedness, was, that they persisted in it, notwithstanding the frequent calls given them to repent and reform; they turned a deaf ear to all the warnings of divine justice and all the offers of divine grace; When answerers are sent them, they will not hear; ch. 12. And the same follows here that did there; They did evil before mine eyes. Being deaf to what he said, they cared not what he saw, but chose that in which they knew he delighted not. How could they expect to please him in their devotions, who took no care to please him in their conversations, but, on the contrary, designed to provoke him?

Sacrifices must be offered with any thing to them, with a terror to them, that which they themselves have been afraid of, and thought to escape by sinful shifts. Unbelieving hearts, and unpurified, unpacificed consciences, need no more to make them miserable, than to have their own fears brought upon them.

5. Hear the word of the Lord; ye that tremble at his word; Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified: but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed. 6. A voice of noise from the city, a voice from the temple, a voice of the Lord that rendereth recompense to his enemies. 7. Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man child. 8. Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children. 9. Shall I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth? saith the Lord: I shall cause to bring forth, and shoot the womb! saith thy God. 10. Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that love her; rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her: 11. That ye may suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations, that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the abundance of her glory. 12. For thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream: then shall ye suck, ye shall be borne upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees. 13. As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem. 14. And when ye see this, your heart shall rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like an herb; and the hand of the Lord shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies.

The prophet, having denounced God's judgments against an hypocritical nation, that made a jest of God's word, and would not answer him when he called to them, here turns his speech to those that trembled at his word, to comfort and encourage them; they shall not be involved in the judgments that are coming upon their unbelieving nation. Ministers must distinguish, thus, that, when they speak terror to the wicked, they may not make the hearts of the righteous sad. Bone Christiane, hoc nihil ad te—Good Christian, this is nothing to thee. The prophet having assured those that trembled at God's word, of a gracious look from him, (v. 2.) here brings them a gracious message from him. The word of God has comforts in store for those that by true baptism for sins are preserved from them. There were these (v. 4.) who, when God shake, would not hear; but if same will not, others will. If the heart tremble at the word, the ear will be open to it. Now what is here said to them? 1. Let them know that God will plead their just but injured cause against their persecutors; (v. 5.) Your brethren that hated you, said, Let the Lord be glorified. But he shall appear to your joy. This perhaps might have reference to the case of some of the Jews at their return out of captivity; but nothing like it appears in the history, and therefore it is rather to be referred to the first preachers and preachers of the Gospel in Jerusalem, and in that case it is very applicable. Observe, 1. How the faithful servants of God were persecuted; their brethren hated them. The apostles were Jews by birth, and yet even in the cities of the Gentiles, the Jews they met with there were most bitter and implacable enemies, and stirred up the Gentiles against them. The sparse complains, (Cant. i. 6.) that her maidens were wounded, and her vines were plucked, might be a figure of their state. They were braided our Lord Jesus with this, Thine own nation have delivered thee unto me, John xviii. 33. Their brethren, who should have loved them, and encouraged them, for their work's sake, hated them, and cast them out of their synagogues, excommunicated them, as if they had been the greatest blemishes, who really were the greatest blessings of their church and nation. This was a fruit of the old enmity in the seed of the serpent against the seed of the woman. They that hated Christ hated his disciples, because they supported his kingdom and interest; (John xvi. 18.) and they cast them out for his name's sake, because they were called by his name, and called upon his name, and laid out themselves to advance his name. Note, It is no new thing for church-serpents to himself and his party, and the church's enemies, that was intended for her defence, to be turned against her best friends, by the treachery of her governors. And they that did this said, Let the Lord be glorified; they pretended conscience, and a zeal for the honour of God and the church in it, and did it with all the formalities of devotion. Our Saviour explains this, and seems to have reference to it, John xvi. 2. They shall put you out of their synagogues, and whosoever killest thou will think that he doeth God service. In nomine Domini inebrié omne matutum—In the name of the Lord commences evil of every kind. Or, we may understand it as spoken in defiance of God. "You say God will be glorified in your deliverance, let him be glorified then; let him make speed, and hasten his work; (ch. v. 19.) let him deliver him, seeing he delighted in him."

Some take it to be the language of the profane Jews in captivity, bantering their brethren that hoped for deliverance, and ridiculing the expectations they often comforted themselves with, that God would shortly be glorified in it. They thus did what they could to shame the counsel of the poor, Ps. xiv. 6. 2. How they were encouraged under these perse- cutions, and "hated them, and cast them out for a little while; your enemies hate you and oppress you, your brethren hate you and cast you out, but your Father in heaven loves you, and will appear for you when no one else will dare. His provi- dence shall order things so as shall be for comfort to you, he shall appear for your joy, and for the confusion of those that abuse you and trample upon you; they shall be ashamed of their enmity to you."

This was fulfilled, when, upon the signals given of Jerusalem's approaching ruin, the Jews' hearts fail- ed them for fear; but the disciples of Christ, whom they had hated and persecuted, lifted up their heads with joy, knowing that their redemption drew nigh, Luke xxi. 26, 28. Though God seem to hide him- self, he will in due time show himself. God's appearances for them will be such as will make a great noise in the world; (v. 6.) There shall be a voice of noise from the city, from the temple. Some make it the joyful and triumphant voice of the church's friends; others the frightful, lamenting voice of her enemies, surprised in the city, and fleeing in vain to the temple for help. But the tongues of these voices do but echo to the voice of the Lord, who is now rendering a recompense to his enemies; and those that will not hear him speaking this terror, shall hear them returning the alarms of it in doleful shrieks. We may well think what a confused noise there was in the city and temple, when the temple doors flew open suddenly of their own accord, and the priests heard a noise of motion or shifting in the most holy place, and presently a cloud of glory descended. See what happened after, one Jesus Bar-Anna's went up and down the city, at the feast of tabernacles, continually cry- ing, A voice from the east, a voice from the west, a voice from the four winds; a voice against Jeru- salem, and the temples; a voice against all this people. III. Let them know that God will set up a church for himself in the world, which shall be abundantly replenished in a little time; (v. 7.) Before she travailed she brought forth. This is to be applied in the type to the deliverance of the Jews out of their captivity in Babylon, which was brought about very easily and silently, without any pain or struggle, such as was when they were brought out of Egypt: that was done by might and power, (Deut. iv. 34.) but this by the Spirit of the Lord of hosts, Zech. vii. 11. The Jews had been a barren womb, in, and yet the mother was never in labour for it; before her pain came she was delivered. This is altogether surprising, uncommon, and without preced- ent, unless in the story which the Egyptian mid- wives told of the Hebrew women, (Exod. i. 19.) that they were lively, and were delivered ere the midwives came in unto them. But shall the earth be made ready to bring forth her fruits in one day? No, it is the work of some weeks in the spring to renew the face of the earth, and cover it with its products. Some read it to the same purport with the next clause, Shall a land be brought forth in one day, or shall a nation be born at once? Is it to be imagined that a woman at one birth should bring children sufficient to people a country, and that they should in an instant grow up to maturity? No; some- thing like this was done in the creation; but God has since rested from all such works, and leaves se- cond causes to produce their effects gradually. Nihil factum per saltum—He does nothing abruptly. Yet in this case, as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth. Cyrus's proclamation was no sooner issued out, than the captives were formed into a nation, and began to spread out to the uttermost part of the world, and make their way to their own land. And the reason is given, (v. 9.) because it is the Lord's doing; he under- takes it, whose work is perfect. If he bring to the birth in preparing his people for deliverance, he will cause to bring forth in the accomplishment of the deliverance. When every thing is ripe and ready for their release, and the number of their months is accomplished, so that the children are brought to the birth, shall not I then give strength to bring forth, but leave mother and babe to perish together in the most miserable case? How will this agree with the divine pity? Shall I begin a work, and not go through with it? How will that agree with the divine power and perfection? Am I he that causes to bring forth, (so the following clause may be read,) or am I he that works? I restrain them from bringing forth; though I might restrain them from bringing forth, and make them barren, and all the species of living creatures, to propagate, and replenish the earth, and will he re- strain Zion? Will he not make her fruitful in a blessed offspring to replenish the church? Or, Am I he that begat, and should I restrain from bringing forth? Did God beget the deliverance in his pur- pose and promise, and will he not bring it forth in the accomplishment and performance of it? Then, that this was a figure of the setting up of the Christian church in the world, and the replenishing of that... family with children, which was to be named from Jesus Christ. When the Spirit was poured out, and the gospel went forth from Zion, multitudes were converted in a little time, and with little pains, compared with the vast product. The apostles, even before they travailed, brought forth, and the children born to Christ were so numerous, and so suddenly and easily produced, that they were rather like the dew from the morning's womb than like the son from the mother's womb, Ps. cx. 3. The success of the gospel was astonishing; that light, like the morning, strangely diffused itself till it took hold even of the ends of the earth. Cities and nations were born at once to Christ. The same day that the Spirit was poured out, there were three thousand souls added to the church.

And when this glorious work was once begun, it was carried on wonderfully, beyond what could be imagined; so mightily grew the word of God and prevailed. He that brought to the birth in conviction of sin, caused to bring forth in a thorough conversion to God.

IV. Let them know that their present sorrows shall shortly be turned into abundant joys, v. 10, 11. Observe,

1. How the church's friends are described; they are such as love her, and mourn with her and for her. Note, All that love God love Jerusalem: they love the church of God, and lay its interest very near their heart. They admire the beauty of the church, take pleasure in communion with it, and heartily espouse its cause. And they that have a sincere affection for the church, have a cordial sympathy with her in all the cares and sorrows of her present state. They mourn for her, all her grievances are their griefs; if Jerusalem be in distress, their harps are hung on the willow-trees.

2. How they are encouraged: Rejoice with her, and again and again, I say, Rejoice. This intimates that Jerusalem shall have cause to rejoice; the days of her mourning shall be at an end, and she shall be comforted according to the time that she has been afflicted. It is the will of God, that all her friends should join with her in her joys, for they shall share with her in those blessings that will be the matter of her joy. If we suffer with Christ, and sorrow with his church, we shall reign with him, and rejoice with her. We are here called, (1.) To bear our part in the church's praises: "Come, rejoice with her, rejoice for joy with her, rejoice greatly, rejoice and know why you rejoice; rejoice on the days of your fast, and on the sackcloth of your mourning." You know, you do know, you must know, that all the blessings of the numerous and fat consolations which are now poured out upon Jerusalem, could not but from the same principles rejoice with her in her joy.

(2.) To take our part in the church's comforts. We must suck and be satisfied with the breasts of our consolations; the word of God, the covenant of grace, especially the promises of that covenant, the ordinances of God, and all the opportunities of attending on him, and conversing with him, are the breasts of consolations, the sources of consolations. We must suck with the breasts of her consolations, where her comforts are laid up, and whence by faith and prayer they are drawn; with her therefore we must suck from these breasts, by an application of the promises of God to ourselves, and a diligent attendance on his ordinances; and with the consolations which are drawn hence we must be satisfied, and not be dissatisfied, though we may be long disappointed in little. It is the glory of the church, that she has the Lord for her God, that to her pertain the adoption and service of God; with the abundance of this glory we must be delighted. We must take more pleasure in our relation to God, and communion with him, than in all the delights of the sons and daughters of men. Whatever is the glory of the church, must be our glory and joy, particularly her purity, unity, and increase.

V. Let them know that he who gives them this call to rejoice, will give them causes to do so, and hearts to do so, v. 12—14.

2. God will not only give them cause to rejoice, but will speak comfort to them, will speak it to their hearts; and it is he only that can do that, and make it fasten there. See what he will do for the comfort of Zion, and the comfort of the church; He will be their tender nurse; Ye shall be carried on her sides, under her arms, as little children are, and shall be dallied upon her knees, as darlings are, especially when they are weary and out of humour, and must be got to sleep. Those that are joined to the church, must be treated thus affectionately; the Great Shepherd gathers the lambs in his arm, and carries them in his bosom, and so the tender-shepherds, as that it may not appear discouraging. Proselytes should be favourites. (2.) God will himself be their powerful Comforter; as one whom his mother comforts, when he is sick or sore, or upon any account in sorrow, so will I comfort you; not only with the rational arguments which a prudent father uses, but with the tender affections and compassions of a loving mother, that her sons may be not only her under-shepherds, as that it may not appear discouraging, Proselytes should be favourites. blessed effect of this comfort in their own souls; (v. 13.) When you see this, what a happy state the church is restored to, not only your tongues and your countenances, but your hearts shall rejoice. This was fulfilled in the wonderful satisfaction which Christ’s disciples had in the success of their ministry. Christ, with an eye to that, tells them, (John xvi. 22.) Your hearts shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you. Then the house, that were dried and withered, (the marrow of them quite exhausted,) shall recover a youthful strength and vigour, and shall flourish like an herb. Divine comforts reach the inward man, they are marrow and meatenising to the bones. Prov. iii. 8. The bones are the strength of the body; these shall be made to flourish with these comforts; The joy of the Lord will be your strength, Neh. viii. 10.

15. For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. 16. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many. 17. They that sanctify themselves, and purify themselves in the gardens, behind one tree in the midst, eating swine’s flesh, and the abomination, and the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the Lord. 18. For I know their works and their thoughts: it shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and see my glory. 19. And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal and Javan, to the isles afar off, that have not heard my name, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles. 20. And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord, out of all nations, upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the Lord, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the Lord. 21. And I will also take of them for priests, and for Levites, saith the Lord. 22. For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. 23. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord. 24. And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

These verses, like the pillar of cloud and fire, have a dark side towards the enemies of God’s kingdom, and all that are rebels against his crown, and a bright side towards his faithful, loyal subjects. Probably, it refers to the Jews in captivity in Babylon, of whom some are said to have been sent thither for their hurt; and those are they with whom God here threatens to proceed in his controversy, who hated to be reformed, and therefore should be ruined by the calamity, Jer. xxiv. 9. Others were sent thither for their good, and they should have the trouble of their sins rectified, that they might pass through it, and see many a good day after it. Divers of the expressions here used are accommodated to that glorious dispensation; but doubtless it looks further, to the judgment for which Christ did come once, and will come again, into this world; and to the distinction which his word in both makes between the precious and the vile.

Christ will appear to the confusion and terror of all those that stand it out against him; sometimes in temporal judgments. The Jews that persisted in infidelity were cut off by fire, and by his sword; the ruin was very extensive, the Lord then pleaded with all flesh; and it being his sword with which they are cut off, they are called his slain, sacrificed to his justice: and they shall be many. In the great day, the wrath of God shall come upon all the workers of iniquity, his sword, (which he will cut off and consume all the impudent,) and his word, when it takes hold of sinners’ consciences, burns like fire, and is sharper than any two-edged sword. Idolaters will especially be contended with in the day of wrath, v. 17. Perhaps some of those who returned out of Babylon, retained such instances of idolatry and superstition as are here mentioned; had their idols in their houses, (up publicly in the high places,) and there purified themselves, as the worshippers of the true God used to do, when they went about their idolatrous rites, one after another, or, as we read it, behind one tree in the midst; behind Ahad, or Ehad, some idol that they worshipped by that name; and in honour of which they ate swine’s flesh, which was expressly forbidden by the law of God; and other abominations, as the mouse, or some other like animal. But it may refer to all those judgments which the wrath of God, according to the word of God, will bring upon provoking sinners, that live in contempt of God, and are devoted to the world and the flesh—they shall be consumed together. From the happiness of heaven we find expressly excluded all idolaters, and whatsoever worketh abomination, Rev. xxi. 27. 28. In the day of their judgment, righteousness and peace will be brought to light, and brought to the account; for, (v. 18.) I know their works, and their thoughts; God knows both what men do, and from what principle, and with what design they do it; and therefore is fit to judge the world, because he can judge the secrets of men, Rom. ii. 16.

He will appear to the comfort and joy of all that are faithful to him in the setting up of his kingdom in this world, the kingdom of grace, the earnest and first-fruit of the kingdom of glory. The time shall come that he will gather all nations and tongues to himself, that they might come and see his glory as it shines in the face of Jesus Christ, v. 18. This was fulfilled when all nations were to be disciplined, and the gift of tongues bestowed in order thereunto. The church had to him in the setting up of one nation, and in one tongue only God was worshipped; but in the days of the Messiah the partition-wall shall be taken down, and those that had been strangers to God shall be brought acquainted with him, and shall see his glory in the gospel, as the Jews had seen it in the sanctuary. As to this, it is here promised.

That some of the Jewish nation should, by the grace of God, be distinguished from the rest, and marked for salvation: I will not only set up a gathering ensign among them, to which the Gentiles shall seek, (as is promised, ch. xii. 12.) but there shall be those among them on whom I will set a distinguishing sign among the nations. Though they are a corrupt, degenerate nation, yet God will set apart a remnant of them, that shall be devoted to him, and employed for him, and a mark shall be set upon them, with such certainty will God own them, Ezek. ix. 4. The servants of God shall be sealed in their foreheads, Rev. vii. 3. The Lord knows them that are his; Christ's sheep are marked with his sign, and are themselves distinguished thus by the grace of God, shall be commissioned to invite others to come and take the benefit of that grace: those that escape the power of those prejudices by which the generality of that nation is kept in unbelief, they shall be sent unto the nations, to carry the gospel among them, and preach it to every creature. Note, There who escape, these have escaped the wrath to come, should do all they can to snatch others also as brands out of the burning. God chooses to send those on his errands that can deliver their message feelingly and experimentally, and warn people of their danger by sin, as those who have themselves narrowly escaped the danger. (1.) They shall be sent unto the nations, divers of which are here named, Tarshish, and Pul, and the River Ganges. It is most likely, they are more agreed, what quarries are here intended; Tarshish signifies in general the sea, yet some take it for Tarsus in Cilicia; Pul is mentioned sometimes as the name of one of the kings of Assyria, perhaps some part of that country might likewise bear that name; but is supposed to be Lydia, a warlike nation, famed for archers; the Lydians are said to handle and carry wood, as the Jews, Jer. xvi. 9. Tabal, some think, is Italy or Spain; and Javan most agree to be Greece, the Iones; and the Isles of the Gentiles, which were people by the posterity of Japhet, (Gen. x. 5.) probably, are here meant by the isles afar off, that have not heard my name, neither have seen my glory. In Judah only God was known, and there only his name was great for many ages; other countries sat in darkness, heard not the joyful sound, saw not the joyful light. This deplorable state of theirs seems to be spoken of here with compassion; for it is pity that any of the children of men should be at such a distance from their Maker as not to hear his name, and see his glory. In consideration of this, (2.) Those that are sent to the nations shall go upon God's errand, to declare his glory among the nations, the isles, that they shall be dispersed among the nations shall declare the glory of God's providence concerning their nation all along, by which many shall be invited to join with them, as also by the appearances of God's glory among them in their ordinances; some out of all languages of the nations shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, entreat- ing him to take notice of them, to admit them into his company, and to stay a little while for them, till they are ready, for we will go with you, having heard that God is with you, Zech. viii. 23. Thus the glory of God was in part declared among the Gentiles; but more clearly and fully by the apostles and preachers of the gospel, who were sent into all the world, even to the isles afar off, to publish the glorious gospel of the blessed God. They went forth and preached everywhere, where the Lord worked with them, Mark xvi. 20.

3. That many converts shall hereby be made, v. 20. They shall bring all your brethren (for proselytes sought to be owned and embraced as brethren) for an offering unto the Lord. God's glory shall not be in vain declared to them, but by it they shall be led, by God's direction and direction, to come to the Lord. They that are sent to them shall succeed so well in their negotiation, that thereupon there shall be as great a flocking to Jerusalem, as used to be at the time of a solemn feast, when all the males from all parts of the country were to attend there, and present themselves to an empty temple. Observe, (1.) That they shall be furnished with for their coming; some shall come upon horses, because they came from far, and the journey was too long to travel on foot, as the Jews usually did to their feasts; persons of quality shall come in chariots, and the aged and sickly, and little children, shall be brought in chariots, and in stately wagons; and the young men on mules and swift beasts; they shall spare no trouble or charge to get to Jerusalem; those that cannot ride on horses shall come in litters; and in such haste shall they be, and so impatient of delay, that those that can shall ride upon mules and swift beasts. These expressions are figurative, and these variations of conveyances are humped up to height, (as the learned Mr. Gataker) the plentiful affording of all graces helps requisite for the bringing of God's elect home to Christ. All shall be welcome, and nothing shall be wanting for their assistance and encouragement. (2.) The character under which they shall be brought; they shall come, not as formerly they used to come to Jerusalem, to be offered, but to take part in this general sacrifice; offer them, the spoils which they have taken for Christ, and which are devoted to his service and honour. They shall be brought as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel, with great care, that they be holy, purified from sin, and sanctified to God. It is said of the converted Gentiles, (Acts xvi. 9.) that their hearts were purifid by faith. Whatever was brought to God was brought in a clean vessel, a vessel appropriated to religious uses. God will be served and honoured in the way that he has appointed, in the ordinances of his own institution, which are the proper vehicles for these spiritual offerings. When the soul is offered up to God, the body must be a clean vessel for it, possessed in sanctification and honour, and not in the lusts of uncleanliness. If the apostle says, 1 Cor. x. 31. we are not only purged from an evil conscience, but have their bodies also washed with pure water, Heb. x. 22.

Now this may refer, [1.] To the Jews, devout men, and proselytes out of every nation under heaven, that flocked together to Jerusalem, expecting the kingdom of the Messiah to appear, Acts ii. 6. 10. They came from all parts to the holy moun- tain of Jerusalem as an offering to the Lord, and many of them were brought to the faith of Christ by the gift of tongues poured out on the apostles. Menthinks, there is some correspondence be- tween that history and this prophecy. The enuncio some time after came to worship at Jerusalem in his chariot, and took home with him the knowledge of Christ and the gospel. They came from all parts of some of all nations, that should be converted to Christ, and so added to the church, which, though a spiritual accession, is often in prophecy represented by a local motion. The apostle says of all true Christians, that they are come to mount Zion, and the heavenly Jerusalem; (Heb. xii. 22.) which passage explains this, and shows that the meaning of all this preparation is only that they shall be brought into the church by the grace of God, and in the use of all the means of that grace, as carefully, safely, and comfortably, as if they were carried in chariots and

ISAIAH. LXVI. 4. Thus God shall persuade Japhet, and he shall dwell in the tents of Sem, Gen. ix. 27. 4. That a gospel-ministry shall be set up in the church, it being thus enlarged by the addition of such a multitude of additional persons to it; (v. 21.) I will take of them, of the proselytes, of the Gentile converts, for priests and for Levites, to minister in holy things, and to preside in their religious assemblies, which is very necessary for doctrine, worship, and discipline. Hitherto the priests and Levites were all taken from among the Jews, and were all of one tribe; but in gospel-times God will take addition to the Gentiles of multitude of persons to him in holy things, to teach the people, to bless them in the name of the Lord, to be the stewards of the mysteries of God as the priests and Levites were under the law, to be pastors and teachers, or bishops, to give themselves to the word and prayer; and deacons to serve tables, and, as the Levites, to take care of the outward business of the house of God; Phil. i. 1. Acts vi. 2. 5. The apostles were all Jews, and so were the seventy disciples; the great apostle of the Gentiles was himself a Hebrew of the Hebrews; but when churches were planted among the Gentiles, they had ministers settled, who were of themselves elders in every church. (Acts xivv. 23. Tit. i. 5.) which made the ministry to spread the more easily, and to be the more familiar, and if not the more venerable, yet the more popular, and to every one would appeal, and to every one would come to every one, this church, to having honour in his own country. God says, I will take, not all of them, though they are in a spiritual sense made to our God kings and priests, but of them, some of them. It is God's work originally to choose ministers by qualifying them for, and inclining them to, the service, as well as to the consecration of the office of their ministry. I will take them, I will admit them, though Gentiles, and will accept of them and their ministrations. This is a great honour and advantage to the Gentile church, as it was to the Jewish church, that God raised up of their sons for prophets, and their young men for Nazarites, Amos iii. 11. 5. That the church and ministry, being thus settled, shall continue and be kept up in a succession from one generation to another, v. 22. The change that will be made by the setting up of the kingdom of the Messiah, is here described to be, (1.) A very great and universal change; it shall be a new world, the new heavens, and the new earth, promised before, ch. xix. 17. Old things are passed away, behold, all things are become new, (2 Cor. v. 17.) the old covenant of peculiarity is set aside, and a new covenant, a covenant of grace, established, Heb. viii. 13. We are now to serve in newness of the spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter, Rom. vii. 6. New commandments are given relating both to heaven and earth, and new promises relating to both, and both together make a New Testament; so that they are new heavens and new earth, that God will create, and these a preparative for the new heavens and earth of time, 2 Pet. iii. 13. (2.) A change of God's own making; he will create the new heavens and the new earth. The change was made by him that had authority to make new ordinances, as well as power to make new worlds. (3.) It will be an abiding, lasting change; a change never to be changed; a new world that will be always new, and never old, that does, what it was pleased only to be an instance. It shall remain before me unalterable; for the gospel dispensation is to continue to the end of time, and not to be succeeded by any other. The kingdom of Christ is a kingdom that cannot be moved; the laws and privileges of it are things that cannot be shaken; but shall for ever remain, Heb. xii. 27, 28. It shall therefore remain, because it is before God; it is under his eye, and care, and special protection. (4.) It will be maintained in a seed that shall serve Christ; Your seed, and in them, your name, shall remain—a seed of ministers, a seed of Christians; as one generation of both passes away, another generation shall come, and thus the name of Christ with that of Christians, shall continue on earth while the earth remains, and his throne as the days of heaven. The gates of hell, though they fight against the church, shall not prevail, nor wear out the saints of the Most High.

That the public worship of God in religious assemblies shall be carefully and constantly attend-}

against God, not only broken his laws, but broken covenant with him, and thought themselves able to contend with him. It may be meant especially of the unbelieving Jews that rejected the gospel of Christ. (2.) What their misery is; it is here represented by the frightful spectacle of a field of battle, covered with the carcasses of the slain, that lie rotting above ground, full of worms crawling about them, and feeding on them; and if you go to burn them, they are so scattered, and it is such a noisome piece of work to get them together, that it would be endless, and the fire would never be quenched; so that they are an abhorring to all flesh, nobody cares to come near them. Now this is sometimes accomplished in temporal judgments, and perhaps never nearer the letter than in the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish nation by the Romans, in which destruction it is computed that above two millions, first and last, were cut off by the sword, beside what perished by famine and pestilence. It may refer likewise to the spiritual judgments that came upon the unbelieving Jews, which St. Paul looks upon, and shows us, Rom. xi. 8, &c. They became dead in sins, twice dead; the church of the Jews was a carcasse of a church, all its members were putrid carcasses, their worm died not, their own consciences made them continually uneasy; and the fire of their rage against the gospel was not quenched, which was their punishment as well as their sin; and they became, more than ever any nation under the sun, an abhorring to all flesh. But our Saviour applies it to the everlasting misery and torment of impenitent sinners in the future state, where their worm will die not, and their fire will never be quenched; (Mark ix. 44.) for the soul, whose conscience is its constant tormentor, is immortal, and the God, whose wrath is its constant terror, is eternal. (3.) What notice shall be taken of it; they that worship God shall go forth, and look upon them, to affect their own hearts with the love of their Redeemer, when they see what misery they are redeemed from. As it will aggravate the miseries of the damned, to see others in the kingdom of heaven, and themselves thrust out, (Luke xiii. 28.) so it will illustrate the joys and glories of the blessed, to see what becomes of them that died in their transgression, and it will elevate their praises to think that they were themselves as brands plucked out of that burning. To the honour of that free grace which thus distinguished them, let the redeemed of the Lord with all humility, and not without a holy trembling, sing their triumphant songs.
The Prophecies of the Old Testament, as the Epistles of the New, are placed rather according to their bulk than their seniority; the longest first, not the eldest. There were divers prophets, and writing ones, that were contemporaries with Isaiah, as Micah; or a little before him, as Hosea, and Joel, and Amos, or soon after him, as Habakkuk and Nahum are supposed to be; and yet the prophecy of Jeremiah, who began many years after Isaiah had finished, is placed next to his, because there is so much in it: where we meet with most of God's word, there let the preference be given; and yet those of lesser gifts are not to be despised or excluded. Nothing now occurs to be observed further concerning prophecy in general; but concerning this prophet Jeremiah we may observe,

I. That he was betimes a prophet; he began young, and therefore could say it from his own experience, that it is good for a man to bear the yoke in his youth, the yoke both of service and of affliction, Lam. iii. 27. Jerome observes, that Isaiah, who had more years over his head, had his tongue touched with a coal of fire, to purge away his iniquity; (ch. vi. 7) but that when God touched Jeremiah's mouth, who was yet but young, nothing was said of the purging of his iniquity, (ch. i. 9) because, by reason of his tender years, he had not so much sin to answer for.

II. That he continued long a prophet; some reckon fifty years, others above forty. He began in the 13th year of Josiah, when things went well under that good king, but he continued through all the wicked reigns that followed; for when we set out for the service of God, though the wind may be fair and favourable, we know not how soon it may turn and be tempestuous.

III. That he was a reprobating prophet, was sent in God's name to tell Jacob of their sins, and to warn them of the judgments of God that were coming upon them; and the critics observe, that therefore his style and manner of speaking is more plain and rough, and less polite, than that of Isaiah and some other of the prophets. Those that are sent to discover sin, ought to lay aside the enticing words of man's wisdom. Plain dealing is best when we are dealing with sinners, to bring them to repentance.

IV. That he was a weeping prophet; so he is commonly called, not only because he penned the Lamentations, but because he was all along a mournful spectator of the sins of his people, and of the desolating judgments that were coming upon them. And for this reason, perhaps, those who imagined our Saviour to be one of the prophets, thought him of any of them to be most like to Jeremiah, (Matt. xvi. 14) because he was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief.

V. That he was a suffering prophet; he was persecuted by his own people more than any of them, as we shall find in the story of this book; for he lived and preached just before the Jews' destruction by the Chaldeans, when their character seems to have been the same as it was just before their destruction by the Romans, when they killed the Lord Jesus, and persecuted his disciples, pleased not God, and were contrary to all men, for wrath was come upon them to the uttermost, 1 Thess. ii. 15, 16. The last account we have of him, in his history, is, that the remaining Jews forced him to go down with them into Egypt; whereas the current tradition is, among Jews and Christians, that he suffered martyrdom. Hengtinger, out of Elmakin, an Arabic historian, relates, that he, continuing to prophesy in Egypt against the Egyptians and other nations, was stoned to death; and that long after, when Alexander entered Egypt, he took up the bones of Jeremiah where they were buried in obscurity, and carried them to Alexandria, and buried them there. The prophecies of this book, which we have in the nineteen first chapters, seem to be the heads of the sermons he preached in a way of general reproof for sin, and denunciation of judgment; afterward they are more particular and occasional, and mixed with the history of his day, but not placed in due order of time. With the threatenings are intermixed many gracious promises of mercy to the penitent, of the deliverance of the Jews out of their captivity, and some that have a plain reference to the kingdom of the Messiah. Among the Apocryphal writings, an epistle is extant, said to be written by Jeremiah to the captives in Babylon, warning them against the worship of idols, by exposing the vanity of them, and the folly of idolaters. It is in Baruch, ch. vi. But it is supposed not to be authentic; nor has it, I think, any thing like the life and spirit of Jeremiah's writings. It is also related concerning Jeremiah, (2 Mac. ii. 4) that when Jerusalem was destroyed by the Chaldeans, he, by direction from God, took the ark and altar of incense, and carrying them to mount Nebo, lodged them in a hollow cave there, and stopped the door; but some that followed him, and thought that they had marked the place, could not find it; he blamed them for seeking it, telling them that the place should be unknown till the time that God should gather his people together again. But I know not what credit is to be given to that story, though it is there said to be found in the records. We cannot but be concerned, in the reading of Jeremiah's prophecies, to find that they were so little regarded by the men of that generation; but let us make use of that as a reason why we should regard them the more; for they are written for our learning too, and for warning to us and to our land.
In this chapter we have, 1. The general inscription or title of this book, with a hint of the importance of Jeremiah in the church, p. 1. 2. The call of Jeremiah to the proffesional office, his modest objection against it, and an ample commission given him for the execution of the office, v. 3. 4. The vision of the altar, the seething-pot, signifying the approaching ruin of Judah and Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, v. 11. 16. IV. Encouragement given to the prophet to go undaunted in his work, the assurance of God's presence with him, v. 17. 19. Thus is he set to work by one that will be sure to bear him out.

1. The words of Jeremiah the son of Hilkiah, of the priests that were in Anathoth, in the land of Benjamin: 2. To whom the word of the Lord came in the days of Josiah the son of Amon king of Judah, in the thirteenth year of his reign. 3. It came also in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, unto the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah the son of Josiah king of Judah, unto the carrying away of Jerusalem captive in the fifth month.

We have here as much as it was thought fit we should know of the genealogy of this prophet, and the chronology of his prophecy.

1. We are told what family the prophet was of. He was the son of Hilkiah; not that Hilkiah, it is supposed, that was High Priest in Josiah's time, (for then he would have been called so, and not, as here, one of the priests that were in Anathoth,) but another of the same name. Jeremiah signifies one raised up by the Lord. It is said of Christ, that he is a prophet whom the Lord our God raised up unto us, (Deut. xviii. 15, 18.) He was of the priests, and, as a priest, was authorized and appointed to teach the people; but to that authority and appointment God added the extraordinary commission of a prophet. Ezekiel was also a priest. Thus God would support the honour of the priesthood at a time when, by their sins and God's judgments upon them, it was sadly eclipsed. He was of the priests in Anathoth; a city of priests, which lay about three miles from Jerusalem. Abiathar had his country house there, (1 Kings ii. 26.)

2. We have the general date of his prophecies, the knowledge of which is requisite to the understanding of them. (In this place.) He began to prophesy in the thirteenth year of Josiah's reign, v. 2. Josiah, in the twelfth year of his reign, began a work of reformation, applied himself with all sincerity to purge Judah and Jerusalem from the high places, and the groves, and the images, (2 Chron. xxxiv. 3.) And very seasonably then was this young prophet raised up to assist and encourage the young king in the work of reformation, which he began. The Lord of the whole creation had set him in his station, that he might be of use to him; not only a charge and commission to him to prophesy, but a revelation of the things themselves which he was to deliver. As it is an encouragement to ministers to be countenanced and protected by such pious magistrates as Josiah was, so it is a great help to magistrates, in any good work of reformation, to be advised and animated, and to have a public charge of the work, that is, a prophet, but a faithful, zealous ministers as Jeremiah was. Now, one would have expected when these two joined forces, such a prince, and such a prophet, (as in a like case, Ezra v. 1, 2.) and both young, such a complete reformation would have been brought about and settled, as would have prevented the ruin of the church and state; but it proved quite otherwise. In the eighteenth year of Josiah we find there were a great many of the relics of idolatry, that were not purged out; for what can the best princes and prophets do to prevent the ruin of a people that hate to be reformed? And therefore, though it was a time of reformation, Jeremiah continued to foretell the destroying judgments that were coming upon them; for there is no symptom more threatening to any people than fruitless attempts of reformation. Josiah and Jeremiah would have healed them, but they would not be healed. (3.) He continued to prophesy through the reigns of Jehoiakim and Zedekiah, who reigned eleven years apiece; he prophesied to the carrying away of Jerusalem captive, (v. 3.) that great event which he had so often prophesied of. He continued to prophesy after that, ch. xl. 1. But the computation here is made to end with that, because it was the accomplishment of many things the prophecies; for the day of Josiah to the captivity was just forty years. Dr. Lightfoot observes, that as Moses was so long with the people, a teacher in the wilderness, till they entered into their own land; Jeremiah was so long to their own land a teacher, before they went into the wilderness of the heathen; and he thinks that therefore a special mark is set upon the last forty years of the iniquity of Judah, which Ezekiel bore forty days, as a type of a year. But, at the same time, they had Jeremiah prophesying among them, which was a great aggravation of their impenitency. God, in this prophet, suffered their manners, their ill manners, forty years, and at length swears in his wrath that they should not continue in his rest.

4. Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 5. Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee; and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations. 6. Then said I, Ah Lord God! behold, I cannot speak; for I am a child. 7. But the Lord said unto me, Say not, I am a child: for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the Lord. 9. Then the Lord put forth his hand, and touched my mouth: and the Lord said unto me, Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth. 10. See, I have this day set thee over the nations, and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant.

Here is, 1. Jeremiah's early designation to the work and office of a prophet, which God gives him notice of as a reason for his early application to that business; (v. 4, 5.) The word of the Lord came to him, with a satisfying assurance to himself that it was the word of the Lord, and not a delusion; and God told him, 1. That he had ordained him a prophet to the nations, or, against the nations, the heathen; (for he cast the Jews among the nations, who are therefore now reckoned among the nations, because they had learned their works, and mingled themselves with them in their idolatries, which otherwise they should not have been, Numb. xxviii. 9.) Yet he was given to be a prophet, not to Jews only, but to the neighbouring nations; to whom he was to send words, (ch. xxviii. 3.) and whom he must make to drink of the cup of the Lord's anger, ch. xxv. 17. He is still in his writings a prophet to the nations (to carry on among the rest,) to tell them what the national judgments are which may be expected for national sins. It would be well for the nations, would they take Jeremiah for their prophet, and attend to the warnings he gives them. 2. That, before he was born, even in his eternal counsel, he had designed him to be so. Let him know, that He who gave him his commission, is the same that gave him his being, that formed him in the belly, and brought him hither, and thence, and that he is his righteous Owner, and might employ him, and make use of him, as he pleased; and that this commission was given him in pursuance of the purpose God had purposed in himself concerning him, before he was born; "I knew thee, and I sanctified thee; I determined that thou shouldst be a prophet, and set thee apart for the office." Thus St. Paul says of himself, that God had separated him from his mother's womb, to be a Christian, and an apostle, Gal. v. 15. Observe, (1.) The great Creator knows what use to make of every man before he makes him; he has made all for himself, and of the same lumps of clay designs a vessel of honour or dishonour, as he pleases, Rom. ix. 21. (2.) What God has designed men for, he will call them to; for his purposes cannot be frustrated. Known unto God are all his own works beforehand, and his knowledge is infallible and his purpose unchangeable. (3.) There is a particular purpose and providence of God conversant about his prophets and ministers; they are by special counsel designed for their work, and what they are designed for they are fitted for; I that know thee, sanctified thee. God destines them to it, and fits them for it, then when he first forms the spirit of man within him; Propheta nascitur, non fit.--A man is not educated unto a prophet, but originally formed for the office.

II. His modest declining of this honourable employment, v. 6. Though God had predestinated him to it, yet it was news to him, and a mighty surprise to hear that he should be a prophet to the nations. We know not what God intends us for, but He knows. One would have thought he should have catched at it as a piece of preferment, for so it was; but he objects against it, disguises himself; "Ah, Lord God, behold, I cannot speak to great men and multitudes, as prophets must; I cannot speak finely or fluently; cannot word things well, as a message from God should be worded; I cannot speak with any authority, and cannot expect to be heeded, for I am a child, and my youth will be despised." Note, It becomes us when we have any service to do for God, to be afraid lest we mismanage it, and lest it suffer, through our weakness and unfitness for it; it becomes us likewise to have low thoughts of ourselves, and to be deficient of our own sufficiency. Those that are young should consider that they are so; should be afraid, as Elihu was, and not venture beyond their length.

III. The assurance God graciously gave him, that he would stand by him, and carry him on in his work. 1. Let him not object that he is a child, he shall be a prophet for all that; (v. 7.) "Say not any more I am a child: it is true thou art; but," (1.) "that is no objection to what God designs; let not that hinder thee from obeying it. Go to all to whom I shall send thee, and speak whatsoever I command thee." Note, Though a sense of our own weakness and insufficiency should make us humbly about our work, yet it should not make us draw back from it when God calls us to it. God was angry with Moses even for his meekest excuses, Exod. iv. 14. (2.) "Thee have sent me as thy mouth, and God will encourage thee from depending upon it. Though thou art a child, thou shalt be enabled to go to all to whom I shall send thee, though they were ever so great, and ever so many. And whatsoever I command thee, thou shalt have judgment, memory, and language, therewith to speak it, as it should be spoken." Samuel delivered a message from God to Eli, when he was a little child. Note, God can, when he pleases, make children prophets, and ordain strength out of the mouths of babes and sucklings.

2. Let him not object that he shall meet with many enemies and much opposition; God will be his protector; (v. 8.) "Be not afraid of their faces; though they look big, and so think to outface thee, and put thee out of countenance, yet be not afraid to speak to them; no, not to speak that to them which is most unpleasing; thou speakest in the name of the King of kings, and by authority from him, and with that thou mayest face them down. Though they look angry, be not afraid of their displeasure, nor disturbed with apprehensions of the consequences of it. Those that have messages to deliver from God, must not be afraid of the face of man, Ezek. iii. 9. And thou hast cause both to be bold and easy; for I am with thee, not only to assist thee in thy work, but to deliver thee out of the hands of the persecutors; and if God be for thee, whom can be against thee?" (v. 9.) Thus it was with the ministers from trouble, it is to the same effect if he support them under their trouble. Mr. Gataker well observes here, That earthly princes are not wont to go along with their ambassadors; but God goes along with those whom he sends, and is, by his powerful protection, at all times, and in all places, present with them; and with this they ought to animate themselves, Acts xiv. 10.

3. Let him not object that he cannot speak as becomes him—God will enable him to speak.

(1.) To speak intelligently, and as one that had acquaintance with God, v. 9. He having now a vision of the divine glory, the Lord just forth his hand, and by a sensible sign conferred upon him so much of the gift of the tongue as was necessary for him; he touched his mouth, and with that touch opened his life, that his mouth should speak forth God's praise; and with that touch sweetly conveyed his words into his mouth, to be ready to him upon all such occasions; so that he could never want words who was thus furnished by Him that made man's mouth. God not only put knowledge into his head, but words into his mouth; for there are words which the Holy Ghost teaches us, but which the common understandings and common language will not be able to utter. Jeremiah's message should be delivered in his own words, that it may be delivered punctually; (Ezek. iii. 4.) Speak with my words. And those that faithfully do so shall not want instructions as the case requires; God will give them a mouth and wisdom in that same hour, Matth. x. 19.

(2.) To speak powerfully, and as one that had authority from God, v. 10. It is a strange commission that is here given him; See, I have this day set thee over the nations, and over the kingdoms; which sounds very great, and yet Jeremiah is a poor, despicable priest still; he is not set over the kingdoms as a prince, to rule them by the sword, but as a prophet, by the power of the word of God. Those that would from hence prove the Pope's supremacy over kings, and Christ's, should observe how this power and authority to dispose them, and dispose of their kingdoms at his pleasure, must prove that he has the same extraordinary Spirit of prophecy that Jeremiah had, else how can he have the power that Jeremiah had by virtue of that Spirit? And yet the power that Jeremiah had, who, notwithstanding his power, lived in meanness and contempt, and under oppression, would not content himself with those as prophets, and the leaders and superintendents of the religious and civil institutions, the Jewish nation in the first place, and other nations, some great ones besides, against whom he prophesied; was set over them, not to demand tribute from them, or to enrich himself with their spoils, but to root out, and full down, and destroy, and yet withal to build and plant. [1.] He must attempt to reform the nations, to root out, and full down, and destroy idolatry and other wickedness among them, to extirpate those vicious habits and customs which had long taken root, to throw down the kingdom of sin, that religion and virtue might be planted and built among them. And to the introducing and establishing of that which is good, it is necessary that the works which is evil be removed. [2.] He must tell them that it would be well or ill with them, according as they were, or were not, reformed. He must set before them life and death, good or evil, according to God's declaration of the method he takes with kingdoms and nations, ch. xviii. 7, 10. He must assure those who persisted in their wickedness, that they should be rooted and destroyed, and those who repented, that they should be built and planted. He was authorized to read the doom of nations, and God would ratify it, and fulfill it, (Isa. xliv. 26.) would do it according to his word, and therefore is said to do it by his word. It is thus expressed, partly to show how sure the word of prophecy is—it will as certainly be accomplished as if it were done already; and partly to put an honour upon the prophetic office; and made it look truly great, that others may not despise prophets, nor they disparage themselves. And yet more honourable does the gospel-ministry look, in that declarative power Christ gave his apostles, to remit and retain sin, (John xx. 23.) to bind and loose, Matth. xvii. 18.

11. Moreover, the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, Jeremiah, what seeest thou? And I said, I see a rod of an almond-tree. 12. Then said the LORD unto me, Thou hast well seen: for I will hasten my word to perform it. 13. And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying, What seeest thou? And I said, I see a seething-pot, and the face thereof is toward the north. 14. Then the LORD said unto me, Out of the north an evil shall break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land. 15. For, lo, I will call all the families of the kingdoms of the north, saith the LORD; and they shall come, and they shall set every one his throne at the entering of the gates of Jerusalem, and against all the walls thereof round about, and against all the cities of Judah. 16. And I will utter my judgments against them touching all their wickedness, who have forsaken me, and have burnt incense unto other gods, and worshipped the works of their own hands. 17. Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and arise, and speak unto them all this: I command thee; be not dismayed at their faces, lest I confound thee before them. 18. For, behold, I have made thee this day a defended city, and an iron pillar, and brazen walls, against the whole land; against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land. 19. And they shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith the LORD, to deliver thee. Here,

1. God gives Jeremiah, in vision, a view of the principal errand he was to go upon, which was to foretell the destruction of Judah and Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, for their sins, especially their idolatry. This was at first represented to him, in a way proper to make an impression upon him, that he might have it upon his heart in all his dealings with the people. 2. He intimates to him that the people were ripening apace for ruin, and that ruin was hastening apace toward them. God, having answered his objection, that he was a child, goes on to initiate him in the prophetic learning and language; and, having promised to enable him to speak intelligibly to the people, he here teaches him to understand what God says to him; for prophets must have eyes in their heads as well as tongues, must be seers as well as speakers; he therefore asks him, "Jeremiah, what seest thou? Look about thee, and ob serve now." And he was soon aware of what was presented to him; I see a rod, denoting affliction and chastisement; a correcting rod hanging over us; and it is a rod of an almond-tree, which is one of the forwardest trees in the spring, is in the bud and blossoms early, which, when a rod is to break out; it flourishes, says Pliny, in the month of January, and by March has ripe fruits; hence it is called in the Hebrew, Shakedh, the hasty tree; whether this rod that Jeremiah saw had already budded, as some think, or whether it was stripped and dry, as others think, and yet Jeremiah knew it to be of an almond-tree, as Aaron's rod was, is uncertain. Many perplexed and explained. "Thou hast seen a hasty tree, which signifies that I will hasten my word to perform it." Jeremiah shall prophesy that which he himself shall live to see accomplished. We have the explication of this, Ezek. vii. 10, 11. "The rod hath blossomed, pride hath budged, violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness. The measure of Jerusalem's iniquity fills very fast; and as if their destruction smoldered too long, they waken it, they hasten it, and I will hasten to perform what I have spoken against them." 2. He intimates to him whence the intended ruin should arise; Jeremiah is a second time asked, What seest thou? He sees a seething-pot upon the fire, (v. 13.) representing Jerusalem and Judah in great commotion, like boiling water, by reason of the descent which the Chaldean army made upon them; and the fiery pot, in which this pot boiled was thrown in a heap to the north; for hence the fire and fuel were to come, that must make the pot boil thus. So the vision is explained, v. 14. Out of the north an evil shall break forth, or shall be opened. It had been long designed by the justice of God, and long desired by the sin of the people, and yet hitherto the divine patience had restrained it, and held it in, as it were;
the enemies had intended it, and God had checked them; but now all restraints shall be taken off, and the evil shall break forth; the direful scene shall open, and the enemy shall come in like a flood. It shall be a universal calamity, it shall come upon all the inhabitants of the land, from the highest to the lowest, for they have all corrupted their way. Look for, or hinder thee in, this service; buckle to it with readiness and resolution; and be not entangled with doubts about it. He must be quick—Arise, and lose no time; he must be busy—Arise, and speak unto them in season, out of season; he must be bold—Be not dismayed at their faces, as before, v. 8. A word to the wise is sufficient; it is required of ambassadors that they be so.

In two things he must be faithful. 1. He must speak all that he is charged with; Speak all that I command thee. He must forget nothing as minute, or foreign, or not worth mentioning; every word of God is weighty. He must conceal nothing for fear of offending; he must utter nothing under pretence of avoiding small reproach. He must do it all, but without addition or diminution, declare the whole counsel of God. 2. He must speak to all that he is charged against; he must not whisper it in a corner to a few particular friends that will take it well, but he must appear against the kings of Judah, if they be wicked kings, and bear his testimony against the sins even of the princes thereof; for the greatest of men are not exempt from the judgments, either of God’s hand, or of his heart. Nay, he must not spare the priests thereof; though he himself was a priest, and was concerned to maintain the dignity of his order, yet he must not therefore flatten them in their sins. He must appear against the people of the land, though they were his own people, as far as they were against the Lord.

And two reasons are here given why he should thus do (1.) Because he had reason to fear the wrath of God, if he should be false: "Be not dismayed at their faces, so as to desist thine office, or shrink from the duty of it, lest I confound and dismay thee before them; lest I give thee up to thy faint-heartedness." Those that consult their own credit, ease, and safety, more than their work and duty, are justly left to themselves, and to bring upon themselves the shame of their cowardliness. Nay, lest I reckon with thee for thy faint-heartedness, and break thee to pieces; so some read it. Therefore this prophet says, ch. xvii. 17. Lord, Be not thou a terror to me. Note, The fear of God is the best antidote against the fear of man. Let us always be afraid of offending God, who after he has killed his power to cast into hell, and then sends it no more, will not have his power restored. He shall not be in little danger of fear from the best men that can but kill the body. Luke xii. 4, 5. See Neh. iv. 14. It is better to have all the men in the world our enemies than God our Enemy.

(2.) Because he had no reason to fear the wrath of man if he were faithful; for the God whom he served, would protect him, and bear him out, so that they should neither sink his spirits, nor drive him off from his work, should neither stop his mouth, nor take away his life, till he had finished his testimony, v. 18. This young stripping of a prophet is made by the power of God, as an impregnable city, fortified with iron pillars and surrounded with walls of brass; he sallies out upon them in reproofs and threatenings, and keeps them in awe. They set upon him on every side; the kings and priests batter him with their priests thunder against him with their church-censures, and the people of the land shoot their arrows at him, even slanderous and bitter words; but he shall keep his ground, and make his part good with them; he shall still be a curb upon them; (v. 19.) They shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail to destroy thee, for I am with thee to deliver thee out of their hands, nor shall they prevail to defeat the word that God sends them by Jeremiah, nor to deliver themselves, it shall take hold of them, for God is against them to destroy them. Note, Those who are sure that they have God with them, (as he is if they be with him,) need not, ought not, to be afraid, whoever is against them.

CHAP. II.

It is probable that this chapter was Jeremiah's first sermon after his ordinance, and a most lively, pathetic scene. It is, indeed, we have in all the books of the prophets. Let him not say, I cannot speak, for I am a child; for, God having touched his mouth, and put his words into it, none can say it is not a child. This is the latter part of the chapter. It is like God's people: their transgressions, even the house of Jacob their sins; it is all by way of reproach and conviction, that they might be brought to repent of their sins, and so prevent their coming up against them. When they draw up against them, there is the aggravation, their conviction very close and pressing, and the expostulations very pungent and affecting. The sins of which they are most particularly charged, with this, is idolatry, forsaking the true God, their own God, for other false gods. Now they are told, I. That this was ungrateful to God, who had been so kind to them, v. 11. II. That it was without precedent, that a nation should change their God, v. 9. 13. III. That hereby they had disparaged and ruined themselves, v. 14. 19. IV. That they had broken their covenants, and degenerated from their good beginnings, v. 20. 24. Better than wickedness was too plain to be concealed, and too bad to be excused, v. 22, 23, 25. V. That they persisted wilfully and obstinately in it, and were irreclaimable and indefatigable in their idolatries, v. 24, 25, 26. VI. That they shamed themselves, by themselves, by their idolatry, and should shortly be made ashamed of it when they should find their idols unable to help them, v. 26. 29. 39. VII. That they had not been convinced, nor reformed by the words of Providence. IX. That they had put a great contempt upon God, v. 31, 32. X. That with their idolatries they had mixed the most unnatural murders, shedding the blood of the poor and helpless, v. 34. Those hearts were hard indeed, that were untouched and unhumbled when their sins were thus set in order before them. O that by meditating on this chapter we might be brought to content of our spiritual idolatries, giving that place in our souls which God has wrought in the flesh, which should have been reserved for God only!

1. Moreover, the word of the Lord came to me, saying, 2. Go, and cry in the ears of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the Lord, I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wastenteret after me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown. 3. Israel was holiness unto the Lord, and the first-fruits of his increase: all that devour him shall offend; evil shall come upon them, saith the Lord. 4. Hear ye the word of the Lord, O house of Jacob, and all the families of the house of Israel: 5. Thus saith the Lord, What iniquity have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity, and are become vain? 6. Neither said they, Where is the Lord that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, that led us through the wilderness; through a land of deserts, and of pits; through a land of drought, and of the shadow of death, through a land that no man passed through, and where no man dwelt? 7. And I brought you into a plentiful country, to eat the fruit thereof, and the goodness thereof: but when ye entered, ye defiled my land, and made my heritage an abomination. 8. The priests said not, Where is the Lord? and they that handle the law knew me not: the pastors also transgressed against me, and the prophets prophesied by Baal, and walked after things that do not profit.

Here is,

1. A command given to Jeremiah to go and carry a message from God to the inhabitants of Jerusalem. He was charged in general (ch. i. 17.) to go, and speak to them; here he is particular charged to go, and speak this to them. Note, It is good for ministers by faith and prayer to take out a fresh com-mision, when they address themselves solemnly to any part of their work, and when the minister carefully considers his own part. Here he has to deliver the word of God, and see that it agrees with it, that he may be able to say, not only The Lord sent me, but, He sent me to speak this. He must go from Anathoth, where he lived in a pleasant retirement, spending his time (it is likely) among a few friends, and in the study of the law, and must make his appearance at Jerusalem, that noisy, tumultuous city, and cry in their ears, the plainest of the plainest, and that would be heard; "Cry aloud, that all may hear, and none may plead ignorance. Go close to them, and cry in the ears of those that have stopped their ears."

II. The message he was commanded to deliver.

He must upbraid them with their horrid ingratitude in forsaking a God who had been so kind to them; that this might even make them ashamed, and bring them to repentance, or might justify God in bringing his hand against them.

1. God here puts them in mind of the favours he had of old bestowed upon them, when they were first formed into a people; (v. 2.) "I remember for thy sake, and I would have thee to remember it, and improve the remembrance of it for thy good; lest I cannot forget the kindness of thy youth, and the love of thine espousals." This may be understood,

(1.) Of the kindness they had for God; it was not such indeed as they had any reason to boast of, or to plead with God for favour to be shown them; (for many of them were very unkind and provoking, and when they did return, and inquire early after God, they did but flatter him;) yet God to this day pleased to mention it, and plead it to them; for though it was but a little that he showed them, he harkened kindly. When they believed the Lord and his servant Moses, when they sang God's praise at the Red sea, when at the foot of mount Sinai, they promised, All that the Lord shall say unto us we will do, and will be obedient; then was the kindness of their youth, and the love of their espousals.

When they seemed so forward for God, he said, Surely they are my people, and will be faithful to me, children that shall not lie. Note, Those that begin well, and promise fair, but do not perform and persevere, will justly be upbraided with their hopeful and promising beginnings. God remembers the kindness of our youth, and the love of our espousals, the zeal we then seemed to have for him, and the affection whereby we made our covenants with him, the buds and blossoms that never came to perfection; and it is good for us to remember them; that we may remember whence we are fallen, and return to our first love, Rev. ii. 4. 5. Gal. iv. 15.

In two things appeared the kindness of their youth. [1.] That they followed the direction of the pillar of cloud and fire in the wilderness; though sometimes they spoke of returning into Egypt, or pushing forward into Canaan, yet they did neither, as many for forty years together went after the wilderness, and trusted him to provide for them, though it was a land that was not sown. This God took kindly, and took notice of it to their praise long after, that though much was amiss among them, yet they never forsook the direction they were under. Thus, though Christ often chid his disciples, yet he recommended them, at parting, for continuing in him, Luke xvi. 28. It must be the strong affection of the youth, and the espousals, that will carry us on to follow God in a wilderness, with an implicit faith, and an entire resignation; and it is a pity that those who have so followed him, should ever leave him. [2.] That they entertained divine institutions, set up the tabernacle among them, and attended the service of it. Israel was there; they were there; they were there; they were there; and he in covenant as a peculiar people. Thus they began in the Spirit, and God puts them in mind of it, that they might be ashamed of ending in the flesh. Or, it may be understood, (2.) Of God's kindness to them; of that he afterwards speaks largely, When Israel was a child, then I loved him, Hos. xi. 1. He then espoused that people to himself with all the affection with which a young man marries a virgin, (ch. lixi. 5.) for the time was a time of love, Ezek. xvi. 8.

[1.] God appropriated him to himself, though they were a sinful people, yet by virtue of the covenant made with them, and the church set up among them, they were holiness to the Lord, dedicated to his honour, and taken under his special tuition: they were among the first-fruits of his inheritance; the first-fruits of his church he had in the world; these were the first-fruits, but the full harvest was to be gathered from among the Gentiles. The first-fruits of the increase were God's part of it, were offered to him, and he was honoured with them; so were the people of the Jews; what little tribute, rent, and homage God had from the world, he had it chiefly from them; and it was their honour to be thus set apart from God. This honour have all the saints, they are the first-fruits of his creatures, Jam. i. 18.

[2.] Having espoused them, he espoused their cause, and became an Enemy to their enemies, Exod. xxiii. 22. Being the first-fruits of his increase, all that devoted him, (so it should be read,) did offend, they trespassed, they contracted guilt, and evil befell them; as those were reckoned offenders, that devoted the first-fruits, or any thing else that was holy to the Lord, that emblemed them, or converted them to their own use, Lev. v. 15. Whoever offered any injury to the people of God, did it at their peril; their God was ready to avenge their quarrel, and said to the broadest of kings, Touch not mine anointed, Ps. cv. 14, 15. Exod. xxi. 20. The God of Israel desireth not to forgive them; he sought with them that those that attempted to debase them, and drew them off from being holiness to the Lord; witness his quarrel with the Midianites about the matter of Peor, Numb. xxv. 17, 18.

[3.] He brought them out of Egypt with a high hand and great terror, (Deut. iv. 34.) and yet with a kind hand and great tenderness led them through a very sorrowful wilderness, (Gen. xiv. 13.) through the deserts and wilderness of Sin, through Sodom and Gomorrah, through the land of the Philistines, through the high mountains, through the breadth of their land, through the depths of the sea; and this was the shadow of death; in that darksome valley they walked forty years; but God was with them, his rod, in Moses's hand, and his staff, in Aaron's hand; they were not wanting, nor were they found wanting, (Ps. x. 18.) nor were there found wanting for them, (Ps. xxi. 4, 5.) gave them bread out of the clouds, and drink out of the rocks. It was a land abandoned by all mankind, as yielding neither road nor rest; it was no thoroughfare, for no man passed through it; no settlement, for no man dwelt there; for God will teach his people to tread un trodden paths, to dwell alone, and to be singular. The difficulties of the journey are thus insisted on, to magnify the power and goodness of God in bringing them, through all, safe to their journey's end at last. All God's spiritual Israel must own their obligations to him for a safe conduct through the wilderness of this world, no less dangerous to the soul than that was to the body.

[4.] At length he settled them in Canaan; (v. 7.) I brought you into a plentiful country; which would be the more acceptable after they had been for so many years in a land of drought. They did eat the fruit thereof, and the goodness thereof, and were allowed so to do. I brought you into a land of Carmel, where there was a place of extraordinary fruitfulness; Canaan was as one great fruitful field, Deut. vii. 7.

[5.] God gave them the means of knowledge and grace, and communion with him; this is implied, v. 8. They had priests that handled the law, read it, and expounded it to them; that was part of their business, Deut. xxxii. 8. They had pastors to guide them, and take care of their affairs, magistrates and judges; they had prophets to consult God for them, and to make known his mind to them.

2. He upbraids them with their horrid ingratitude, and the ill returns they had made him for these favours; let them all come, and answer to this charge; (v. 4.) it is exhibited in the name of God against all the families of the house of Israel, for they can not declare all the iniquities of the first-fruits. It is a name of the Messiah, a name of him who comes to make all his people partakers of himself and his kingdom. (1.) He challenges them to produce any instance of his being unjust and unkind to them. Though he had conferred favours upon them in some things, yet, if in other things he had dealt hardly with them, they had not been altogether without excuse. He therefore puts it fairly to them to show cause for their deserting him; (v. 5.) What iniquity have your fathers found in me, or you either? Have you, upon trial, found God a hard Master? Have his commands put any hardship upon you, or obliged you to any thing unright, unfair, or unbecoming you? Have his promises put any cheques upon you, or raised your expectations of things which you were afterward disappointed of? You that renounce your covenant with God, can you say that it was a hard bargain, and that which you could not live upon? You that forsake the ordinances of God, can you say that it was because they were a wearisome service, or work that there was nothing to be got by? No, the disappointments you have met with, were owing to yourselves, not to God. The yoke of his commandments is easy, and in keeping of them there is great reward. Note, Those that forsake God through fear of the world, give God occasion to say, Their work shall follow them; nor any provocation to do so: for this we may safely appeal to the consciences of sinners; the slothful servant that offered such a plea as this, had it overruled out of his own mouth, Luke xiv. 22. Though he afflicts us, we cannot say that there is iniquity in him, he doeth us no wrong; the ways of the Lord are undoubtedly equal, all the iniquity is in our ways.

(2.) He charges them with being very unjust and unkind to him in this. [1.] They had quitted his service; "They are gone from me, say, they are gone far from me." They studied how to estrange themselves from God and their duty, and got as far as they could out of the reach of his commandments and their own convictions. Those that have deserted religion, commonly set themselves at a greater distance from it, in a greater opposition to it, than they never knew it.

[2.] They had quitted it for the service of idols, which was so much the greater reproach to God and his service; they went from him, not to mend themselves, but to cheat themselves; they have walked after vanity, that is, idolatry; for an idol is a vain thing; it is nothing in the world, 1 Cor. viii. 4. Deut. xxxii. 21. Jer. xlv. 22. "Idolatrous worships are vanities, Acts xiv. 15. Idolaters are vain, for they that make idols are like unto them, (Ps. cxv. 8.) as much stocks and stones as the images they worship, and good for as little.

5.] They had with idolatry introduced all manner of wickedness. When they entered into the good land which God gave them, they defied it, (v. 7.) by defiling themselves, and dissembling themselves for the service of God. It was God’s land, they were but tenants to him, sojourners in it, Lev. xxv. 23. It was his heritadge, for it was a holy land, Immanuel’s land; but they made it an abomination, even to God himself, who was wroth, and greatly abhorred Israel.

9. Wherefore I will yet plead with you, saith the Lord, and with your children’s children will I plead. 10. For pass over the isles of Chittim, and see; and send unto Kedar, and consider diligently, and see if there be such a thing: 11. Hath a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods? but my people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit. 12. Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be horribly afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the Lord. 13. For my people have committed two evils; they have forsaken me, the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water.

The prophet having shown their base ingratitude in forsaking God, here shows their unparalleled fickleness and folly; (v. 9.) I will yet plead with you. Note, Before God punishes sinners, he pleads with them, to bring them to repentance. Again, When much has been said of the evil of sin, still there is more to be said, when one article of the charge is made good, there is another to be urged; when we have said a great deal, still we have yet to speak on God’s behalf, Job xxxvi. 2. Those that deal with sinners, for their conviction, must urge a diversity of arguments, and be watchful, as God had before pleaded with their fathers, and asked why they walked after vanity, and became vain, v. 5. Now he pleads with them, who persisted in that vain conversation received by tradition from their fathers, and with their children’s children, with all that in every age treading in their steps. Let those that forsake God know that he is willing to argue the case fairly with them, but the more they justified when he speaks. He pleads that with us, which we should plead with ourselves.

1. He shows that they acted contrary to the usage of all nations; their neighbours were more firm and faithful to their false gods than they were to the true God. They were ambitious of being like the nations, and yet in this they were unlike them. He challenges them to produce an instance of any nation that had changed their gods, (v. 10, 11.) or were apt to change them. Let them survey either the old records, or the present state, of the isles of Chittim, Greece, and the European islands, the countries that were more polite and learned; and of Kedar, that lay south-east, (as the other north-west from them,) which were more rude and barbarous; and they should not find an instance of a nation that could have changed their gods, though they had never done them any kindness, nor could do, for they were no gods. Such a veneration had they for their gods, so good an opinion of them, and such a respect for the choice their fathers had made, that though they were gods of wood and stone, they would not change them for gods of silver and gold, no not for the living and true God. Shall we praise them for this? We praise them not. But they will well be urged, to the reproach of Israel, that they who were the only people that had no cause to change their God, were yet the only people that had changed him. Note, Men are with difficulty brought off that religion which they had been brought up in, though ever so absurd and grossly false. The zeal and constancy of idolaters should shame Christians out of their defects.

II. He shows that they acted contrary to the dictates of common sense, in that they not only changed, (it may sometimes be our duty and wisdom to do so,) but that they changed for the worse, and made a bad bargain for themselves. 1. They parted from a God who was their Glory; who made them truly glorious, and every way put honour upon them, one whom they might with a humble confidence of grace in and as theirs, who is himself a glorious God, and the glory of those whose God he is; he was particularly the glory of his people Israel, for his glory had often appeared on their tabernacle. 2. They closed with gods that could do them no good; gods that do not profit their worshippers. Idolaters change God’s glory into shame, (Rom. i. 23,) and so they do their own; in dishonouring him, they dishonour themselves, and exposing themselves to enemies to their own interest. Note, Whatever they turn to who forsake God, it will never do them any good; it will flatter them and please them, but it cannot profit them. Heaven itself is here called upon to stand amazed at the sin and folly of these apostates from God; (v. 12, 13.) Be astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be sorely afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the Lord. But he who ever so grossly and undeservedly offends, it will take no notice of it; but let the heavens and heavenly bodies be astonished at it. Let the sun blush to see such ingratitude, and be afraid to shine upon such ungrateful wretches. They that forsok God, worshipped the host of heaven, the sun, moon, and stars; but these, instead of being pleased with the adora-ions that were paid to them, were astonished and horribly afraid; and would rather have been very lewd and utterly exhausted, as the word is, and deprived of their light, than that it should have occasion to any to worship them. Some refer it to the angels of heaven; if they rejoice at the return of souls to God, we may suppose that they are astonished and horribly afraid at the revolt of souls from him. The meaning is, that the conduct of this people toward God was such as, (1.) We may well admire and wonder at, that ever men, who presied so many other things, should do so very absurd, 2.) Such as we ought to have a holy indignation at as impious, and a high affront to our Maker, whose honour every good man is jealous for. (3.) Such as we may tremble to think of the consequences of what will be in the end hereof. Be horribly afraid to think of the wrath and curse which will be the portion of those who thus throw themselves out of God's grace and favour. Now what is it that is to be thought of with all this horror? it is this: "My people, whom I have taught, and should have ruled, have committed two great evils, ingratitude and folly; they have acted contrary both to their duty and to their interest. (1.) They have affronted their God, by turning their back upon him, as if he were not worthy their notice; "They have forsaken me, the fountain of living waters," which they have an abundant and constant supply of all the comfort and relief they stand in need of, and they have it freely. God is their Fountain of life, Ps. xxxvi. 9. There is in him an all-sufficiency of grace and strength; all our springs are in him, and our streams from him; to forsake him is, in effect, to deny this; he has been to us a bountiful Benefactor, a Fountain of living waters, overflowing, ever-flowing, in the gifts of his favour; to forsake him is to refuse to acknowledge his kindness, and to withhold that tribute of love and praise, which his kindliness calls for. (2.) They have cheated themselves; they forsook their own mercies, but it was for lying vanities; they took a great deal of pains to heap them out of their own cisterns, to dig pits or pools in the earth or rock, which they would carry water to, or which should receive the rain; but they proved broken cisterns, also at the bottom, so that they could hold no water. When they came to quench their thirst there, they found nothing but mud and mire, and the filthy sediment of a standing lake. Such idols were to their worshippers, and such a change did they experience, who turned from God to them. If we make an idol of any creature, health, wealth, or honour, if we place our happiness in it, and promise ourselves the comfort and satisfaction in it which are to be had in God only, if we make it our joy and love, our hope and confidence, we shall find it a cistern, which we take a great deal of pains to heap out and fill, and at the best it will hold but a little water, and that dead and flat, and soon corrupting, and not restoring life. The earth and the heavens show us cracks and crevices in hot weather, so that the water is gone when we have most need of it, Job vi. 15. Let us therefore with purpose of heart cleave to the Lord only, for whether else shall we go? He has the words of eternal life.

14. Is Israel a servant? Is he a home-born slave? why is he spoiled? 15. The young lions roared upon him, and yelped, and they made his land waste: his cities are burnt without inhabitant. 16. Also the children of Noph and Tahapanes have broken the crown of thy head. 17. Hast thou not procured this unto thyself, in that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, when he led thee by the way? 18. And now, what hast thou to do in the way of Egypt, to drink the waters of Sibor? Or what hast thou to do in the way of Assyria, to drink the waters of the river? 19. Thine own wickedness shall correct thee, and thy backslidings shall reprove thee: know, therefore, and see, that it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, and that my fear is not in thee, saith the Lord God of hosts.

The prophet further to evince the folly of their forsaking God, shows them what mischief they had already brought upon themselves by it; it had already cost them dear, for to this were owing all the calamities their country was now groaning under; which were but an earnest of more and greater if they repented not. See how they smarted for their folly.

1. Their neighbours, who were their professed enemies, prevailed against them, and that was in consequence of their sin. 2. They were enslaved, and lost their liberty; (v. 14.) Is Israel a servant? No, Israel is my son, my first-born; (Exod. iv. 22.) they are children, they are heirs; nay, their extraction is noble, they are the seed of Abraham, God's friend, and of Jacob his chosen. Is he a home-born slave? No, he is not the son of the bond-woman, but of the free; they were designed for dominion, not for servitude. Every thing in their constitution carried on it the marks of freedom and honour; why then is he spoyled of his liberty? Why is he used as a servant, as a home-born slave? Why does he make himself a slave to his lusts, to his idols, to that which does not profit? v. 11. What a thing is this, that such a birth-right should be sold for a mess of pottage! Such a crown profaned, and laid in the dust! Why is he made a slave to the oppressor? God provided that a Hebrew servant should be free the seventh year, and that their slaves should be of the heathen, not of their brethren, Lev. xxv. 44, 46. But, not withstanding this, the princes made slaves of their subjects, and masters of their servants, (ch. xxxiv. 11.) and so made their country mean and miserable, which God had made happy and honourable. The neighbouring princes and powers broke in upon them, and made some of them slaves even in their own country, and perhaps sold others for slaves into foreign countries. And how came they thus to lose their liberties? For their iniquities they sold themselves, Isa. 1. 1. We may apply this spiritually; Is the soul of man a servant? Is it a home-born slave? No, it is not; why then is it spoiled? It is because it has sold its own liberty, and enslaved itself to divers lusts and vanities, which is a lamentation, and should be for a lamentation.

2. They were impoverished, and had lost their wealth. God brought them into a plentiful country, (v. 7.) but all their neighbours made a prey of it. (v. 15.) young lions roar aloud over him, and ye; they are a continual terror to him; sometimes one potent enemy, and sometimes another, and sometimes all; many had crowned themselves with a triumph over him. They carry off the fruits of his land, and make that waste, burn his cities, when first they have plundered them, so that they remain without inhabitant, either because there are no houses to dwell in, or because those that should dwell in them are carried into captivity.

3. They were abused, and insulted over, and beaten by every body; (v. 16.) Even the children of Noph and Tahapanes, despiseful people, not
The Book of Proverbs

Chapter 3

In the time of death, it is vain to lament the days of one's youth. For the end of all that one labors for is dust; and the days of one's life are like a shadow. Therefore be wise and hearken to my instruction; and lean to my understanding. For I will not hide from you the excellence of wisdom and the fear of the Lord, and what is good and right. For wisdom is a tree of life to those who have understanding, and favor and favor and a輛 回

1:23 For the instruction of the wise is a tree of life, and the favor of the Lord is strength.

1:24 Watch over your heart with all diligence, for from it flow the springs of life.

1:25 Cast your lot among the wise and you will be in company with kings.

1:26 For the utterance of the mouth is a lamp to the feet of a man, and the book of the law is the teaching of life.

1:27 Blessed is the one who loves his mother and his father, who honors the elderly, and who keeps his own charge.

1:28 For in honor of humility and fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and knowledge of the holy is understanding.

1:29 For the Lord will keep the ways of the righteous, and will destroy the path of the wicked.

1:30 The wise will inherit the land, but the foolish shall inherit only thorns.
proved upon them, and they had front enough to deny it. In this, as in other things, their way was like that of the adulterous woman, that says, I have done no wrong, Jer. iii. 23. Because it was done secretly, and industriously concealed, (Ezek. viii. 19.) they thought it could never be

II. The proof of this; no witnesses need be called, it is proved by the notorious evidence of the facts.

1. They went about to deny it, and were ready to plead "Not guilty." They pretended that they would acquit themselves from this guilt, they washed themselves with nitre, and took much soap, offered many things in excuse and extenuation of it, v. 22. They pretended that they did not worship it, as gods, but as demons, and mediators between the immortal God and mortal men; or, that it was not divine honour that they gave them, but civil respect, that they sought to evade the convictions of God's word, and to screen themselves from the dread of his wrath. Nay, some of them had the impudence to deny the thing that had been said, and was revealed; "I have not gone after Baalim," v. 23. Because it was done secretly, and industriously concealed, (Ezek. viii. 19.) they thought it could never be and the day of the Lord to appear plentiful plants of a strange vine; they were now the reverse of what they were at first; their constitution was quite broken, and there was nothing in them of that good which one might have expected from a people so happily formed, nothing of the purity and piety of their ancestors. Their vine is as the vine of Sodom; Deut. xxxii. 32. This may fitly be applied to the nature of man; it was planted by its great Author, but not in the way (God be thanked,) but it is so universally corrupt, that it become the degenerate plant of a strange wilderness; that bears gall and wormwood, and it is so to God, it is highly distasteful and offensive to him.

4. They were violent and eager in the pursuit of their idolatries, doted on their idols, and were fond of new ones, and they would not be restrained from them, neither by the word of God, nor by his providences; so strong was the impetus with which they were carried out after this sin. They are here compared to a swift dromedary traversing her ways, a female of that species of creatures hunting about for a male, (v. 23.) and, to the same purport, a wild ass used to the wilderness, (v. 24.) not tamed by labour, and therefore very wanton, snuffing up the wind at her pleasure when she comes near the haunts of her favourite creature, to gratify herself. Who can hinder her from that which she lusts after? They that seek her then, will not weary themselves for her, for they know it is to no purpose; but will have a little patience till she be big with young, till that month comes which is the last of the months that she fulfills, (Job xxxix. 2.) when she is heavy and unwieldy, and then they shall find her, and she cannot outrun them. Note, (1.) Exeger lust is a brutish thing, and those that will not be turned away from the gratifying and indulging of it by reason and conscience and honour, are to be reckoned as brute beasts and no better; such as were born, and still are, like the wild ass's colt, let them not be looked upon as rational creatures. (2.) Idolatry is strangely intoxicating, and those that are addicted to it will with great difficulty be cured of it. That lust is as headstrong as any other. (3.) There are some so violently set upon the prosecution of their lusts, that it is to no purpose to attempt to give check to them: they do that, weary themselves in vain. Ephraim is joined to idols, let him alone. (4.) The time will come when the most fierce will be tamed, and the most wanton will be manageable; when distress and anguish come upon them, then their cars will be open to discipline the last month in which you may meet them, Ps. cxxii. 5, 6.

5. They were obstinate in their sin, and, as they could not be restrained, so they would not be reformed, v. 25. Here is, (1.) Fair warning given them of the ruin that this wicked course of life would certainly bring them to at last, with a caution therefore not to persist in it, but to break off from it; he would certainly bring them into a miserable captivity, and though they should be forced to travel barefoot, and when they would be denied fair water by their oppressors, so that their throat should be dried with thirst; this will be in the end hereof. They that affect strange gods, and strange ways of worship, will justly be made prisoners to a strange king in a strange land. Take up in time therefore, thy running after thy idols shall burn, thy shoes off thy feet, and thy pants, after them will bring thy throat to thirst; withheld therefore thy foot from these violent pursuits, and thy throat from these violent desires. One would think that it should effectually check us in the career, to consider what it will bring us to at last. (2.) Their rejecting of this fair warning; they said to those that would have persuaded them to repent and reform, There is no hope, no, never expect to work upon us, or prevail with us to cast away our idols, for we have loved strangers, and after them we will go; we are resolved we will, and therefore trouble not yourselves or us any more with your admonitions, it is to no purpose. There is no hope that we should ever break the corrupt habit and disposition we have got, and therefore we may as well yield to it as go about to get the mastery of it. Note, Their case is very miserable, who have wrought their ruin, and yet would not have their corruptions triumph over their convictions; they knew they should reform, but own they cannot, and therefore resolve they will not. But as we must not despair of the mercy of God, but believe that sufficient for the pardon of our sins, though ever so heinous, if we repent, and sue for that mercy, so neither must we despair of the grace of God, but believe that able to subdue our corruptions, though ever so strong, if we pray for and improve that grace. A man must never say, There is no hope, as long as he is on this side hell.

6. They had shamed themselves by their sin, in putting confidence in that which would certainly deceive them in the day of their distress, and putting him away, that would have helped them; (v. 26—28.) As the thief is ashamed when, notwithstanding all his arts, he is overtaken and convicted of his theft, he is forced to come and bring himself and brought to punishment, so are the house of Israel ashamed, not with a penitent shame for the sin they had been guilty of, but with a penal shame for the disappointment they met with in that sin. They will be ashamed when they find, (1.) That they are forced to cry to the God whom they had put contempt upon. In their prosperity they had turned the back to God, and set the face of them, they had slighted him, acted as if they had forgotten him, or did what they could to forget him, would not look toward him, but looked another way; they went from him as fast and as far as they could; but in the time of their trouble they will find no satisfaction in applying themselves to him; then they will say, Arise, and save us. Their fathers had many a time taken this shame to themselves, (Judg. lii. 9—iv. 3. —x. 10.) yet they would not be persuaded to cleave to God, that they might have come to him in their trouble with the more confidence. (2.) That they have no relief from the gods they have made their court to. They will be ashamed when they perceive that the gods they have made cannot serve them, and that the God who made them will not serve them. To bring them to this, if it were the case with them, as it is with all men, they are sent to the gods whom they served, as Judg. x. 14. They cried to God, Arise, and save us; God says of the idols, Let them arise, and save thee, for thou hast no reason to expect that I should. Let them arise, if they can, from the places where they are fixed; let them try whether they can save thee; but thou wilt be ashamed when thou findest that they can do thee no good, for thou hast no reason to expect that they should be able to do so, or that they are brought without inhabitant, v. 15. Thus is the folly of sinners to please themselves with that which will certainly be their grief, and pride themselves in that which will certainly be their shame. 29. Wherefore will ye plead with me? ye all have transgressed against me, saith the Lord. 30. If vain have I written to my children: they received no correction: your own sword hath devoured your prophets, like a destroying lion. 31. O generation, see ye the word of the Lord: Have I been a wilderness unto Israel? a land of darkness? Wherefore say my people, We are lords; we will come no more unto thee? 32. Can a maid forget her ornaments, or a bride her attire? yet my people have forgotten me days without number. 33. Why trimmest thou thy way to seek love? therefore hast thou also taught the wicked ones thy ways. 34. Also in thy skirts is found the blood of the souls of the poor innocents: I have not found it by secret search, but upon all these. 35. Yet thou sayest, Because I am innocent, surely his anger shall turn from me: behold I will plead with thee, because thou sayest, I have not sinned. 36. Why gaddest thou about so much to change thy way? thou also shalt be ashamed of Egypt, as thou wast ashamed of Assyria. 37. Yea, thou shalt go forth from him, and thy hands upon thy head: for the Lord hath rejected thy confidences, and thou shalt not prosper in them.

The prophet here goes on in the same strain, aiming to bring a sinful people to repentance, that their destruction might be prevented.

1. He avers the truth of the charge; it was evident beyond contradiction, it was the greatest absurdity imaginable in them to think of denying it; (v. 28.) Wherefore he uttered an accusation against them, and put me upon the proof of it, or wherefore will you go about to plead any thing in excuse of the crime, or to obtain a mitigation of the sentence? Your plea will certainly be overruled, and judgment given against you: you know you have all transgressed, one as well as another; why then do you quarrel with me for contending with you? 2. He aggravates it from the consideration both of their incorrigibility and of their ingratitude. (1.) They had been wrought upon by the judgments of God which they had been under; (v. 36.) In vain have I smitten your children, the children or people of Judah. They had been under divine rebukes of many kinds. God therein designed to bring them to repentance, but it was in vain, they did not receive them with a penitent heart; they were not moved; their consciences were not awakened, nor their hearts softened and humbled, nor were they driven to seek unto God, they received no instruction by the correction, were not made the better by it; and it is a great loss thus to lose an affliction; they did not receive, they did not submit to, or comply with, the correction, but their hearts fretted against the Lord, and so they were smitten in vain; for the children, the young people, among them, (so it may be taken,) were smitten in vain; they were so soon prejudiced against repentance, that they were as untractable as the old ones that had been long accustomed to do evil. (2.) They had not been wrought upon by the word of God, which he had sent them in the mouth of the prophets, nor through the messenger of the Lord, nor the messengers for the sake of the message; Your own sword has devoured your prophets like a destroying lion; you have put them to death for their faithfulness, with as much rage and fury, and with as much greediness and pleasure, as a lion devours his prey. The prophets, who were their greatest blessers, were treated by them as if they had been the plagues of their generation, and this was their measure-filling sin, (2 Chron. xxxvi. 16.) they killed their own prophets, 1 Thess. ii. 15. (3.) They had not been wrought upon by the favours God had bestowed upon them; (v. 31.) O generation, (he does not call them, as he might, O faithless and perverse generation, O generation of idolaters, but speaks gently, O ye men of this generation,) see ye the word of the Lord, do not only hear it, but consider it diligently, apply your minds closely to it. As we are bid to hear the word, (Micah vi. 9.) for that has its voice, so are we bid to consider the word, for that has its visions, its views. It intimates, that your sins are hereby made manifest; there is no denying; you may see it to be very evident; it is written as with a sun-beam, so that he that runs may read it: Have I been a wilderness to Israel, a land of darkness? Note, None of those who have had any dealings with God ever had reason to complain of him as a wilderness, or a land of darkness. He has blessed us with the fruits of the earth, and therefore we cannot say that he has been a wilderness to us, a dry and barren land, that (as Mr. Gataker expresses it) he has held us to hard service, as cattle fed upon the common; no, his sheep have been led into green pastures. He has also blessed us with the lights of heaven, and has not withheld them, so that we cannot say, He has been to us a land of darkness. He has caused his sun to shine, as well as his rain to fall, upon the evil and thankful. Or, the meaning is, in general, that the service of God has not been to any either as an unpleasant or an unprofitable service. God sometimes has led his people through a wilderness, and a land of darkness, but he himself was then to them all that which they needed, he so fed them with manna, and led them by a pillar of fire, that it was to them a blessed field and a land of light. The world is, and was, to many, who make it their home and their portion, a wilderness, and a land of darkness, vanity and vexation of spirit; but those that dwell in God, have the lines fallen to them in pleasant places. (4.) Instead of being wrought upon by these, they were grown intolerably insolent and imperious. They say, We are lords, we will come no more unto thee. Now that they were become a potent kingdom, or thought themselves such, they set up for themselves, and shook off their dependence upon God. This is the language of presumptuous sinners, and it is not only very impious and profane, but very unreasonable and foolish. (1.) It is absurd for us, who are subjects, to say, We are lords, (that is, rulers,) and we will come no more to God to receive commandments from him, for we are King of old, so he is King for ever, and we cannot take him from under his authority. (2.) It is absurd for us, who are beggars, to say, We are lords, that is, We are rich, and we will come no more to God, to receive favours from him, as if we could live without him, and need not to be beholden to him. God justly takes it ill, when those to whom he has been a bountiful Benefactor, cannot either for hearing from him or speaking to him.

3. He lays the blame of all their wickedness upon their forgetting God; (v. 32.) They have forgotten me; they have industriously banished the thoughts of God out of their minds, just as those thoughts cut with thoughts of their idols, and avoided all those things that would put them in mind of God. (1.) They had neglected him, days without number, time out of mind, as we say. They had not for a great while entertained any serious thoughts of him; so that they seem quite to have forgotten him, and regarded nothing in comparison of him. How many days of our lives have passed without suitable remembrance of God? Who can number those empty days? (2.) They had not had such a regard and af fection to him, as young ladies generally have to their fine clothes; Can a maid forget her ornaments, or a bride her attire? No, their hearts are upon them, and they value them too much, and when they see them, that they are ever and anon thinking and speaking of them; when they are to appear in public, they do not forget any of their ornaments, but put every one in its place, as they are described, Is. iii. 18, &c. And yet my people have forgotten me. It is said that any should be more in love with their fine clothes than with their God; and shall woman be with them, and them be with her in her fine clothes, or part with that, than leave any of their ornaments behind them, or part with them. Is not God our Ornament? Is he not a Crown of glory, and a Diadem of beauty, to his people? Did we look upon him to be so, and upon our religion as an ornament of grace to our head, and chains about our neck, (Prov. i. 9.) we should be as mindful of them as every maid was of her ornaments, or a bride of her attire; we should be as careful to preserve them, and as fond to appear in them.

4. He shows them what a bad influence their sins had had upon others; the sins of God's professing people harden and encourage those about them in their evil ways, especially when they appear forward and ringleaders in sin; (v. 33.) Why trimmest thou thy way to seek love? There is an allusion here to the woman who was styling herself with them, and striving to recommend themselves by their odling looks and gay dress, as Jezebel, who painted her face, and tired her head. Thus had they courted their neighbors into sinful confederacies with them, and communion in their idolatries, and had taught the wicked ones their ways, their ways of mixing God's institutions with their idolatrous customs and usages, which was a corrupting of the doctrine of God's appointed; and made the ways of their idolatry worse than that of others. Those have a great deal to answer for, who, by their fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, make wicked ones more wicked than otherwise they would be.

5. He charges them with the guilt of murder added to the guilt of their idolatry; (v. 34.) Also in thy skirts is the life of the poor innocent, which cried to heaven, and for which God was now making inquisition. The reference is to the children that were offered in sacrifice to Moloch; or, it may be taken more generally for all the innocent blood which Manasseh shed, and with which he had filled Jerusalem, (2 Kings xxvi. 16.) the righteous blood, especially the blood of the prophets and others that witnessed against their impieties. This blood was found not by secret search, not by digging, (so the word is,) but upon all these it was above ground. This intimates that the guilt of this kind, which they had contracted, was certain and evident, not doubtful, or which would bear a dispute; and that it was avowed and barefaced, and which they had not so much sense either of shame or fear as to endeavour to conceal; which was a sign of the worst of sin.

6. He overrules their plea of Not guilty. Though this matter be so plain, yet thou sayest, Because I am innocent, surely his anger shall turn from me; and again, Thou sayest I have not sinned, (v. 35.) therefore I will plead with thee, and will convince thee of thy mistake. Because they deny the charge, and stand upon their own justification, therefore God deals it out to them, and plead with them, both by his word and by his rod. Those shall be made to know how much they deceived themselves.

(1.) Who say that they have not offended God, that they are innocent, though they have been guilty of the grossest enormities. (2.) Who expect that God will be reconciled to them, though they do not repent and reform. They own that they had been under the tokens of God's anger, but they think that it was causeless, and that they by pleading innocence had proved it to be so, and therefore they conclude that God will immediately fill his anger by action, and his anger shall be turned from them. This is very provoking, and God will plead with them, and convince them that his anger is just, for they have sinned and he will never cease his controversy, till they, instead of justifying themselves thus, humbly, and judge, and condemn themselves.

7. He upbraids them with the shameful disavowals they attempted to make him in his own name as to his confidence, while they made God their Enemy, v. 36, 37. It was a piece of spiritual idolatry they were often guilty of, that they trusted in an arm of flesh, and their hearts therein departed from the Lord. Now here he shows them the folly of it. (1.) They were restless, and unsatisfied in the choice of their confidences; Why goddest thou about so much to change thy way? Doubtless it is because thou meetest not with that in those thou didst confide in, which thou promisedst thyself." Those that make God their Hope, and walk in a continual dependance upon him, need not god about to change their way; for their souls may return to him, and repress in him as their Rest; but they that trust in creatures will be perpetually uneasy, like Noah's dove that came again to him for the second time of her food. Else, thinking they trust to fail them, and they think to change for the better, but they will be still disappointed. They first trusted to Assyria, and when that proved a broken reed, they depended upon Egypt, and that proved no better. Creatures being vanity, they will be vexation of spirit to all these that put their confidence in them; they god about, seeking rest, and finding none. (2.) They were quite disavowing it, and disavowed it, as those that had once been broached, and the prophet tells them they should be; Thou shalt be ashamed of Egypt, which thou now trusted in, as formerly thou wast of Assyria, who distressed them, and helped them not, 2 Chron. xxviii. 20. The Jews were a peculiar people in their profession of religion, and for that reason none of the neighbouring nations cared for them, nor could heartily love them: and yet the Jews were still courting them and confiding in them, and were well enough served when deceived by them. See what will come of it; (v. 37.) Thou shalt go forth from him, thine ambassadors or envos shall return from Egypt re infecta—disappointed, and therefore with their hands upon their heads, lamenting the desperate condition of their people. Or, Thou shalt go forth from hence, into captivity in a strange land, with thine hands upon thy head, holding it because it aches, (ubi dolor, ibi digitus—Where the pain is the finger will be afflicted) or as people ashamed, for Tamar, in the height of her confusion, laid her hand on her head, 2 Sam. xiii. 19. "And Egypt, that thou refusest, shall not be able to prevent it, or to rescue thee out of captivity. They that will not lay their hand on their heart in godly sorrow, who do not break the work of life, shall be made to lay their hand on their head in horror, out of the world, which works death. And no wonder that Egypt cannot help them, when God will not. If the Lord do not help thee, whence should I? The Egyptians are broken reeds, for the Lord has rejected thy confidences; he will not make use of them for thy relief, will neither so far honour them, nor so far give contentment. The confidence in them is laid aside, as if it were a lie, to be the instrument of any good to thee, and therefore thou shalt not prosper in them; they shall not stand thee in thy stead, nor give thee any satisfaction. As there is no counsel or wisdom that can prevail against the Lord, so there is none that can prevail with u., Some read it, The Lord has rejected thine confidence, because thou hast dealt so unfaithfully with:} him as to trust in their creatures, nay, in his enemies, when thou shouldst have trusted in him only, he has abandoned thee to thy destruction from which thou thoughtest thus to have sheltered thyself; and then thou cannot prosper, for none ever either hardened himself against God, or estranged himself from God, and prospered.

CHAP. III.

The foregoing chapter was wholly taken up with reproofs, and threatenings against the people of God, for their apostaties from him; but in this chapter, gracious invitations and encouragements are given them to return and repent, notwithstanding the multitude and greatness of their provocations, which are here aggravated, to magnify the mercy of God, and to show that as sin abounded grace did much more abound. Here, I. It is further showed how bad they had been, and how well they deserved to be quite abandoned, and yet how ready God was to receive them into his favour, upon their repentance, v. 1. 5. II. The impenitence of Judah, and their persisting in sin, are aggravated from the judgments of God upon Israel, which they should have learned by v. 6. 11. III. Great encouragements are given to these backsliders to return and repent; and promises made of great mercy which God had in store for them, and which he should prepare them for by bringing them home to himself. IV. The charge renewed against them for their apostasy from God, and the invitation repeated to return and repent, to which are here added the words that are put in their mouth, which they should make use of in their return to God, v. 20. 22.

1. THEY say, If a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and become another man's, shall he return unto her again? shall not that land be greatly polluted: but thou hast played the harlot with many lovers; yet return again to me, saith the Lord. 2. Lift up thine eyes unto the high places, and see where thou hast not been lien with: in the ways hast thou sat for them, as the Arabian in the wilderness; and thou hast polluted the land with thy whoredoms, and with thy wickedness. 3. Therefore the showers have been withheld, and there hath been no latter rain; and thou hastad a whore's forehead, thou refusedst to be ashamed. 4. Wilt thou not from this time cry unto me, My father, thou art the guide of my youth? 5. Will he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Behold, thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou coudest.

These verses some make to belong to the sermon in the foregoing chapter, and they open a door of hope to those who receive the conviction of the reproofs we had; therefore God wounds, that he may heal. Now observe here,

I. How basely this people had forsaken God, and gone a whoring from him. The charge runs very high here: 1. They had multiplied their idols, and their idolatry was so great among them as had been bad enough, but they were insatiable in their lustings after false worship; Thou hast played the harlot with many lovers, v. 1. She was become a common prostitute to idols; not a foolish deity was set up in all the neighbourhood, but the Jews would have it quickly. Where was a high place in the country, but they had an idol in it? v. 2. Note, In repentance, it is good to make sorrowful reflections upon the particular acts of sin we have been guilty of, and the several places and companies where it has been committed, that we may give glory to God, and take shame to ourselves, by a particular confession of it.

2. They had sought opportunity for their idolatries, and had sent about to inquire for new gods; In the high ways hast thou sat for them, as Tamar when she put on the disguise of a harlot, (Gen. xxxviii. 14.) and as the foolish woman, that sitts to call passers, who go right on their way, Prov. ix. 14. 15. As the Arabian in the wilderness; the Arabian huckster, (so some,) that courts customers, waits for the merchants to get a good bargain and forestall the market; or, the Arabian thief, (so others,) that watches for his prey; so had they waited either to court new gods to come among them, the newer the better, and the more food they were of them, or to court others to join with them in the idolatries: they were not only sinners, but Satan's; not only traitors themselves, but tempters to others.

3. They were grown very impudent in sin. They not only polluted themselves, but their land, with their whoredoms and with their wickedness; (v. 2.) for it was universal and unpunished, and so became a national sin. And yet, (v. 3.) Thou hastad a whore's forehead, a brazen face of thy own. Thou refusedst to be ashamed; thou didst enough to shame the world for evil, and there was nothing more to do to thyself. Blushing is the colour of virtue, or at least a relief of it; but those that are past shame, (we say,) are past hope. Those that have an adulterer's heart, if they indulge that, will come at length to have a whore's forehead, void of all shame and modesty.

4. They abounded in all manner of sin. They polluted the land not only with their whoredoms, their idolatries, but with their wickedness, or malice, (v. 2.) sins against the second table: for how can we think that those should be true to their neighbour, that are false to their God? Nay, (v. 5.) thou hast spoken and done evil things as thou coudest; and wouldest have spoken and done worse, if thou hadst not known how; thy will was to do it, but thou lackedst opportunity. Note, Those are wicked indeed, that sin to the utmost of their power; that never refuse to comply with a temptation because they should not, but because they cannot.

II. How gently God had corrected them for their sins. Instead of raining fire and brimstone upon them, because, like Sodom, they had aroused their sin, and had gone after strange gods, as Sodom after strange flesh, he only witheld the showers from them, and that only one part of the year, there has been no latter rain; which might serve as an intimation to them of their continual dependence upon God; when they had the former rain, that was no security to them for the latter, but they must still look up to God: but it had not this effect.

5. How greatly they may have been corrected. And it may be a comfort to us, that when God has abandoned them utterly, and refused ever to receive them again, though they should return; this would have been but according to the known rule of divorces, v. 1. They say, it is an adjudged case, nay, it is a case in which the law is very express, and it is what every body knows and speaks of, (Deut. xxiv. 4.) that if a woman be once put away for whoredom, and be joined to another man, her first husband shall not take her again upon any pretence whatsoever, take her again to be his wife; such playing fast and loose with the marriage-bond would be a horrid profanation of that ordinance, and would greatly pollute that land. Observe what the law says in this case; They say, every one will say, and subscribe to the equity of the law in it; for every man finds something in himself, that forbids him to entertain one that is another man's. And in like manner they had reason to expecthat God should refuse ever to take them to be his people again, who had not only been joined to en: strange god, but had played the harlot with many lovers. If we had to do with a man like ourselves, after such provocations as we have been guilty of, he would have been insipid, and we might have despised of his being reconciled to us.

1. He encourages them to hope that they should find favour with him, upon their repentance: "Though thou hast been bad, yet return again to me," v. 1. This implies a promise that he will receive them; "Return, and thou shalt be welcome." God has not tied himself by the laws which he may determine by our repentance, that he will change; he will be more kind to Israel, for the sake of his covenant with them; than ever any injured husband was to an adulterous wife; for in receiving penitents, as much as in any thing, he is God, and not man.

2. He therefore kindly expects that they will repent, and return to him, and he directs them what to say to him: *"Wilt thou not, who hast been in such relation to me, and on whom I have laid such obligations, wilt thou cry to me? Though thou hast gone a whoring from me, yet, when thou findest the folly of it, surely thou wilt think of returning to me; now at least, now at last, in this thy day. Wilt thou not at this time, nay, wilt thou not from this time and for "From this time, and for ever thou hast said or done hitherto, wilt thou not from this time apply thyself to me? From this time of conviction and correction; now that thou hast been made to see thy sins, (v. 2.) and to smart for them, (v. 3.) wilt thou not now forsake them, and return to me, saying, I will go and return to my first husband, for then it was better with me than now?"* Hos. ii. 7. Or, "From this time that you hast had so kind an invitation to return, and assurance that thou shalt be well received: will not this grace of God overcome thee? Now that pardon is proclaimed, wilt thou not come in, and take the benefit of it? Surely thou wilt." (1.) He expects they will claim relation to God, as theirs; "Wilt thou not cry unto me, My Father, thou art the guide of my youth?" v. 1. They will speak like Father, and not like Father, when they come for their undutiful conduct to him, (Father, I have sinned,) and will hope to find in him the tender compassions of a Father towards a returning prodigal. They will come to him as a Father, to whom they will make their complaints, and in whom they will put their confidence for relief and succeed. They will now own as their Father, and themselves fatherless without him; and therefore hoping to find mercy with him, as those penitents, Hos. xiv. 3. (2.) They will come to him as the Guide of their youth, as their Husband; for so that relation is described, Mal. ii. 14. "Though thou hast gone after many lovers, surely then wilt at length remember the love of thine espousals, and return to the husband of thy youth." Or, it may be, they will give up all that they value, and go to God, for he is their Guide of youth. Youth needs a guide. In our return to God, we must thankfully remember that he was the Guide of our youth, in the way of comfort; and we must faithfully covenant that he shall be our Guide from henceforward in the way of duty, and that we will follow his guidance, and give ourselves entirely to it; that in all doubtful cases where we cannot understand his ways, we will give him the benefit of the doubt; that he will be our Father and guide in the path of life, as he is in the path of youth.

(2.) He expects they will apply to the mercy of God, and crave the benefit of that mercy, (v. 5.) that they will reason thus with themselves for their encouraging return to him; "Will he reserve his anger for ever? Surely he will not, for he has proclaimed his name gracious and merciful." Repenting sinners may encourage themselves with this, that though God childe, he will not always chide; though he be angry, he will not keep his anger to the end, but that though he cause grief, he will have compassion, and may thus plead for reconciliation. Sometimes God graciously may not only invite them, but directs them, to return to him.

6. The Lord said also unto me in the days of Josiah the king, Hast thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? she is gone up upon every high mountain, and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot. 7. And I said, after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me: but she returned not. And her treacherous sister Judah saw it. 8. And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery, I had put her away, and given her a bill of divorce; yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also. 9. And it came to pass through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks. 10. And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lorp.

11. And the Lord said unto me, The backsliding Israel hath justified herself more than treacherous Judah.

The date of this sermon must be observed, in order to the right understanding of it; it was in the days of Josiah, who set on foot a blessed work of reformation, in which he was hearty, but the people were not sincere in their compliance with it; to reprove them for that, and warn them of the consequences of their hypocrisy, is the scope of that which God here said to the prophet, and which he delivered to them. The case of the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah is here compared, the ten tribes happened to revolt, when they saw a temple of their own at Jerusalem, and the two tribes that adhered to both. The distinct history of those two kingdoms we have in the two books of the Kings, and here we have an abstract of both, as far as relates to this matter.

1. Here is a short account of Israel, the ten tribes. Perhaps the prophet had been just reading the history of that tribe, when he came to him, and said, Hast thou seen what backsliding Israel has done? v. 6. For he could not see it otherwise than in history, they having been carried into captivity long before he was born: but what we read in the histories of scripture should instruct us and affect us, and cause us to be eye-witnesses of it. She is called backsliding Israel, because that kingdom was first founded in an apostasy from the divine institutions, both in church and state. Now he had seen concerning them,

(1.) That they were wretchedly addicted to idolatry; they had played the harlot upon every high mountain, and upon every green tree; (v. 6.) when they had worshipped other gods in their high places and groves; and no marvel, when from the first they had worshipped God by the images of the golden calves at Dan and Bethel. The way of idolatry is down-hill: they that are in love with images, and will have them, soon become in love with other gods, and will have these too; for how should they stick at the breach of the first commandment, who make no conscience of the second?

(2.) That God by his prophets had invited and encouraged them to repent and reform; (v. 7.) "after she had done all these things, for which she might justly have been abandoned, yet I said unto her, Turn thou unto me, and I will receive thee." Though they had forsaken both the house of David, and the temple their God had set up for an inhabitancy jure divino—from God, without dispute, yet God sent his prophets among them, to call them to return to him, to the worship of him only, not insisting so much as one would have expected upon their return to the house of David, but pressmg their return to the house of Aaron: we read not that Elijah, that great reformer, ever mentioned their return to the house of David, while he was alive, for their return to the faithful service of the true God according as they had it among them. It is serious piety that God stands upon more than even his own rituals.

(3.) That, notwithstanding this, they had persisted in their idolatries; but she returned not, and God saw it; he took notice of it; and was much displeased with it, v. 7, 8. Note, God keeps account, whether we do or no, how often he has called to us to turn to him, and we have refused.

(4.) That he had therefore cast them off, and given them up into the hands of their enemies; (v. 8.) When I saw (so it may be read) that for all the actions wherein she had committed adultery, I must dismiss her, I gave her a bill of divorce: 1. They divorced them out of their protection, and left them an easy prey to any that would lay hands on them; when he scattered all their synagogues and schools of the prophets, and excluded them from laying any further claim to the covenant made with their fathers. Note, Those will justly be divorced from God, that join themselves to such as are rivals with them. For proof of this, go, and see what God did to Israel.

2. Let us now see what was the case of Judah, the kingdom of the two tribes; she is called thy treacherous sister Judah; a sister, because descend- ed from the same common stock, Abraham and Jacob; but as Israel had the character of a backslider, so Judah is called treacherous, because, though she professed to keep close to God when her heart was clean, (she adhered to the kings and priests that were of God's own appointing, and did not withdraw from her allegiance, so that it was expected she should deal faithfully,) yet she proved treacherous and false, and unfaithful to her professions and promises. Note, The treachery of them who pretend to cleave to God, will be reckoned for, as well as the apostacy of those who openly revolt from him. What the prophet said of Israel, did I also, and what came of it, and should have taken warning; Israel's captivity was intended for Judah's admonition, but it had not the designed effect. Judah feared not, but thought herself safe because she had Levites to be her priests, and sons of David to be her kings. Note, It is an argument of great stupidity and securi- ty, when we are not awakened to a holy fear by the judgments of God upon others. It is here charged on Judah,

(1.) That when they had a wicked king that debauched them, they heartily concurred with him in his debaucheries. Judah was forward enough to let the first, the sin of Manasseh, rise up among them, and to join in any idolatrous usage; so that through the lightness (or, as some read it, the wiliness and baseness) of her whoredom, or, as the margin reads it, by the fame and report of her whoredom, her notorious whorem, for which she was become infamous, she defiled the land, and made it an abomination to God; for the committed adultery with stones and stocks, with basest idols, those made of wood and stone. In the reigns of Manasseh and Amen, when they were disposed to idolatry, the people were so; and all the country was corrupted with it, and none feared the ruin which Israel by this means had brought upon themselves.

(2.) That when they had a good king that reformed them, they did not heartily concur with him in the reformation: that was the present case. God tried whether they would be good in a good reign, but the evil disposition was still the same; They returned not to me with their whole heart, but feignedly, v. 10. Josiah went further in destroying idolatry than the best of his predecessors had done, and for his own part, he will go out of my sight, as I removed Israel, (2 Kings xxiii. 25.) The people were forced to an external compliance with him, and joined with him in keeping a very solemn passover, and in renewing their covenants with God; (2 Chron. xxxiv. 32—xxxxv. 17.) but they were not sincere in it, nor were their hearts right with God. For this reason God at that very time said, I will remove Judah out of my sight, as I removed Israel, (2 Kings xxiii. 27.) because Judah was not removed from their sin by the sight of Israel's removal from their land. Hypocritical and ineffectual reformatons bode ill to a people. We deceive ourselves, if we think to deceive God by a feigned return to him; I know no religion without sincerity.

3. The case of these sister-kingdoms is compared, and judgments are thrown up on a comparison, that of the two Judah was the worse; (v. 11.) Israel has justified herself more than Judah, she is not so bad as Judah is. This comparative justification will stand Israel in little stead: what will it avail us to say, We are not so bad as others, when yet we are not really good ourselves? But it will serve as an aggravation of the sin of Judah, which was in two respects worse than that of Israel.

(1.) More was expected from Judah than from Israel; so that Judah dealt treacherously, they vilified a more sacred profession, and falsified a more solemn promise, than Israel did. (2.) Judah might have taken warning by the ruin of Israel for their idolatry, and would not. God's judgments upon others, if they be not means of our amendment, will be in great respects worse than that of Israel.

12. Go, and proclaim these words toward the north, and say, Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you; for I am me-
ful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger for ever. 13. Only acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God, and hast scattered thy ways to the strangers under every green tree, and ye have not obeyed my voice, saith the Lord. 14. Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married unto you: and I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion: 15. And I will give you pastors according to my heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding. 16. And it shall come to pass, when ye be multiplied and increased in the land, in those days, saith the Lord, they shall say no more, The ark of the covenant of the Lord; neither shall it come to mind, neither shall they remember it, neither shall they visit it, neither shall that he done any more. 17. At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord; and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem: neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart. 18. In these days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers. 19. But I said, How shall I put thee among the children, and give thee a pleasant land, a goodly heritage of the hosts of nations? And I said, Thou shalt call me, My father; and shalt not turn away from me.

Here is a great deal of gospel in these verses, both that which was always gospel, God's readiness to pardon sin, and to receive and entertain repenting sinners, and those blessings which were in a special manner reserved for gospel-times, the forming and founding of the gospel-church, by bringing into it the children of God that were scattered abroad, the superseding of the ceremonial law, and the uniting of Jews and Gentiles, typified by the uniting of Israel and Judah in their return out of captivity.

The prophet is directed to proclaim these words toward the north, for they are to call to backsliding Israel, the ten tribes that were carried captive into Assyria, which lay north from Jerusalem. That way he must look, to show that God had not forgotten them, though their brethren had, and to upbraid the men of Judah with their obstinacy in refusing to answer the calls given them. One might as well call to them who lay many hundred miles off in the land of the north; they will as soon hear as these unbelieving and disobedient people; backsliding Israel will sooner accept of mercy, and have the benefit of it, than treacherous Judah. And perhaps the proclaiming of these words toward the north, looks as far forward as the preaching of repentance and remission of sins unto all nations, beginning at Jerusalem, Luke xxiv. 47. A call to Israel in the land of the north, is a call to others in that land, even as many as belong to the election of grace; when it was suspected that Christ would go to the dispersed Jews among the Gentiles, it was concluded that he would teach the Gentiles, John vii. 55. So here, 1. There is an invitation given to backsliding Israel, and in them to the backsliding Gentiles, to return unto God, the God from whom they had revolted; (v. 12.) Return, O backsliding Israel. And again, (v. 14.) Turn, O backsliding children, repent of your backslidings, return to your allegiance, and set back to that good way which you have missed, and out of which you have turned aside.” Pursuant to this invitation, 1. They are encouraged to return; Repent, and be converted, and your sins shall be blotted out, Acts ii. 19. You have incurred God's displeasure, but return to me, and I will not cause you to sorrow (Isa. i. 18.) for your sins: if you are ready to fall upon sinners, as a lion falls on his prey, and there is none to deliver; as a mountain of lead falling on them, to sink them past recovery into the lowest hell. But if they repent it shall be turned away, Isa. xii. 1. I will not keep mine anger for ever, but will be reconciled, for I am merciful. We that are sinful, were for ever undone, if God were not merciful; the goodness of his nature encourages us to hope that if we by faith believe unto what we have done against him, he will by a pardoning unspoken what he has said against us. 2. They are directed how to return; (v. 13.) “Only acknowledge thine iniquity, own thyself in a fault, and thereby take shame to thyself, and give glory to God.” I will not keep my anger for ever; (that is a previous promise) you shall be delivered from that anger of God which is evermore wrathful. (See on Isa. i.) How much more when he says, Only acknowledge thine iniquity? 2 Kings v. 13. In confessing sin, (1.) We must own the corruption of our nature; Acknowledge thine iniquity; the perverseness and irreclaimableness of thy nature. (2.) We must own our actual sins, “that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God, hast affronted him and offended him. (3.) We must own the multitude of our transgressions, “that thou hast scattered thy ways among the strangers, run hither and thither in pursuit of thine idols, under every green tree. Wherever thou hast rambled, thou hast left behind thee the marks of thy folly. (4.) We must aggravate our sin from the disobedience that there is in it to the divine law. The sinfulness of sin is the worst thing in it; “I have not obeyed my voice, acknowledge that, and let that humble you more than any thing else, bringing together of the children of God that were scattered abroad to that. “Return, for though you are backsliders, yet you are children; nay, though a treacherous wife, yet a wife, for I am married to you, (v. 14.) and will not disown the relation.” Thus God remembers his covenant with their fathers, that marriage-covenant, and in consideration of that he remembers the covenant he made with his people. 1. He promises to gather them together from all places whither they are dispersed and scattered abroad; (John xi. 52.) I will take you, one of a city, and two of a family, or clan; and I will bring you to Zion. All those that by repentance return to their duty, shall return to their former comfort. Observe, (1.) God will graciously receive those that return to him, nay, it is he that by his distinguishing grace takes them out from among the rest that persist in transgression, and makes them heirs of all that had been undone. (2.) Of the many that have backslidden from God, there are but few, very few in comparison, that return to him, like the gleanings of the vintage; one of a city, and two of a country; Christ's flock is a little flock, and few there be that find the strait gate. (3.) Of those few, though dispersed, yet not one shall be lost. The church are dispersed, but will make it appear that out of one; he shall not be overlooked in a crowd, but shall be brought safe to Zion, safe to Heaven. The scattered Jews shall be brought to Jerusalem, and those of the ten tribes shall be as welcome there as those of the two. God's chosen, scattered all the world over, shall be brought to the gospel-church, that mount Zion, the heavenly Jerusalem, that holy hill on which Christ reigns.

2. He promises to set those over them that shall be every way blessings to them; (v. 15.) I will give you pastors after my heart, alluding to the character given of David, when God pitched upon him to be king; (1 Sam. xiii. 14.) The Lord hath sought him a man after his own heart. Observe, (1.) When a church is gathered it must be governed. I will bring them in, who shall make his will their rule to be under discipline, not as wild beasts, that range at pleasure, but as sheep that are under the direction of a shepherd. I will give them pastors, magistrates and ministers; both are God's ordinance for the support of his kingdom. (2.) It is well with a people when their pastors are after God's own heart; such as they should be, as such he would have them be, who shall make his will their rule to all their administrations; and such as endeavour in some measure to conform to his example; who rule for him, and, as they are capable, rule like him. (3.) Those are pastors after God's own heart, who make it their business to feed the flock, not to feed themselves, and fleece the flocks, but to do all they can for the good of those that are under their care. They shall stand, wisely and understandingly, as David fed them, in the integrity of his heart, and by the skilfulness of his hand, Ps. lxxxvii. 72. Those who are not only pastors, but teachers, must feed them with the word of God, which is wisdom and understanding, which is able to make us wise to salvation.

3. He promises that there should be no more occasion for the ark of the covenant, which had been so much the glory of the tabernacle first and afterward of the temple, and was the token of God's presence with them; that shall be set aside, and there shall be no more inquiry after, nor inquiring of, it; (v. 16.) When ye be multiplied and increased in the land, when the kingdom of the Messiah shall be set up, which by the accession of the Gentiles will bring into the church a vast increase, (and the days of the Gentiles are spoken of, to the Romans of all times to acknowledge to be here intended,) then they shall say no more, The ark of the covenant of the Lord, they shall have it no more among them to value, or value themselves upon, because they shall have a pure spiritual way of worship set up, in which there shall be no occasion for any of those external ordinances, with the ark of the covenant the whole ceremonial law shall be set aside, and all the institutions of it, for Christ, the Truth of all those types, exhibited to us in the word and sacraments of the New Testament, will be to us instead of all. It is very likely (whatever the Jews suggest to the contrary) that the ark of the covenant was in the second temple, being restored by Cyrus with the other vessels of the house of the Lord, Ezra i. 7. But in the gospel-temple Christ is the Ark, he is the Propitiatory, or Mercy-seat; and it is the spiritual presence of God in his ordinances that we are now to expect. Many expressions are here used converting them to Cyrus, or the king of Persia; that it shall not come to mind, that they shall not return, that they shall not visit it, that none of these things shall be any more done; for the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth, John iv. 24. But this variety of expressions is used, to show that the ceremonies of the law of Moses should be totally and finally abolished, never to be used any more; and it is added, because the name of those that had been so long wedged to them, should be weaned from them; and that they would not quite let them go till their Holy city and Holy house should both be levelled with the ground.

4. He promises that the gospel-church, here called Jerusalem, shall become eminent and conspicuous, v. 17. Two things shall make it famous. (1.) God's special residence and dominion in it. It shall be called, The throne of the Lord; the throne of the glory, for that shines forth in the church; the throne of his government, for that also is erected there, there he rules his willing people by his word and Spirit, and brings every thought into obedience to himself. As the gospel got ground, this throne of the Lord was set up there where Satan's seat had been. It is the daily throne of his grace, for they that by faith come to this Jerusalem, come to God the Judge of all, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, Heb. xii. 22, 23. (2.) The accession of the Gentiles to it. All the nations shall be gathered, and gathered to the church, and shall become subjects to that throne of the Lord which is there set up, and devoted to the honour of that name of the Lord which is there both manifested and called upon.

5. He promises that there shall be a wonderful reformation wrought in those that are gathered to the church; They shall not walk any more after the imagination of their evil hearts. They shall not live as they list, but live by rules; not do according to their own corrupt appetites, but according to the will of God. See what leads in sin, the imagination of our evil hearts; and what separates us from the church, is following after that imagination, being governed by fancy and humour; and what converting grace does, it takes us off from walking after our own inventions, and brings us to be governed by religion and right reason.

6. That Judah and Israel shall be happily united in one body, v. 18. They shall so in their return out of captivity, and their settlement again in Canaan; The house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, as being perfectly agree and become one stick in the hand of the Lord, as Ezekiel also foretold, ch. xxxvii. 16, 17. Both Assyria and Chaldea fell into the hands of Cyrus, and his proclamation extended to all the Jews in all his dominions. And therefore we have reason to think that many out of the house of Israel came with those of Judah of the land of the north; though at first there returned but forty-two thousand (whom we have an account of, Ezra ii. 1.) yet Josephus says, (Antiq. li. 11. cap. 4.) that some few years after, under Darius, Zerubbabel went, and fetched up above four millions of souls, to the land that was given for an inheritance to their fathers. And we never read of such amities and eminences between Israel and Judah as had been formerly. This happy concurrence between Israel and Judah in Canaan, was a type of the uniting of Jews and Gentiles in the gospel-church, when, all enmities being slain, they should become one shepherd under one shepherd.
III. Here is some difficulty started, that lies in the way of all this mercy; but an expedition is found to get over it.

1. God asks, How shall I do this for thee? Not as if God showed favour with reluctance, as he punishes with a How shall I give thee up? Hos. xi. 8, 9. No, though he is slow to anger, he is swift to show mercy. But it intimates that we are utterly unworthy of his favours, that we have no reason to expect them. There is no need of proving them, that we can lay no claim to them, and that he contrives how to do it in such a way as may save the honour of his justice and holiness in the government of the world; means must be devised, that his banished be not for ever expelled from him, 2 Sam. xiv. 14. How shall I do it? (1.) Even backsliders, if they return and repent, shall be put among the children; and who could ever have expected that? Behold, what manner of love is this! 1 John iii. 1. How should we, who are so mean and weak, so worthless and unworthy, and so provoking, ever be put among the children? (2.) Those whom God puts among the children, to them he will give the pleasant land, the land of Canaan, that glory of all lands, that goodly heritage of the hosts of nations, which nations and their hosts wish for, and prepare in their own hearts, by which the hosts of the nations have now got possession of: it was a type of heaven, where there are pleasures for evermore; now who could expect a place in that pleasant land, that has so often disbelieved it, (Ps. civ. 24.) and is so unworthy of it, and unfit for it? Is this the manner of men? 2. He does himself return answer to this question; But I said, Thou shalt call me, My Father. He does himself answer all the objections that are taken from our unworthiness, or that would never be got over. (1.) That he may put returning penitents among the children, he will give them the Spirit of adoption, teaching them to cry, Abba, Father, Gal. iv. 6. Thou shalt call me, My Father; thou shalt return to me, and resign thyself to me as a Father, and that shall recommend thee to my favour, (2.) That he may give them the pleasant land, he will put his fear in their hearts, that they may never turn from him, but may persevere to the end.

20. Surely as a wise treacherously departeth from her husband, so have ye dealt treacherously with me, O house of Israel, saith the Lord. 21. A voice was heard upon the high places, weeping and supplications of the children of Israel: for they have perverted their way, and they have forgotten the Lord their God. 22. Return, ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings. Behold, we come unto thee; for thou art the Lord our God. 23. Truly in vain is salvation hoped for from the hills, and from the multitude of mountains: truly in the Lord our God is the salvation of Israel. 24. For shame hath devoured the labour of our fathers from our youth; their flocks and their herds, their sons and their daughters. 25. We lie down in our shame, and our confusion covereth us: for we have sinned against the Lord our God, we and our fathers, from our youth even unto this day, and have not obeyed the voice of the Lord our God. Here is,

1. The charge God exhibits against Israel for their treacherous departures from him, v. 20. As an adulterous wife elopes from her husband, so have they gone a whoring from God. They were joined to God by a marriage covenant, but they broke that covenant, they dealt treacherously with God, who had always dealt kindly and faithfully with them. Treacherous dealing with men like ourselves is bad enough, but to deal treacherously with God is to deal reasonably.
their idols upon hills and mountains, (v. 6.) and they had a multitude of idols upon their mountains, which they had sought unto and put a confidence in; but now they will have no more to do with them. In vain was it, for any thing that is good from them, while from God we may look for every thing that is good; even salvation itself. Therefore, 3. They come depending upon God only as their God: In the Lord our God is the salvation of Israel. He is the Lord, and he only can save; he can save when all other succours and savours fail; and he is our God, and will in his own way and time work salvation upon all his people. They had escaped from sin, which Jesus Christ wrought out for us; that is the salvation of the Lord, his great salvation. 4. They come justifying God in their troubles, and judging themselves for their sins. v. 24, 25. (1.) They impute all the calamities they had been under to their idols, which had not only done them no good, but had done them abundance of mischief, all the mischief that had been done them; Shame, (the idol, that shameful thing,) has devoured the labour of our fathers. Note, [1.] True penitents have learned to call sin shame; even the beloved sin, which has been an idol to them, which they have been most pleased with and proud of, even that they shall call a scandalous thing, shall put content upon them, and consume them. (2.) Penitents have learned to call sin death and ruin, and to charge upon it all the mischiefs they suffer; He has devoured all those good things which our fathers laboured for, and left to us; we have found from our youth that our idolatry has been the destruction of our prosperity. Children often throw away upon their lusts that which their fathers have laboured for a great deal of time; and it is well if they are brought (as these here) to see the folly of it, and to call those vices their shame, which have wasted their estates, and devoured the labour of their fathers. They mention the labour of their fathers, which their idols had devoured, their flocks and herds, their sons and their daughters. First, Their idolatries had provoked God to bring these desolating judgments upon them, which had ruined their country and families, and made their estates a prey, and their children captives to the conquering enemy. They had procured these things to themselves. Or rather, Secondly, These had been sacrificed to their idols, had been separated unto that shame; ( Hos. ix. 10.) and they had devoured them without mercy, they did eat the fat of their sacrifices, (Ps. lxxvii. 20.) and their sufferings were for their idolatries. (2.) The charge is against themselves, and the shame of their sin and folly; (v. 25.) We lie down in our shame, being unable to bear up under it, our confusion covers us, both our penal and our penitential shame. Sin has laid us under such rebukes of God’s providence, and such reproaches of our own conscience, as surround us, and fill us with shame. But let not that sin, and shame, and still attend upon us. (1.) We are sinners by descent, guilt and corruption are entailed upon us; we and our fathers have sinned; we were sinners betimes, we began early in a course of sin, we have sinned from our youth; we have continued in it, have sinned even unto this day, though often called to repent, and forsake our sins. (2.) We have not only sinned, but we have sinned against all these things, and still attend upon us. We are sinners by descent, guilt and corruption are entailed upon us; we and our fathers have sinned; we were sinners betimes, we began early in a course of sin, we have sinned from our youth; we have continued in it, have sinned even unto this day, though often called to repent, and forsake our sins. (2.) We have not only sinned, but we have sinned against all these things, and still attend upon us. We are sinners by descent, guilt and corruption are entailed upon us; we and our fathers have sinned; we were sinners betimes, we began early in a course of sin, we have sinned from our youth; we have continued in it, have sinned even unto this day, though often called to repent, and forsake our sins. (2.) We have not only sinned, but we have sinned against all these things, and still attend upon us. (3.) We must not return to sin again; so some understand that, Thou shalt not remove, reading, It, Thou shalt not, or must not, wander. If thou wouldest not to wander, or sin again, as thou hast done, all shall be well. (4.) They must give unto God the glory due unto his name; (v. 2.) Thou shalt swear, the Lord liveth. His existence shall be with thee the most sacred fact, than which nothing can be more sure; and his judgment the supreme court shall to which thou shalt appeal, than which nothing can be more awful. JEREMIAH, IV.

Judah to a holy emulation. David used it as an argument with the elders of Judah, that it would be a shame for them, that were his bone and his flesh, to be the last in bringing the king back, when the ten of Israel appeared forward in it, 2 Sam. xix. 11, 12. So the prophet excites Judah to repent, because Israel did it, and well it were if the zeal of others less likely would provoke us to strive to get before them, and go beyond them, in that which is good.

CHAP. IV.

It should seem that the two first verses of this chapter might better have been joined to the close of the foregoing chapter, for they are directed to Israel, the ten tribes, by way of reply to their compliance with God’s call, directing and persuading them to return, Amos vi. 13, v. 1, 2. The rest of the chapter concerns Judah and Jerusalem. 1. They are called to repent and reform, v. 3, 4. 1. They are warned of the advance of Nebuchadnezzar and his forces against them, and are told that it is for their sins, from which they are again exhorted to wash themselves, v. 5. 18. III. To affect them the more with the greatness of the desolation that was coming, the prophet does himself manifest the evil and work of it. Do not only return from thine idolatries, but return to the instituted worship of the God of Israel. Or, Thou must return speedily, and not delay; (as Isa. xxi. 12. If ye will inquire, inquire ye; so,) if ye will return unto me, return ye; do not talk of it, but do it. (2.) Thou must utterly abandon all sin, and not retain any of the relics of idolatry; put away these abominations out of thine eye, out of all places, for every place is under mine eye; especially out of the temple; the house which I have in a particular manner made mine eye upon, to see that it is kept clean. It intimates that their idolatries were not only obvious, but offensive to the eye of God; they were abominations which he could not endure the sight of, therefore they were to be put away out of his sight. They were abominations to the pure eyes of God’s glory. Sin must be put away out of the heart, else it is not put away out of God’s sight, for the heart and all that is in it lie open before his eye. (3.) They must not return to sin again; so some understand that, Thou shalt not remove, reading, It, Thou shalt not, or must not, wander. If thou wouldest not to wander, or sin again, as thou hast done, all shall be well. (4.) They must give unto God the glory due unto his name; (v. 2.) Thou shalt swear, the Lord liveth. His existence shall be with thee the most sacred fact, than which nothing can be more sure; and his judgment the supreme court shall to which thou shalt appeal, than which nothing can be more awful. vol. iv.—2 u Jeremiah.

1. We must swear by the true God only, and not by creatures, or any false gods; by the God that liveth, not by the gods that are dead, and dumb, and dead; by him only, and not by the Lord and by Malcham, as Zep. i. 5. [2.] We must swear that only which is true, in truth and in righteousness; not daring to assert that which is false, or which we do not know to be true, or to assert that as certain, which is doubtful, or to promise that which we mean not to perform, or to violate the promise we have made. To say that which is untrue, or to do that which is unrighteous, is bad, but to back either with an oath is much worse. [3.] We must do it solemnly, swear in judgment, that is, when judicially called to it, and not in common affairs. Rain swearing is this great a profanation of God’s name, as solemn swearing is an honour to it. See Deut. x. 20. Matth. v. 34, 37.

2. He encourages them to keep in this good mind, and adhere to their resolutions. If the scattered Israelites will thus return to God, (1.) They shall be blessed themselves; for to that sense the first words may be read; “If thou wilt return to me, then shalt thou be as the fac-ulty into thy own land again, as was of old promised,” Deut. iv. 29.—xxx. 2. Or, “Then thou shalt rest in me, shalt return to me as thy rest, even while thou art in the land of thy captivity.” (2.) They shall be blessings to others; for their returning to God again will be a means of others turning to him, who never knew him. If thou wilt own the living Lord, then wilt thou be a blessing to others. Holy men, who are God’s chosen, he blesseth them in his favour, and to think themselves happy in being brought to the fear of him. See Is. lxv. 16. “They shall bless themselves in the God of truth,” and not in false gods; shall do themselves the honour, and give themselves the satisfaction, to join themselves to him; and then in him shall they glory, they shall make him their Glory, and shall please, may shall pride, themselves in the blessed change they have made. Those that part with their sins to return to God, however they scrupled the bargain at first, when they go away, then they boast.

3. For thus saith the Lord to the men of Judah and Jerusalem, Break up your fallow-ground, and sow not among thorns. Circumcise yourselves to the Lord, and take away the foreskins of your heart, ye men of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem; lest my fury come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

The prophet here turns his speech, in God’s name, to the men of the place where he lived. We have heard what words he proclaimed toward the north, (ch. iii. 12.) for the comfort of those that were now in captivity, and were humbled under the hand of God; let us now see what he says to the men of Judah and Jerusalem, who were now in prosperity, for their conviction and awakening. In these two verses, he exhorts them to repentance and reform, as the only way left them to prevent the desolating judgments that were ready to break in upon them. Observe,

1. The duties required of them, which they are concerned to do.

(1.) They must do by their hearts as they do by their hand that they expect any good of; they must prove it; it must be lucent and dur-able. Break up your fallow ground. Plough to yourselves a ploughing, or, “Plough up your plough-land, that you sow not among thorns, that you may not labour in vain, for your own safety and welfare, as those do that sow good seed among thorns, and as you have been doing a great while. Put yourselves into a frame fit to receive mercy from God, and put away all that keeps it from you, and then may expect to receive mercy, and to prosper in your endeavours to help yourselves.” Note, (1.) An unconfessed, unhumbled heart is like fallow-ground, ground unsettled, unoccupied. It is ground capable of improvement; it is our ground, let out to us, and we must be accountable for it; but it is fallow; it is unfenced, and lies common, it is unfruitful, and of no advantage to the owner, and (which is principally intended) it is overgrown with thorns and weeds, which must be cut down to the corrupt heart, if it be not renewed with grace. Rain the word, the dispensations of the first lost upon it, Heb. vi. 7, 8. [2.] We are concerned to get this fallow-ground ploughed up; we must search into our own hearts, let the word of God divide (as the plough does) between the joints and the marrow, Heb. iv. 12. We must rend our hearts, Joel ii. 13. We must pluck up by the roots those corruptions, which, as thorns, choke both our external favours and our expectations, Hos. x. 12.

2. The danger they are threatened with, which they are concerned to avoid. Repent and reform, lest my fury come forth like fire, which it is now ready to do, as that fire which came forth from the Lord, and consumed the sacrifices, and which was always kept burning upon the altar, and none might approach to burn the sacrifice; this is God’s judgment on our sins, because of the evil of their doing. Note, (1.) That which is to be dreaded by us more than any thing else, is, the wrath of God; for that is the spring and bitterness of all present miseries, and will be the quintessence and perfection of everlasting misery. (2.) It is the evil of our doing, that kindles the fire of God’s wrath against us. (3.) The consideration of the imminent danger we are in, of falling and perishing under this wrath, should awaken us with all possible care to sanctify ourselves to God’s glory, and to see that we be sanctified by his grace.

3. Declare ye in Judah, and publish in Jerusalem; and say, Blow ye the trumpet in the land: cry, gather together, and say, Assemble yourselves, and let us go into the defended cities. Set up the standard toward Zion: retire, stay not; for I will bring evil from the north, and a great destruction.

gird you with sackcloth, lament and howl; for the fierce anger of the Lord is not turned back from us. 9. And it shall come to pass at that day, saith the Lord, that the heart of the king shall perish, and the heart of the princes; and the priests shall be astonished, and the prophets shall wonder. 10. Then said I, Ah, Lord God! surely thou hast greatly deceived this people and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall have peace; whereas the sword reacheth unto the soul. 11. At that time shall it be said to this people and to Jerusalem, A dry wind of the high places in the wilderness toward the daughter of my people, not to fan, nor to cleanse, 12. Even a full wind from those places shall come unto me: now also will I give sentence against them. 13. Behold, he shall come up as clouds, and his chariots shall be as a whirlwind: his horses are swifter than eagles. Wo unto us! for we are spoiled. 14. O Jerusalem, wash thy heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved: how long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee? 15. For a voice declareth from Dan, and publisheth affliction from mount Ephraim. 16. Make ye mention to the nations: behold, publish against Jerusalem, that watchers come from a far country, and give out their voice against the cities of Judah. 17. As keepers of a field are they against her round about; because she hath been rebellions against me, saith the Lord. 18. Thy way and thy doings have procured these things unto thee; this is thy wickedness, because it is bitter, because it reacheth unto thy heart.

God's usual method is, to warn before he wounds. In these verses, accordingly, God gives notice to the Jews of the general desolation that would shortly be brought upon them by a foreign invasion. This must be declared and published in all the cities of Judah, and streets of Jerusalem, that all might hear and fear, and by this loud alarm be either brought to repentance, or left inexcusable. The prediction of this calamity is here given very largely, and in lively expressions, which one would think should have awakened and affected the most stupid. Observe,

I. The war proclaimed, and general notice given of the advance of the enemy. It is published now, some years before, by the prophet; but since this will be slighted, it shall be published after another manner, when the judgment is actually breaking in, v. 5, 6. The trumpet must be blown, the standard must be set up, a summons must be issued out to the people, to gather together, and to draw toward Zion, either to guard it, or expecting to be guarded by it. There must be a general rendezvous, the militia must be raised, and all the forces mustered. Those that are able men, and fit for service, must go into the defenced cities, to Garrison them; those that are weak, and would lessen their provisions, but not increase their strength, must retire, and not stay.

II. An express arrived with intelligence of the approach of the king of Babylon and his army. It is an evil that God will bring from the north, as he had said, ch. i. 15. even a great destruction, beyond all that had hitherto come upon the nation of the Jews. The enemy is here compared,

1. To a lion that comes up from his thicket, when he is hungry, to seek his prey, v. 7. The helpless beasts are so terrified with his roaring, (as some report,) that they cannot flee from him, and so become an easy prey to him. Nebuchadnezzar is this roaring lion, the destroyer of the nations, that has laid many countries waste, and now is on his way on full speed toward the land of Judah.

2. To the destroyers of the Gentiles shall be the destroyer of the Jews too, when they have by their idolatry made themselves like the Gentiles. He is gone forth from his place, from Babylon, or the place of the rendezvous of his army, on purpose against this land; that is the prey he has now his eye upon, not to plunder it only, but to make it desolate, and hereby he shall succeed to that degree, that the cities shall be laid waste, without inhabitants, shall be overgrown with grass as a field; so some read it.

3. To a drying, blasting wind, (v. 11.) a parching, scorching wind, which spoils the fruits of the earth, and withers them. Not a wind which brings rain, but north and south, that drives away rain, (Prov. xxv. 23.) but brings something worse instead of it, such shall this evil out of the north be to this people; a black freezing wind, which they can neither fence against, nor flee from, but, wherever they go, it shall surround and pursue them; and they cannot see it before it comes, but, when it comes, they shall feel it. It is a wind of the high places in the wilderness, as Ezekiel, (v. 5.) that beats upon the tops of the hills, or that carries all before it in the plain, where there is no shelter, but the ground is all champaign. It shall come in its full force toward the daughters of my people, that have been brought up so tenderly and delicately, that they could not endure to have the wind blow upon them. Now this fierce wind shall come against them, not to fan, or cleanse them, nor such a gentle wind as is used in winnowing corn, but a full wind, (v. 12.) a strong and violent wind, blowing full upon them; this shall come to me, or rather for me, it shall come with commission from God, and shall accomplish that for which he sends it; for this, as other stormy winds, fulfill his word.

4. To clouds and whirlwinds for swiftness, v. 18. Those Clouds and whirlwinds driven with the wind; so thick shall they stand, so fast shall they march, and it shall be to no purpose to offer to stop them, or to make head against them, any more than to arrest a cloud, or give check to a whirlwind. The horses are swifter than eagles when they fly upon their prey; it is in vain to think either of opposing them, or of outrunning them.

5. To the voice declares from Dan, a city which lay farthest north of all the cities of Canaan, and therefore received the first tidings of this evil from the north, and hastened it to mount Ephraim, that part of the land of Israel which lay next to Judea; they received the news of the affliction, and transmitted it to Jerusalem.

6. There is a field, v. 15-17. The voice declares from Dan, a city which lay farthest north of all the cities of Canaan, and therefore received the first tidings of this evil from the north, and hastened it to mount Ephraim, that part of the land of Israel which lay next to Judea; they received the news of the affliction, and transmitted it to Jerusalem.

7. There is a field, v. 15-17. The voice declares from Dan, a city which lay farthest north of all the cities of Canaan, and therefore received the first tidings of this evil from the north, and hastened it to mount Ephraim, that part of the land of Israel which lay next to Judea; they received the news of the affliction, and transmitted it to Jerusalem.

8. There is a field, v. 15-17. The voice declares from Dan, a city which lay farthest north of all the cities of Canaan, and therefore received the first tidings of this evil from the north, and hastened it to mount Ephraim, that part of the land of Israel which lay next to Judea; they received the news of the affliction, and transmitted it to Jerusalem.

9. There is a field, v. 15-17. The voice declares from Dan, a city which lay farthest north of all the cities of Canaan, and therefore received the first tidings of this evil from the north, and hastened it to mount Ephraim, that part of the land of Israel which lay next to Judea; they received the news of the affliction, and transmitted it to Jerusalem.

10. There is a field, v. 15-17. The voice declares from Dan, a city which lay farthest north of all the cities of Canaan, and therefore received the first tidings of this evil from the north, and hastened it to mount Ephraim, that part of the land of Israel which lay next to Judea; they received the news of the affliction, and transmitted it to Jerusalem.

11. There is a field, v. 15-17. 12. There is a field, v. 15-17. The voice declares from Dan, a city which lay farthest north of all the cities of Canaan, and therefore received the first tidings of this evil from the north, and hastened it to mount Ephraim, that part of the land of Israel which lay next to Judea; they received the news of the affliction, and transmitted it to Jerusalem.
Jeremiah IV.

VII. The lamentable cause of this judgment: Now is it that Judah and Jerusalem come to be thus abandoned to ruin? See how it came to this. 1. They sinned against God, it was all owing to themselves; She has been rebellious against me, saith the Lord, v. 17. Their enemies surrounded them as keepers of a field, because they had taken up arms against their rightful Lord and Sovereign, and were to be seized as rebels. The Chaldeans are breaking in upon them, and it was sin that opened the gap at which they entered; Thy way and thy doings have procured these things unto thee, (v. 18.) thy evil way, and thy doings that have not been good. It was not a false step or two that did them this mischief, but their way and course of living was such as it would have been impossible for any to endure, could they be trying to put it out of their way. Those that go on in sin, while they are endeavouring to ward off mischief with one hand, are at the same time pulling them upon their own heads with the other. 2. God was angry with them for their sin. It is the fierce anger of the Lord that makes the army of the Chaldeans thus fierce, thus furious; that is kindled against us, and is not turned back from us, v. 8. Note, In men's anger against us, and the violence of that, we must see God's anger, and the power of that. If that were turned back from us, our enemies should not come forward against us. 3. In his just and holy anger he condemned them to this dreadful punishment: Now also will I give sentence against them, v. 12. The execution was done, not in a heat, but in pursuance of a sentence solemnly passed, according to the measures of justice. See how often, when God's anger is not very high, we are apt to think it is a thing of little account, and to put it out of sight, yet it may be very great, and will be very severe, if we do not receive it as we should. 4. For this gird you with sackcloth, lament and howl; you will do so, when the cry is made through the kingdom, Arm, arm: all will be seized with a consternation, and all put into confusion; instead of girding on the sword, they will gird on the sackcloth; instead of animating one another to a vigorous resistance, they will lament and howl, and so dishearten one another. While the enemy is yet at a distance, they will give up all for gone, and cry, Wo unto us, for we are spoiled, v. 13. We are all undone, the spoilers will certainly carry the day, and it is in vain to make head against them. 5. For this gird you with sackcloth, lament and howl; you will do so, when the cry is made through the kingdom, Arm, arm: all will be seized with a consternation, and all put into confusion; instead of girding on the sword, they will gird on the sackcloth; instead of animating one another to a vigorous resistance, they will lament and howl, and so dishearten one another. While the enemy is yet at a distance, they will give up all for gone, and cry, Wo unto us, for we are spoiled, v. 13. We are all undone, the spoilers will certainly carry the day, and it is in vain to make head against them. 6. For this gird you with sackcloth, lament and howl; you will do so, when the cry is made through the kingdom, Arm, arm: all will be seized with a consternation, and all put into confusion; instead of girding on the sword, they will gird on the sackcloth; instead of animating one another to a vigorous resistance, they will lament and howl, and so dishearten one another. While the enemy is yet at a distance, they will give up all for gone, and cry, Wo unto us, for we are spoiled, v. 13. We are all undone, the spoilers will certainly carry the day, and it is in vain to make head against them. 7. The time of their visitation is come upon them; the public safety shall be at their wit's end; (v. 9.) At that day, the heart of the king shall perish, both his wisdom and his courage; desparing of success, he shall have no spirit to do any thing, and, if he had, he will not know what to do. His princes and privy-councilors, who should animate and advise him, shall be as much at a loss, and as much in despair, as he. See how easily, how effectually, God can bring ruin upon a people that are doomed to it, merely by disposing things, taking aim at the heart of the chief of them, (Job xii. 20, 24.) cutting off the head of all princes, Ps. lxvi. 12. The business of the priests was to encourage the people in the time of war; they were to say to the people, Fear not, and let not your hearts faint, Deut. xx. 3. They were to blow the trumpets, for an assurance to them that in the day of battle they should be remembered before the Lord their God, Nu. x. 9. But now the priests themselves shall be astonished, and shall have no heart themselves to do their office, and therefore shall not be likely to put spirit into the people. The prophets too, the false prophets, who had cried peace to them, shall be put into the greatest amazement imaginable, seeing their own guilty blood ready to be shed by that sword which they had often told the people there was no danger of. Nete, God's judgments come with the greatest terror upon those that have been most secure. Our Saviour foretells that at the last destruction of Jerusalem men's hearts should fail them for fear, Luke xxvi. 26. And it is common for those who have cheated and flattered people into a carnal security, not only to fail them, but to discourage them when the trouble comes. 8. The prophet's complaint of the people's being deceived, read, and he knew, and wherefore was there no return? He had read it, Ah, Lord God, surely thou hast greatly deceived this people, saying, Ye shall have peace. We are sure that God deceives none; let no man say, when he is tempted or deluded, that God has tempted or deluded him. But, 1. The people deceived themselves with the promises that God had made in general of his favour to that nation, and the many peculiar privileges with which they were dignified; building upon them, though they took no care to perform the conditions, in which the accomplishment of those promises, and the continuance of those privileges, did depend; they had no regard to the threatenings which in the law were set over against those promises. Thus they cheated themselves, and then wickedly complained that God had cheated them. 2. The false prophets deceived them with the promises that they had taken from them by a lawful name, ch. xxviii. 17.—xxviii. 9. If God had sent them, he had indeed greatly deceived the people, but he did not. It was the people's fault that they gave them credit; and here also they deceived themselves. 3. God had permitted the false prophets to deceive, and the people to be deceived by them, giving up both to strong delusions, to punish them for not receiving the truth in the love of it. Herein the Lord was righteous; but the prophet complains of it as the sorest judgment of all, for by this means they had been hardened in their sins. 4. It may be read with an interrogation, Hast thou indeed thus deceived this people? It is plain that they are greatly deceived, for they expect peace, whereas the sword reaches unto the soul; it is a killing sword, abundance of lives are lost, and more likely to be. Now was it God that deceived them? No, he had often given them warning of judgments in general, and of this in particular; but their own prophets deceive them, and they cry deceived to them, to whom the God of heaven does not speak peace. It is a pitiful thing, and that which every good man greatly laments, to see people flattered into their own ruin, and promising themselves peace, when the sword is at the door; but this was a warning given to them, and to all who alone can prevent such a fatal delusion. 5. The prophet's endeavour to undeceive them; when the prophets they loved and carelessly dealt falsely with them, he whom they had hated and persecuted doth in faithfully.
1. He shows them their wound; they were loath to see it, very loath to have it searched into; but if they will allow themselves the liberty of a free thought, they might discover their punishment in their sin: (v. 18.) "This is thy wickedness, because it is bitter." Now thou seest that it is a bitter thing to depart from God, and will certainly be bitterness in the latter end; (ch. ii. 19.) for the fruit of the imagination of the heart, touches to the quick, and in the most tender part; the sword reaches to the soul." v. 10. God can make trouble reach the heart even of those that would lay nothing to heart. And by this thou mayest see what is thy wickedness, that it is a bitter thing, a root of bitterness, that bears gall and wormwood, and that it has reached to the heart; it is the corruption of the imagination of the heart of the thought of the heart. If the heart were not polluted with sin, it would not be disturbed and disquieted as it is with trouble.

2. He shows them the cure, v. 14. Since thy wickedness reaches to the heart, there the application must be made; O Jerusalem, wash thine heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved. By Jerusalem he means each one of the inhabitants here; Jerusalem has a heart of her own to take care of, and it is personal reformation that must help the public. Every one must return from her own evil way, and in order to that, cleanse her own evil heart. And let the heart of the city too be purified, not the outward only, the out-skins of it; the vitals of a state must be amended by the reformation of those that hold the commandments of God upon them. (1.) Reformation is absolutely necessary to salvation; there is no other way of preventing judgments, or turning them away, when we are threatened with them, but taking away the sin by which we have procured them to ourselves. (2.) No reformation is saving, but that which reaches the heart. There is heart-wickedness that is defiling to the soul, from which we must wash ourselves. By repentance and faith we must wash our hearts from the guilt we have contracted by spiritual wickedness, by those sins which begin and end in the heart, and go no further: and by mortification and watchfulness we must suppress and prevent this heart-wickedness for the future. The tree must be made good, else the fruit will not. Jerusalem was all overspread with the leprosy of sin; the leprosy was the sin with respect to the body when afflicted with leprosy; that external applications will do no good, unless physic be taken inwardly to carry off the humours that lurk there, and to change the mass of the blood, so it is with the soul, so it is with the state, there will be no effectual reformation of manners, without a reformation of the mind, the mistakes there must be rectified, the corruptions there must be mortified, and the evil dispositions there changed. "Though thou art Jerusalem, called a holy city, that will not save thee, unless thou wash thine heart from wickedness." In the latter part of the verse he reasons with them, How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee? He complains here, [1.] Of the delays of their reformation; "How long shall that filthy heart of thine continue? When shall it once be?" Note, The God of heaven thinks the time long that his room is usurped, and his interest opposed, in our souls, ch. xiii. 27. [2.] Of the root of their corruption; the vain thoughts that lodged within them, and defiled their hearts, from which they must wash their hearts. Thoughts of iniquity or mischief, these are the evil thoughts that are of the root of the evil heart, from which all other wickedness is produced, Matt. xv. 19. These are our own, the conceptions of our own lusts, (Jam. i. 15.) and they are most dangerous when they lodge within us, when they are admitted and entertained as guests, and are suffered to continue. Some read it thoughts of affliction, such thoughts as will bring nothing but affliction and misery. Some by the vain thoughts here understand all those frivolous pleas and excuses with which they turned off the reproofs and calls of the word, and rendered them ineffectual, and bolstered themselves up in their wickedness. Wash thy heart from wickedness, and think not to say, We are not polluted, (ch. ii. 23.) or, "We are Jerusalem, we have Abraham to our father," Matth. iii. 8, 9.

19. My bowels, my bowels! I am pained at my very heart; my heart maketh a noise in me: I cannot hold my peace, because thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war. 20. Destruction upon destruction is cried: for the whole land is spoiled: suddenly are my tents spoiled, and my curtains in a moment. 21. How long shall I see the standard, and hear the sound of the trumpet? 22. For my people is foolish, they have not known me; they are sottish children, and they have none understanding: they are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge. 23. I beheld the earth, and, lo, it was without form and void; and the heavens, and they had no light. 24. I beheld the mountains, and, lo, they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly. 25. I beheld, and, lo, there was no man, and all the birds of the heavens were fled. 26. I beheld, and, lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down at the presence of the Lord, and by his fierce anger. 27. For thus hath the Lord said, The whole land shall be desolate; yet will I not make a full end. 28. For this shall the earth mourn, and the heavens above be black: because I have spoken it, I have purpose it, and will not repent, neither will I turn back from it. 29. The whole city shall flee for the noise of the horsemen and bowmen; they shall go into thickets, and climb up upon the rocks: every city shall be forsaken, and not a man dwell therein. 30. And when thou art spoiled, what wilt thou do? Though thou clothest thyself with crimson, though thou deckest thee with ornaments of gold, though thou rentest thy face with painting, in vain shalt thou make thyself fair; thy lovers will despise thee, they will seek thy life. 31. For I have heard a voice as of a woman in travail, and the anguish as of her that bringeth forth her first child; the voice of the daughter of Zion, that bewaileth herself, that spreadeth her hands, saying, Wo is me now: for my soul is wearied because of murderers.

The prophet is here in agony, and cries cut like one upon the sack of pain with some acute distem per, or as a woman in travail. The expressions are very pathetic and moving, enough to melt a heart of stone into compassion. My bowels, my bowels, I am pained at my very heart; and yet well, and in health himself, and nothing ails him. Note, A good man in such a sad world as this, cannot but be a man of sorrows. My heart makes a noise in the, though it be but the noise of my own soul, and my own. peace. Note, The grievance and the grief sometimes may be such, that the most prudent, patient man cannot forbear complaining.
Now, what is the matter? What is it that puts this good man into such agitation? It is not for himself, or any affliction in his family, that he grieves thus; but it is purely upon the public account, it is like a day unto the Lord, and an hundred days to the man.
1. They are very sinful, and will not be reformed, v. 22. These are the words of God himself, for so the prophet chose to give this character of the people, rather than in his own words, or as from himself; My people are foolish. God calls them his people, though they are foolish. He has cast him off, but he has not cast him off, Rom. xi. 1. "We are not at all wise, nor understand his ways, nor have we enough sense to find out his counsel, and will have mercy in store for them. They are foolish, for they have not known me." Note, These are foolish indeed, that have not known God; especially that call themselves his people, and have the advantages of coming into acquaintance with him, and yet have not known him. They are sottish children, stupid and senseless, and have no understanding. They cannot distinguish between truth and error; they cannot discern the mind of God, either in his word or in his providence; they do not understand what their true interest is, nor on which side it lies. They are wise to do evil, to plot mischief against the quiet in the land, wise to contrive the gratification of their lusts, and then to conceal and palliate them. But to do good they have no knowledge, no contrivance, no application of mind; they know not how to make good use either of the ordinances or of the providences of God, nor how to bring about any design for the good of their country. Contrary to this, should be our character; (Rom. xvi. 19.) I would have you wise unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil.
II. They are very miserable, and cannot be relieved. He cries out, Because thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, and seen the standard, both giving the alarm of war, v. 19, 21. He does not say, Thou hast heard, O my ear, but, O my soul, because the event was yet future, and it is by the spirit of prophecy that he sees it, and receives the impression of it. His soul heard it from the words of God, and therefore he was well assured of it, and as much affected with it, as if he had heard it with his bodily ears. To express this deep concern, 1. To show that though he foretold this calamity, yet he was far from desiring the awful day; for an awful day it would be to him. It becomes us to tremble at the thoughts of the misery that sinners are running themselves into, though we have good hopes, through grace, that we ourselves are delivered from the wrath to come. 2. To prevent such great judgments as are coming on the land, by a sincere and timely repentance. Note, Those that will affect others with the word of God, should evidence that they are themselves affected with it.
Now let us see what there is in the destruction here foreseen and foretold, that is so very affecting. (1.) It is a swift and sudden destruction; it comes upon Judea and Jerusalem, ere they are aware, as in so fast upon them, that they have not the least breathing-time. They have no time to recollect their thoughts, much less to recruit or recover their strength; Destruction upon destruction is cried, (v. 20.) breach upon breach, one sad calamity, like Job's messengers, tearing upon the heels of another. The death of Josiah breaks the ice, and plunges up the flood-gates; within three months after that, his son and successor Jehoahaz is deposed by the king of Egypt; within two or three years after, Nebuchadnezzar, with his chariots and horsemen, and the immense forces under him, and thenceforward he was continually making designs upon the land of Judah with his armies during the reigns of Jehoiakim, Jeconiah, and Zedekiah, till about nineteen years after he completed their ruin in the destruction of Jerusalem: but suddenly were their tents spoiled, and their curtains in a moment. Though the cities held out for some time, the camp-

ners were then at the very first; the shepherds, and all that lived in tents, were left to the devastation of the enemy, and immediately, they and their effects fell into the enemies' hands: therefore we find the Rechabites, who dwelt in tents, upon the first coming of the army of the Chaldees into the land, retiring to Jerusalem, Jer. xxxv. 11. The inhabitants of the villages soon ceased; Suddenly were the tents spoiled. The plain men that are in tents were first made a prey of. (2.) This destruction came upon the land of Judah, not in the borders, but in the bowels of the country; for the people were very obstinate, and would not submit to, but took all opportunities to rebel against, the king of Babylon, which did but lengthen out the calamity; they might as well have yielded at first as at last. This is complained of, v. 21. How long shall we of God's standard? Shall the sword devour for ever? Good men may say, in that time of war, for they know not how to fish in troubled waters: they are for peace, (Ps. cxx. 7.) and will heartily say Amen to that prayer, "Give peace in our time, O Lord." O thou sword of the Lord, when wilt thou be quiet?
(3.) The desolations made by it in the land were general and universal; The whole land is spoiled, or plundered; (v. 20.) so it was at first, and at length it became a perfect chaos. It was such a desolation as amounted in a manner to a dissolution; not only the superstructure, but even the foundations, were all out of course. The prophet in vision saw the extent and extremity of this destruction, and he gives here a most lively description of it, which one would think might have made those uneasy in their minds, who had any interest in a land doomed to such a change, which might yet have been prevented by their repentance. [1.] The earth is without form, and void, as it was Gen. i. 2. It is Toph and Bohn, the words there used, as far as the land of Judah goes. It is confusion and emptiness, stripped of all its beauty, void of all its wealth, and, compared with what it was, every thing out of place and out of shape. To be worse chaos than this will the earth be reduced at the end of time, when it, and all the works that are therein, shall be burnt up. [2.] The heavens too are without light, as the earth without fruits. This alludes to the darkness that was upon the face of the deep, (Gen. i. 2.) and represents God's displeasure against them, as the eclipse of the sun did at our Saviour's death. It was not only the earth that fainted them, but heaven also frowned and was disconsolate, not for their trouble, but for their unkindness, for they could not see through their troubles. The smoke of their houses and cities which the enemy burned, and the dust which their army raised in its march, even darkened the sun, so that the heavens had no light. Or, it may be taken figuratively; The earth (that is, the common people) is in povery, and in confusion; and the heavens (that is, the princes and priests) have no light, to know, to be used, to appear in themselves, nor were they any comfort to the people, nor any guide to them. Compare Matth. xxiv. 29. [3.] The mountains trembled, and the hills moved nightly; (v. 24) so formidable were the appearances of God against his people, as in the days of old they had been worshipped, the high places, the covetousness, and the little hills like lambs, Ps. cxiv. 4.

The everlasting mountains seemed to be scattered, Hab. iii. 6. The mountains on which they had worshipped their idols, the mountains over which they had looked for succours, all trembled, as if they had been conscious of the people’s guilt. The mountains, those among them that seemed to be highest; and the Mount of the Chaldean, which was at the approach of the Chaldean army. The hills moved lightly, as being eased of the burthen of a sinful nation, Isa. i. 24. [44] Not the earth only, but the air, was dispelled, and left uninhabited; (v. 25.) I beheld the cities, the countries that used to be populous, and to, there was no man to be seen; all the inhabitants were either killed, or fled, or taken captives, such a ruinning, depopulating thing is sin, even the birds of the heavens, that used to fly about, and sing among the branches, were fled away, and no more to be seen or heard. The land of Judah is now become like the lake of Sodom, over which (they say) no bird flies; see Deut. xxxii. 23.

The enemies shall make such havoc of the country, that they shall not so much as leave a bird alive in it. (v. 26.) The learned shall be as a vessel broken, and laid waste; (v. 26.) Lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness, being deserted by the inhabitants that should cultivate it, and then soon overgrown with thorns and briers; or, being trodden down by the destroying army of the enemy. The cities also and their gates and walls are broken down, and levelled with the ground. Those that look no farther than second causes, impute it to the policy and fury of the invaders: but the prophet, who looked to the first Cause, says that it is at the presence of the Lord, at his face, the anger of his countenance, even by his fierce anger, that this was done. Even angry men cannot do us any real hurt, unless God be angry with us. If our ways please him, all is well. [6] The meaning of all this, is, that the nation shall be entirely ruined, and every part of it shall share in the destruction; neither town nor country shall escape. First, Not the country, for the whole land shall be desolate, corn-land and pasture-land, both common and enclosed, it shall all be laid waste, (v. 27.) the conquerors will have occasion for it. Secondly, Not the men, for (v. 29.) the whole city shall flee, all the inhabitants of the town shall quit the city, and flee, both women and men and women; rather than lie exposed to their fury, they shall go into the thickets, where they are in danger of being torn by briers, nay, to be torn in pieces by wild beasts; and they shall climb up upon the rocks, where their lodging will be hard and cold, and the precipice dangerous. Let us not be over-fond of our houses and cities; for the time may come, when rocks and thickets may be preferable, and chosen rather. This shall be the common case, for every city shall be forsaken, and not a man shall be left, that dares dwell therein. Both government and trade shall be at an end, and all civil societies and incorporations dissolved. It is a very dismal vision, which this gives of the approaching desolation; but in the midst of all these threatenings comes in other words, and brings in comfort, and a full end; not a total consumption, for God will reserve a remnant to himself, that shall be hid in the day of the Lord’s anger, not a final consumption, for Jerusalem shall again be built, and the land inhabited. This comes in here, in the midst of the threatenings, for the comfort of those that trembled at God’s word, and it speaks to us the changeableness of God’s providence; as it breaks down, so it raises up again; every end of our comforts is not a full end, however we may be ready to think it so; and it speaks the unchangeableness of God’s covenant, which stands so firm, that though he may correct severely, yet he will not cast them off, ch. xxx. 11.

(4.) Their case was helpless, and without remedy. [1.] God would not help them; so he tells them plainly, v. 28. And if the Lord do not help them, who can? This is that which makes their case deplorable; for this the earth mourns, and the heavens above are black; there are no prospects but what are very dark. And, (v. 29.) I have given the word which shall not be called back, I have purposed it, it is a consumption decreed, determined, and I will not repent, not change this way, but proceed in it, and will not turn back from it. They would not repent, and turn back from the way of their sins, (ch. ii. 5.) and therefore God will not repent, and turn back from the way of his judgements. [2.] They could not help themselves, v. 30, 31. When the thing appeared at a distance, they flattened themselves with hopes that though God should not appear for them as he had done for Hezekiah against the Assyrian army, yet they should find some means or other to secure themselves, and give check to the forces of the enemy. But the prophet tells them, that when it comes to the settling of the affairs, "When thou art spoiled, what wilt thou do? What shall these wilt thou take? Sit down now, and consider this in time." He assures them that, whatever were now their contrivances and confidences, First, They will then be despised by their allies whom they depended upon for assistance. He had often compared the sin of Jerusalem to whoresom, not only her idolatry, but her trust in creatures, in the neighbouring powers. Now here he compares her to a harlot abandoned by all the level ones that used to make court to her. She is supposed to do all she can to keep up her interest in their affections; she does what she can to make herself appear considerable among the nations, and a valuable ally; she compliments them by her ambassadors to the highest degree, to engage them to stand by her now in her distress; she clothes herself with crimson, as if she were rich, and decks herself with ornaments of gold, as if her treasures were still as full as ever they had been; she rents her face with painting, puts the best colours she can upon her present distresses, and does her utmost to palliate and extenuate her losses, sets a good face upon them. But this crimson pleases the face for the present, really rents it; the frequent spatter of paint spoils the skin, cracks it, and makes it rough; so the case which by false colours has been made to appear better than really it was, when truth comes to light, will look much the worse; "And after all, in vain shall thou make thyself fair; all thy neighbours are sensible how low thou art brought; the Chaldeans will strip thee of thy crimson and ornaments, and then thy confederates shall not deliver thee, nor thee, and refuse to give thee any succour, but they will join with those that seek thy life, that they may come in for a share in the prey of so rich a country." Here seems to be an allusion to the story of Jezebel, who thought, by making herself look fair and fine, to have outface her doom, but in vain, 2 Kings x. 17. But much more expressive is what they will do when we confide in them, how treacherous they are; They will not only steal the life, they will steal the life, they will steal the life; they often change, so that they will sooner do us an ill turn, than any service. And see to how little purpose it is for these that have by sin deformed themselves in God’s eyes, to think by any arts they can use to beautify themselves in the eye of the world.

Secondly, They will then be themselves in despair; they will find their troubles to be like the pains of a woman in travail, which she cannot es cap: I have heard the voice of the daughter of Zion, her groans echoing to the trumpet shouts of the Chaldean army, which he heard, v. 15. It is like the voice of a woman in travail, whose pain is exquisite, and the fruit of sin and the curse too, (Gen. iii. 16.) and extorts lamentable outcries, especially of a woman in travail of her first child, who, having never known before what that pain is, is thus terrified by it. The troubles are most grievous to those that have not been used to them. Zion, in this distress, since her neighbours refuse to pity her, bewails herself, fetching deep sighs: (so the word signifies:) and she spreads her hands, either wringing them for grief, or reaching them forth for succour. All the cry is, Wo is me now, (now that the decree is gone forth against her, and is past recall,) for my soul is weary because of murderers; the Chaldean soldiers put all to the sword that gave them any opposition, so that the land was full of murders. Zion was weary of hearing tragical stories from all parts of the country, and cried out, Wo is me! It was well if their sufferings put them in mind of their sins, the murders committed upon them, of the murders committed by them; for God was making this occasion for the Innocents blood shed in Jerusalem, which the Lord would not pardon, 2 Kings xxiv. 4. Note, As sin will find out the sinner, so sorrow will sooner or later, find out the sinner.

CHAP. V.

Reproofs for sin and threatenings of judgment are intermixed in this chapter, and are set the one over against the other, judgment against sin: and so the reproach of sin might be the more effectual to bring them to repentance; sin is discovered, that God might be justified in the judgments threatened. 1. The sins they are charged with, (v. 1-6.) Idolatry and adultery, (v. 7-9.) Treacherous and bloody men; (v. 10.) The apostrophic voice of the prophet to the city, (v. 11-22.) To which the whole chapter answers, (v. 23-31.) And that which is at the bottom of all this, Want of the fear of God, notwithstanding the frequent calls given them to fear him, v. 20, 24. In the close of the chapter, they are charged with violence and oppression, (v. 25-28.) and a combination of those to debase the nation, who should have been active to reform it, v. 30, 31. II. The judgments they are threatened with are very terrible. In general, they are threatened with the destruction of the city, (v. 3, 8.) and their enemies shall be brought in upon them; (v. 15, 17.) shall set guards upon them; (v. 6.) shall destroy their fortifications; (v. 10.) shall carry them away into captivity; (v. 18.) and keep all good things from them, v. 25. Here in the words of God's prophet, they shall be filled, v. 14. But, III. Here is an intimation twice given that God would in the midst of wrath remember mercy, and not utterly destroy them, v. 10, 18. This was the scope and purport of Jeremiah's preaching in the latter end of Jeshua's reign, and the beginning of Jehoiakim's: but the success of it did not answer expectation.

1. RUN ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that seeketh the truth; and I will pardon it. 2. And though they say, The Lord liveth, surely they swear falsely. 3. O Lord, are not thine eyes upon the truth? thou hast chastened them, but they have not grieved; thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction: they have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refused to return. 4. Therefore I said, Surely these are poor; they are foolish: for they know not the way of the Lord, nor the judgment of their God. 5. I will get me into the great men, and will speak unto them: for they have known the way of the Lord, and the judgment of their God; but these have altogether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds. 6. Wherefore a lion out of the forest shall slay them, and a wolf of the evenings shall spoil them, a leopard shall watch over their cities: every one that goeth out thence shall be torn in pieces; because their transgressions are many, and their backslidings are increased. 7. How shall I pardon thee for this? thy children have forsaken me, and sworn by them that are no gods: when I had fed them to the full, they then committed adultery, and assembled themselves by troops in the harlots' houses. 3. They were as fed horses in the morning: every one neighed after his neighbour's wife. 9. Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

Here is,

1. A challenge to produce any one right honest man, or at least any considerable number of such, in Jerusalem, v. 1. Jerusalem was become like the old world, in which all flesh had corrupted their way. There were some perhaps who flattered themselves with hopes that there were yet many good men in Jerusalem, who would stand in the gap to turn away the wrath of God; and there might be others who boasted of its being the Holy city, and thought that this would save it; but God bids them search the town, and intimates that they should scarcely find a man in it who executed judgment, and made conscience of what he said and did; "Look in the streets where they make their appearance, and converse together, and in the broad places where they keep their markets; see if you can find a man, a magistrate," (so some,) "that executes judgment, and administers justice impartially, that will put the laws in execution against vice and profaneness." When the faithful thus cease and fail, it is time to cry, Wo is me! (Mic. vii. 1, 2.) High time to cry, Holf, Lord, Ps. xii. 1. "If there be here and there a man that is truly conscientious, and does at least seek the truth, yet you shall not find him in the streets and broad places, he dares not appear publicly, for he shall be abused and run down; truth is fallen in the street, (Isa. lx. 14.) and is forced to seek for corners." So pleasing would it be to God to see him, that he might take his sake he would pardon the city: if there were but ten righteous men in Sodom, if but one of a thousand, of ten thousand, in Jerusalem, it should be spared. See how ready God is to forgive, how swift to show mercy.

But it might be said, "What do you make of those in Jerusalem that continue to make profession of religion and devotion to God? Are not they of the number for whose sakes Jerusalem may be spared?" No, for they are not sincere in their profession; (v. 2.) They say, The Lord liveth, and will swear by his name only, but they swear falsely. 1. They are not sincere in the profession they make of respect to God, but are false to him; they honour him with their lips, but their hearts are far from him. 2. Though they appeal to God only, they make no conscience of calling him to witness to a lie. Through
They do not swear by idols, they first wear themselves, which is no less an affront to God, as the God of truth, than the other is as the only true God.

II. A complaint which the prophet makes to God of the obstinacy and wilfulness of these people. God had appealed to their eyes; (v. 1.) but here the prophet appeals to his eyes; (v. 3.) "Are not thine eyes upon the truth? Dost thou not see every man's character? And is not this the truth of their case? The trial made both of rich and poor, and the bad character given of both.

1. The poor were ignorant, and therefore they were wicked. He found many that refused to return, for whom he was willing to make the best excuse their case would bear, and it was this, (v. 4.) "Surely, these are poor, they are foolish; they never had the advantage of a good education, nor have they wherewithal to help themselves now with the means of instruction; they are forced to work hard for their living, and have no time or capacity for reading or hearing, so that they know not the way of the Lord, or the judgments of their God; they understand neither the way in which God by his precepts will have them to walk toward him, nor the way in which he by his providence is with them, and wills them well. Nor is this all. Want of education and ignorance is the lamentable cause of abounding impiety and iniquity. What can one expect but works of darkness from brutish, sottish people that know nothing of God and religion, but choose to sit in darkness? (2.) This is commonly a reigning sin among poor people. There are the devil's poor, as well as God's; who, notwithstanding their poverty, might know the way of the Lord, and do their duty, without being book-learned, but they are willingly ignorant, and therefore their ignorance will not be their excuse.

2. The rich were insolent and haughty, and therefore they were wicked; (v. 5.) "I will get me to the great men, and see if I can find them more pliable to the word and providence of God; I will speak the way of the Lord, and do their duty, without being book-learned, but they are willingly ignorant, and therefore their ignorance will not be their excuse. The trial made both of rich and poor, and the bad character given of both.

They are for breaking even his bands in sunder, Ps. ii. 3. The poor are weak, the rich are wilful, and so neither do their duty.

IV. Some particulars specified, which they were most notoriously guilty of, and which cried most loudly to Heaven for vengeance. Their transgressions indeed were many, of many kinds, and often repeated, and their backslidings were increased; they added to the number of them, and grew more and more impudent in them, v. 6. But two sins especially were so greatly to be looked upon as unpardonable crimes.

1. Their spiritual whoredom, giving that honor to idols, which is due to God only; "Thy children have forsaken me, to whom they were born and dedicated, and under whom they have been brought up, and they have sworn by them that are no gods, have made their appeals to them as if they had been omniscient, and their proper judges." This is here put for all acts of religious worship due to God only, but with which they had honoured their idols. They have sworn to them, (so it may be read,) have joined themselves to them, and covenanted with them. That they forsake God make a bad change for those that are no gods.

2. Their corporal whoredom. Because they had forsaken me, to whom they were born and dedicated, and served them up to vile affections, and they that dis honoured him were, left to dishonour themselves and their own families. They committed adultery most scandalously, without sense of shame, or fear of punishment, for they assembled themselves by troops in the harlots' houses, and did not blush to be seen by another in the most scandalous places. So impudent and violent was their lust, so impotent of check, and so eager to be gratified, that they became perfect beasts; (v. 8.) like horses high-fed, they neighed every one after his neighbour's wife, v. 8. Unbridled lust make men like natural brute beasts, such monstrous, odious things are they. And that which aggravated their sin was, that it was the abuse of God's favours to them; when they were fed to the full, then their lusts grew thus furious. Falseness of bread was fuel to the fire of Sodom's lusts. Sine Cerere et Baccho friget Venus—luxurious living feeds the flame of lust. Fasting would help to tame the unruly evil that is so full of deadly poison, and bring the body into subjection.

V. A threatening of God's wrath against them for their wickedness, and the universal debauchery of their lusts.

1. The particular judgment that is threatened, v. 6. A foreign enemy shall break in upon them, get dominion over them, and shall lay all waste: their country shall be as if it were overrun and perfectly mastered by wild beasts. This enemy shall be, (1.) Like a lion of the forest, so strong, so furious, so irresistible; and he shall slay them. (2.) They shall be like a wolf of the evening, which comes out at night, when he is hungry, to seek his prey, and is very fierce and ravenous: and the noise both of the lions roaring and of the wolves howling, is very hideous. (3.) Like a leopard, which is very swift and very cruel, and withal careful not to miss his prey. The army of the enemy shall watch over their cities so strictly as to put the inhabitants to this extreme of horror, and that especially when they are not at rest, when they are not at rest, and the King within himself, and the night is so close, that they may be met. This indicates that in many places the enemy gave no quarter: and all this bloody work is owing to the multitude of their transgressions. It is sin that makes the great slaughter.

2. An appeal to themselves concerning the equity of It; (v. 9.) "Shall I not visit these things? Can you yourselves think that the God whose name is Jealous, will let such idolatries go unpunished, or that a God of infinite purity will connive at such abominable practices?" These are things he must be reckoned for; else the honour of God's government cannot be maintained, nor his laws saved from contempt; but sinners will be tempted to think him altogether such a one as themselves, contrary to that conviction of their own consciences concerning the judgment of God, which is necessary to be supported. That they which do such things are worthy of death, Rom. i. 32. Observe, When God punishes sin, he is said to visit for it, or inquire into it; for he weighs the cause before he passes sentence. Sinners have reason to expect punishment, upon the account of God's holiness; to which sin is highly offensive, as well as upon the account of his justice, to which it renders us obnoxious; this is intimated in that, Shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this? It is not only the word of God, but his soul, that takes vengeance. And he has natural judgments wherewith to take vengeance for national sins. Such nations as this was cannot long go unpunished. How shall I pardon thee for this? v. 7. Not but that those who have been guilty of these sins, have found mercy with God, as to their eternal estate; (Manasseh himself did, though so much necessary to the iniquity of those things;) but nations, as such, being rewardable and punishable: only in this life, it would not be for the glory of God to let a nation so very wicked as this pass without some manifest tokens of his displeasure.

10. Go ye up upon her walls, and destroy; but make not a full end: take away her battlements; for they are not the Lord's.

11. For the house of Israel and the house of Judah have dealt very treacherously against me, saith the Lord. 12. They have belied the Lord, and said, It is not he, neither shall evil come upon us, neither shall we see sword nor famine; 13. And the prophets shall become wind, and the word is not in them: thus shall it be done unto them. 14. Wherefore thus saith the Lord God of hosts, Because ye speak this word, behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them. 15. Lo, I will bring a nation upon you from far, O house of Israel, saith the Lord: it is a mighty nation, it is an ancient nation, a nation whose language thou knowest not, neither understandest what they say. 16. Their quiver is as an open sepulchre, they are all mighty men. 17. And they shall eat up thy harvest, and thy bread, which thy sons and thy daughters should eat: they shall eat up thy flocks and thy herds; they shall eat up thy vines and thy fig-trees: they shall impoverish thy fenced cities, wherein thou trustedst, with the sword. 18. Nevertheless in those days, saith the Lord, I will not make a full end with you. 19. And it shall come to pass, when ye shall say, Wherefore doth the Lord our God all these things unto us? then shall thou answer them, Like as ye have forsaken me, and served strange gods in your land; so shall ye serve strangers in a land that is not yours.

We may observe in these verses, as before, I. The sin of this people, upon which the commission signed against them is grounded. God disowns them, and dooms them to destruction, v. 10. But is there not a cause? Yes; for, 1. They have despaired the love of God, v. 11. The house of Israel and the house of Judah dealt very treacherously against me, saith the Lord; yet, one another, yet both agreed to deal very treacherously against God. They forsook the worship of him, and therein violated their covenants with him; they revolted from him, and played the hypocrite with him. 2. They have defied the judgments of God, and given the lie to his threatenings in the mouth of his prophets, v. 12, 13. They were often told that evil would be upon them, and therefore they must expect some desolating judgments, sword and famine; but they were secure, and said, We shall have peace, though we go on. For, (1.) They did not fear what God is; they belied him, and confront ed the dictates even of natural light concerning him, for they said, "It is not he, he is not such a one as we have been made to believe he is; he doth not see, or not to reason; therefore no evil shall come upon us." Multitudes are ruined by being made to believe that God will not be so strict with them as his word says he will; nay, by this artifice Satan undid us all; Ye shall not surely die. So here, Neither shall we see sword nor famine. Vain hopes of impunity are the deceitful support of all impiety. (2.) They did not fear what God said. The prophets gave them fair warning, but they turned it off with a jest; "They do but talk so, because it is their trade; they are words of course, and words are but wind. It is not the word of the Lord that is in them; it is only the language of their melancholy fancy, or their ill will to their country, because they are not preferred." Note, Impenitent sinners are not willing to own any thing to be the word of God, that makes against them; that tends either to part them from, or disquiet them in, their sins. They threaten the prophets; "They shall become wind, shall pass away unregarded, and thus shall it be done unto them, what they threaten against us we will inflict upon them. Do they frighten us with famine? Let them be fed with the bread of affliction." (So Micaiah was.) 13. Or, "Do they take us up on a sword? Let them perish by the sword." ch. ii. 30. Thus their mocking and misusing of God's messengers, filled the measure of their iniquity.

II. The punishment of this people for their sin.

1. The threatenings they laughed at shall be executed; (v. 14.) Because ye speak this word of contempt concerning the prophets, and the word in their mouths, therefore God will put honour upon them; and in their unclean words, for not one iota or tithe of them shall fall to the ground, 1 Sam. iii. 19. Here God turns to the prophet Jeremiah, who had been thus bantered, and perhaps had been a little uneasy at it; Behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire. God owns them for his words, though men denied them, and will as surely make them to take effect as the fire consumes combustible matter that it was made to destroy; for the fire is the word, and the prophet is the word. Sinners by sin make themselves fuel to that wrath of God, which is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men in the scripture. The word of God will certainly be too hard for those that contend with it. They shall break, who will not bow before it.

The end they thought themselves in no danger of, shall be brought upon them. God gives them their commission; (v. 10.) "Go up upon her walls, mount them, trample upon them, tread them down; walls of stone, before the divine commission, shall be but mud walls. Having made yourselves masters of the walls, you may destroy at pleasure. You may take away her battlements, and leave the fenced, fortified cities to lie open; for her battlements are not the Lord's, he does not own them, and therefore will not protect and fortify them." They were not erected in his fear, nor with a dependence upon him: the people have trusted to them more than to God, and therefore they are not his. When the city is filled with sin, God will say, the city shall not be reckoned among the cities of Judah, and they are paper walls. What can defend us, when he who is our Defence, and the Defender of all our defences, is departed from us? Numb. xiv. 9. What is not of God, cannot stand, not stand long, nor stand us in any stead.

What dreadful work these invaders should make, is here described; (v. 15.) Lo, I will bring a nation upon you, O house of Israel. Note, God has all nations at his command, does what he pleases with them, and makes what use he pleases of them. And sometimes he is pleased to make the nations of the earth, the heathen nations, a scourge to the house of Israel, when that is become an hypocritical nation. This nation of the Chaldeans is here said to be a remote nation; it is brought upon them, from afar off, the terror of them is as the terror of a fire in the forest, and the longer stay, that they may pay themselves well for so long a march. "It is a nation that thou hast had no commerce with, by reason of their distance, and therefore cannot expect to find favour with." God can bring trouble upon us from places and causes very remote. It is a mighty nation, that there is no making head against; an ancient nation, that value themselves upon their antiquity, and will therefore be the more haughty and imperious. It is a nation whose language thou knowest not; they strike the Syrian tongue, which the Jews at that time were not acquainted with, as appears, 2 Kings xviii. 26. The difference of language would make it the more difficult to treat with them of peace; compare this with the threatening, (Deut. xxviii. 49.) which it seems to have a reference to, for the law and the prophets exactly agree. They are well armed; Their quiver is an open sepulchre; their arrows shall fly so thick, hit so sure, and wound so deep, that they shall be reckoned to breathe nothing but death and slaughter; they are able-bodied, all effectual, mighty men, v. 16. And when they have made themselves masters of the country, they shall fear all broadswords, shall reckon all their own, that they can lay their hands on, v. 17. (1.) They shall strip the country, shall not only sustain, but surfeit, their soldiers with the rich products of this fruitful land. They shall not wear us, (then it might possibly have been retriev'd,) but eat us, thine harvest in the field, and thy bread in the house, which thy sons and thy daughters eat. xvi. What we have, we have for our families, and it is comfort to see our sons and daughters eating which we have taken care and pains for. But it is a grievous vexation to see it devoured by strangers and enemies; to see their camps victual'd with our stores, while those that are dear to us are pertaining for want of it; this also is according to the curse of the law; (Deut. xxviii. 35.) the sword shall be upon thy flocks and thy herds, and upon thy fruit and upon thy land. Besides which thou hast taken sacrifices for thine idols, they shall not leave thee the fruit of thy vine and fig-trees." (2.) They shall starve the towns; They shall impoverish thy fenced cities, (and what fence is there against poverty, when it comes like an armed man?) these cities wherein thou trustedst to be a protection to the country. Note, It is just with God to impoverish that which we make our confidence. They shall impoverish them with the sword, cutting off all provisions from coming to them, and intercepting trade and commerce, which will impoverish even fenced cities.

III. An intimation of the tender compassion God has yet for them; the enemy is commissioned to destroy and lay waste, but must not make a full end, v. 16. Though they make a great slaughter, yet some must be left to live; though they make a great spoil, yet something must be left to live upon, for God has said it, (v. 18.) with a non obstante—a nevertheless, to the present desolation; Even in those days, disaster as it were, I will make a full end with you; and if God will not with the enemy shall not, God has mercy in store for this people, and therefore will set bounds to this desolating judgment; hitherto it shall come, and no further.

IV. The justification of God in these proceedings against them; as he will appear to be gracious in not making a full end with them, so he will appear to be righteous in coming so near it, and will have it acknowledged that he has done them no wrong, v. 19. Observe, 1. A reason demanded, insolently demanded, by the people for these judgments. They will say, "Wherefore doth the Lord our God do all this unto us? What provocation have we given him, or what quarrel have we with him?" As if against such a sinful nation there did not appear cause enough of action. Note, Unhumbled hearts are ready to yield no account of their guilt; they do not acknowledge the justice of God, nor view their own infirmities, and pretend they are to seek for the cause of them, when it is written in the forehead of them, But, 2. Here is a reason immediately assigned: the prophet is instructed what answer to give them, for God will be justified when he speaks, though he speaks with ever so much terror. He must tell them that God does this against them for what they have done against him, and that they may, if they please, read their sin in their punishment. Do not they know very well that they have forsaken God; and therefore can they think it strange if he has forsaken them? Have they forgotten how often they served strange gods in their own land, that good land, in the abundance of the fruits of which they ought to have served God with gladness of heart; and therefore is it not just with God to make them serve strangers in a strange land, where they can call nothing their own, as he had threatened to do? Deut. xxviii. 47, 48. They that are fond of strangers, to strangers let them go.

20. Declare this in the house of Jacob, and publish it in Judah, saying, 21. Hear now this, 0 foolish people, and without understanding; which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not: 22. Fear ye not me? saith the Lord: will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea, by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it; and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it? 23. But this people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart; they are revolted and gone. 24. Neither say they in their heart, Let us now fear the Lord our God that giveth rain both the former and the latter, in his season: he reserveth unto us the appointed weeks of the harvest.

The prophet, having reproved them for sin, and threatened the judgments of God against them, is here sent to them again upon another errand, which he must publish in Judah: the purport of it is to persuade them to fear God, which would be an effectual principle of their reformation, as the want of that fear had been at the bottom of their apostacy. 1. He complains of the shameful stupidity of this people, and their bent to backslide from God; speaking as if he knew not what course to take with them. 2. Their understandings were darkened, and unfit to admit the rays of the divine light. They are a foolish people and without understanding, they apprehend not the mind of God, though ever so plainly discovered to them, by the written word, by his prophets, and by his providence; (v. 21.) They have eyes, but they see not, ears, but they hear not, lips, but they do not speak, and their tongues are silent (Ps. cxv. 5, 6, 8). One would have thought that they took notice of things, but really they did not; they had intellectual faculties and capacities, but they did not employ and improve them as they ought. Herein they disappointed the expectations of all their neighbours, who, observing what excellent means of knowledge they had, concluded, So far as the ordinary means of doctrine they might have been led. (Dent. iv. 6.) Yet really they are a foolish people, and without understanding. Note, We cannot judge of men by the advantages and opportunities they enjoy; there are those that sit in darkness in a land of light, that live in sin even in a holy land, that are bad in the best places.

2. Their wills were stubborn, and unfit to submit to the rules of the divine laws; (v. 22.) This people has a revolting and rebellious heart; and no wonder, when they were foolish and without understanding, Ps. lxxxii. 5. Nay, it is the corrupt bias of the will, that bribes and besots the understanding: none so blind as those that will not see. The character of this people is the true character of all people by nature, till the grace of God has wrought a change; we are foolish, slow of understanding, and apt to mistake and forget; yet that is not the worst; we have a revolting and a rebellious heart, a carnal mind, that is enmity against God, and is not in subjection to his law; not only revolting from him by a rooted aversion to that which is good, but rebellious against him by a strong inclination to that which is evil. Observe, The revolting heart is a rebellious one: they that withdraw from their allegiance to God, and have no regard to the laws and commandments given by sin and Satan take up arms against him. They are revolting and gone. The revolting heart will produce a revolting life: They are gone, and they will go; (so it may be read:) now nothing will be restrained from them, Gen. xi. 6.

II. He ascribed this to the want of the fear of God. When he observes them to be without understanding, he asks, "Fear ye not me, saith the Lord, and will ye not tremble at my presence?" v. 22. If you would but keep up an awe of God, you would be more observant of what he says to you; and did you but understand yourselves better, you would be more under the commanding rule of God's fear. When he observes that they are revolting and gone, he adds this, as the root and cause of their apostasy, (v. 24.) For they have gone away from the Lord and are gone, and have turned aside, like a fruitful banana from those considerations which are proper to affect us with a holy awe of him; and it is because we do not do this, that our hearts are so destitute of his fear as they are, and so apt to revolt and rebel.

III. He suggests of some those things which are proper to possess us with a holy fear of God.

1. We must fear the Lord and his greatness; (v. 22.) upon this account he demands our fear: Shall we not tremble at his presence, and be afraid of and contesting with him, or trilling with him, who in the kingdom of nature and providence gives such incontestable proofs of himself? If God, the Almighty, and the Lord, have not shown himself? Here is one instance given of very many that might be given; he keeps the sea within compass: though the tides flow with a mighty strength, twice every day, and if they should flow on for awhile, would drown the world; though in a storm the billows rise high, and dash to the shore with incredible force and fury, yet they are under check, God is pleased to make it so; no, that is choses, rather to teach us that a soft answer like the soft sand, turns away wrath, and quiets a feasting rage, when grievous words, like hard rocks, do but exasperate, and make the waters cast forth so much the more mire and dirt. This bound is placed by a perpetual decree; by an ordinance of antiquity—so some read it, and then it sends us as far back as to the creation of the world, when God willed that the sea should be held in between the sea and the dry land, and fixed marches between them, (Gen. i. 9, 10.) which is elegantly described, Ps. civ. 6, &c. and Job xxxviii. 8, &c. or to the period of Noah's flood, when God promised that he would never drown the world again, Gen. ix. 11. An ordinance of perpetuity—so our translation takes it. It is a perpetual decree, it has its origin from the creation of the world, when God did determine the sea should be held in between the sea and the dry land, and fixed marches between them, and fixed this eternal command. 21.) By this it is evident that he is a God of almighty power and universal sovereignty, and therefore to be feared and had in reverence. (2.) This shows us how easily he could drown the world again, and how much we continually lie at his mercy, and therefore we should be afraid of making him our Enemy. (3.) Even the unruly waves of the sea observe his decree, and retreat at his check; and shall not we then? Why are our hearts revolting and rebellious, when the sea neither revolts nor rebels?

2. We must fear the Lord and his goodness, Hos. iii. 5. The instances of this, as of the former, are fetched from God's common providence; (v. 24.) We must fear the Lord our God, we must worship him, and give him glory, and be always in care to keep ourselves in his love, because he is continually doing us good: He sees both the heart of the latter rain, the former a little after seedtime, the latter a little before harvest, and both in their season; and by this means he reserves to us the appointed weeks of harvest. Harvest is reckoned by weeks, because in a few weeks enough is gathered to serve for sustenance the year round. The weeks of the harvest are appointed us by the promise of God, that seed-time and harvest shall not fail. And headds, And that promise are reserved to us by the Divine Providence, otherwise we should come short of them. In harvest-mercies therefore God is to be acknowledged, his power, and goodness, and faith fulness, for they all come from him. And it is a good reason why we should fear him, that we may keep ourselves in his love, because we have such a necessary dependence upon him. The fruitful reasons were witnesses for God, even to the heathen world, sufficient to leave them inexorable in their contempt of him; (Acts xiv. 17.) and yet the Jews, who had the written word to explain their testimony
by, were not wrougth upon to fear the Lord, though it appears how much it is our interest to do so.

25. Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have withheld good things from you. 26. For among my people are found wicked men: they lay wait
as he that setteth snares: they set a trap, they catch men. 27. As a cage is full of birds, so are their houses full of deceit:
therefore they are become great, and waxen rich. 28. They are waxen fat, they shine;
yea, they overpass the deeds of the wicked:
they judge not the cause, the cause of the fatherless, yet they prosper; and the right of the needy do they not judge. 29. Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord:
shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this? 30. A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land; 31. The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so: and what will ye do in the end thereof?

Here,

I. The prophet shows them what mischief their sins had done them; they have turned away
these things, (v. 25.) the former and the latter rain, which they used to have in due season, (v. 24.) but which had of late been withheld, (ch. ii. 3.) by reason of which the appointed weeks of harvest had sometimes disappointed them. "It is your sin that has withheld good from you, when God was ready to bestow it upon you." Note, It is sin that stops the current of God's favours to us, and deprives us of the blessings we used to receive. It is that which makes the heavens as brass and the carriages as iron.

II. He shows them how great their sins were, how heinous and provoking. When they had forsaken the worship of the true God, even moral honesty was lost among them; Among my people are found wicked men, (v. 26.) some of the worst of men, and so much the worse they were, insomuch
as they were found among God's people.

They were subtle and malicious. Such are properly wicked men, men that delight in doing mischief; they were found, caught in the very act of their wickedness; as hunters or fowlers lay snares for their game, so did they lie in wait to catch men; and made a sport of it, and took, as much pleasure in it, as if they had been entrapping beasts or birds. They conceived ways of doing mischief to good people, (whom they hated for their goodness,) especially to those that faithfully reproved them; (Isa. xxxix. 21.) or to those that stood in the way of their preferment, or that they supposed to have affronted them, or done them a dishonour, or to those whose estates they coveted; so Jezebel insured Naboth for his vineyard. Nay, they did not mischief-sake.

2. They were false and treacherous: (v. 27.) As cage, or coop, is full of birds, and of food for them to fatten them for the table, so are their houses full of deceit, of wealth gotten by fraudulent practices, or of arts and methods of defrauding. All the business of their families is done with deceit:
and ever deals with them, they will cheat him if they can; which is easily done by those who make no conscience of what they say and do. Herein they overpass the deeds of the wicked, v. 28. Those that act with deceit, with a colour of law and justice, do more mischief perhaps than these wicked men,
(v. 26.) that carried all before them by open force and violence. They are more than the wicked do to themselves, yes, the worst of them. And would you think it? They prosper in those wicked causes, and therefore their hearts are hardened in them.
They are greedy of the world, because they find it flows in upon them, and they stick not at any wickedness in pursuit of it, because they find that it is so far from hindering their prosperity, that it furthers
it. They are become great in the world, they are waxen rich, and thrive upon it. They have where-thwithal to make provision for the flesh to fulfill all the lusts of it, to which they are very indulgent, so that they are waxen fat with living at ease, and bathing themselves in all the delights of sense; they are stiff and smooth; they shine, they lock fair and gay; every body admires them. And they pass by the matters of justice; they do not consult to save, to serve, to help those that are perishing.
And they escape the evils which one would expect their sins should bring upon them; they are not in trouble
as other men, much less as we might expect bad men, Ps. lxxiii. 5, 6c.

3. When they were grown great, and had got power in their hands, they did not do that good with it which they ought to have done; They judge not the cause, the cause of the fatherless, and the right of the needy. The fatherless are often needy, always need assistance and advice, and advantage is taken of their helpless condition to do them an injury. Who should succour them then but the great and rich? What have men wealth for, but to do good with it? But these would take no cognizance of any such distressed cases: they had not so much sense of justice, or compassion for the injured; or, if they did concern themselves in the cause, it was not to do right, but to protect them that did wrong.
And yet they prosper still, God layeth not folly to them. Certainly then the things of this world are not the best things, for often the worst men have the most of them; yet we are not to think that, because they prosper, God allows of their practices. No, though sentence against them be not executed speedily,
it will be executed.

4. There was a general corruption of all orders and degrees of men among them; (v. 30, 31.) A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land. The degeneracy of such a people, so privileged and advanced, was a wonderful thing.
How they perverted what they had been in:
It was a horrible thing, and to be detected, and the consequences of it dreaded. To frighten ourselves from sin, let us call it a horrible thing. What was the matter? In short, this: [1.] The leaders misled the people: The prophets prophesy falsely, counteterfeit a commission from heaven, when they are factors for hell. Religion is never more dangerous than when it is attacked by the false prophets, and their interest in the people. Thus they were in a combination against every thing that was good, an strengthened one another’s hands in evil. (2.) The people were well enough pleased to be misled; “They are my people,” says God, “and should have stood up for me, and borne their testimony against the wickedness of their priests and prophets; but they love to have it so.” If the priests and prophets will let them alone in their sins, they will give them no disturbance in theirs. They love to be ridden with a loose rein, and like those rulers very well that they may do their good works, and those teachers that will not reprove them.

III. He shows them how fatal the consequences of this would certainly be. Let them consider,

1. What the reckoning would be for their wickedness; (v. 29.) Shall not I visit for these things? as before, v. 9. Sometimes mercy rejoices against judgment; How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? Here, judgment is against mercy; Shall I not visit? We are sure that Infinite Wisdom knows how to accommodate the matter between them. The manner of expression is very emphatical, and speaks, (1.) The certainty and necessity of God’s judgments; Shall not my soul be avenged? Yes, without doubt, vengeance will come, it must come, if the sinner repents not. (2.) The justice and equity of God’s judgments; he appeals to the sinner’s own conscience. Do not they deserve to be punished, that have been guilty of such abominations? Shall he not be avenged on such a nation, such a wicked, provoking nation as this?

2. What the direct tendency of their wickedness was: What will you do in the end thereof? That is, (1.) “What a pitch of wickedness will you come to at last! What will you do in the end thereof? (v. 30.) What will this grow to? You will certainly grow worse and worse, till you have filled up the measure of your iniquity.” (2.) “What a fit of destruction will you come to at last! When things are brought to such a pass as this, as nothing can be expected from you but a deluge of sin, so nothing can be expected from God but a deluge of wrath; and what will ye do when that comes?” Note, Those that walk in bad ways, would do well to consider the tendency of them both to greater sin and utter ruin. An end will come, the end of a wicked life will come, when it will be all called over again, and without doubt will bitterness in the latter end.

CHAP. VI.

In this chapter, as before, we have, 1. A prophecy of the invading of the land of Judah, and the besieging of Jerusalem by the Chaldean army, (v. 1-6.) with the spoils which they should make of the country, (v. 9.) and the terror which all should be seized with on that occasion, v. 22.-28. 1. An account of those sins of Judah and Jerusalem, which provoked God to bring this desolating judgment upon them. Their oppression, (v. 7.) their contempt of the word of God; (v. 10.-12.) their worldliness; (v. 13.) the treachery of their prophets; (v. 14.) their impudence in sin; (v. 15.) their obstinacy against reproofs, v. 18, 19. These made their sacrifices unacceptable to him, (v. 29.) and for these he gave them up to the sword, v. 30. And these things God did, and they rejected them as irreclaimable, v. 28. 30. III. Good counsel given them in the midst of all this, but in vain, v. 8, 10, 17.

1. O ye children of Benjamin, gather yourselves to flee out of the midst of Jerusalem, and blow the trumpet in Tekoa, and set up a sign of fire in Beth-haccerem: for evil appeareth out of the north, and great destruction. 2. I have likened the daughter of Zion to a comely and delicate woman. 3. The shepherds with their flocks shall come unto her: they shall pitch their tents against her round about; they shall feed every one in his place. 4. Prepare ye war against her; arise, and let us go up at noon. Wo unto us! for the day goeth away, for the shadows of the evening are stretched out. 5. Arise, and let us go by night, and let us destroy her palaces. 6. For thus hath the Lord of hosts said, Hew ye down trees, and cast a mount against Jerusalem: this is the city to be visited; she is wholly oppression in the midst of her. 7. As a fountain casteth out her waters, so she casteth out her wickedness: violence and spoil is heard in her; before me continually is grief and wounds. 8. Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul depart from thee; lest I make thee desolate, a land not inhabited.

Here is, 1. Judgment threatened against Judah and Jerusalem; the city and the country, which were at this time secure, and under no apprehension of danger; they saw no cloud gathering, but every thing looked safe and serene: but the prophet tells them that they shall shortly be invaded by a foreign power, an army shall be brought against them from the north, which shall lay all waste, and shall cause not a general devastation, but a general desolation. It is here foretold,

1. That the alarm of this should be loud and terrible. This is represented, v. 1. The children of Benjamin, in which tribe part of Jerusalem lay, are here called to shift for their own safety in the country; for the city (to which it was first thought advisable for them to flee, ch. iv. 5, 6.) would soon be made too hot for them, and they would find it the wisest course to flee out of the midst of it. It is common, in public frights, for people to think anything safer than that in which they are; and therefore those in the city are far shifting into the country, in hopes there to escape out of danger, and those in the country are for shifting into the city, in hopes there to make head against the danger: but it is all in vain, when evil flourishes in a country, and comes against it. The children of Benjamin send the alarm to their countrymen, and to do what they could for their own safety; Blow the trumpet in Tekoa, a city which lay twelve miles north from Jerusalem. Let them be stirred up to stand upon their guard; Set up a sign of fire, that is, kindle the beacons in Beth-haccerem, the house of the vineyard, which lay on a hill between Jerusalem and Tekoa. Prepare to make a vigorous resistance, for the evil appeareth out of the north. This may be taken ironically; “Be yourselves to the best methods you can think of for your own preservation, but all shall be in vain; for when you have done your best, it will be a great destruction, for it is in vain to contend with God’s judgments.”

2. That the attempt upon them should be bold and formidable, and such as they should be a very unequal match for. (1.) See what the daughter of Zion is, on whom the assailment is made; she is likened to a comely and delicate woman, (v. 2.) bred up in every thing that is nice and soft, that will not set so much as the sole of her foot to the ground for tenderness and delicacy, (Deut. xxxviii. 56.) nor suffer the wind to blow upon her; and, not being able to endure hardness, she will be the less able either to resist the enemy, (for those that make war must endure hardness,) or to bear the destruction with... that patience which is necessary to make it tolerable. The more we indulge ourselves in the pleasures of the world, the more engrossed and hardened we become to the troubles of this life. (2.) See what the daughter of Babylon is, by whom the assault is made. The generals and their armies are compared to shepherds and their flocks; (v. 3.) in such numbers and in such order did they come, the soldiers following their leaders, as the sheep their shepherds. The daughter of Zion dwell at home, (so some read it,) even to her tents and abodes, the security of the holy city, that was his peculiar. It is he that says, (v. 4.) Prepare ye war against her; for he is the Lord of hosts, that has all hosts at his command, and he has said, (v. 6.) How ye down trees, and cast a mount against Jerusalem, in order to the attacking of it. The Chaldeans have great power against Judah and Jerusalem, and yet they have no power but what is given them from above. God has marked out Jerusalem for destruction; he has said, This is the city to be visited, visited in wrath, visited by the divine justice, and this is the time of her visitation. The day is coming, when those that are careless and secure in sinful ways, will be visited.

[5.] How they shall animate themselves and one another to execute that commission. God's counsels being against Jerusalem, which cannot be altered or dissuaded, the counsels of war which the enemies held are made to agree with his counsels. God having said, Prepare war against her, their determinations are made subservient to his; and notwithstanding the distance of place, and the many difficulties that lay in the way, it is soon resolved matters must be done, and marches must be made, as they go on. Note, It is good to see how the counsel and decree of God are pursued and executed in the devices and designs of men, even theirs that know him not, Isa. x. 6, 7. In this campaign, First, They resolved to be very expeditious. They have no sooner resolved upon it, than they address themselves to it; it shall never be said that they left anything to be done towards it to-morrow, or they could do to-day; Arise, let us go up at noon, though it be in the heat of the day; nay, (v. 5.) Arise, let us go up by night, though it be in the dark; nothing shall hinder them, they are resolved to lose no time. They are described as men in care to make despatch, (v. 4.) We unto us, for the day goes away, and we are not going on with our work; the sleeping, the evening are stretched out, and we sit still, and let slip the opportunity. O that we were thus eager in our spiritual work and warfare, thus afraid of losing time, or any opportunity, taking the kingdom of heaven by violence! It is folly to trifle when we have an eternal salvation to work out, and the enemies of that salvation to fight against. Secondly, They confidently expect to be victorious; We shall go up, and ascend into her palaces, and make ourselves masters of the wealth that is in them. It was not that they might fulfil God's counsels, but that they might fill their own treasures, that they were thus eager; yet God thereby serves his own ends, that they may be the more solemnly sensible of the wretchedness of pride and ambition.

II. The cause of this judgment assigned. It is all for their wickedness; they have brought it upon themselves; they must bear it, for they must bear the blame of it; they are thus oppressed, because they have been oppressors; they have dealt hardly with one another, each in their turns, as they have had power and advantage, and now the enemy shall deal hardly with them. This is the case of the oppressor, oppression, and violence, and wrong-doing, is here charged upon them. 1. As a national sin; (v. 6.) Therefore this city is to be visited, it is time to make inquisition, for she is wholly oppression in the midst of her. All orders and degrees of men, from the prince on the throne to the meanest master of a shop, were oppressive to those that were under them. Look which way you will, there were causes for complaints of this kind. 2. As a sin that was become in a manner natural to them; (v. 7.) She casts out wickedness in all the instances of malice and mischievousness, as a fountain casts out her waters, as plentifully and constantly; the streams bitter and poisonous, like the fountain. The waters out of the fountain will not be restrained, but will run in every quarter of the earth, and there will be laws and conscience in their violent proceedings. This is fitly applied to the corrupt heart of man in his natural state; it casts out wickedness, one evil imagination or other, as a fountain casts out her waters, naturally and easily; it is always flowing, and yet always full. 3. As that which was become a constant practice with them. Violence and spoil are heard in her. The cry of it is come up before God, as that of Sodom; Before me continually are grief and wounds—the complaint of those that find themselves aggrieved, being unjustly wounded in their bodies or spirits, in their estates or reputation. Note, He that is the common Parent of mankind, regards and resents, and sooner or later will revenge the mischiefs and wrongs that men do to one another.

III. The counsel given them, how to prevent this judgment. Fair warning is given, now upon the whole matter; Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, v. 8. Receive the instruction given thee both by the law of God and by his prophets; be wise at length for thyself. They knew very well what they had been instructed to do; nothing remained but to do it, till then they could not be instructed. The reason for this counsel is taken from the inevitable ruin they ran upon, if they refused to comply with the instructions given them; lest my soul depart, or be disjoined, from thee. This intimates what a tender affection and concern God had had for them; his very soul had been joined to them, and nothing but sin could disjoin it. Note, 1. The God of mercy is that part alone from a provoking crime is earnest with them, by true repentance and reformation to prevent things coming to that extremity. 2. Their case is very miserable from whom God's soul is disjoined; it intimates the loss not only of their outward blessings, but of those comforts and favours which are the more immediate and peculiar tokens of his love and presence. This is the only thing that is now left, Heb. x. 38. If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him. 3. These whom God forsakes are certainly undone; when God's soul departs from Jerusalem, she soon becomes desolate and uninhabited, Matth. xxiii. 38.

9. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, They shall thoroughly glean the remnant of Israel as a vine; turn back thy hand as a grape-ga and in their anger we may see God angry. Now see on whom the fury is poured out in full phials; upon the children abroad, or in the streets, where they are playing; (Zech. vii. 5.) or whether they run out innocently to look about them; the sword of the Chaldean army made the way. ch. ix. 21. The children perish in the calamity which the fathers' sins have procured. The execution shall likewise reach the assembly of young men, their merry meetings, their clubs which they keep up to strengthen one another's hands in wickedness, they shall be cut off together. Nor shall these only fall into the enemies' hands, who meet for lewdness, but they that also lament; and the wife shall be taken, these two in bed together, and neither left, but both taken prisoners. And as they have no compassion for the weak but fair sex, so they have none for decrepit but venerable age; the old with the full of days, whose deaths can contribute no more to their safety than their lives to their service, who are not in a capacity to do them either good or harm, they shall be either cut off or carried off. Their houses shall then be turned to others, (v. 12.) the conquerors shall dwell in their habitations, use their gods, and live upon their stores; their fields and wives shall fall together into their hands as was threatened, Deut. xxviii. 30, 80. For God stretches out his hand upon the habitants of the land, and none can go out of the reach of it. Now as to this denunciation of God's wrath, 1. The prophecy foretells three things he will do, and he did. 2. He will do them terrible, for herein he dealt faithfully; (v. 11.) "I am full of the fury of the Lord, full of the thoughts and apprehensions of it, and am carried out with a powerful impulse, by the spirit of prophecy, to speak of it thus vehemently." He took no delight in threatening, nor was it any pleasure to him with such sentences as these to make those about him uneasy: but he could not contain himself, he was uneasy with holding in; he suppressed it as long as he could, as long as he durst, but he was so full of power by the spirit of the Lord of hosts, that he must speak, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear. Note, When ministers preach the terrors of the Lord according to the scripture, we have no reason to be displeased at them; for they are but messengers, and must deliver their message pleasing or unpleasing. 2. He condemns the false prophets, who preached plausibly, for therein they flattered people, and dealt unfaithfully, v. 13, 14. The priests and the prophet, who should be their watchmen and monitors, have dealt falsely, have not been true to their trust, nor told the people their faults and the danger they were in; they should have been their physicians, but they murdered their patients by letting them have their wills, and giving them every thing they had a mind to, and flattering them into an opinion that they were in no danger; (v. 14.) They have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, or, according to the cure of some slight hurt; skinning over the wound, and never searching it to the bottom; applying lentives only, when they knew they need stronger herbs; nothing proving to be in their sins, and giving them opiates, to make them easy for the present, while the disease was preying upon their vitals. They said, "Peace, peace, all shall be well." If there were some thinking people among them, who were awake, and apprehensive of danger, they soon stopped their mouths with their priestly and prophetic authority, boldly averring that there was not any danger, when there is no peace, because they went on in their idolatries and daring impieties. Note, These are to be reckoned our false friends, that is, our worst and most dangerous enemies, who flatter us in a sinful way.

II. The sin of Judah and Jerusalem is here dis covered, which provoked God to bring this ruin upon them, and justified him in it.

1. They would by no means bear to be told of their faults, nor of the danger they were in. God bids the prophet give them warning of the judgment coming, v. (2.) "But," says he, "I will speak, and give warning: I cannot find out any that will so much as give me a patient hearing. I may give warning long enough, but there is nobody that will take warning. I cannot speak, that they may hear, cannot speak to any purpose, or with any hope of success; for their ear is uncircumcised, it is carnal and fleshly, indisposed to receive the voice of God, so that they cannot hear. They love to hear and see a shipwreck of their ears and eyes, and all the guns of hearing, so that divine things might as much purpose be spoken to a stone as to them. Nay, they are not only deaf to it, but prejudiced against it; therefore they cannot hear, because they are resolved that they will not." The word of the Lord is unto them a reproach. Both the reproves and the threatenings of the word are so; they reckon themselves wronged and affronted by both, and resent the prophet's plain-dealing with them, as they would the most causeless slander and calumny.

This was kicking against the goads, (Acts ix. 5.) as the lawyers against the word of Christ; (Luke xi. 45.) Thus saying, thou reprocest us also. Note, These reproves that are counted reproaches, and much so as such, are brought into the heaviest woes. When it is here said, They have no delight in the word, more is implied that is expressed; they have an antipathy to it, their hearts rise at it; it exasperates them, and enrages their corruptions, and they are ready to fly in the face, and pull out the eyes, of their reprovers. And how can those expect that the word of the Lord should have any grateful effect on them, who have no delight in it, but would rather be any where than within hearing of it?

2. They were inordinately set upon the world, and wholly carried away by the love of it; (v. 13.) From the least of them even to the greatest, old and young, rich and poor, high and low, those of all ranks, professions, and employments, every one is greedy of the world, set upon the riches that they can get, their foes per se right or wrong; and this made them oppressive and violent, (v. 6, 7.) for of that evil, as well as others, the love of money is the bitter root. Nay, and this hardened their hearts against the word of God and his prophets; they were the covetous Pharisees that derided Christ, Luke xvi. 14.

3. They were become impudent in sin, and past shame. After such a high charge of flagrant crimes proved upon them, it was very proper to ask, (v. 15.) Were they ashamed, when they had committed all these abominations, which are such a reproach to their reason and religion? Did they blush at the conviction, and acknowledge that confusion of face belonged to them? If so, there is some trace of that fear of God, to be found in them, which did not appear so much as this colour of virtue among them; their hearts were so hardened, that they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush, they had so bazonned their faces. They even gloried in their wickedness, and openly confronted the convictions which should have humbled them; which brought them to repentance. They resolved to face God's arm, and did not own their guilt. Some refer it to the priests and prophets, who had healed the people slightly, and told them that they should have peace, and yet were not ashamed of their treachery and falsehood, no, not when the event disproved them, and gave them the lie. Those that are shameless are graceless, and their case hopeless. But they that will not submit to a penitential shame, nor take that to themselves as their due, shall not escape an utter ruin; for so it follows, Therefore they shall fall among them that fall, they shall have their portion with those that are quite undone; and when God visits the nation in wrath, they shall be sure to be cast down, and be made to tremble, because they will not blush. Note, Those that sin, and cannot blush for it, shall find that it is bad with them now, and that it will be worse with them shortly. At first, they hardened themselves, and would not blush, afterward, they were so hardened, that they could not. Quid unum habebant in malis bonum per- dunt, percandi verecumdume. They have lost the good they have obtained, by their many bad ones, that is, shame for having done amiss. Senec. de Vit. Beat.

III. They are put in mind of the good counsel which had been often given them, but in vain. They had a great deal said to them to little purpose, 1. By way of advice concerning their duty, v. 16. God had been used to say to them, Stand in the ways and see. That is, (1.) He would have them to consider, not to proceed rashly, but to do as travellers in the road, who are in care to find the right way which will bring them to their journey's end, and therefore pause and inquire for it. If they have any reason to think that they have missed their way, they are not easy till they have got satisfaction, O that men would use the care, (Deut. xxxii.) and ponder the path of their feet, as those that believe lawful and unlawful are of no less consequence to us than the right way and the wrong are to a traveller! (2.) He would have them to consult antiquity, the observations and experiences of those that went before them; "Ask for the old paths; inquire of the former age; (Job viii. 30.) ask the father, the elder, the ancient. (Deut. xxxiii.) and thou wilt find the way of godliness and righteousness has always been the way which God has owned and blessed, and in which men have prospered. Ask for the old paths, the paths prescribed by the law of God, the written word, that true standard of antiquity. Ask for the paths that the patriarchs travelled in before you, Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob; and it is certain, if you shall refer the promises made to them, to tread in their steps, you shall ask for the old paths; Where is the good way? We must not be guided merely by antiquity, as if the plea of prescription and long usage were alone sufficient to justify our path; no, there is an old way which wicked men have trodden, Job xxii. 15. But when we ask for the old paths, it is only in order to find out the good way, the highway of the right way. Note, The way of religion and godliness is a good old way; the way that all the saints in all ages have walked in. (3.) He would have them to resolve to act according to the result of these inquiries; "When you have found out which is the good way, walk therein; practice accordingly, keep close to that way, proceed and persevere in it. Some of you have this blessing of God, do not refer to the struggles that were between the true and false prophets, between those that said they should have peace, and those that told them trouble was at the door; they pretended they knew not which to believe; 'Stand in the way,' says God, 'and see, and inquire, which of these two agrees with the written word, and the usual methods of God's presence. Plan a course, and walk in it, and do it, and do accordingly.' (4.) He assures them, that if they do thus, it will secure the welfare and satisfaction of their own souls; "Walk in the good old way, and you will find that your walking in that way will be easy and pleasant; you will enjoy both your God and yourselves, and the way will lead you to true rest. Though it cost you some pains to walk..."
in that way, you will find an abundant recompense at your journey’s end.” (5.) He laments that this good counsel, which was so rational in itself, and so proper for them, could not find acceptance; “But they said, We will not walk therein. Not only we will not be at the pains to inquire which is the good way; but when it is told us, and we have nothing to say to the contrary but that it is the right way, yet we will not deny ourselves and our women (as far as to walk in it.)” Thus murmur-ades are ruined for ever by downright wilfulness.

2. By way of admonition concerning their danger. Because they would not be ruled by fair reasoning, God takes another method with them; by lesser judgments he threatens greater, and sends his prophets to give them this explanation of the danger they were in; (Jer. 25. 19.) and they are to call upon others to hearken to it too, to hear the Lord’s controversy, to observe the voice of Providence, to improve it, and answer the intentions of it. (2.) This fair warning slighted; “But they said, We will not hearken; we will not hear, we will not heed, we will not believe; the prophets may as well save themselves and us the trouble. The reason why sinners perish is, because they do not hearken to the sound of the trumpet; and the reason why they do not, is, because they will not; and they have no reason to give why they will not, but because they will not, that is, they are herein most unreasonable. One may more easily deal with ten men’s reasons, than one man’s will.

18. Therefore hear, ye nations, and know, O congregation, what is among them. 19. Hear, O earth; behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts, because they have not hearkened unto my words, nor to my law, but rejected it. 20. To what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba, and the sweet cane from a far country? your burnt-offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices sweet unto me. 21. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will lay stumbling-blocks before this people, and the fathers and the sons together shall fall upon them; the neighbour and his friend shall perish. 22. Thus saith the Lord, Behold, a people cometh from the north country, and a great nation shall be raised from the sides of the earth. 23. They shall lay hold on bow and spear; they are cruel, and have no mercy: their voice roareth like the sea; and they ride upon horses, set in array as men for war against thee, O daughter of Zion. 24. We have heard the fame thereof; our hands wax feeble: anguish hath taken hold of us, and pain as of a woman in travail. 25. Go not forth into the field, nor walk by the way; for the sword of the enemy and fear is on every side. 26. O daughter of my people, gird thee with sackcloth, and wallow thyself in ashes; make thee mourning as for an only son, most bitter lamentation: for the spoiler shall suddenly come upon us. 27. I have set thee for a tower and a fortress among my people, that thou mayest know and try their way. 28. They are all grievous revolters, walking with slanders: they are brass and iron; they are all corrupters. 29. The bellows are burned, the lead is consumed of the fire; the founder melteth in vain; for the wicked are not plucked away. 30. Reprobate silver shall men call them, because the Lord hath rejected them.

Here,

1. God appeals to all the neighbours, near to the whole world, concerning the equity of his proceedings against Judah and Jerusalem; (v. 18, 19.) “Hear, ye nations, and know particularly, O congregation of the mighty, the great men of the nations, that take cognizance of the affairs of the states about you, and make remarks upon them. Observe now what is doing among them of Judah and Jerusalem; you hear of the desolations brought upon them, the earth rings of it, trembles under it; you all wonder that I should bring evil upon this people, that are in covenant with me, that profess relation to me, that have worshipped me, and been highly favoured by me; you are ready to ask, Wherefore has the Lord done thus to this land? (Deut. xxix. 24.) Know then,” 1. “That it is the natural product of their devices. The evil brought upon them is the fruit of their thought. They thought to strengthen themselves by their alliance with foreigners, and by that very thing they weakened and diminished themselves, they betrayed and exposed themselves.” 2. “That it is the just punishment of their disobedience and rebellion. God does but execute upon them the curse of the law for their violation of its commands. It is because they have not hearkened to my words, nor to my law, that God, according to a word I have said of them, but rejected it all. They would never have been ruined thus by the judgments of God’s hand, if they had refused to be ruled by the judgments of his mouth: therefore you cannot say that they have any wrong done them.”

II. God rejects their plea, by which they insisted upon their external services as sufficient to atone for all their sins. Alas! it is a frivolous plea; (v. 20.) “To what purpose come there to me incense, and sweet cane, to be burned for a perfume on the golden altar, though it was the best of the kind, and far-fetched? What care I for your burnt-offerings and your sacrifices?” They not only cannot profit God, (no sacrifice does, Ps. 1. 9.) but they do not please him, for none does but the sacrifices of the upright; the fire of the altar; the sweet incense; that is the unction of God’s mouth. Sacrifice and incense were appointed to excite their repentance, and to direct them to a Mediator, and assist their faith in him. Where this good use was made of them, they were acceptable, God had respect to them and to those that offered them. But when they were offered with an opinion that thereby they made God their Debtor, and purchased a license to go on in sin, they were so far from being pleasing to God, that they were a provocation to him.
III. He foretells the desolation that was now coming upon them. 1. God designs their ruin because they hate to be reformed; (v. 21.) I will lay stumbling-blocks before this people, occasions of falling, not into sin, but into trouble. Those whom God has marked for destruction he perplexes and embarrasses in their counsels, and obstructs and retards all the methods they take for their own safety. This is a very solemn thing. So with which they meet in their way, wherever they went, were stumbling-blocks to them, in every corner they stumbled upon them, and were dashed to pieces by them; The fathers and the sons together shall fall upon them; neither the fathers with their wisdom, nor the sons with their strength and courage, shall escape them, or get over them. The sons that sinned with their fathers, fall with them. Jesus, the Lord of hosts, said, In that day, shall the greater fall before the less, and the higher be brought down before the lower. The Lord shall bring the stock out of Egypt, and the aegis out of Babylon, and shall slumbering-blocks upon a very number of nations, which he has in view, and which he will use as instruments of his; for whatever work God has to do, he will find out proper instruments for the doing of it. This is a people fetched from the north, from the sides of the earth. Babylon itself lay a great way off northward; and some of the countries there were subject to the king of Babylon, out of which his army had been formed. These must be employed in his service, v. 22, 23.

For, (1.) It is a people very numerous, a great nation, which will make their invasion the more formidable. (2.) It is a warlike people; they lay hold on bow and spear, and at this time know how to use them, for they are used to them; they ride upon horses, and therefore they march the more swiftly, and in battle press the harder. Nay, they had brought into the field a better cavalry than the Chaldeans. (3.) It is a barbarous people; they are cruel, and have no mercy, being greedy of prey, and flushed with victory. They take a pride in frightening all about them; their voice roars like the sea. And, lastly, They have a particular design upon Judah and Jerusalem, in hopes greatly to embroil themselves with the spoil of that famous country. They are set in array against thee, O daughter of Zion. The sins of God's professing people make them an easy prey to those that are God's enemies as well as theirs.

IV. He describes the very great consternation which Judah and Jerusalem should be in, upon the approach of this formidable enemy, v. 24-26. 1. That they cause no little terror to a fertile country. One fear intelligence brought them of the approach of the enemy; "When we have but heard the fame thereof, our hands wax feeble, and we have no heart to make any resistance; anguish has taken hold of us, and we are immediately in an extremity of pain, like that of a woman in travail." Note, Sense of guilt quite dispirits men, upon the approach of any thing that is going to distress them. God's children are not to confine themselves by consent to their houses, not daring to show their heads abroad, for though they could not but expect that the sword of the enemy would at last find them out there, yet they would rather die tamely and meekly there than run any venture, either by flight or flight, to help them in their trouble. What can they hope to do for themselves, who have made God their Enemy? 2. They confine themselves by consent to their houses, not daring to show their heads abroad, for though they could not but expect that the sword of the enemy would at last find them out there, yet they would rather die tamely and meekly there than run any venture, either by flight or flight, to help them in their trouble. What can they hope to do for themselves, who have made God their Enemy? 2. They confine themselves by consent to their houses, not daring to show their heads abroad, for though they could not but expect that the sword of the enemy would at last find them out there, yet they would rather die tamely and meekly there than run any venture, either by flight or flight, to help them in their trouble. What can they hope to do for themselves, who have made God their Enemy? 3. The prophet calls upon them sadly to lament the desolations that were coming upon them. He was himself the lamenting prophet, and called upon his people to join with him in his lamentations; "O daughter of my people, hear thy God calling thee to weeping and mourning, and answer his call: do not only put on sackcloth for a day, but gird it on for thy constant wear; do not only put ashes on thy head, but wallow thyself in ashes; put thyself into close mourning, and use all the tokens of bitter lamentation, not forced and for a few hours only, but that which is constant and inconsiderable, and for an only son, and think themselves comfortless because they are childless. Thus do thou lament for the spoiler that suddenly comes upon us. Though he is not come yet, he is coming, the decree is gone forth; let us therefore meet the execution of it with a suitable sadness." As saints may rejoice in hope of God's mercies, though they see them only in the promise, so sinners must mourn for fear of God's judgments, though they see them only in the threatenings.

V. He constitutes the prophet a judge over this people that now stand upon their trial; as ch. i. 10. I have set thee over the nations; so here, I have set thee for a tower, or as a sentinel, or a watchman, upon a tower, among my people, as an inspecor of their actions, and to find out their faults and try their ways, v. 27. Not that God needed any to inform him concerning them; on the contrary, the prophet knew little of them in comparison, but by the spirit of prophecy: but thus God appeals to the prophet himself, and his own observation concerning their character, that he might be fully satisfied in the equity of God's proceedings against them, and with the more assurance give them warning of the judgments which are coming.

God set him for a tower conspicuous to all, and attacked by many, but made him a fortress, a strong tower, gave him courage to stem the tide, and bear the shock, of their displeasure. They that will be faithful reprovers, have need to be firm as fortresses.

Now in trying their ways, he will find two things; 1. That they are wretchedly debauched; (v. 28.) They are all grievous revolters, revolters of revolters, (so the word is,) the worst of revolters, as a servant of servants is the meanest servant. They have a revolting heart, have deeply revolted, and revolt more and more. They have seemed to start fair, but they revolt and start back. They walk with slanders; they make nothing of belying and backbitting one another, nay, they make that a sort of compliment to one another. They govern themselves by the slanders they hear, hating those that they hear ill-spoken of, though ever so unjustly. They are brass and iron, base metals, and there is nothing in them that is valuable. They were as silver and gold, but they are degenerated. Nay, as they are all revolters, so they are all corrupters, not only debauched themselves, but infectious to debauch others, to corrupt them as they themselves are corrupt; nay, to make them seven times more the children of hell themselves. It is often so; sinners soon become tempters.

2. That they would never be reclaimed and reformed; it was in vain to think of reducing them, for various methods had been tried with them, and all to no purpose, v. 29, 30; and all to no purpose, that was imposed to have some good metal in it, and was therefore put into the furnace by the refiner, who used all his art, and took abundance of pains, about it, but it proved all dross, nothing of any value could be extracted out of it. God by his prophets and by his providences had used the most proper means to refine this people, and to purify them from their wickedness, and to make them the children of God, and yet they were always as bad as they were, and as disobedient as they were to God, and as unprofitable (so the word is,) as before; and a series of afflictions, they had been kept in a constant fire, but all to no purpose. The bellows have been still kept so near the fire, to blow it out, that they are burnt.
with the heat of it, or they are quite worn out with long use, and thrown into the fire as good for nothing. The prophets have preached their threats sore with crying aloud against the sins of Israel, and yet they are not convinced and humbled. The lead, which was then used in refining silver, as quicksilver is now, is consumed of the fire, and has not done its work; for the founder melts in vain, his labour is lost, for the wicked are not plucked away, no care is taken to separate between the precious and the vile, and the Designer, the old leaves, to cast out into the fire. There are those, who, being corrupt themselves, are in danger of infecting others. Or, Their wickednesses are not removed, (so some read it,) they are still as bad as ever, and nothing will prevail to part between them and their sins; they will not be brought off from their idolatries and immoralities by all they have heard, and all they have felt, of the wrath of God against them. For here is a passage upon them, v. 30. Reprobate silver shall they be called, useless and worthless; they glitter as if they had some silver in them, but there is nothing of real virtue or goodness to be found among them; and for this reason the Lord has rejected them. He will no more own them as his people, nor look for any good from them; he will take them away like dross, (Ps. cxix. 159.) and prepare a consuming fire for those that would not be purified by a refining fire. By this it appears, (1.) That God has no pleasure in the death and ruin of sinners, for he tries all ways and methods with them to prevent their destruction, and qualify them for salvation. Both his ordinances and his providences have a tendency this way, to part between them and their sins; and yet with many it is all lost labour; We have tried them; and you have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and you have not wept. Therefore, (2.) God will be justified in the death of sinners, and all the blame will lie upon themselves. He did not reject them till he had used all proper means to reduce them; did not cast them off so long as there was any hope of them, nor abandon them as dross till it appeared that they were reprobate silver.

CHAP. VII.

The prophet having in God's name reproved the people for their sins, and given them warning of the judgments of God that were coming upon them, in this chapter procures the same intention for their humiliation and awakening. I. He shows them the invalidity of the plea they so much relied on, that they have the temple of God among them, and constantly attended the service of it, and endeavours to take them off from their confidence in their external privileges and performances, v. 1. 11. II. He reminds them of the desolations of Shiloh, and tells them that such should be the desolations of Jerusalem, v. 12. 13. He represents to the prophet their abominable idolatries, for which he was thus incensed against them, v. 15. 20. IV. He sets before the people that fundam ental maxim of religion, that to obey is better than sacrifice, (1 Sam. xx. 22.) and that God would not accept the sacrifices of those that obstinately persisted in disobedience, v. 21. 28. V. He threatens to lay the last hand on their idolatries and impieties, and to multiply their sins as they had multiplied their sin, v. 29. 34.

1. THE word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 2. Stand in the gate of the Lord's house, and proclaim there this word, and say, Hear the word of the Lord, all ye of Judah, that enter in at these gates to worship the Lord: 3. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place. 4. Trust you not in lying words, saying, The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, are these. 5. For if ye thoroughly amend your ways and your doings; if you thoroughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbour; 6. If ye oppress not the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, and shed not innocent blood in this place, neither walk after other gods to your hurt. 7. Then will I cause you to dwell in this place, in the land that I gave to your fathers, for ever and ever. 8. Behold, ye trust in lying words, that cannot profit. 9. Will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, and walk after other gods whom ye know not; 10. And come and stand before me in this house, which is called by my name, and say, We are delivered to do all these abominations? 11. Is this house, which is called by my name, become a den of robbers in your eyes? Behold, even I have seen it, saith the Lord. 12. But go ye now unto my place, which was in Shiloh, where I set my name at the first, and see what I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel. 13. And now, because ye have done all these works, saith the Lord, and I spake unto you, rising up early and speaking, but ye heard not; and I called you, but ye answered not; 14. Therefore will I do unto this house, which is called by my name, wherein ye trust, and unto the place which I gave to you and to your fathers, as I have done to Shiloh. 15. And I will cast you out of my sight, as I have cast out all your brethren, even the whole seed of Ephraim.

These verses begin another sermon, which is continued in this and the two following chapters; much to the same effect with those before, to reason them to repentance. Observe, I. The orders given to the prophet to preach this sermon; for he had not only a general commission, but particular directions and instructions, for every message he delivered. This was a word that came to him from the Lord, v. 1. We are not told when this sermon was to be preached; but are told, 1. Where it must be preached—in the gates of the Lord's house, that is, the thresholds of the temple, the outer court, or the court of the people. It would afflict the priests, and expose the prophet to their rage, to have such a message as this delivered within their precincts; but the prophet must not fear the face of man, he cannot be faithful to his God if he do. 2. To whom it must be preached—to the men of Judah, that enter in at these gates to worship the Lord, probably, it was at Jerusalem; the three times when all the males from all parts of the country were to appear before the Lord in the courts of his house, and not to appear empty; then he had many together to preach to, and that was the most seasonable time to admonish them not to trust to their privileges. Note, (1.) Even those that profess religion have need to be preached to, as well as those that are without. (2.) It is desirable to have opportunity of preaching to many together. Wisdom chooses to cry in the chief place of concourse, and as Jeremiah here, in the opening of the gates, the temple-gates. (3.) When we are going to worship God, we have need to be admonished to worship him in the spirit, and to have no confidence in the flesh, Phil. iii. 3.

11. The contents and scope of the sermon itself. It is delivered in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, who commands the world, but covenants with his people. As creatures we are bound to regard the Lord of hosts, as Christians the God of Israel; what he said to them he says to us, and it is much the same with that which John 'proclaimed' to the people (Matt. 3. 1). "Bring forth fruits meet for repentance; and think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father. The prophet here tells them.

1. What were the true words of God, which they might trust to. In short, they might depend upon it, that, if they would repent, and reform their lives, and return to God in a way of duty, he would restore and confirm their peace, would redress their grievances, and return to them in a way of mercy; (v. 3.) Amend your ways and your doings. This implies that there had been much amiss in their ways and doings, many faults and errors. But it is a great instance of the favour of God to them, that he gives them liberty to amend, shows them where and how they are amiss, that they may correct them upon their amendment; "I will cause you to dwell quietly and peaceably in this place, and a stop shall be put to that which threatens your expulsion." Reformation is the only way, and a sure way, to prevent ruin. He explains himself, (v. 5.—7.) and tells them particularly,

(1.) What the amendment was which he expected from them. They must thoroughly amend; in making good, they must make good their ways and doings; they must reform with resolution, and it must be a universal, constant, persevering reformation; not partial, but entire; not hypocritical, but sincere; not wavering, but constant. They must make the tree good, and so make the fruit good; must amend their hearts and thoughts, and so amend their ways and doings. In particular, [1.] They must be honest and just in all their dealings. They that had power in their hands must thoroughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbour, without partiality, and according as the merits of the cause appeared. They must not either in judgment or in covenant oppress the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, or any that did oppress, nor refuse to do them right when they sought for it; they must not shed innocent blood, and with it defile this place and the land wherein they dwell. [2.] They must keep close to the worship of the true God only; Neither walk after other gods; "Do not hanker after them, nor hearken to those that would draw you into communion with idols; for it is, altogether, both to your hurt and to your damage, Be not only so just to your God, but so wise for yourselves, as not to throw away your adorations upon those who are not able to help you, and thereby provoke him who is able to destroy you." Well, this is all that God insists upon.

(2.) He tells them what the establishment is which, upon this amendment, they may expect from him; [ 7.] "If thus will I do to this place, and they shall not be disturbed, much less dispossessed, for ever and ever; and shall never be turned out either from God's house or from your own. It is promised that they shall still enjoy their civil and sacred privileges, that they shall have a comfortable enjoyment of them; I will cause you to dwell here; (and those dwell at ease, whom God gives a settlement to;) they shall enjoy it by covenant, by virtue of the great made (to) their fathers, not by providence; but by promise. They shall continue in the enjoyment of it without eviction or molestation, they shall not be disturbed, much less dispossessed, for ever and ever; nothing but sin that could throw them out. An everlasting inheritance in the heavenly Canaan is hereby secured to all that live in godliness and honesty. And the vulgar Latin reads a further privilege here, v. 5. 7. "Habitabo vobiscum—I will dwell with you, in this place;" we should find Canaan itself but an uncomfortable place to dwell in, if God did not dwell with us there.

2. What were the lying words of their own hearts, which they must not trust to. He cautions them against this self-deceit; (v. 4.) "Trust not in lying words; you are told in what way, and upon what terms, you may be easy, safe, and happy; now do not flatter yourselves with an opinion that you may be so on any other terms, or in any other way." Yet he charges them with this self-deceit arising from vanity; (v. 8.) "Behold, it is plain that you do trust in lying words, notwithstanding what is said to you; you trust in words that cannot profit; you rely upon a plea that will stand you in no stead.

They that must rest upon words of truth, which would profit them, take shelter by the force of fiction, which cannot profit them. Now these lying words were, "The temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, are these. These buildings, the courts, the holy, and the holy of holies, are the temple of the Lord, built by his appointment, to his glory; here he resides, here he is worshipped. We meet three times in the year to show our homage to him as our King in his palace." This they thought was security enough to them to keep God and his favours from leaving them, God and his judgments from breaking in upon them. When the prophets told them how sinful they were, and how miserable they were likely to be still, they appealed to the temple; "How can we be either so or so, as long as we have that holy, happy place among us?"

The prophet repeats it because they repudiate it upon all occasions. It was the cant of the times, it was in their mouths upon all occasions. If they heard an awakening sermon, if any startling piece of news was brought upon them, they lulled themselves asleep again with this, "We cannot but do well, for we have our temple, the Lord among us." Note, The privileges of a formal establishment are often the pride and confidence of those that are strangers and enemies to the power of it. It is common for those that are furthest from God, to boast themselves most of their being near to the church. They are haughty because of the holy mountain; (Zeph. iii. 11.) as if God's mercy were so tied to them, that they would not be without it.

Now, to convince them what a frivolous plea this was, and what little stead it would stand them in,

(1.) He shows them the gross absurdity of it in itself. If they knew any thing either of the temple of the Lord, or of the Lord of the temple, they must know that to plead that, either in excuse of their sin against God, or in arrest of God's judgment against them, was the most ridiculous, unreasonable thing that could be.

[1.] God is a holy God; but this plea made him the Patron of sin, of the worst of sins, which even the light of nature condemns; (v. 9, 10.) "What," says he, "will you steal, murder, and commit adultery, be guilty of the vilest immoralities, and which the common sense, as well as the common interest, of mankind witness against? Will you swear falsely, a crime which all nations (who with the benefit of a God had a veneration for an oath) have always had a horror of? Will you burn incense to Baal, a dunghill-deity, that sets up as a rival with the great Jehovah, and, not content with that, will you walk after other gods too, whom you know not, and by all these crimes put a daring affront upon God, both as the Lord of hosts, and the God of Israel? Will you exchange the God whose power and goodness you have had such a long experience of, for gods whose ability and willingness to help you you know nothing of? And when you have thus done the worst you can against God, will you brazen your faces so far as to come and stand before him in this house which is called by his name, and in which his name is hallowed upon—stand before him as servants writing his commands, as supplicants expecting his favour? Will you act in open rebellion against him, and yet herd yourselves among his subjects, among the best of them? By this, it should seem, you think that either he does not discover, or does not dislike, your wicked practices, to imagine either of which is to put the highest indignity possible upon him. It is as if you should say, We are delivered to do all these abominations."

If they had not the front to say this totidem verbis—in so many words, yet their actions speak it aloud. They could not but own that God, even their own God, had many a time delivered them, and been a present Help to them, when otherwise they must have perished. He, in delivering them, desired to reduce them to a condition of repentance; but they resolved to persist in their abominations notwithstanding; as soon as they were delivered, (as of old in the days of the Judges,) they did evil again in the sight of the Lord; which was, in effect, to say, in direct contradiction to the true intent and meaning of the providences which had affected them, that God had delivered them in order to enable them to do evil again. They designed against him by sacrificing the more profoundly to their idols. Note, Those who continue in sin because grace has abounded, or that grace may abound, do, in effect, make Christ the Minister of sin. Some take it thus: "You present yourselves before God with your sacrifices and sin-offerings, and then say, We are delivered, we are discharged from your guilt, now we will continue in sin; and this is both blind the world, and stop the mouth of conscience, that you may, the more easily to yourselves, and the more plausibly before others, do all these abominations."

[2.] His temple was a holy place; but this plea made it a protection to the most unholy persons; "Is this house, which is called by my name, and is a standing sign of God's kingdom, set up by men in opposition to the kingdom of sin and Satan—is this become a den of robbers in your eyes? Do you think it was built to be not only a rendezvous of, but a refuge and shelter to, the vilest of malefactors? No; though the horns of the altar were a sanctuary to him that slew a man unwares, yet they were not so to a willful murderer, nor to one that did, night presuming upon God's mercy."

[2.] Kings ii. 29. Those that think to excuse themselves in unchristian practices with the Christian name, and sin the more boldly and securely because there is a Sin-offering provided, do, in effect, make God's house of prayer a den of thieves; as the priests in Christ's time, Matt. xxiii. 13. But could they thus insultingly abuse God's house of prayer, do, as it were, brazen out the sanctuary, in the sight of the Lord, have seen the real iniquity through the counterfeit and dissembled piety. Note, Though men may deceive one another with the shows of devotion, yet they cannot deceive God."

"It is certain that Shiloh was ruined, though it had God's sanctuary in it, when by its wickedness it profaned that sanctuary; (v. 12.) Go ye now to my place which was in Shiloh; it is probable that the ruins of that once flourishing city were yet remaining; they might, at least, read the history of it, which ought to affect them as if they saw the place: then God sent his name at first, there the tabernacle was set up when Israel first took possession of Canaan, (Josh. xviii. 1.) and thither the tribes went up; but those that attended the service of the tabernacle there, corrupted both themselves and others, and from them arose the wickedness of his people Israel; that fountain was poisoned, and sent forth malignant streams; and what came of it? Go, see what God did, when he protected by having the tabernacle in it? No, God forsook it, (Ps. lxviii. 60.) sent his ark into captivity, cut off the house of Eli that presided there; and it is very probable that the city was quite destroyed, for we never read any more of it but as a monument of divine vengeance upon holy places when they harbour wicked people. Note, God's judgments upon others, who have really revolted from God, while they have kept up a profession of nearness to him, should be a warning to us not to trust in lying words. It is good to consult precedents, and make use of them; remember Lot's wife; remember Shiloh and the seven churches of Asia; and know that the ark and candlestick are moveable things, Rev. ii. 5. Matth. xxiii. 18."

[2.] It is certain that Shiloh's fate will be Jerusalem's doom, if a speedy and sincere repentance prevent it not. First, Jerusalem was now as sinful as ever Shiloh was; that is proved by the unerring testimony of God himself against them; (v. 13.) "You have done all these works, you cannot deny it;" and they continued obstinate in their sin; that is proved by the testimony of other messengers, by whom he spake unto them to return and repent, rising up early and speaking, as one in care, as one in earnest, as one who would lose no time in dealing with them; nay, who should take the fittest opportunity for speaking to them early in the morning, when, if ever, they were sober, and had their thoughts free and clear; but it was all in vain, God spake, but they did not hear it. If ever, they never minded what he called them, but they answered not; they would not come at his call. Note, What God has spoken to us greatly aggravates what we have done against him.

Secondly, Jerusalem shall shortly be as miserable as ever Shiloh was; Therefore will I do unto this house as I did to Shiloh, ruin it, and lay it waste: v. 14. Those that tread in the steps of the wickedness of those that went before them, must expect to fall by the like judgments, for all these things happen to them for examples. The temple at Jerusalem, though ever so strong built, if wickedness was found in it, would be as unable to keep its ground, and as easily conquered, as even the tabernacle in Shiloh was, when God's day of vengeance was come; "I took Shiloh from the children of Israel, and gave it to the tribe of Benjamin; and therefore you may think that I should protect it: it is the house in which you trust, and you think that it will protect you; this land is the place, this city the place, which I gave to you and your fathers, and therefore you are secure of the continuance of it, and think that nothing can turn you out of it; but the men of Shiloh thus flattered themselves, and God said, I will set my face against it, saith the Lord, have seen the real iniquity through the counterfeit and dissembled piety. Note, Though men may deceive one another with the shows of devotion, yet they cannot deceive God."

fate to you?" Doubtless they will be so, for God is uniform, and of a piece with himself in his judicial proceedings. It is a rule of justice, ut parium par sit ratio—that in a parity of cases the same judgment should proceed; "You have corrupted yourselves as your brethren the seed of Ephraim did, and are become their brethren in iniquity, and the wickedness of your doings is great, as a man might as I have cast them." The interpretation here given of the judgment, makes it a terrible one indeed; the casting of them out of their land signified God's casting them out of his sight as he would never look upon them, never look after them more. Wherever we are cast, it is well enough, if we be kept in the love of God; but if we are thrown out of his favour, our case is such, and we fall as we dwell in our own land. This threatening, that God would make this house like Shiloh, we shall meet with again, and find Jeremiah indicted for it, ch. xxxvi. 6.

16. Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me: for I will not hear thee. 17. Seest thou not what they do in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem? 18. The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough, to make cakes to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto other gods, that they may provoke me to anger. 19. Do they provoke me to anger? saith the Lord: do they not provoke themselves, to the confusion of their own faces? 20. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man, and upon beast, and upon the trees of the field, and upon the fruit of the ground; and it shallburn, and shall not be quenched.

God had showed them, in the foregoing verses, that the temple, and the service of it, of which they boasted, and in which they trusted, should not avail to prevent the judgment threatened. But there was another thing which might stand them in some stead, and which yet they had no value for, and that was, the prophet's intercession for them; his prayers would do them more good than their own pleas: now here that support is taken from them; and their case is sad indeed, who have lost their interest in the prayers of God's ministers and people. 1. God here forbids the prophet to pray for them; (v. 16.) "The decree is gone forth, their ruin is resolved on, therefore pray not thou for this people, pray not for the preventing of this judgment threatened; they have sinned unto death, and therefore pray not for their life, but for the life of their souls," I John v. 16. See here, 1. That God's prophets are for forbidding Jeremiah foretold the destruction of Judah and Jerusalem, and for their preservation, not knowing that the decree was absolute; and it is the will of God that we pray for the peace of Jerusalem. Even when we threaten sinners with damnation, we must pray for their salvation, that they may turn, and live. Jeremiah was hated, and persecuted, and reproached, by the children of this people, and yet he had need for the power for it becomes us to render good for evil. 2. That God's praying prophets have a great interest in heaven, how little soever they have on earth. When God was determined to destroy this people, he be-speaks the prophet not to pray for them, because he would not have his prayers to lie (as prophets' prayers seldom did) unanswered. God said to Moses, Let me alone, Exod. xxxxi. 10. 3. It is an ill omen to a people, when God restrains the spirits of his ministers and people from praying for them, and gives them to see their case so desperately, that they have no heart to speak a good word for them. 4. Those of God's faithful servants, and God's people, cannot expect any benefit by their prayers; you will not hear us when we speak from God to you, God will not hear us when we speak to him for you.

II. He gives him a reason for this prohibition. Praying breath is too precious a thing to be lost and thrown away upon a people hardened in sin, and marked for ruin. 1. They are resolved to persist in their rebellion against God, and will not be turned back by the prophet's preaching: for this he appeals to the prophet himself, and his own inspection and observation; (v. 17.) Seest thou not what they do openly, and publicly, without either shame or fear, in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem? 2. This is to say, though the sin was evident, and could not be denied, and that the sinners were immodest, and would not be reclaimed: they committed their wickedness even in the prophet's presence and under his eye; he saw what they did, and yet they did it, which was an affront to his office, and to him whose officer he was, and bade defiance to both.

Now observe, (1.) What the sin is, with which they are here charged—it is idolatry, v. 18. Their idolatrous respects are paid to the queen of heaven, the moon, either in an image, or in the original, or both: they worshipped it, probably, under the name of Asherah, or some other of their goddesses, being in love with the brightness in which they saw the moon walk, and thinking themselves indebted to her for her benign influence, or her malignant ones, Job xxxi. 26. The worshipping of the moon was much in use among the heathen nations, Jer. xliii. 17, 19. Some read it the frame or workmanship of heaven; the whole celestial globe with all its ornaments and powers was the object of their adoration. They worshipped the host of heaven, Acts vii. 42. The homage they should have paid to them,; they paid to the statues that beautified the front of his palace; for they worshipped the creatures instead of him that made them, the servants instead of him that commands them, and the gifts instead of him that gave them. With the queen of heaven they worshipped other gods, images of things not only in heaven above, but in the earth beneath, and in the waters under the earth; for these that forsook the true God, wander endless after false ones. To those duties of their own making they offer cakes for meat-offerings, and pour out drink-offerings, as if they had their meat and drink from them, and were obliged to make to them their acknowledgments; and see how busy they are, and how every hand is employed in the service of these idols, according as they used to be employed in their theistic services. The children were sent to gather wood, the fathers to make meat-offerings; if the oven, being of the poorer sort, that could not afford to keep servants to do it, yet they would rather do it themselves than it should be undone; the women kneaded the dough with their own hands, for perhaps though they had servants to do it, they took a pride in showing their zeal for their idols by doing it themselves. Let us be instructed even by this bad example, in the service of God; Let us honour him with our substance, as these that have our subsistence from him, and eat and drink to the glory of him from whom we have our meet.
and drink. [2] Let us not decline the hardest services, nor disdain to stop to the meanest, by which God may be honored; for none shall kindle a fire on God's altar for naught. Let us think it an honour to be employed in any work for God. [3] Let us bring up our children in the acts of devotion; let them, as they are capable, be employed in doing something toward the keeping up of religious exercises.

2. What is the direct tendency of this sin; "It is that they may provoke me to anger, they cannot design any thing else in it. But, (v. 19.) do they provoke me to anger? Is it because I am hard to be pleased, or easily provoked? Or am I to bear the blame of the resettentment? No, it is their own doing, they may think it themselves, and then God alone shall bear it." Is it against God, that they provoke him to wrath? Is he the worse for it? Does it do him any real damage? No, is it not against themselves, to the confusion of their own faces? It is malice against God, but it is impotent malice, it cannot hurt him; nay, it is foolish malice, it will hurt themselves; they show their spite against God, but they do the spite to themselves. Canst thou think any other than a people, thus desperately set upon their own ruin, should be abandoned?

2. God is resolved to proceed in his judgments against them, and will not be turned back by the prophet's prayers; (v. 20.) Thus saith the Lord God, and what he saith he will not unsay, nor can all the world gainsay; hear it therefore, and tremble; "Behold, my anger that is kindled, and my face that is turned against this place as the flood of waters was upon the old world, or the shower of fire and brimstone upon Sodom; since they will anger me, let them see what will come of it."

They shall soon find, (1.) That there is no escaping this deluge of fire, either by flying from it, or fencing against it; it shall be poured out on this place, though it be a holy place, the Lord's house. It shall reach both mire and beast, like the plagues of Egypt, and, like some of them, shall destroy the trees of the field, and the fruit of the ground, which they had designed and prepared for Baal; and of which they had made cakes to the queen of heaven. (2.) There is no distinguishing it; it shall burn, and shall not be quenched; prayers and tears shall then avail nothing; when his wrath is kindled but a little, much more when it is kindled to such a degree, there shall be no quenching of it. God's wrath is that fire unquenchable, which eternity itself will not see the period of; Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire.

21. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Put your burnt-offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh. 22. For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices: 23. But this thing commanded I them, saying, Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people; and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you. 24. But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but walked in the counsels and in the imagination of their evil heart, and went backward, and not forward. 25. Since the day that your fathers came forth out of the land of Egypt unto this day, I have even sent unto you all thy servants the prophets, daily rising up early, and sending them: 26. Yet they hearkened not unto me, nor inclined their ear, but hardened their neck: they did worse than their fathers. 27. Therefore thou shalt speak all these words unto them; but they will not hearken to thee: thou shalt also call unto them; but they will not answer thee. 28. But thou shalt say unto them, This is a nation that obeyeth not the voice of the Lord their God, nor receiveth correction: truth is perished, and is cut off from their mouth.

God, having showed the people that the temple would not protect them while they polluted it with their wickedness, here shows them that their sacrifices would not atone for them, nor be accepted, while they went on in disobedience. See with what contempt he here speaks of their ceremonial service; (v. 21.) "Put your burnt-offerings to your sacrifices, go on in them as long as you please; add one sort of sacrifice to another; turn your burnt-offerings, which were to be wholly burnt to the honour of God, into peace-offerings," (which the offerer himself had a considerable share of,) "that you may eat flesh, for that is all the good you are likely to have from your sacrifices, a good meal's meat or two; but expect not any other benefit by them while you live at this loose rate. Keep your sacrifices to yourselves, that you may be directly served up at your own table, for they are no way acceptable at God's altars." For the opening of this,

I. He shows them that obedience was the only thing he required of them, v. 22, 23. He appeals to the original contract, by which they were first formed into a people, when they were brought out of Egypt. God made them a nation of priests to himself, not that he might be regimented with their sacrifices, as the devils, whom the heathen worshipped, which are represented as eating with pleasure the fat of their sacrifices, and drinking the wine of their drink-offerings, Deut. xxxii. 38. No, Will God eat the flesh of bulls? Ps. i. 13. I speak not to your fathers concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices, nor of these at first. God made them a nation of priests to himself; not that he might be regimented with their sacrifices, as the devils, whom the heathen worshipped, which are represented as eating with pleasure the fat of their sacrifices, and drinking the wine of their drink-offerings, Deut. xxxii. 38. No, Will God eat the flesh of bulls? Ps. i. 13. I speak not to your fathers concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices, nor of these at first. The principles of the Mosaic law were given before the ceremonial institutions; and those came afterward, as trials of their obedience, and assistance to their repentance and faith. The Levitical law begins thus, If any man of you will bring an offering, he must do so and so, (Lev. i. 2.—ii. 1.) as if it were intended rather to regulate sacrifice than to require it; but that which God commanded, he be bound to him by his supreme authority, and which he insisted upon as the condition of the covenant was, Obey my voice; see Exod. xv. 26, where this was the statute and the ordinance by which God proved them, Hearken diligently to the voice of the Lord thy God. The condition of their being God's peculiar people was this, (Exod. xix. 2.) If we will. Make content with the duties of natural religion, observe positive institutions from a principle of obedience; and then, I will be your God, and ye shall be my people," the greatest honour, happiness, and satisfaction, that any of the children of men are capable of. "Let your conversation be regular, and in every thing study to comply with the will and word of God; walk within the bounds that I have set you, and in all the ways that I have commanded you, and then you may assure yourselves that it shall be well with you." The demand here is very reasonable, that we should be directed by Infinite Wisdom to that which is fit; that he that made us should command us, and that he should give us law, who gives us our being, and all the supports of it. And the promise is very encouraging; Let God’s will be your rule, and his favour shall be your felicity.

11. He shows them that disobedience was the only thing for which he had a quarrel with them. He would not reprove them for their sacrifices, for the omission of them, they had been continually before him, (Ps. 1. 8.) with them they hoped to please God, and purify their hearts and lives but there was which God had all along laid to their charge, was, breaking his commandments in the course of their conversation; while they observed them, in some instances, in the course of their devotion, v. 24, 25, &c.

1. They set up their own will in competition with the will of God. They hearkened not to God and to his law, they never heard that, it was to them as if it had never been given, or were of no force; they inclined not their ear to attend to it, much less their hearts to comply with it. But they would have their own way, would do as they chose, and not as they were bidden. Their own counsels were their guide, and not the dictates of divine wisdom; that shall be lawful and good with them, which they think so through the word of God, says quite contrary. The imaginations of their evil heart, the appetites and passions of it, shall be a law to them, and they will walk in the way of it, and in the sight of their eyes.

2. If they began well, yet they did not proceed, but soon flew off. They went backward, when they talked of making a captain, and returning to Egypt again; and would not go forward under God’s conduct. They promised fair, All that the Lord shall say unto us we will do; and if they would but have kept in that good mind, all had been well; but, instead of going on in the way of duty, they drew back into the way of sin, and were worse than ever.

3. When God sent to them by word of mouth to put them in mind of the written word, which was the business of the prophets, it was all one, still they were disobedient. God had servants of his among them in every age, since they came out of Egypt, unto this day, some or other to tell them of their faults, and put them in mind of their duty, whom he rose up early to call servants to their work; but they were as dead to the prophets as they were to God himself. Yet they thickened not, nor inclined their ear. This had been their way and manner all along; they were of the same stubborn, refractory disposition with those that went before them; it had all along been the genius of the nation, and an evil genius it was, that continually haunt them till it ruined them at last.

4. By their practice and character were still the same; they are worse, and not better, than their fathers.

(1.) Jeremiah can himself witness against them, that they were disobedient, or he shall soon find it so; (v. 27.) Thou shalt speak all these words to them, shalt particularly charge them with disobedience and obstinacy; but even that will not work upon them, they will not hearken to thee, nor heed thee; thou shalt go, and call to them with all the plainness and earnestness imaginable, but they will not answer thee, they will either give thee no answer at all, or not an obedient answer; they will not come at thy call.

(2.) He must therefore own that they deserved the character of a disobedient people that were ripe for ruin, and must go to them, and tell them so to their faces; (v. 28.) Say unto them, This is a nation that obeys not the voice of the Lord their God; they are notorious for their obstinacy; they sacrifice to the Lord as their God, but they will not be ruled by him as their God, they will not receive either the instruction of his word or the correction of his rod, they will not be reclaimed or reformed by either; truth is perished among them, they cannot receive it, they will not submit to it, nor be governed by it; they will not speak truth, there is no believing a word they say, for it is cut off from their mouth, and lying comes in the room of it; they are false both to God and man.

29. Cut off thy hair, O Jerusalem, and cast it away, and take up a lamentation on high places; for the Lord hath rejected and forsaken the generation of his wrath.

30. For the children of Judah have done evil in my sight, saith the Lord: they have set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to pollute it. And they have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire; which I commanded them not, neither came it into my heart. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be called Tophet, nor The valley of the son of Hinnom, but, The valley of slaughter: for they shall bury in Tophet till there be no place. And the carcases of this people shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth; and none shall fray them away. Then will I cause to cease from the cities of Judah, and from the streets of Jerusalem, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride; for the land shall be desolate.

Here is,

I. A loud call to weeping and mourning. Jerusalem, that had been a joyous city, the joy of the whole earth, must now take up a lamentation on high places. (29.) The high places where they had observed their idols; there must they now bemoan their misery. In token both of sorrow and slavery, Jerusalem must now cut off her hair, and cast it away; the word is peculiar to the hair of the Nazarites, which was the badge and token of their dedication to God, and it is called their crown. Jerusalem had been a city which was a Nazarite to God, but must now cut off her hair, must be profaned, degraded, and separated from God, as she had been separated to him. It is time for those that have lost their holiness, to lay aside their joy.

II. Just cause given for this great lamentation.

1. The sin of Jerusalem appears here very heinous, nowhere worse, or more exceedingly sinful.

The children of Judah (God’s professing people, that came forth out of the waters of Judah, Isa. lxviii. 1.) have done evil in my sight, under my eye, in my presence; they have affronted me to my face, which very much aggravates the affront; or, They have done that which they know to be evil in my sight, and in the highest degree offensive to me. Idoltry was the sin which was, above all other sins, God’s sight. Now here are two things charged upon them in their idolatry, which were very provoking.

(1.) That they were very impudent in it toward God, and set him at defiance; (v. 30.) They have
This valley of Tophet was a place where the citizens of Jerusalem walked to take the air; but it shall now be spoiled for that use, for it shall be so full of graves, that there shall be no walking there, because of the danger of contracting a ceremonial pollution by the touch of a grave. There it was that they sacrificed some of their children, and dedicated others to Moloch, and there they shall fall as victors to death. It had been the burying-place, or burning-place, of the dead bodies of the besiegers, when the Assyrian army was routed by an angel; and for this it was ordained of old, Isa. xxx. 33. But they having forgotten this mercy, and made it the place of their sin, God will now turn it into a burying-place for the besieged. In allusion to this valley, he lieth in the valley of the sons of Hinnom, for there were buried both the invading Assyrians, and the revolting Jews; so hell is a receptacle after death both for infidels and hypocrites, the open enemies of God's church, and its treacherous friends; it is the congregation of the dead; it is prepared for the generation of God's wrath. But so great shall that slaughter be, that even the spacious valley shall not be able to contain the slain; and at length there shall not be enough left alive to bury the dead, so that the carcasses of the people shall be meat for the birds and beasts of prey, that shall feed upon them like carrion, and none shall have the concern or courage to frighten them away, as Rizpah did from the dead bodies of Saul's sons, 2 Sam. xxi. 16. This was according to the threatening of the law and a branch of the curse; (Deut. xxvii. 26.) Thy carcasse shall be meat to the fowls and beasts, and no man shall fray them away. Thus do the law and the prophets agree, and the execution with both. The decent burying of the dead is a piece of humanity, in remembrance of what the dead body has been—the tabernacle of a reasonable soul. Nay, it is a piece of divinity, in expectation of what the dead body shall be at the resurrection: the want of it has sometimes been an instance of the rage of men against God's witnesses, Rev. xii. 9. Here it is threatened as an instance of the wrath of God against his enemies, and is an intimation that evil pursues sinners even after death.

(2.) Joy shall depart from them; 34. Then shall I cause to cease the voice of mirth, God shall cause by his prophets, and by lesser judgments, to weeping and mourning; but they walked contrary to him, and would hear of nothing but joy and gladness, Isa. xxvi. 12, 13. And what came of it? Now God called to lamentation, (v. 29.) and he made his call effectual, leaving them neither cause nor heart for joy and gladness. They that will not weep, shall weep; they that will not by the grace of God be cured of their vain mirth, shall by the justice of God be deprived of all mirth; for when God judges he will overcome. It is threatened here, that there shall be nothing to rejoice in; there shall be none of the joy of weddings; no mirth, for there shall be no marriages; the comforts of life shall be abandoned, and all care to keep up mankind upon earth cast off; there shall be none of the voice of the godfathers and of the vain mirth, shall by the justice of God be deprived of all mirth; for when God judges he will overcome. It is threatened here, that there shall be nothing to rejoice in; there shall be none of the joy of weddings; no mirth, for there shall be no marriages; the comforts of life shall be abandoned, and all care to keep up mankind upon earth cast off; there shall be none of the voice of the godfathers and of the vain mirth, shall by the justice of God be deprived of all mirth; for when God judges he will overcome. It is threatened here, that there shall be nothing to rejoice in; there shall be none of the joy of weddings; no mirth, for there shall be no marriages; the comforts of life shall be abandoned, and all care to keep up mankind upon earth cast off; there shall be none of the voice of the godfathers and of the vain mirth, shall by the justice of God be deprived of all mirth;
CHAPTER VIII.

The prophet proceeds, in this chapter, both to magnify and to justify the destruction that God was bringing upon his people, the most ignomious way, and how righteous. 1. He represents the judgments coming so very terrible, that death should appear so as most to be dreaded, and yet should be desired, v. 1, 3. II. He describes the punishment of the idolatrous priests, and of the princes, of which this is a figure, v. 4-12. III. He describes the great confusion and consternation that the whole land should be in, upon the alarm of it, v. 13-17. IV. The prophet is himself deeply affrighted with it, and lays it very much to heart, v. 18...22.

1. At that time, saith the Lord, they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the bones of his princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets, and the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves: 2. And they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the host of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped: they shall not be gathered, nor be buried; they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth. 3. And death shall be chosen rather than life by all the residue of them that remain of this evil family, which remain in all the places whither I have driven them, saith the Lord of hosts.

These verses might fitly have been joined to the close of the foregoing chapter, as giving a further description of the dreadful desolation which the army of the Chaldeans should make in the land. It shall strangely alter the property of death itself, and for the worse too.

1. Death shall not now be, as it always used to be—the repose of the dead. When Job makes his court to the grave, it is in hope of this, that there he shall rest with kings and counsellors of the earth; but now the ashes of the dead, even kings, and priests, and princes, shall be for dung, and their bones scattered at the grave's mouth. Ps. cxlix. 7. It was threatened in the close of the former chapter, that the slain should be unburied; that might be through neglect, and was not so strange; but here we find the graves of those that were buried, industriously and maliciously opened by the victorious enemy; who, either for covetousness, hoping to find treasure in the graves, or for strife to the nation, and in a rage against it, brought out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the princes. The dignity of their sepulchres could not secure them, nay, did the more expose them to rifling; but it was base and barbarous thus to trample upon royal dust. We will hope that the bones of good Josiah were not disturbed, because he piously protected the bones of the holy men of the kingdom, 2 Kings xxiv. 18. The bones of the priests and prophets too were dug up and thrown about. Some think the false prophets, and the idol-princes, God putting this mark of ignominy upon them: but if they were God's prophets and his priests, it is what the Psalmist complains of, as the fruit of the outrage of the heathen, Ps. cxlix. 1, 2. Nay, those of the peevish Chaldeans that could not reach to violate the sepulchres of princes and priests, would rather play at small game than sit out, and therefore pulled the bones of the ordinary inhabitants of Jerusalem out of their graves. The barbarous nations were sometimes guilty of these absurd and inhuman triumphs over those they had conquered, and God permitted it here, for a mark of his displeasure against the generation of his wrath, and for terror to those that survived. The bones being digged out of the graves, were spread abroad upon the face of the earth in contempt, and made continual reproach to all posterity. They spread them to be dried, that they might carry them about in triumph, or might make fuel of them, or make some superstitions use of them. They shall be spread before the sun; for they shall not be ashamed openly to avow the fact at noon-day: and before the moon and stars, even all the host of heaven, whom they have made idols of, 2 Kings xxiii. From the mention of the sun, moon, and stars, which should be the unconcerned spectators of this tragedy, the prophet takes occasion to show how they had idolized them, and paid those respects to them, which they should have paid to God only; that it might be observed how little they got by worshipping the creature, for the creatures they worshipped when they were in distress, saw it, but regarded not, and therefore gave God no more pleasure to see those abused in being worshiped, by whom they had been abused in being defiled. See how their respects to their idols are enumerated, to show how we ought to behave toward our God. (1.) They loved them; as amiable beings and bountiful benefactors they esteemed them and delighted in them, and therefore did all that follows. (2.) They served them, did all they could in honour and service them, and thought nothing too much; they conformed to all the laws of their superstition, without disputing. (3.) They walked after them, strove to imitate and resemble them, according to the characters and accounts of them they had received, which gave rise and countenance to much of the abominable wickedness of the heathen. (4.) They sought them, consulted them as oracles, appealed to them as judges, impressed their favour, and prayed to them as their benefactors. (5.) They worshipped them, gave them divine honour, as having a sovereign dominion over them. Before these lights of heaven, whom they had courted, shall their dead bodies be cast, and left to putrefy, and to be as dung upon the face of the earth; and the sun's shining upon them will but make them the more noisome and offensive. The sun is more to be feared than the true God only, it will stand us in no stead on the other side death and the grave, not for the body, much less for the soul.

2. Death shall now be what it never used to be—the choice of the living: not because there appears in it anything delightful; on the contrary, death never appeared in more horrid, frightful shapes than now. The body is not taken up by the dead, but left to be the prey of the dead; either a comfortable death or a human burial; and yet every thing in this world shall become so irksome, and all the prospects so black and dismal, that death shall be chosen rather than life: (v. 3.) not in a believing hope of happiness in the other life, but in an utter despair of any case in this life. The nation is now reduced to a family, so small is the residue of those that remain, and so many of them evil family, still as bad as ever, their hearts unhumbled, and their lusts unmortified: these remain alive (and that is all) in the many places whither they were driven by the judgments of God; some prisoners in the country of their enemies, others beggars in their neighbours' country, and thieves fugitives and robbers in every country. And though those that died, died very miserably, yet these that survived, and were thus driven out, should live yet more miserably; so that
4. Moreover, thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord; Shall they fall, and not arise! shall he turn away, and not return? 5. Why then is this people of Jerusalem slidden back by a perpetual backsliding? They hold fast deceit, they refuse to return. 6. I hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright: no man repented him of his wickedness, saying, What have I done? every one turned to his course, as the horse rusheth into the battle. 7. Yea, the stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times; and the turtle, and the crane, and the swallow, observe the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of the Lord. 8. How do ye say, We are wise, and the law of the Lord is with us? Lo, certainly in vain made he it; the pen of the scribes is in vain. 9. The wise men are ashamed, they are dismayed and taken; lo, they have rejected the word of the Lord; and what wisdom is in them? 10. Therefore will I give their wives unto others, and their fields to them that shall inherit them: for every one, from the least even unto the greatest, is given to covetousness; from the prophet even unto the priest, every one dealeth falsely. 11. For they have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace. 12. Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush: therefore shall they fall among them that fall: in the time of their visitation they shall be cast down, saith the Lord.

The prophet here is instructed to set before this people the folly of their impertinence, which was it that brought this ruin upon them. They are here represented as the most stupid, because as people in the world, that would not be made wise by all the methods that Infinite Wisdom took to bring them to themselves and their right mind, and so to prevent the ruin that was coming upon them.

1. They would not attend to the dictates of reason; they would not act in the affairs of their souls with the same common prudence with which they acted in other things. Such is the least concern some of them would show themselves men; and religion would soon rule them, if right reason might. Observe it here; Come, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; (v. 4, 5.) Shall men fall, and not arise? If men happen to fall to the ground, to fall into the dirt, will they not get up again as fast as they can? They are not such fools as to lie still when they are down. Shall a man turn aside out of the right way? Yes, the most careful traveller may miss his way; but then, as soon as he is aware of it, will he not return? Yes, certainly he will, with all speed, and will thank him that showed him his mistake. Thus men do in other things; why then is this people of Jerusalem slidden back by a perpetual backsliding? Why do not they, when they are fallen into sin, hasten to get up again by repentance? Why do not they, when they see they have missed their way, correct their error, and reform? So that, if this will go on in a way that he knows will never bring him any thing to any end: why then is this people slidden back by a perpetual backsliding? See the nature of it—it is a backsliding, it is going back from the right way; not only into a by-path, but into a contrary path; back from the way that leads to life: to that which leads to utter destruction. And this backsliding, if inability grants itself not to interpose to prevent it, will be a perpetual backsliding, as they, by their want of wit, doers endlessly, but proceeds endwise toward ruin.

The same subtility of the tempter that brings men to sin, holds them fast in it, and they contribute to their own captivity, they hold fast deceit. Sin is a great cheat, and they hold it fast; they love it dearly, and resolve to stick to it, and battle all the while. God takes part between them and their sins. They would not repent them; but God is their judge, and they are dec蠨s, and so are all their hopes of impunity; yet they hold fast these, and will not be undeceived, and therefore they refuse to return. Note, There is some deceit or other which those hold fast that go on wilfully in sinful ways; some lie in their right hand, by which they keep hold of their sins.

1. They would not attend to the dictates of conscience, which is the reason reflecting upon ourselves and our own actions, v. 6. Observe, 1. What expectations there were from them, that they would thineh themselves; I hearkened and heard. The prophet listened to see what effect his preaching had upon them; God himself listened, as one that desires not the death of sinners, that would have been glad to hear any thing that promised repentance, that would certainly have heard it, if there had been any thing said of that tendency, and would soon have answered it with comfort, as he did David when he said, I will confess, Ps. xxxii. 5. God looks upon men, when they have done amiss, (Job xxxix. 27.) to see what they will do next; he hearkens and heaves. 2. How these expectations were disappointed; They spake not aright, as I thought they would have done. They did not only not do right, but did only as right would, could not get a good word from them, nothing on which to ground my favour to them, or hopes concerning them. There was none of them that spake aright, none that repented him of his wickedness. These that have sinned, then, and then only, speak aright, when they speak of repenting; and it is sad when those that have made so much work for repentance, do not say a word of repentance. Not only did God not find any repenting of the national wickedness, which might have helped to empty the measure of public guilt, but none repented of that particular wickedness which he knew himself guilty of. (1.) They did not so much as take the first step toward repentance; they did not so much as say, What have I done? There was no motion towards it, not the least sign of it. Sin and the sinner begins in a serious and impartial inquiry into ourselves, what we have done, arising from a conviction that we have done amiss. (2.) They were so far from repenting of their sins, that they went on resolutely in their sins; Every one turned to his course, his wicked course, that course of sin which he had chosen and accustomed himself to, as the horse rushes into the battle, eager upon action, and scorning to be curbed. How the horse rushes into the battle, is elegantly described, Job xxxix. 21, &c.
He mocks at fear, and is not affrighted. Thus the daring sinner laughs at the threatenings of the word as bugbears, and runs violently upon the instruments of death and slaughter, and nothing will be restrained from him.

III. They would not attend to the dictates of their reason. To understand the voice of God in them, (v. 7). 1. It is an instance of their sottishness, that, though they are God’s people, and therefore should readily understand his mind, upon every intimation of it, yet they know not the judgment of the Lord, they apprehend not the meaning either of a mercy or of an affliction, not how to accommodate themselves to either, or to answer God’s intention in either. They do not see that it is the means of grace that God affords them when he sends them his prophets, nor how to make use of the rebukes they are under when his voice cries in the city. They discern not the signs of the times, (Matth. xvi. 3.) nor are aware how God is dealing with them. They know not that way of duty, which God had prescribed them, though it be written both in their hearts and in their books. 2. It is an aggravation of their folly, that there is so much sagacity in the inferior creatures. The stork in the heaven knows her appointed times of coming and continuing; so do other season-birds, the turtle, the crane, and the swallow; these by a natural instinct change their quarters, as the temper of the air alters; they come when the spring comes, and are gone, we know not whither, when they please, they are wise, because the climates, as some birds come with winter, and are gone when that is over.

IV. They would not attend to the dictates of the written word. They say, We are wise; but how can they say so? With what face can they pretend to any thing of wisdom, when they do not understand themselves so well as the brute creatures? Why, truly, they say, they are wise, because the law of the Lord is with them, the book of the law and the interpreters of it; and their neighbours, for the same reason, conclude they are wise; Deut. iv. 6. But their pretensions are groundless for all this; Lo, certainly in vain made he it; surely never any people had Bibles to so little purpose as they have. They might as well have been without the law, unless they made a better use of it. God himself indeed made it able to make men wise to salvation, but as to them it is made so in vain, for they are never the wiser for it; The pen of the scribes, of those that first wrote the law, and of these that now write expositions of it, are in vain. Both the favour of their God, and the labour of their scribes, are lost upon them; they receive the grace of God therein in vain. Note, There are many that enjoy abundance of the means of grace, that have great plenty of Bibles and ministers, but they have them in vain; they do not answer the end of their having them. But it might be said, They have some wise men among them, to whom the law and the pen of the scribes are not in vain. To this it is answered, (v. 9.) The wise men are ashamed, they have reason to be so, that they have not made a better use of their wisdom, and lived more up to it. They are confounded and taken; all their wisdom has not served to keep them from those courses that tend to their ruin. They are taken in the same snare that others of their neighbours, who have not pretend- ed to so much wisdom, are taken in, and filled with the same confusion. Those that have more knowledge than others, and yet do no better than others for their own souls, have reason to be ashamed. They talk of their wisdom, but, Lo, they have rejected the word of the Lord; they would not be governed by it, would not follow its direction, would not do what they knew; and then what wisdevoured the land, and all that is in it; the city, and those that dwell therein. 17. For, behold, I will send serpents, cockatielles, among you, which will not be charmed, and they shall bite you, saith the Lord. 18. When I would comfort myself against sorrow, my heart is faint in me. 19. Behold, the voice of the cry of the daughter of my people, because of them that dwell in a far country. Is not the Lord in Zion? is not her king in her? why have they provoked me to anger with their graven images, and with strange vanities? 20. The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved. 21. For the hurt of the daughter of my people am I hurt; I am black; astonishment hath taken hold on me. 22. Is there no balm in Gilead? is there no physician there? why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?

In these verses, we have,

1. God threatening the destruction of a sinful people. He has borne long with them, but they are still more and more provoking, and therefore now their ruin is resolved on; I will surely consume them; (v. 13.) consuming I will consume them, not only surely, but utterly, consume them; will follow them with one judgment after another, till they are quite consumed; it is a consumption determined, Is. x. 23.

2. They shall be quite stripped of all their comforts; (v. 13.) There shall be no grapes on the vine. Some understand it as intimating their sin; God came looking for grapes from this vineyard, seeking fruit upon this fig-tree, but he found none, (as Isa. v. 2. Luke xiii. 6.) nay, they had not so much as leaves, Matth. xxix. 19. But it is rather to be understood of God's judgments upon them; and may be meant literally; The enemy shall seize the fruits of the earth, shall pluck the grapes and figs for themselves, and beat down the very leaves with them; or, rather, figuratively; They shall be deprived of all their comforts, and shall have nothing left them wherewith to make glad their hearts. It is expounded in the last clause, The things that I have given them shall pass away from them.

Note, God's gifts are upon condition, and revocable upon non-performance of the condition. Mercies abused are forfeited, and it is just with God to take the forfeiture.

3. They shall be set upon by all manner of grievances, and surrounded with calamities; (v. 17.) I will send serpents among you, the Chaldean army, fiery serpents, flying serpents, cockatielles; these shall be an addition to every grief, give them wounds that shall be mortal; and they shall not be charmed, as some serpents used to be, with music. These are serpents of another nature, that are not so wrought upon; or they are as the deaf adder, that stops her ear, and will not hear the voice of the charmer. The enemies are so intent upon making slaughter, that it will be to no purpose to accost them gently, or offer any thing to pacify them or mollify them, or to bring them to a better temper. No peace with God, therefore none with them.

If. The people sinking into despair under the pressure of those calamities. They that were void of fear, (when the trouble was at a distance,) and set it at defiance, are void of hope now that it breaks in upon them, and have no heart, either to make head against it, or to bear up under it, v. 14. They cannot think themselves safe in the open villages; Why do we sit still here? Let us assemble and go in battle into the defended cities. Thought they could expect no other than to be surely cut off there, yet not so soon as in the country, and therefore, "Let us go, and be silent there; let us attempt nothing, nor so much as make a complaint; for to what purpose?" It is not a submissive, but a sullen, silence, that they here condemn themselves to. Those that are most jovial in their prosperity, commonly despise most, and are most melancholy, in trouble.

Now observe what it is that sinks them.

1. They are sensible that God is angry with them; The Lord our God has put us to silence, has struck us with astonishment, and given us water of gall to drink, which is both bitter and stupefying, or intoxicating; (Ps. ix. 3.) 4 Thou hast made us to drink the wine of astonishment. We had better sit still than rise up and fall; better say nothing than say nothing to the purpose. To what purpose is it to contend with our fate, when God himself is become our Enemy, and fights against us? Because we have sinned against the Lord, therefore we are brought to this plague. This may be taken as the language, (1.) Of their indignation. They seem to quarrel with God, as if he had dealt hardly with them, in punishings; do not give them leave to speak for themselves, and then telling them, that it was because they had sinned against him. Thus men's foolishness perverts their way, and then their hearts fret against the Lord. Or, rather, (2.) Of their convictions. At length they begin to see the hand of God lifted up against them, and stretched out in the calamities under which they are now involved, thing which they provoked him to contend with them. Note, Sooner or later, God will bring the most obstinate to acknowledge both his providence and his justice, in all the troubles they are brought into; to see and say, both that it is his hand, and that he is righteous.

2. They are sensible that the enemy is likely to be too hard for them, v. 16. They are soon apprehensive that it is to no purpose to make head against such a mighty force; they and their people are quite dispirited; and when the courage of a nation is gone, their numbers will stand them in little stead.

The marting of the horses was heard from Dan, the report of the formidable strength of their cavalry was soon carried all the nation over, and everybody trembled at the sound of the neighing of his steeds; for they are come, and there is no opposing them; they have devoured the land, and all that is in the city; both town and country are laid waste before them, not only the wealth, but the inhabitants of both, those that dwell therein.

Note, When God appears against us, every thing else that is against us appears very formidable; whereas if he be for us, every thing appears very despicable.

3. They are disappointed in their expectations of deliverance out of their troubles, as they had been surprised when their trouble came upon them: and this double disappointment very much aggravaed their calamity. (1.) The trouble came when they little expected it; (v. 15.) We looked for peace, the continuance of our peace, but no good came, no good news from Dan; they were looking for all their health and prosperity to our nation, but behold trouble, the alarms of war; for, as it follows, (v. 16.) the noise of the enemies' horses was heard from Dan. Their false prophets had cried, Peace, peace, to them, which made it the more terrible, when the scene of war opened on a sudden. This complaint will occur again, ch. xiv. 19. (2.) The deliverance did not come, when they had long expected it; (v. 20.) The harvest is past, the summer incensed; there is a great deal of time gone. Harvest and summer are parts of the year, and when they are gone, the year draws toward a conclusion; so the meaning is,
"One year passes after another, one campaign after another, and yet our affairs are in as bad a posture
as ever they were; no relief comes, nor is any thing done to harden us; We are not saved." Nay, there is a great deal of opportunity lost, the season of action is over and slid, the summer and harvest are gone, and a cold and melancholy winter succeeds.

Note, The salvation of God's church and people often goes on very slowly, and God keeps his people long in the expectation of it, for wise and holy ends. They serve their turn in their own way, and in their own time; that is, it is done as it may be, bar a bar in their own door, and are not saved, because they are not ready for salvation.

4. They are deceived in those things which were their confidence, and which they thought would have secured their peace to them; (v. 19.) The daughter of my people cries, cries aloud, because of them that dwell in a far country, because of the foreign enemy that invades that, comes from a far country to take possession of ours; this occasions the cry; and what is the cry? It is this; Is not the Lord in Zion? Is not her king in her? These were the two things that they had all along buoyed up themselves with, and depended upon. (1.) That they had among them the temple of God, and the tokens of his special presence with them; the community of God with them, as to his favor and his help, and his very presence among them. The Sa-lander then need we fear? And they held by this when the trouble was breaking in upon them;
"Surely we shall do well enough, for have we not God among us?" But when it grew to an extremity, it was an aggravation of their misery that they had thus flattered themselves. (2.) That they had the throne of the house of David; as they had a temple,
so they had a 'saw the Lord in Zion?' What danger then need we fear? and they held by this
when the trouble was breaking in upon them;
"Surely we shall do well enough, for have we not God among us?" But when it grew to an extremity,
it was an aggravation of their misery that they had
thus flattered themselves. (3.) That they had the throne of the house of David; as they had a temple,
so they had a 'saw the Lord in Zion?' What danger then need we fear? and they held by this
when the trouble was breaking in upon them;
"Surely we shall do well enough, for have we not God among us?" But when it grew to an extremity,
it was an aggravation of their misery that they had
thus flattered themselves. (4.) That they had the throne of the house of David; as they had a temple,
so they had a 'saw the Lord in Zion?' What

when the trouble was breaking in upon them;

God among us?" But when it grew to an extremity,
it was an aggravation of their misery that they had
thus flattered themselves.

5. It was a misfortune to the great king, and to his people, to be thus disappointed of their hopes; they had looked for a speedy deliverance, and were emthusiastic for it. Is not Zion's king in her? Will not Israel's kingdom be established in her? They had looked forward to the Messiah, and the kingdom of Israel, as that which would be very glorious.

2. How small his hopes were; (v. 22.) "Is there no balm in Gilead? No medicine proper for a sick and dying kingdom? Is there no physician there?
No skilful, faithful hand to apply the medicine?
What a poor state of the kingdom and of the people! The desolations are irreparable, and the disease is presently come to such a height, that there is no checking it. Or, this verse may be understood as laying the blame on the part of the people, for this was the case, and the case was the result of their own doings; and the question must be answered affirmatively; Is there no balm in Gil-lead? No physician there? Yes, certainly there is;
God is able to help and heal them, there is a sufficiency in him to redress all their grievances.

people, to be thus disappointed of their hopes; they
had looked for a speedy deliverance, and were em-
thusiastic for it. Is not Zion's king in her? Will not Israel's kingdom be established in her? They had looked forward to the Messiah, and the kingdom of Israel, as that which would be very glorious.
Oh that my head were waters, and my eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people! 2. Oh that I had in the wilderness a lodging-place of wayfaring men, that I might leave my people, and go from them! for they be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men. 3. And they bend their tongue like their bow for lies; but they are not valiant for the truth upon the earth; for they proceed from evil to evil, and they know not me, saith the Lord. 4. Take ye heed every one of his neighbour, and trust ye not in any brother: for every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbour will walk with slanderers. 5. And they will deceive every one his neighbour, and will not speak the truth: they have taught their tongue to speak lies, and weary themselves to commit iniquity. 6. Thy habitation is in the midst of deceit; through deceit they refuse to know me, saith the Lord. 7. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will melt them, and try them; for how shall I do for the daughter of my people? 8. Their tongue is as an arrow shot out; it speaketh deceit: one speaketh peaceably to his neighbour with his mouth, but in heart he laveth his wait. 9. Shall I not visit them for these things? saith the Lord: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this? 10. For the mountains will I take up a weeping and wailing, and for the habitations of the wilderness a lamentation, because they are burnt up, so that none can pass through them; neither can men hear the voice of the cattle: both the fowl of the heavens and the beast are fled; they are gone. 11. And I will make Jerusalem heaps, and a den of dragons; and I will make the cities of Judah desolate, without an inhabitant. The prophet, being commissioned both to foretell the destruction coming upon Judah and Jerusalem, and to point out the sin for which that destruction was brought upon them, here, as elsewhere, speaks of both very feelingly: what he said of both came from the heart, and therefore one would have thought it should have reached to the heart. 1. He abandons himself to sorrow, in consideration of the calamitous condition of his people, which he sadly lamented, as one that preferred Jerusalem before his chief joy, and her grievances I eare his chief sorrows. 1. He laments the slaughter of the persons; the bloodshed, and the lives lost; (v. 1.) "O that my head were waters, quite melted and dissolved with grief, that so mine eyes might be fountains of tears, weeping abundance, continually, and without intermission, still sending forth fresh floods of tears, as there still occur fresh occasions for them!" The same word in Hebrew signifies both the eye and a fountain, as if in this land of sorrows our eyes were designed rather for weeping than seeing. Jeremiah was much more in sorrow for what might happen, that he might affect a stupid people, and cause them to a due sense of the hand of God gone out against them. Note, It becomes us, while we are here in this vale of tears, to conform to the temper of the climate, and to sow in tears. Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be conforited hereafter; but let them expect that while they are here, the clouds will still rest upon them, as long as they shall have occasion to feel that the great fountain of sin, it is fit that our eyes should be fountains of tears. But Jeremiah's grief here is upon the public account: he would weep day and night, not so much for the death of his own near relations, but for the slain of the daughter of his people, the multitudes of his countrymen that fell by the sword of war. Note, When we hear of the destruction of his countrymen, and see the desolation of the wilderness, we ought to be much affected with it, and not to make a light matter of it; yea, though they be not of the daughter of our people, for, whatever people they are of, they are of the same human nature with us; and there are so many precious lives lost, as dear to them as ours to us, and so many precious souls gone into eternity. 2. He laments the desolations of the country. This he brings in, v. 10. (for impassioned mourners are not often very methodical in their discourses.) "Not for the towns and cities merely, but for the mountains, will I take up a weeping and wailing;" not barren mountains, but the fruitful hills with which Judæa abounded; and for the habitations of the wilderness, or, rather, the pastures of the fain, that used to be clothed with flocks, or covered over with corn; and a goodly sight it was; but now they are burnt up by the Chaldean army, which, according to the custom of war, destroyed the forage, and carried off all the cattle; so that no one dares to pass through them, for fear of meeting with some parties of the enemy; no one cares to pass through them, every thing looks so melancholy and frightful: none has any business to pass through them, for they hear now no voice of the herdsman, or the bleating of the sheep and the lowing of the oxen, that grateful music to the owners; nay, both the fowl of the heavens, and the beasts, are fled, either frightened away by the rude noises and terrible fires which the enemies make, or forced away because there is no subsistence for them. Note, God has many ways of turning a fruitful land into barrenness, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein: and the havoc war makes in a country cannot but be for a lamentation to all tender spirits, for it is a tragedy which destroys the stage it is acted on. 11. He abandons himself to solitude, in consideration of the scandalous character and conduct of his people. Though he dwells in Judah where God is known, in Salem where His tabernacle is, yet he is ready to cry out for vengeance, and to seek! Ps. cxx. 5. While all his neighbours are fleeing to the defenced cities, and Jerusalem especially, in dread of the enemies' rage, (ch. iv. 6.) he is contriving to retire into some desert, in desolation of his people's sin; (v. 2.) O that I had in the wilderness a lodging-place of wayfaring men, such a lonely cottage to dwell in as they have in the deserts of Arabia, which are uninhabited, for true fathers to repose themselves in, that I may leave my people, and go from them! Not only because if the ill usages they gave him, he would rather venture himself among the wild beasts of the desert than among such treacherous, barbarous people; but principally, because his righteous soul was vexed from his youth, as Lot's was in Sodom, with the wickedness of their conversation, 2 Pet. ii. 7, 8. This does not bespeak any intention or resolution that he had thus to retire. God had cut him out work among them, which he must not quit for his own ease; we must not go out of the world, had as it is, before our time: if he could not reform them, he could bear a testimony against them; if he could not convince the many, yet he might to the honour of God as they did, and destroying themselves. Time was, when the place which God had chosen to put his name there, was the desire and delight of good men. David, in a wilderness, longed to be again in the courts of God's house; but now Jeremiah, in the courts of God's house, (for there he was when he said this,) wishes himself in a wilder- ness, so would he have himself made miserable, that have made God's people and ministers weary of them, and willing to get from them.

Now, to justify his willingness to leave them, he shows,

1. What he himself had observed among them. He would not think of leaving them because they were poor, and in distress, but because they were wicked.

(1.) They were filthy; they be all adulterers; that is, the generality of them are, ch. v. 8. They all either practised this sin, or connived at those that did. Lewdness and uncleanness constituted that sin of Sodom, at which righteous Lot was vexed in soul, and it is a sin that renders men loathsome in the eyes of God and all good men; it makes men an abomination.

(2.) They were false. This is the sin that is most enlarged upon here; they that had been unfaithful to their God, were so to one another, and it was a part of their punishment as well as their sin, for even those that love to cheat, yet hate to be cheated. [1.] Go into their solemn meetings, either for the exercises of religion, for the administration of justice, or for commerce, either to church, to court, or to the exchange; and they are an assembly of treacherous men, they are so by consent, they strengthen one another's hands in doing any thing that is pernicious. There they will cheat de- liberately and industriously, with design, with a malicious design; for they bend their tongue, like their bow, for lies, with a great deal of craft; their tongues are fitted for lying, as a bow is for shooting; anything they use for that purpose. Their tongue turns as naturally to a lie as the bow to the string. But they are not valiant for the truth upon the earth. Their tongues are like a bow strong, with which they might do good service, if they would use the art and resolution which they are so much masters of, in the cause of truth; but they will not do so. They appear not in the council of the land, nor stand with us for the exercise of our justice, to the benefit of the public, or for the support and defence of the public laws; what chance have they to the prophets; but even those that could not deny them to be truths, were content to see them run down. In the administration of justice, they have not courage to stand by an honest cause that has truth on its side, if greatness and power be on the other side. Those that will be faithful to the truth must be valiant for it, and not be daunted by the opposition given to it, nor fear the face of man.

They are not valiant for truth in the land, the land which has truth for the glory of it. Truth is fallen in the land, and they dare not lend a hand to help it up, Is. lx. 14, 15. We must answer, another day, not only for our familiarity in opposing truth, but for our cowardice in defending it. [2.] Go into their families, and you will find they will cheat their own brethren, (every brother will utterly supplant,) they will trip up one another's heels if they can, for they lie at the catch, to seek all advantages against those they hope to make a hand of. Jacob had his brother Joseph's buts, which he made himself into a character, without guile. So very false are they that you cannot trust in a brother, but must stand as much upon your guard, as if you were dealing with a stranger, with a Canaanite that has balances of deceit in his hand. Things are come to an ill pass, indeed, when a man cannot put confidence in his own brethren.

[3.] Go into company, and observe both their commerce and their conversation, and you will find there is nothing of sincerity or common honesty among them; Nce hoshes ab hoshte tutes—The host and the guest are in danger from each other. The best advice a wise man can give you, is, to take heed every one of his neighbour, nay, of his friend, (so some read it,) of him whom he has been bred with, and has been made himself miscen- trable, that have made God's people and ministers weary of them, and willing to get from them.

That which aggravates the sin of this false and lying generation, is, First, That they are ingenious to sin; They have taught their tongue to speak lies; implying, that, through the reluctances of natural conscience, they found it difficult to bring them- selves to it. Their tongue would have spoken truth, but they taught it to speak lies, and by degrees have made themselves masters of the art of lying, and have got such a habit of it, that use has made it a second nature to them. They learned it when they were young, (for the wicked are estranged from the womb, speaking lies, Ps. lviii. 3,) and now they are grown dexterous at it. Second, That they are industrious to sin; They weary themselves to com- mit iniquity, they put a force upon their consciences, to bring themselves to it; they tire out their convic- tions, that they may be enabled to do it. They take a great deal of pains, till they have even spent themselves in bringing about their malicious designs. They are wearied with their sinful pursuits, and yet not weary of them. The service of sin is a perfect drudgery; men run themselves out of breath in it, and put themselves to a great deal of toil, to damn their own souls. Thirdly, That they grew wise in sin; They have learned iniquity; (v. 9.) and then, they are not affirmative to evil, from one sin to another, from one degree of sin to another. They began with lesser sins; (Num. reipente fit turpisissimus—No one reaches the height of vice at once;) they began with equivocating and bantering, but at last came to downright lying. And they are now proceeding to greater sins yet, for they know not me, saith the Lord. Where men have no knowledge of God, or no consideration of what they have known of him, what good can be expected from them? Man's ignorance of God is the cause of all their ill conduct one towards another.

2. The prophet states what God had informed him of their wickedness, and what he had determined against them.

(1.) God had marked their sin. He could tell the plot, and he speaks of it with compassion, what sort of people they were, that he had to deal with.

I knew thy works, and where thou dwellest, Rev. ii. 13. So here, (v. 6.) "Thy habitation is in the midst of deceit, all about thee are addicted to it; therefore stand uprightly, guard thy servants, and come not amongst us to become men, and to be wise as serpents. They are deceitful men, therefore there is little hope of thy doing any good among them; for making things ever so plain, they have some trick or other whereby to shuffle off their convictions. This charge is enlarged upon, v. 8. Their tongue was a bow bent, (v. 5.) plotting and preparing mischief; here it is an arrow shot out, putting in execution what they had projected. It is as a slaying arrow; so some readings of the original have it; their tongue has been to many an instrument of death. They speak feareably to their neighbours, against whom they are at the same time lying in wait: as Job kissed Abner, when he was about to kill him; and Cain, that he might not be suspected of any ill design, talked with his brother from the face of the earth, N. v. 10. Fair words, when they are not attended with good intentions, are despised, but when they are intended as a cloak and cover for wicked intentions, they are abominable. While they did all this injury to one another, they put a great contempt upon God: Not only they know not me, but, (v. 6.) through deceit, through the delusions of the false prophets, they refuse to know God, and are so cheated into a good opinion of their own ways, the ways of their own heart, that they desire not the knowledge of my ways." Or, They are so wedded to this sinful course which they are in, and so bewitched with that, and its gains, that they will by no means admit the knowledge of God, because that would be a check upon them in their sins. This is the ruin of sinners, they might be taught the knowledge of the Lord, and they will not learn it. Where no knowledge of God is, what good can be expected? Hos. iv. 1.

(2.) He had marked them for ruin, v. 7, 9, 11. Those that will not know God as their Lawgiver, shall be made to know him as their Judge. God determines here to bring his judgments upon them, for the refining of some, and the ruinning of the rest.

[1.] Some shall be refined, (v. 7.) "Because they are thus corrupt, behold, I will melt them, and try them, will bring them into trouble, and see what that will do toward bringing them to repentance; whether the furnace of affliction will purify them from their dross, and whether, when they are melted, they will be new-cast in a better mould." He will make trial of lesser afflictions, before he brings upon them anything very severe for their greater sins, the death of themselves and the death of the death of sinners. They shall not be rejected as reprobate silver, till the Founder has melted in vain, ch. vi. 39, 30. For how shall I do for the daughters of my people? He speaks as one consulting with himself what to do with them, that might be for the best, and as one that could not find in his heart to cast them off, and give them up to ruin, till he had first of all tried them, and then he would repentance.

Or, How else shall I do for them? They are grown so very corrupt, that there is no other way with them but to put them into the furnace, what other course can I take with them? (Isa. iv. 5.) It is the daughter of my people, and I must do something to vindicate my own honour, which will be re-ferred upon if I conive at their wickedness; I must do something to reduce and reform them." A parent corrects his own children because they are his own. Note, When God afflicts his people, it is with a gracious design to mollify and reduce them; it is but with need and, when he knows it is the best method he can use.

[2.] The rest shall be ruined, (v. 9.) Shall I not visit these things? Fraud and falsehood are sins which God hates, and which he will reckon for; Shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this, that is so universally corrupt, and, by its impiety in sin, even dares and defies divine vengeance? The sentence is past, the decree is gone forth, v. 11. I will make Jerusalem heaps of rubbish, and lay it in such ruins, that it shall be fit for nothing but to be a den of dragons; and the cities of Juda shall be a desolation." God makes them so, for he gives the enemy warrant and power to do it: but why is the holy city made a heap? The answer is ready, Because it was become an unholy one.

12. Who is the wise man, that may understand this; and who is he to whom the mouth of the Lord hath spoken, that he may declare it, for what the land perisheth and is burnt up like a wilderness, that none passeth through? 13. And the Lord saith, Because they have forsaken my law which I set before them, and have not obeyed my voice, neither walked therein: 14. But have walked after the imagination of their own heart, and after Baalim, which their fathers taught them: 15. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will feed them, even this people, with wormwood, and give them water of gall to drink. 16. I will scatter them also among the heathen, whom neither they nor their fathers have known: and I will send a sword after them, till I have consumed them. 17. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Consider ye, and call for the mourning women, that they may come; and send for cunning women, that they may come: 18. And let them make haste, and take up a wailing for us, that our eyes may run down with tears, and our eyelids gush out with waters. 19. For a voice of wailing is heard out of Zion, How are we spoiled! we are greatly confounded, because we have forsaken the land, because our dwellings have cast us out.

20. Yet hear the word of the Lord, O ye women, and let your ear receive the word of his mouth, and teach your daughters wailing, and every one her neighbour lamentation: 21. For death is come up into our windows, and is entered into our palaces, to cut off the children from without, and the young men from the streets. 22. Speak, Thus saith the Lord, Even the carcases of men shall fall as dung upon the open field, and as the handful after the harvest-man, and none shall gather them.

Two things the prophet designs in these verses, with reference to the approaching destruction of Juda. and Jerusalem. 1. To convince people of the justice of God in it, that they had by sin brought it upon themselves, and that therefore they had no reason to quarrel with God, who did them no wrong at all, but a great deal of reason to fall out with their sins, which did them all this mischief. 2. To affect people with the greatness of the desolation that was coming, and the miserable effects of it, that by a terrible prospect of it, and an awe of its approach and reformation, which was the only way to prevent it, or, at least, mitigate their own share in it. This being designed,
1. He calls for the thinking men, by them to show people the equity of God's proceedings, though they seemed harsh and severe; (v. 12.) "Where, is the wise man, or the prophet, to whom the mouth of the Lord hath spoken? You boast of your wisdom, and of the prophets you have among you; produce me any one that has but the free use of human reason, or any acquaintance with divine revelation, and he will soon understand this himself, and it will be so clear to him, that he will be ready to declare it to others, that there is just ground of God's controversy with this people." Do these wise men inquire into the matter, that such a change is made with this land? It used to be a land that God cared for, and he had his eyes upon it for good; (Deut. xi. 12.) but it is now a land that he has forsaken, and that his face is against: it used to flourish as the garden of the Lord, and to be replenished with inhabitants; but now it is burnt up like a wilderness, that "none faweth there any more." It was supposed, long ago, that it would be asked, when it came to this, "Wherefore has the Lord done thus unto this land? What means the heat of this great anger?" (Deut. xxix. 24.) to which question God here gives a full answer, before which all flesh must be silent. He produces out of the record,
1. The indictment preferred and proved against them, upon which they had been found guilty, v. 13, 14. It is charged upon them, and it cannot be denied, (1.) That they have revolted from their allegiance to their rightful Sovereign: therefore God has forsaken their land, and justly, because they have forsaken his law, which he had so plainly, so fully, so frequently set before them, and had not observed his orders, not obeyed his voice, nor walked in a way that was truth, and that was right; his indignation began, in the omission of their duty to their God, and a contempt of his authority. But it did not end here. It is further charged upon them, (2.) That they have entered themselves into the service of pretenders and usurpers, have not only withdrawn themselves from their obedience to their Prince, but have taken up arms against him. For, (v. 15.) They have acted accoag to the dictates of their own lusts, have set up their own will, the wills of the flesh, and the carnal mind, in competition with, and contradiction to, the will of God; They have walked after the imagination of their own hearts; they would do as they pleased, whatever God and conscience said to the contrary. (2.) They have worshipped the creatures of their own fancy, the prelates that they have set up, as the popes, and the bishops, and the rest of the clergy, and the confession received from their fathers; They have walked after Baalim; the word is plural; they had many Baals, Baal-peor, and Baalberith, the Baal of this place, and the Baal of the other place; for they had lords many, which their fathers taught them to worship, but which the God of their fathers had again and again forbidden. This was it for which the land perished. The King of kings may not inter his affection upon his own subjects, but when they treacherously dep't from him, and rebel against him, and it is become necessary by this means to chastise their rebellion, and reduce them to their allegiance; and they themselves shall at length acknowledge that he is just in all that is brought upon them.
2. The judgment given upon this indictment, the sentence upon the convicted rebels, which must now be executed, for it was righteous, and nothing could be moved in arrest of it: The Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, hath said it; (v. 15, 16.) and who can reverse it? (1.) That all their comforts at home shall be changed for poison or rather, to be feared; They shall drink poison, and be made bitter; some herb that is both nauseous and noxious; and I will give them water of gall, or juice of hemlock, or some other herb that is peisonous to drink. Every thing about them, till it comes to their very meat and drink, shall be a terror to them, and they will curse their blessings, Mal. ii. 2. (2.) That their dispersion abroad shall be their destruction; (v. 16.) I will scatter them among the heathen. They are corrupted and debauched by their intimacy with the heathen, with whom they mingled themselves, and learned their works and now they shall lose themselves there where they lost their virtue, and have been corrupted by them, and they were never, and will not be, turned to the Lord; they will curse their blessings, Mal. ii. 2. (2.) That their dispersion abroad shall be their destruction; (v. 16.) I will scatter them among the heathen. They are corrupted and debauched by their intimacy with the heathen, with whom they mingled themselves, and learned their works and now they shall lose themselves there where they lost their virtue, and have been corrupted by them, and they will curse their blessings, Mal. ii. 2. (2.) That their dispersion abroad shall be their destruction; (v. 16.) I will scatter them among the heathen. They are corrupted and debauched by their intimacy with the heathen, with whom they mingled themselves, and learned their works and now they shall lose themselves there where they lost their virtue, and have been corrupted by them, and they are justly disgraced, and scattered among the heathen. They set up gods which neither they nor their fathers had known, strange gods, new gods; (Deut. xxxii. 17.) and now God will put them among neighbours which neither they nor their fathers knew; God will make this nation to claim no acquaintance with, and therefore can expect no favour from. And yet, though they are scattered so as that they will not know where to find one another, God will know where to find them all out, (Ps. xxii. 8.) with that evil which still pursues iniquitous sinners; I will send a sword after them, some killing judgment or other, till I have consumed them; for when God judges, he will overtake, when he pursues, he will overtake. And now we see for what the land perishes; all this desolation is the desert of their deeds, and the performance of God's words.
II. He calls for the mourning women, and engages them with their arts to affect people, and move their passion, to lament these sad calamities, that the rest of the people might be alarmed to prepare for them. The Lord of hosts himself says, Call for the mourning women, that they may come, v. 17. The scope of this is to show how very woful and lamentable the condition of this people was likely to be. 1. Here is work for the counterfeit mourners; Send for the capping women that know how to compose mournful ditties, or, at least, to sing them in mournful tunes and accents, and therefore are made use of at funerals to supply the want of true mourners. Let these take up a sitting for us, v. 18. The deaths and funerals were so many, that people wept for them till they had no more power to weep, as those, 1 Sam. xxx. 4. Let them therefore do it now, whose trade it is; or, rather, it imitates the mournful women of the worst, who, instead of laying not to heart the judgments they were under, nor, even when there was so much blood shed, could find in their hearts to shed a tear. They cry not when God binds them, Job xxxvi. 13. God sent his mourning prophets to them, to call them to weeping and mourning, but his word in their mouths did not work upon their faith; rather therefore that they shall be profitably gainful to their gain, let the mourning women come, and try to work upon their fancy, that their eyes may at length run down with tears, and their eyelids gush out with waters. First of all, last, sinners must be weepers.
2. Here is work for the real mourners.

(1.) There is that which is a lamentation. The present scene is very tragic; (v. 19.) A voice of mourning and wailing. The children, who man a bat, to be the song of the mourning women; it is rather an echo to it, returned by those whose afflictions were moved by their wailings. In Zion the voice of joy and praise used to be heard, while the people kept close to God; but sin has altered the note, it is now the voice of lamentation. It should seem to be the voice of those who fled from all parts of the country to escape the fury of the enemy. It is easy, being a pity that they were got safe thither, they lamented that they were forced to seek for shelter there.

"How are we spoiled! How are we stripped of all our possessions! We are greatly confounded, ashamed of ourselves and our poverty," for that is it that they complain of, that is it that they blush at the thoughts of, rather than of their sin; We are confounded because we have forsaken the land, forced so to do by the enemy, not because we have forsaken the Lord, drawn aside of our own lust and creature; because our dwellings have cast us out, not because our God has cast us out! Thus unhumbled hearts lament their calamity, but not their iniquity, the procuring cause of it.

(2.) There is more still to come, that shall be for lamentation. Things were bad, and they are likely to be worse. They whose hand has spiced them out, (as it did their predecessors the Canaanites, and justly, because they trod in their steps, (Lev. xviii. 28.) complain that they are driven into the city, but after awhile, those of the city, and they with them, shall be forced thence too; Yet hear the word of the Lord, he has something more to say to you; (v. 28.) let the women hear it, whose tender spirits are apt to receive the impressions of grief and fear, for the men will not heed it, will not give it a patient hearing. The prophets will be glad to preach to a congregation of women that tremble at God's word. Let your ear receive the word of God's mouth, and bid it welcome, though it be a word of terror. Let the women teach their daughters walkling; this intimates that the trouble shall last long; grief shall be entailed upon the generation to come. Young people are apt to love mirth, and expect mirth, and are disposed to be gay and airy; but let the elder women teach the younger to be serious, tell them what a vale of tears they must expect to find this world, and train them up among the mourners in Zion, Tit. ii. 4, 5. Let every one teach her neighbour lessoning; this intimates that the trouble shall spread far, shall go from house to house, people shall not need to sympathise with their friends, they shall all have cause enough to mourn for themselves.

Note, Those that are themselves affected with the terrors of the Lord, should endeavour to affect others with them.

The judgment here threatened is made to look terrible.

[1.] Multitudes shall be slain, v. 21. Death shall ride in triumph, and there shall be no escaping his arrows, when he comes with commission, neither within doors nor without; not within doors, for let the doors be shut ever so fast, let them be ever so firmly locked and bolted, death comes up into our windows, like a thief in the night; it steals upon us while we sleep, the more bold attack the cottages only, but it is entered into our palaces, the palaces of our princes and great men, though ever so stately, ever so strongly built and guarded. Note, No palaces can keep out death. Nor are those more safe that are abroad; death cuts off even the children from without, and the young men from within. This fury, like a flame, blazes over the palaces and the cottages; it is the most serviceable of the enemies in pity, because they had never been hurtful to them, and the young men who might have been spared in policy, because capable of being serviceable to them, shall fall together by the sword. It's usual now, even in the severest military executions, to put none to the sword but those that are found in arms; but then even the boys and girls playing in the streets were sacrificed to the fury of the conqueror.

[2.] Those that are slain shall be left unburied; (v. 22.) Speak, Thus saith the Lord, (for the confirmation and aggravation of what was before said,) Even the carcases of men shall fall as dung, neglected, and left to the beasts of the field, to devour. Common humanity obliges the survivors to bury the dead, even for their own sake; but here such numbers shall be slain, and those so dispersed all the country over, that it shall be an endless thing to bury them all, nor shall there be hands enough to do it, nor shall the conquerors permit it, and those that should do it, shall be overwhelmed with grief, so that they shall have no heart to do it. The dead bodies even of the fairest and strongest, when they have lain awhile, become as dung, such vile bodies have we. And here such multitudes shall fall, that their bodies shall lie as thick as heaps of dung in the furrows of the field, and no more notice shall be taken of them than of the handfuls which the harvestman drops for the gleaners, for none shall gather them, but they shall remain to sight, monuments of divine vengeance, that the eye of the impudent survivors may affect their heart. Stay them not, bury them not, lest my people forget, Ps. lix. 11.

23. Thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches: 24. But let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord which exerciseth loving-kindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth: For in these things I delight, saith the Lord.

25. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will punish all them which are censured with the uncurmised; 26. Egypt, and Judah, and Edom, and the children of Ammon, and Moab, and all that are in the utmost corners, that dwell in the wilderness: For these nations are uncurmised, and all the house of Israel are uncensured in the heart.

The prophet had been endeavouring to possess this people with a holy fear of God and his judgments, to convince them both of sin and wrath; but still they had recourse to some sorry subterfuge of their own, under which to shelter themselves from the conviction, and with which to excuse themselves in their obstinacy and carelessness: he therefore sets himself here to drive them from these refuges of lies, and to show them the insufficiency of them.

I. When they were told how inevitable the judgment would be, they pleaded the defence of their politics and powers, which, with the help of their wealth and treasure, they thought made their city impregnable. In answer to this he shows them the folly of trusting to, and boasting of, all these stays, while they have not a God in covenant to stay themselves upon, v. 23, 24.

Here he shows, 1. What we may not depend upon in a day of distress: Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, as if with the help of that he could cut or countermine the enemy, or in the greatest extremity find out some evasion or other; for a man's wisdom may fail him then when he needs it most, and he may be taken in his own craftiness. Antithes phel was befouled, and counsellors are often lied away stifled. But if a man's policies fail him, yet surely he may gain his point by might, and dint of courage;
, let not the strong man glory in his strength, for the battle is not always to the strong: David the stripling proves too hard for Goliath the giant. All men have their place, as if they could make their part good against the Chaldeans, because they have wise men to advise concerning the war, mighty men to fight their battles, and rich men to bear the charges of the war. Let no particular persons think to escape the common calamity by their wisdom, might, or money, for all these will prove but vain things for safety.
He sheweth what we may depend upon in a day of distress. (1.) He sheweth that we have reference to God that we have done our duty. They that refused to know God, (v. 6.) will boast in vain of their wisdom and wealth; but they that know God intelligently, that understand aright that he is the Lord, that have not only right apprehensions concerning his nature, and attributes, and relation to man, but receive and retain the impressions of them, may glory in this, it will be their rejoicing in the day of evil.
(2.) Our only confidence in trouble will be, that, having through grace in some measure done our duty, we shall find God a God all-sufficient to us. We may glory in this, that, wherever we are, we have an acquaintance with, and an interest in, a God that exercises loving-kindness, and judgment, and righteousness, in the earth; that is not only just to all his creatures, and will do no wrong to any of them, but kind to all his children, and will protect them, and provide for them. For in these things I delight. God delights to show kindness, and to execute judgment himself, and is pleased with those who herein are followers of him as dear children. Those that have such knowledge of the glory of God as to be changed into the same image, and to partake of his holiness, are those that are the children of God; and the God they thus faithfully conform to, they may cheerfully confide in, in their greatest straits. But the prophet intimates that the generality of these people took no care about this. Their wisdom, and might, and riches, were their joy and hope, which would end in grief and despair. But those few among them that had the knowledge of God, might please themselves with it, and boast themselves of it; it would stand them in better stead than thousands of gold and silver.
11. When they were told how provoking their sins were to God, they vainly pleaded the covenant of their circumcision. They were, undoubtedly, the people of God; as they had the temple of the Lord in their city, so they had the mark of his childrenimprinted on their persons. That head of Egypt has laid such and such nations waste, because they were uncircumcised, and therefore not under the protection of the Divine Providence, as we are.
To this the prophet answers, That the days of visitation were now at hand, in which God would punish all wicked people, without making any distinction between the circumcised and uncircumcised,
. 25, 26.
You see the men who professed the circum-
them; for they cannot do evil, neither also is it in them to do good. 6. Forasmuch as there is none like unto thee, O Lord; thou art great, and thy name is great in might. 7. Who would not fear thee, O King of nations? for to thee doth it appertain: forasmuch as among all the wise men of the nations, and in all their kingdoms, there is none like unto thee. 3. But they are altogether brutish and foolish; the stock is a doctrine of vanities. 9. Silver spread into plates is brought from Tarshish, and gold from Uphaz, the work of the workman, and of the hands of the founder: blue and purple is their clothing; they are all the work of cunning men. 10. But the Lord is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting King; at his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation. 11. Thus shall ye say unto them, The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth, even they shall perish from the earth, and from under these heavens. 12. He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heavens by his discretion. 13. When he uttereth his voice, there is a multitude of waters in the heavens, and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth; he maketh lightnings with rain, and bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures. 14. Every man is brutish in his knowledge; every founder is confounded by the graven image; for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them. 15. They are vanity, and the work of errors: in the time of their visitation they shall perish. 16. The portion of Jacob is not like them: for he is the former of all things; and Israel is the rod of his inheritance: The Lord of hosts is his name.

The prophet Isaiah, when he prophesied of the captivity in Babylon, added warnings against idolatry, and largely exposed the sottishness of idolaters, not only because the temptations in Babylon would be in danger of drawing the Jews there to idolatry, but because the afflictions in Babylon were designed to cure them of their idolatry. Thus the prophet Jeremiah here arms people against the idolatrous usages and customs of the heathen, not only for the use of those that were gone to Babylon, but of those also that stood behind; that, being convinced and reformed by the word of God, the rod might be prevented, and it is written for our learning. Observe here,

I. A solemn charge given to the people of God, not to conform themselves to the errors and customs of the heathen.

Let the house of Israel hear and receive this word from the God of Israel: “Learn not the way of the heathen, do not approve of it, nor think differently concerning it, much less imitate it, or accustom yourselves to it. Let not any of their customs steal in among you, (as they are apt to do insensibly,) nor mingle themselves with your religion.” Note, It ill becomes those that are taught of God, to learn the way of the heathen, and to think of worshipping the true God with such rites and ceremonies as they use in the worship of their false gods. See Deut. xii. 29. The heathen who are taught of the heathen to worship the host of heaven, the sun, moon, and stars; to them they gave divine honours, and from them they expected divine favours, and therefore, according as the signs of heaven were, whether they were auspicious or ominous, they thought themselves conjectured or disconcerted by their deities; which made them observe those signs, the eclipses of the sun and moon, the conjunctions and oppositions of the planets, and all the unusual phenomena of the celestial globe, with a great deal of anxiety and trembling. Business was stopped, if any thing occurred that was thought to bode ill; if it did but thunder on their left hand, they were almost as if they had been thunderstruck. Now God would not have his people to be dismayed at the signs of heaven; to reverence the stars as deities, or to frighten themselves with any prophecies grounded upon them. Let them fear the God of heaven, and keep up a reverence of his providence, and then they need not be dismayed at the signs of heaven, for the stars in their courses fight not against any that are at peace with God.

The heathen are dismayed at these signs, for they know no better than that; but the house of Israel, that are taught of God, be so.

II. Divers good reasons given to enforce this charge.

1. The way of the heathen is very ridiculous and absurd, and is condemned even by the dictates of right reason, v. 3. The statutes and ordinances of the heathen are vanity itself, they cannot stand the test of a rational disquisition. This is again and again insisted upon here, as it was by Isaiah. The Chaldeans valued themselves on their wisdom, in which they thought that they excelled all their neighbours; but the prophet here shows that they, and all others that worshipped idols, and expected help and relief from them, were brutish and sottish, and had not common sense.

II. 1. Consider what the idol is that is worshipped; it is a tree cut out of the forest originally, it was fitted up by the hands of the workman, squared and sawed, and worked into shape; see Isa. xlv. 12, &c. But, after all, it was but the stock of a tree, fitter to make a gate-post of than any thing else. But to hide the wood, they deck it with silver and gold, they gild or lacquer it, or they deck it with gold and silver lace, or cloth of tissue. They fasten it to its place, which they themselves have assigned it, with nails and hammers, that it fall not, or be thrown down, or stolen away, v. 4. The image is made straight enough, and it cannot be denied but that the workman did his part, for it is upright as the palm-tree, (v. 5.) it looks stately, and stands up as if it were going to speak to you, but it cannot speak, it is a poor dumb creature; nor can it take one step of its own accord; nor can it know how far it has gone, or how far it has to shift its place, it must be carried in procession, for it cannot go. Very fitting does it come in here, “Be not afraid of them, any more than of the signs of heaven; be not afraid of incurring their displeasure, for they can do no evil; be not afraid of forfeiting their favour, for neither is it in them to do good. If you think to mend the matter by mending the materials of which the idol is made, you do not, to shift its place, it must be carried in procession, for it cannot go. Very fitting does it come in here, “Be not afraid of them, any more than of the signs of heaven; be not afraid of incurring their displeasure, for they can do no evil; be not afraid of forfeiting their favour, for neither is it in them to do good. If you think to mend the matter by mending the materials of which the idol is made, you do not, to shift its place, it must be carried in procession, for it cannot go. (1.) He is a Nonsuch. Whatever man may see in competition with him, there is none to be compared with him. The prophet turns from speaking with the utmost disdain of the idols of the heathen, (as well he might,) to speak with the most profound and awful reverence of the God of Israel: (v. 6, 7.) "Thus much as there is none like unto thee, O Lord, none of all the heroes which the heathen have devised, and make such ado about; the dead men of whom they made dead images, and whom they worshipped. Some were devised and adored for their wisdom, but among all the wise men of the nations, the greatest philosophers or statesmen, as Apollo or Hercules, there is none like them. Others were devised and adored for their dominion, but in all their royalty," (so it may be read,) "among all their kings, as Saturn and Jupiter, there is none like unto thee." What is the glory of a man that invented an useful art, or founded a flourishing kingdom, (and these were grounds sufficient among the heathen to entitle men to an apostasy,) compared with the glory of him that is the Creator of the world, and that forms the spirit of man within in him? What is the glory of the greatest prince or potentate, compared with the glory of him whose kingdom rules over all? He acknowledges, (v. 6.) O Lord, thou art great, infinite and immense, and thy name is great in might; thou hast all power, and art known to have it. Men's name is often beyond their might; they are thought to be greater than their might, but God's name is greater than he really is. And therefore who would not fear thee, O King of nations? Who would not choose to worship such a God as this, that can do every thing, rather than such dead idols as the heathen worship, that can do nothing? Who would not be afraid of offending or forsaking a God whose name is reverenced by all the nations, if they understood themselves to be right, or who was the King of nations? Note, It is not only the house of Israel that is bound to worship the great Jehovah as the God of Israel, the King of saints, (Rev. xv. 3, 4.) but all the families of the earth are bound to worship him as King of nations; for to him it appertaineth, to him it suiteth and agrees. (2.) His verity is as evident as the idol's vanity, v. 10. They are the work of men's hands, and therefore nothing is more plain than that it is a jest to worship them, if that may be called a jest, which is so great an indignity to him that made us; but the Lord is the true God, the God of truth, he is God in truth. God Jehovah in truth, he is not a Counterfeit, and Pretender, as they are, but is really what he has revealed himself to be; he is one we may depend upon, in whom, and by whom, we can be defended and prospered. As for himself, he is the living God; he is Life itself, has life in himself, and is the Fountain of life to all the creatures. The gods of the heathen are dead things, worthless and useless, but ours is a living God, and hath immortality. (2.) Look upon him with relation to his creatures, he is a King, and absolute Monarch over them all, is their Owner and Governor, has a manifest right to both them and dispose of them; as a King, he protects the creatures, provides for their welfare, and preserves peace among them. He is an everlasting King. The counsellors of his kingdom were from everlasting, and the continuance of it will be to everlasting. He is a King of eternity. The idol's whom they call their kings, are but of yesterday, and will soon be abolished; and the kings of the earth shall take them up to be worshiped, and will themselves be in the dust before them; but the Lord shall reign for ever, thy God, O Zion, unto all generations.

6. Zion, let the king arise, let justice take her seat; she shall be pronounced worthy and her כככרפ תמסרב, and he shall sit on his throne of his kingdom. Let us stand in awe, and not dare to provoke him by giving that glory to another which is due to him alone, for at his wrath the earth shall tremble, even the strongest and stoutest of the kings of the earth; nay, the earth, firmly as it is fixed, when he pleases, is made to quake, and the rocks to tremble, Ps. civ. 32. Hab. iii. 6, 16. Though the nations should join together to contend with him, and unite their force, yet they would be found utterly unable not only to resist, but even to abide, his indignation. They cannot only not make head against it, for it would overcome them, but they cannot bear up under it, for it would overload them, Ps. lxxvi. 7, 8. Nahum i. 6.

(4.) He is the God of nature, the Fountain of all being; and all the powers of nature are at his command and disposal, v. 12, 13. The God we worship, is he that made the heavens and the earth, and has a sovereign dominion over both; so that his invisible things are manifested and proved in the things that are seen.

[1.] If we look back, we find that the whole world owed its original to him, as its first Cause. It was a common saying, of the Lord the God of Heaven and Earth: He that sets up to be another god, ought first to make another world. While the heathen worship gods that are made, we worship the God that made us and all things. First, The earth is a body of vast bulk, has valuable treasures in its bowels, and more valuable fruit on its surface. It is a body of heaven, which he has made by his power; and it is by no less than an infinite power, that it hangs upon nothing. Jeremiah, xii. 10. The earth stands, it is poised by its own weight. Secondly, The world, the habitable part of the earth, is admirably fitted for the use and service of man, and he hath established it so by his wisdom, so that it continues serviceable in constant changes, and yet a continual stability from one generation to another. Therefore both the earth and the world are his, Ps. xxii. 6.

[2.] If we look up, we see his providence to be a continued creation; (v. 13.) When he uttereth his voice, (gives the word of command,) there is a multitude of waters in the heavens, which are poured out on the earth, whether for judgment or mercy, as he intends them. When he utters his voice in the thunder, immediately there follow thunder-showers, in which there are a multitude of waters; and those come with a noise, as the margin reads it, like the claps of lightning, or the falling of rain, 1 Kings xviii. 41. Nay, there are wonders done daily in the kingdom of nature without noise; He causes the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth, from all parts of the earth, even the most remote, and chiefly those that lie next the sea. All the earth pays the tribute of vapours, because all the earth receives the blessing of rain. And thus the mưa, or the annum, or the spes, or the gold, like the money in a kingdom, and the blood in the body, is continually circulating for the good of the whole. Those vapours produce wonders, for of them are formed lightnings for the rain and the winds which God from time to time brings forth out of his treasures, as there is occasion for them, directing them all in such measure and for such use as he thinks fit.

[3.] These payments are made out of the treasury. All the nations are so ready to serve God's purposes, that he seems to have treasures of them, that cannot be count-d, and a treasure may be drawn from every nation, xcvii. 7. God glories in the multitudes of his subjects. He has of these, Job xxxviii. 22, 23. This God can do; but which of the idols of the heathen can do the like? Note, There is no sort of weather but what furnishes us with a proof and instance of the wisdom and power of the great Creator.

(5.) This God is Israel's God in covenant, and the felicity of every Israelite will be a matter of course. The house of Israel cleave to him, and not forsake him to embrace idols; for, if they do, they certainly change for the worse, for (v. 16.) The Portion of Jacob is not like them; their rock is not as our Rock, (Deut. xxxiii. 31.) nor cannons like their molehills. Note, [1.] They that have the Lord for their God, have a full and complete happiness in him. The God of Jacob is the Portion of Jacob; he is his all, and in him he has enough, and needs no more in this world or the other. In him we have a worthy portion, Ps. xvi. 5. [2.] If we have entire satisfaction and complacency in God as our Portion, he will have a gracious delight in us as his people, whom he owns as the rod of his inheritance, his possession and treasure, with whom he dwells and by whom he is served and honoured. [3.] It is the unspeakable comfort of the believer, that he has a God, a Permanent God, the Former of all things, and therefore is able to do all that for them, and give all that to them, which they stand in need of. Their help stands in his name who made heaven and earth. And he is the Lord of hosts, of all the hosts in heaven and earth, has them all at his command, and will command them into the service of his people when there is occasion. This is the name by which they know him, which they first give him the glory of, and then take to themselves the comfort of. [4.] Herein God's people are happy above all other people, happy indeed, bona si sua normi—did they but know their blessedness. The gods which the heathen pride, and please, and so portion themselves in, are vanity and a lie; but the Portion of Jacob is not like them.

3. The prophet, having thus compared the gods of the heathen with the God of Israel, (between whom there is no comparison,) reads the doom, the certain doom, of all those pretenders, and directs the Jews in God's name, to read it to the worshipers of idols, though they were their lords and masters; (v. 11.) Thus shall ye say unto them, and to all the nations which are under the heaven, Whatever nations ye shall serve, ye shall serve them for a snare, and for an ensnarement, and for a yoke to bind you. The gods which have not made the heavens and the earth, and therefore are no gods, but usurpers of the honour due to him only who did make heaven and earth, these shall perish; perish of course, because they are vanity; perish by his righteous sentence, because they are rivals with him, as gods they shall perish: from off the earth, even all those things on earth beneath, which they make gods; and from under these, and above these, the ornament of heaven, under the highest heavens, which are defied, according to the distribution in the second commandment. These words in the original are not in the Hebrew, like all the rest, but in the Chaldee dialect, that the Jews in captivity might have this ready to say to the Chaldeans in their own language, when they tempted them to worship their gods. Will we never do that; for, (1.) They are counterfeit deities; they are no gods, for they have not made the heavens and the earth, and therefore are not entitled to our homage; nor are we indebted to them either for the products of the earth, or the influences of heaven, as we are to the God of Israel." The primitive Christians would say, when they were urged to worship such a god, Let him make a world, and he shall be my god. While we have him to worship, who made heaven and earth, it is very absurd to worship any other. (2) They are corded need deities; they shall perish, the time shall come when they shall be no more respected as they are now, but shall be buried in oblivion, and they and their worshipers shall sink together; the earth shall no longer bear them, the heavens shall no longer cover them, but both shall abandon them. It is repeated, v. 15. In the time of their visitation. When God comes to reckon with idolaters, he shall make them weary of their idols, and glad to be rid of them; they shall cast them to the moles and to the bats. Isa. ii. 20. Whatever runs against God and religion, will be run down at last. 17. Gather up thy wares out of the land, O inhabitant of the fortress: 18. For thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will sling out the inhabitants of the land at this once, and will distress them, that they may find it so. 19. Wo is me for my hurt! my wound is grievous: but I said, Truly this is a grief, and I must bear it. 20. My tabernacle is spoiled, and all my cords are broken: my children are gone forth of me, and they are not; there is none to stretch forth my tent any more, and to set up my curtains. 21. For the pastors are become brutish, and have not sought the Lord: therefore they shall not prosper, and all their flocks shall be scattered. 22. Behold, the noise of the bruit is come, and a great commotion out of the north country, to make the cities of Judah desolate, and a den of dragons. 23. O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. 24. O Lord, correct me, but with judgment; not in thine anger, lest thou bring me to nothing. 25. Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy name: for they have eaten up Jacob, and devoured him, and consumed him, and have made his habitation desolate. In these verses. 1. The prophet threatens, in God's name, the approaching ruin of Judah and Jerusalem, v. 17, 18. The Jews that continued in their own land, after some were carried into captivity, were very secure; they thought themselves inhabitants of a fortress, their country was their strong hold, and, in their own conceit, impregnable; but they are here bid to think of leaving it; they must prepare to go abroad with their brethren, and pack up their effects in expectation of it: Gather up thy wares out of the land; contract thy affairs, and bring them into as little a compass as you can. Arise, depart, this is not your rest, Mic. ii. 10. Let not what you have lie scattered, for the Chaldeans will be upon you again, to be the executioners: they must prepare to go abroad with their brethren, and pack up their effects in expectation of it.
which at first was but a tabernacle, and is now call ed so, as then it was sometimes called a temple.
Their church is ruined, and all the supports of it fall. It was a general destruction of church and state, city and country, and there were none to repair these desolations: "My children are gone forth of the vineyard; they have no bounds, neither is any one to guide them into captivity, so that as to me they are not; I am likely to be an outcast, and to perish for want of shelter; for there is none to stretch forth my tent any more, none of my children that used to do it for me, none to set up my curtains, none to do me any service." Jerusalem has none to guide her of all her sons, Isa. lii. 18.

5. That the report of the enemy's approach was very dreadful; (v. 22.) The noise of the bruit is come, of the report which at first was but whisper-red and bruited abroad, as wanting confirmation.
It now proves too true; A great commotion arises out of the north country, which threatens to make all the cities of Judah desolate, and a den of dragons;
for they must all expect to be sacrificed to the avo-cice and fury of the Chaldeans. And what else can that place expect, but to be made a den of dragons, which has by sin made itself a den of thieves?

III. He turns to God, and addresses himself to him, finding it to little purpose to speak to the people. It is some comfort to poor ministers, that, if men will not hear them, God will; and to him they have lived and laboured at all times; let them close their preaching with prayer, as the prophet, and then they shall have no reason to say that they have laboured in vain.

1. The prophet here acknowledges the sovereignty and dominion of the divine providence, that by it, and not by their own will and wisdom, the affliction and calamity, (v. 4.) All the persons are repeated and determined, v. 23. This is the most part of our faith, which it is very proper for us to make confession of at the throne of grace, when we are complaining of an affliction, or singing for a mercy:
"O Lord, I know, and believe, that the way of man is not in himself; Nebuchadnezzar did not come of himself against our land, but by the direction of a divine providence." We cannot do ourselves do any thing for our own relief, unless God work with us, and command deliverance for us, for it is not in man that walketh, to direct his steps, but the Lord directeth all his ways. The idea of liberty, and to choose his own way. Those that had promised themselves a long enjoyment of their estates and possessions, were made to know by sad experience, when they were thrown cut by the Chaldeans, that the way of man is not in himself;
the designs which men lay deep, and think well formed, are dashed to pieces in a moment. We must not go at all to our own will, but in his way, it, that we are not at our own disposal, but under a divine direction; the event is often overruled, so as to be quite contrary to our intention and expectation. We are not masters of our own way, nor can we think that every thing should be according to our mind; we must therefore refer ourselves to God and acquiesce in his will. Some think that the prophet mentions this, here, with a design to make this comfortable use of it, that the providence of God is dean army being not in themselves, they can do no more than God permits them; he can set bounds to these proud waves, and say, Hitherto they shall come, and no further. And a quieting consideration it is, that the most formidable enemies have no power against us but what is given them from above.

2. He deprecates the divine wrath, that it might not fall upon God's Israel, v. 24. He speaks not for himself only, but on the behalf of his people;
O Lord, correct me, but with judgment, in measure and with moderation, and in wisdom, no more than is necessary for the driving out of the foolishness that is bound up in our hearts: not in thine anger, but in thy love and mercy, to be neither punished nor punished. The great calamity of the afflic-tion, is, the wrath of God. Say not, Lord, do not correct me, but, Lord, do not correct me in anger; for that will infuse wormwood and gall into the affliction and misery; that will bring us to nothing, but to bring us home to thyself. Let it not be according to the desert of our sins, but according to the designs of thy grace. Note, (1.) We cannot pray in faith that we may never be corrected, while we are conscious to ourselves that we need it and deserve it, and know that as many as God loves, he desires should be corrected. This should be so much the less a thing to be feared, as it is the object of affliction, the wrath of God. Say not, Lord, do not correct me, but, Lord, do not correct me in anger; for that will infuse wormwood and gall into the affliction and misery; that will bring us to nothing;
we may bear the smart of his rod, but we cannot bear the weight of his wrath.

3. He impregates the divine wrath against the oppressors and persecutors of Israel; (v. 25.) Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not.
This prayer does not come from a spirit of malec or revenge, nor is it intended to prescribe to God whom he should execute his judgments upon, or in what order: but, (1.) It is an appeal to his justice;
"Lord, we are a provoking people; but are there not other nations that are more so? And shall we only be punished? We are thy children, and may expect a fatherly correction; but they are thine enemies, and against them we have reason to think thine indignation should be, not against us." This is God's usual method. The cup put into the hands of God's people is full of mixtures, mixtures of mercy; but the dregs of the cup are reserved for the wicked of the earth, let them wring them out, Psa. cxlvii. 8. (2) It is a prediction of God's judgments upon all the impenitent enemies of his church and kingdom. If judgment begin thus at the house of God, what shall be the end of those that obtr not his gospel? 1 Pet. iv. 17. See how the heathen are described, on whom God's fury shall be few
The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 2. Hear ye the words of this covenant, and speak unto the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem; 3. And say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this covenant, 4. Which I commanded your fathers that they should keep and do; 5. That I may perform the oath which I have sworn unto their fathers, saying, I will cause them to inherit the land which I gave unto their fathers; 6. And I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, 7. and I brought them into the land which floweth with milk and honey, which I sware unto their fathers; 8. Yet they obeyed not, nor inclined their ear, but walked every one in the imagination of their evil heart: therefore will I bring upon them all the words of this covenant which I commanded them to do: but they did them not. 9. And the Lord said unto me, A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah, and among the inhabitants of Jerusalem. 10. They are turned back to the iniquities of their forefathers, which refused to hear my words; and they went after other gods to serve them: the house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken my covenant, which I made with their fathers.

The prophet here, as prosecutor in God's name, draws up an indictment against the Jews, for wilful disobedience to the commands of their rightful Sovereign. For the more solemn management of this charge,

I. He produces the commission he had to draw up the charge against them; he did not take pleasure in accusing the children of his people, but God commanded him to speak it to the men of Judah, v. 1, 2. In the original it is plural; Speak ye this. For what he said to the elders, the same he saith to all his servants the prophets. They none of them said any other than what Moses, in the law, had said; to that therefore they must refer themselves, and direct the people; "Hear the words of this covenant; turn to your Bibles, be judged by them." Jeremiah must now proclaim this in the name of Judah and the sons of Jerusalem; that all may hear, for all are concerned. All the words of reproof and conviction, which the prophets spake, were grounded upon the words of the covenant, and agreed with that; "And therefore hear these words, and understand by them upon what terms you stood with God at first; and then, by comparing yourselves with the covenant, you will soon be aware upon what terms you now stand with him."

II. He opens the charter upon which their state was founded, and by which they held their privileges. They had forgotten the tenure of it, and lived as if they thought that the grant was absolute, and that they might do what they pleased, and yet have what God had promised; or as if they thought that the keeping up of the ceremonial observances was all that God required of them. Jeremiah before shows them, with all possible plainness, that the thing God insisted upon was, obedience, that was better than sacrifice. He said, Obey my voice: (v. 4.) and again, (v. 7.) "Obey my voice; own God for your Master, give up yourselves to him as his subjects and servants; attend to all the declarations of his mind and will, and make conscience of complying with them. Do my commandments, not only in some things, but according to all which I command you; make conscience of moral duties especially, and rest not in those that are merely ritual; hear the words of the covenant, and do them."

1. This was the original contract between God and them, when he first formed them into a people. It was what he commanded their fathers, when he brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, (v. 4.) and again, v. 7. He never intended to take them under his guidance and protection upon any other terms. This was it that he required from them, in gratitude for the great things he did for them when he brought them from the iron furnace. Therefore he redeemed them out of the service of the Egyptians, which was perfect slavery, that he might take them into his own service, which is perfect freedom, Luke i. 74, 75.

2. This was not only laid before them then, but it was with the greatest importunity imaginable pressed upon them, v. 7. God not only commanded it, but earnestly protested to, their fathers, when he brought them into covenant with himself. Moses incited it again and again, by precept upon precept, and line upon line.

3. This was made the condition of the relation between them and God, which was so much their honour and privilege; "So shall ye be my people, and I will be your God; I will own you for mine, and thou shalt be my people," which intimates that if they refused to obey, they could no longer claim the benefit of the relation.

4. It was upon these terms that the land of Canaan was given them for a possession; Obey my voice, that I may perform the oath sworn to your fathers, to give them a land flowing with milk and honey, v. 5. God was ready to fulfil the promise; but then they must fulfil the condition if not, the promise is void, and it is just with God to turn them out of possession. Being brought in upon their good behaviour, they had no wrong done them if they were turned out upon their ill behaviour. Obedience was the rent reserved by the lease, with a power to re-enter for non-payment.

5. This obedience was not only made a condition of the blessings promised, but was required under the penalty of a curse. This is mentioned first here, (v. 3.) that they might, if possible, be awakened by the terrors of the Lord; Cursed be the man, though it were but a single person, that obedieth not the words of this covenant, much more when it is the body of the nation, that rebels. There are curses of the covenant as well as blessings; and Moses set before them not only life and good, but death and evil; (Deut. xxxv. 15.) so that they have their warning given them of the fatal consequences of disobedience.

6. Lest this covenant should be forgotten, and, because out of mind, should be thought out of date, God had from time to time called them to remember it, and by his servants the prophets had made a continued claim of this rent; so that they could not plead, in excuse of their non-payment, that it had never been demanded; from the day he brought them out of Egypt to this day, (and that was near one thousand years,) he had been, in one way or other, at sundry times and in divers manners, protesting to them the necessity of obedience. God keeps an account how long we have enjoyed the means of grace, and how powerful those means have been; how often we have been not only spoken to, but shown our duty.

7. This covenant was consented to; (v. 5.) Then answered I, and said, Amen, so be it, O Lord. These are the words of the prophet, expressing either, (1.) His own consent to the covenant for himself, and his desire to have the benefit of it. God promised Canaan to the obedient; "Lord," says he, "I take thee at thy word, I will be obedient; let me have mine inheritance in the land of promise, of which Canaan is a type." Or, (2.) His God's will, and good wish, that his people might have the benefit of it; "Amen; Lord, let them still be kept in possession of this good land, and not turned out of it; make good the promise to them." Or, (3.) His people's consent to the covenant; "Then answered I, in the name of the people, So be it." Taking it in this sense, it refers to the declared consent which the people then gave a type of the consent which they would have to make the whole of it, except of it, when they said, All that the Lord shall say unto us we will do, and will be obedient, but to the penalties, when they said Amen to all the curses upon mount Ebal. The more solemnly we have engaged ourselves to God, the more reason we have to hope that it will be perpetual; and yet here it did not.

III. He charges them with breach of covenant, such a breach as amounted to a forfeiture of their charter, v. 8. God had said again and again, by his law and by his prophets, "Obe, my voice, do as you are bidden, and all shall be well;" yet they obeyed not; and because they were resolved not to submit their souls to God's commandments, they would not so much as incline their ears to them, but got as far as they could out of call; They caused every one in the imagination of their evil heart, followed their own inventions; every man did as his fancy and humour led him, right or wrong, lawful or unlawful, in their conversations; see ch. vii. 24. What then can they expect, but to fall under the curse of the covenant, since they would not comply with the commands and conditions of it? Therefore I will bring upon them all the words of this covenant, all the threatenings contained in it, because they did not what they were commanded. Note, The words of the covenant shall not find God guilty of injustice in cursing them. Your obedience qualify yourselves for the blessings of it, we shall by our disobedience bring ourselves under the curses of it.

That which aggravated their defection from God, and rebellion against him, was, that it was general, and as it were by consent, v. 9, 10. Jeremiah himself saw that many lived in open disobedience to God, and, but the thing was worse than he thought of; A conspiracy is found among them, by him whose eye is upon the hidden works of darkness. There is a combination against God and religion, a dangerous design formed to overthrow God's government, and bring in the pretenders, the counterfeit deities. This intimates that they were willful and deliberate in wickedness; they rebelled against God, not through inscuitancy, but presumptuously, and with a high hand; that they were subtle and ingenious in wickedness, and carried on their plot against religion, with a great deal of art and management; that they were linked together in the design, and, as is usual among conspirators, engaged to stand by one another in it, and to live and die together; they were resolved to go through with it. A cursed conspiracy! O that there were not the like in our day! Observe, 1. What the conspiracy was; they designed to overthrow divine revelation, and set that aside, and persuade people not to hear, not to heed, the words of God. They did all they could to derogate from the authority of the scriptures, and to lessen the value of them; they designed to draw people after other gods to serve them, to consult them as their oracles, and make them the resort to their gods; they would be brought to carry God's name in their country, and to be their gods; they shall be their god, a light within their god, an infallible judge their god, saints and angels their gods, the god of this or the other nation shall be theirs; thus, under several disguises, they are in the same confederacy against the Lord and against his anointed. 2. Who were in the conspiracy; one would have expected to find some foreigners ring leaders in it. No, (4.) The inhabitants of Jerusalem are in conspiracy with the men of Judah; city and country agree in this, however they may differ in other things. (2.) Those of this generation seem to be in conspiracy with those of the foregoing generation, to carry on the war from age to age against religion; They are turned back to the iniquities of their forefathers, and are risen up in their stead, a generation of evil men. They seem to have inherited the wickedness of their forefathers. (3.) Judah and Israel, the kingdom of the ten tribes and the two that were often at daggers-drawing one with another, were yet in a conspiracy to break the covenant God had made with their fathers, even with the heads of all the twelve tribes. The whole family of Israel began the revolt, but the house of Judah soon came into the conspiracy. Now what else could be expected, but that God should take severe methods, both for the chastising of these conspirators, and the crushing of this conspiracy; for none ever hardened his heart thus against God, and prospered. He that rolls this stone, it will return upon him.

11. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape; and though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them. 12. Then shall the cities of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem, go and cry unto the gods unto whom they offer incense: but they shall not save them at all in the time of their trouble. 13. For according to the number of thy cities were thy gods, O Judah; and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up altars to that shameful thing, even altars to burn incense unto Baal. 14. Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up a cry or prayer for them: for I will not hear them in the time that they cry unto me for their trouble.

15. What hath my beloved to do in my house, seeing she hath wrought lewdness with many, and the holy flesh is passed from thee? when thou doest evil, then thou rejoicest. 16. The Lord called thy name, A green olive-tree, fair, and of goodly fruit; with the noise of a great tumult he hath kindled fire upon it, and the branches of it are broken. 17. For the Lord of hosts that planted thee hath pronounced evil against thee, for the evil of the house of Israel, and of the house of Judah, which they have done against themselves, to provoke me to anger, in offering incense unto Baal.

This paragraph, which contains so much of God's wrath, might very well be expected to follow upon that which goes next before, which contained so much of his people's sin. When God found so much evil among them, we cannot think it strange if it follows, Therefore I will bring evil upon them, (v. 11.) the evil of punishment for the evil of sin; and there is no remedy, no relief, the decree is gone forth, and the sentence will be executed.

1. They cannot help themselves, but will be found too weak to contest with God's judgment; it is evil for which they shall not be able to escape, or to go forth out of, by any evasion whatsoever. Note, Those that will not submit to God's government, shall not be able to escape his wrath. There is no fleeting from his justice, nor avoiding his cognizance. Evil pursues sinners, and entangles them in snares out of which they cannot extricate themselves.

2. Their God will not help them, his providence shall no way favour them; Though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them. In their affliction they will seek the God whom before they slighted, and cry to him whom before they would not vouchsafe to speak to. But how can they expect to speed? For he has plainly told us, that he will turn away his ears from hearing the law, as they did, (v. 8. For they inclined not their ear,) even his prayer shall be an abomination to him; as the word of the Lord was now to them a reproach.

3. Their idols shall not help them. v. 12. They shall go and cry to the gods to whom they now offer incense, and put them in mind of the costly services wherewith they had honoured them, expecting they should now have relief from them, but in vain: they shall be sent to the gods whom they served; (Judg. x. 4. Deut. xxxii. 37, 38.) and what the better? They shall not save them at all, shall do nothing toward them, nor give them any prospect of it; they shall not afford them least relief, or mitigation of their trouble. It is God only that is a Friend at need, a present powerful Help in time of trouble. The idols cannot help themselves; how then shall they help their worshippers? Those that make idols of the world and the flesh, will in vain have recourse to them in a day of distress, and in the time of evil: the idols could have done any real kindness to their worshippers, they would have done it for this people, who had renounced the true God to embrace them, had multiplied them according to the number of their cities; (v. 13.) may, in Jerusalem, according to the number of their streets; suspecting both their sufficiency and their readiness to help them, they must have many, lest a few would be scarce; and though they have them dispersed in every corner, lest they should be carried off of the world when the Lord had occasion for them. In Jerusalem, the city which God had chosen to put his name there, publicly in the streets of Jerusalem, in every street, they had altars to that shameful thing, that shame, even to Baal, which they ought to have been ashamed of, with which they did reproach the Lord, and bring confusion upon themselves. But now in their distress, their moisture dries, and they are left to stand in no stead. Note, Those that will not be ashamed of their commission of sin as a wicked thing, will be ashamed of their expectations from sin as a fruitless thing.

4. Jeremiah's prayer shall not help them; (v. 14.) what God had said to him before, (ch. vii. 16.) he says again, Pray not thou for this people. This is not designed for a command to the prophets, so much as for a threatening to the people, that they should have no benefit by the prayers of their friends for them. God would give no encouragement to the prophets to pray for them, would not stir up the Spirit of prayer, but cast a dam upon it; would put it into their hearts to pray, not for the body of the people, but for the remnant among them, to pray for their election; but the assurance they had of deliverance from the temporal judgments that were coming upon them: and what other prayers were put up for them, should not be heard. Those are in a sad case indeed, that are cut off from the benefit of prayer. "I will not hear them when they cry, and therefore do not thou pray for them." Note, Those that have so far thrown themselves out of God's favour, that he will not hear their prayers, cannot expect benefit by the prayers of others for them.

5. The profecition they make of religion shall stand them in no stead, v. 15. They were originally God's beloved, his spouse, he was married to them by the covenant of peculiarity; even the unbelieving Jews are said to be beloved for the fathers' sakes, Rom. xi. 28. As such, they had a place in God's house, they had seats in the temple, and access to the courts of his temple, they partook of God's altar, the sacrifice of the flesh of their peace-offerings, here called the holy flesh, which God had the honour of, and they had the comfort of. This they gloried in, and trusted to. What harm could come to these who were God's beloved, who were under the protection of his house? Even when they did evil, yet they reposed and relied on this, made a mighty noise of this. And when their evil was, (so the margin reads it,) when trouble came upon them, they rejoiced in this, and made this their confidence; but their confidence would deceive them, for God has rejected it, they themselves have forfeited the privileges they so much boasted of. They have wrought lewdness with many, have been guilty of spiritual whoredom, have worshipped many idols. And therefore, (1.) God's temple will yield them no protection; it is fit that the adulteress, especially when she has so often repeated her whoredom, and is grown so impudent in them, and irreclaimable, should be put away, and turned out of doors. (2.) What is my beloved to do in my house? She is a scandal to it, and therefore it shall no longer be a shelter to her. This will be a comfort to us when the holy flesh is passed from us; an inward principle of grace will make up the want of the outward means of grace. But we unto us if the departure of the holy flesh be accompanied with the departure of the Holy Spirit.

6. God's former favours to them shall stand them in no stead, v. 16, 17. Their remembrance of them shall lose no comfort to them and of their troubles, and God's remembrance of them shall be no argument for their relief. (1.) It is true, God had done great things for them; that people had been favourites above any people under the sun, they had been the darlings of heaven, God had called Israel's name a green olive-tree, and had made them so, for he miscalls nothing; he had planted them, (v. 17.) had formed them into a people, with all the advantages of peace and plenty; they should have been here, a fruitful and flourishing people, so good was their law, and so good was their land. One would think no other, than that a people so planted, so watered, so cultivated, should be, as the olive-tree is, even green, in respect both of piety and prosperity, Ps. lli. 8. God called them fair, and of goodly fruit; both good for food, and pleasant to the eye; both amiable and serviceable to God and man, for with the greenness and fatness of the olive both are honoured, Judg. ix. 10. (2.) It is as true, that they have done evil things against God; he had planted them a green olive, a good olive, but they were degenerated into a wild olive, Rom. xi. 17. Both the house of Israel and the house of Judah had done evil, had provoked God to anger in burning incense unto Baal, and in setting up for themselves high places; and the supreme God beside the promised Messiah; nay, setting up other gods in competition with the true and living God, for they had gods many, as also lards many, as (v. 17.) (3.) When they have conducted themselves so ill, they can expect no other than that, notwithstanding what good he has done to them, and designed for them, he should now bring upon them the evil he has pronounced against them. He that made them will not save them. He that planted this green olive-tree, and expected fruit from it, finding it barren and grown wild, has kindled fire upon it, to turn it as it stands; for, being without fruit, it is twice dead, plucked up by the roots, (Judg. 12.) it is cut down, and cast into the fire, the fittest place for trees that cumber the ground, Matthew vii. 19. It is a Loft, the first of the lofty boughs, (so the word signifies,) are broken, are broken down, both princes and priests cut off.

And thus it proves, that the evil done against God, to provoke him to anger, is really done against themselves, they wrong their own souls; God is out of their reach, but they ruin themselves. See ch. vii. 19. 18. And the Lord hath given me knowledge of it, and | know it, then thou shew-or impression upon his spirit, that he might save himself, as the king of Israel did upon the notice Eliah gave him vi. 10. Thus came to know it God shows him their doings; and such were their devices, that the discovering of them was the defeating of them. If God had not let him know his own danger, it would have been improved by unreasonable men against the reputation of his predictions, that he who foretold the ruin of his country, could not foresee his own peril and avoid it. So when shall I die of my prophetic gifts, he suffers no man to do them wrong; all the rage of their enemies cannot prevail to take them off till they have finished their testimony. God knows all the secret designs of his and his people's enemies, and can, when he pleases, make them known; A bird of the air shall carry the voice.

3. His appeal to God hereupon, v. 20. His eye is to God as the Lord of hosts that judges righteously. It is matter of comfort to us, when men deal unjustly with us, that we have a God to go to, who does and will plead the cause of injured innocence, and appear against the injurious. God's justice, which is a terror to the wicked, is a comfort to the godly. His eye is to him, as the God that tries the reins of the heart, and sees what is in the man; what are his thoughts and intents. He knew the integrity that was in Jeremiah's heart, and that he was not the man they represented him to be. He knew the wickedness that was in their hearts, though ever so cunningly concealed and disguised. Now, (1.) He prays judgment against them; "Let me see thy vengeance on them, do justice between me and them in a day of their visitation." Some think there was something of human frailty in this prayer; at least, Christ has taught us another lesson, both by precept and by pattern, which is, to pray for our persecutors. Others think it comes from a pure zeal for the glory of God, and a pious prophetic indignation against men that were, by profession, priests, the Lord's ministers, and yet were so desperately wicked as to fly out against one that did them no harm, merely for the service he did to God. This petition was a prediction that he should see God's vengeance on them. (2.) He refers himself entirely to the judgment of God; "Unto thee have I revealed my cause; to thee I have committed it, not asking or expecting to interest any other in it." Note, It is our comfort, when we are wronged, that we have God to go to, and our causes to commit to him, with a resolution to acquiesce in his definitive sentence; to subscribe, and not prescribe, to him.

4. Judgment given against his persecutors, the men of Anathoth. It was to no purpose for him to appeal to the courts of Jerusalem, he could not have right done him there, the priests there would stand by the priests at Anathoth, and rather second them than discomfit them; but God will therefore take cognizance of the cause himself, and we are sure that his judgment is according to truth.

Here is, (1.) Their crime recited, on which the sentence is grounded, v. 21. They sought the prophet's life, for they forbade him to prophesy upon pain of death; they were resolved either to silence him by the priests at Anathoth, and rather second them than discomfit them; but God will therefore take cognizance of the cause himself, and we are sure that his judgment is according to truth.

In this chapter, we have, 1. The prophet's humble complaint to God of the success that wicked people had in their wicked practices, (v. 1, 2.) and his appeal to God concerning his own integrity, v. 3. 2. A proof that God would, for the sake of the public, bring the wickedness of the wicked to an end, v. 3, 4. 11. God's rebuke to the prophet for his unmeasurableness at his present troubles, bidding him prepare for greater, v. 5, 6. 3. A lamentation of the present deplorable state of the Israel of God, v. 7. 9. 13. 14. An intimation of mercy to God's people, in a denunciation of wrath against their neighbours that helped forward their affliction, that they should be plucked out, but with a promise, that if they would at last join themselves with the people of God, they should come in sharers with them in their privileges, v. 14, 17.

1. Righteous art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee; yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments: Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper? wherefore are all they that deal very treacherously?

2. Thou hast planted them; yea, they have taken root: they grow; yea, they bring forth fruit: thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins.

3. But thou, O Lord, knowest me; thou hast seen me, and tried my heart toward thee; pull them out like sheep for the slaughter, and prepare them for the day of slaughter.

4. How long shall the land mourn, and the herbs of every field wither, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein? the beasts are consumed, and the birds; because they said, He shall not see our last end.

5. If thou hast run with the footmen, and they have wearyed thee, then how canst thou contend with horses? and if in the land of peace, wherein thou trustest, they wearyed there, then how will thou do in the swelling of Jordan? 6. For even thy brethren, and the house of thy father, even they have dealt treacherously with thee; yea, they have called a multitude after thee: believe them not, though they speak fair words unto thee.

The prophet doubts not but it would be of use to others, to know what had passed between God and his soul; what temptations he had been assaulted with, and how he had got over them; and therefore he here tells us,

1. What liberty he humbly took, and was graciously allowed him, to reason with God concerning his judgment, v. 1. He is about to plead with God, not to quarrel with him, or find fault with his providence, but to lay down a truth of proper importance to himself, which he resolves to abide by in managing this argument; Righteous art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee. Thus he arms himself against the temptation wherewith he was assaulted, to envy the prosperity of the wicked, before he entered into a parley with it. Note, When we are most in the dark concerning the meaning of God's dispensations, we must still resolve to keep up right thoughts of God, and must be confident of this, that he never did, nor ever will do, the least wrong to any of his creatures; even when his judgments are unsearchable as a great deep, and altogether unaccountable, yet his righteousness is as conspicuous and unmoveable as the great mountains, Ps. xxxvi. 6.

Though sometimes clouds and darkness are round about him, yet justice and judgment are always the habitation of his throne, Ps. lxxvi. 2. When we find it hard to understand particular providences, we must have recourse to general truths as our first principles, and abide by them: however it be, the Lord is righteous; see Ps. lxxxiii. 1. And we must acknowledge it to him, as the prophet here, even when we plead with him, as those that have no thoughts of contending, but of learning, being fully assured that it is the solemn will when he speaks.

Note, However we may see cause for our own inconvenience to plead with God, yet it becomes us to own that, whatever he says or does, he is in the right.

II. What it was in the dispensations of Divine Providence, that he stumbled at, and that he thought would bear a debate. It was that which has been a temptation to many wise and great men, and such a one as they had hardly got over. 1. They see the designs and projects of wicked people successful: The way of the wicked prospers; they compass their malicious designs, and gain their point. 2. They see their affairs and concerns in a good posture: They are happy, happy as the world can make them, though they deal treacherously, very treacherously. 3. Their riches and pros- perity are chiefly meant, (as appears, v. 2.) who assemble in their good professions, and depart from their good beginnings and good promises, and in both they deal treacherously, very treacherously. 4. It has been said, that men cannot expect to prosper who are unjust and dishonest in their dealings; but these deal treacherously, and yet they are happy.

He shows (v. 2.) both their prosperity, and their abuse of their prosperity. (1.) God had been very indulgent to them, and they were got beforehand in the world; "They are planted in a good land, a land flowing with milk and honey, and thou hast planted them; nay, thou didst cast out the heathen to plant them," Ps. xlv. 2.—xxxvii. 8. Many a tree is planted, that yet never grows, or comes to any thing; but they have taken root, their prosperity seems to be confirmed and settled; they take root in the earth, for there they fix themselves, and thence they draw the sap of all their satisfaction. Yet the tree is not too thick, nor can their success last long; they grow, yea, they bring forth fruit; their families are built up, they live high, and spend at a great rate; and all this was owing to the benignity of the Divine Providence, which smiled upon them, Ps. lxxiii. 7. (2.) Thus God had favoured them, though they had dealt treacherously with him: Thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins. Thus was a dark, insensible manner, for he spoke by the Spirit of prophecy, without which it is not safe to charge men with hypocrisy, whose appearances are plausible. Observe, [1.] Though they cared not for thinking of God, nor had any sincere affection to him, yet they could easily persuade themselves to speak of him frequently, and with an air of seriousness. Piety from the teeth outward is no difficult thing. Men speak the things that are not Israelites indeed. [2.] Though they had on all occasions the name of God ready in their mouth, and accustomed themselves to those forms of speech that savoured of piety, yet they could not persuade themselves to keep up the fear of God in their hearts. The form of godliness should engage us to keep up the power of it; but with them it did not.

III. What comfort he had in appeasing to God concerning his own integrity; (v. 5.) But thou, O Lord, knowest me. Probably, the wicked men he complains of were forward to reproach and censure him, (ch. xviii. 18.) in reference to which, this was his comfort, that God was a Witness of his integrity. God knew he was not such a one as they were, who had God near in their mouths, but far from their reins; nor such a one as they took him to be, and represented him, a deceiver and false prophet; they that thus abused him did not know him; (1 Cor. ii. 8.) "But thou, O Lord, knowest me, though they think me not worth their notice." 1. Observe what the matter is, concerning which he appeals to God, Thou knowest my heart toward thee. Note, It is a comfort to us that our hearts are good or bad, according as they are, or are not, toward God; and this is that therefore concerning which we should examine ourselves, that we may approve ourselves to God. 2. The cognizance to which he appeals; "Thou knowest me better than I know myself, not by hearsay or report, for thou hast seen me, not with a transient glance, but thou hast tried me heart and reins;" that is, thou hast tried the springs and springs of my heart, how they work, and the ends thereof; and thou hast seen the whole course and turn of my heart, as it had stood under the most strict scrutiny. Note, The God with whom we have to do, perfectly knows how our hearts are toward him. He knows both the guile of the hypocrite, and the sincerity of the upright.

IV. He prays that God would turn his hand against these wicked people, and not suffer them to prosper always, though they were hearts that are as clear and exact and certain, as if he had made the most strict scrutiny. Note, The God with whom we have to do, perfectly knows how our hearts are toward him. He knows both the guile of the hypocrite, and the sincerity of the upright.
would be pulled out of their land, because they had brought ruin upon the land, and the longer they continued in it, the more it became populous; (v. 4.) "How long shall the land mourn (as it does under the judgments of God inflicted upon it) for the wickedness of them that dwell therein? Lord, shall they prosper themselves, that ruin all about them?" 1. See here what the judgment was, which the land was now groaning under; The herbs of every field wither, the grass is burnt up, and all the products of the earth, the beasts are consumed, and the birds, 1 Kings xviii. 5. This was the effect of a long drought, or want of rain, which happened, as it should seem, at the latter end of Josiah's reign, and the beginning of Jehoiakim's; it is mentioned, ch. iii. 3.—viii. 13.—ix. 10, 12. and more fully afterwards, ch. xiv. If they would have been brought to repentance by this lesser judgment, the greater had been prevented. Now, why was it that this fruitful land was turned into barrenness, but for the wickedness of them that dwell therein? Ps. civ. 34. Therefore the prophet prays that these wicked people might die for their own sin, and that the whole nation might not suffer for it. 2. See here what was the language of their wickedness. They said, He shall not see our latter end; and him shall we glory in. The root of hypocrisy, therefore God is far from their reins, though near in their mouth, because they say, How doth God know? Ps. lxxxiii. 11. Job xxxii. 13. He knows not what way we take, nor what it will end in. Or, Jeremiah shall not see our last end; whatever he pretends, when he asks us what shall be in the end hereof, he cannot himself foresee it. They look upon him as a false prophet. Or, "Whatever it is, he shall not live to see it, for we will be the death of him," ch. xl. 21. Note, (1.) Men's setting their latter end at a great distance, or looking upon it as uncertain, is at the bottom of all their wickedness, Lam. i. 9. (2.) The whole creation groans under the burthen of the sin of man, Rom. vii. 22. It is for this, that the earth mourns; (so it may be read;) curved is the ground for thy sake. V. He acquaints us with the answer God gave to those complaints of his, v. 5. 6. We often find the prophets admonish, whose business it was to admonish others, as Isa. viii. 11. Ministers have lessons to learn, as well as lessons to teach, and must themselves hear God's voice, and preach to themselves. Jeremiah complained much of his wickedness, and of that, notwithstanding that, they prospered. Now this seems to be an answer to that complaint. 1. It is allowed that he had cause to complain; (v. 6.) "Thy brethren, the priests of Anathoth, that are of the house of thy father, who ought to have protected thee, and pretended to do so, even they have dealt treacherously with thee, have been false to thee, have designedly done thee all the mischief they could; they have called a multitude after thee, raised the mob upon thee, and incensed the common people against thee, to whom they have endeavoured, by all arts possible, to render thee despicable or odious, while at the same time they pretend that they had no design to persecute thee, or deprive thee of thy heritage, and, under colour of which, they did believe, though they spoke fair words to thee. They seem to be thy friends, but are really thine enemies." Note, God's faithful servants must not think it at all strange, if their foes be those of their own house, (Matth. x. 36.) and if those they expect kindness from, prove such as they can put no confidence in, Mic. vii. 5. 2. Yet he is told that he carried the matter too far. (1.) He laid the unkindness of his countrymen too much to heart. They wearied him, because it was in a land of peace wherein he trusted, v. 5. It was very grievous to him to be thus hated and abused by his own kinsmen. This was exhibited in a manner by the spirit was sunk and overwhelmed with it, so that he was in great agitation and distress about it. Nay, he was discouraged in his work by it, began to be weary of prophesying, and to think of giving it up. (2.) He did not consider that this was but the beginning of his sorrow, and that he had sorcerers trials yet before him; and whereas he should endeavour by a constant bearing up under trials, to rise higher; this would be for his greater, by his uncessing under this he did but unfold himself for what further lay before him: If thou hast run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, and run thee quite out of breath, then how wilt thou contend with horses? If the injuries done him by the men of Anathoth made such an impression upon him, what would he do when the princes and chief priests at Jerusalem should set upon him with their power, as they did afterward, ch. xx. 2. —xxxii. 2. If he was so soon tired in a land of peace, where there was little noise or peril, what would he do in the steeplings of Jordan, when that overflowed all its banks, and frightens even lions out of their thickets? ch. xlix. 19. Note, [1.] While we are in this world, we must expect troubles and difficulties. This is a race, a warfare, and a battle. [2.] God's usual method being to begin with lesser trials, it is our wisdom to expect greater than any we have yet met with. We may be called out to contend with horsemen, and the sons of Anak may perhaps be reserved for the last encounter. [3.] It highly concerns us to prepare for such trials, and to consider what we should do in them. How shall we preserve our integrity and peace, when we come to the steeplings of Jordan? [4.] In order to our preparation for further and greater trials, we are concerned to approve ourselves well in present lesser trials, to keep up our spirits, keep hold of the promise, keep in our way, with our eye upon the prize, so run that we may obtain it. Some good interpreters understand this as spoken to the people, who were very secure, and fearless of the threatened judgments. If they have been so humbled and impoverished by lesser calamities, wasted by the Assyrians; if the Ammonites and Meabites, who were their brethren, and with whom they were in league, if these proved false to them, (as undoubtedly they would,) then how would they be able to deal with such a powerful adversary as the Chaldeans? Would they be able to rise up their head against that invasion which should come like the steeplings of Jordan? 7. I have forsaken my house, I have left my heritage; I have given the dearly-beloved of my soul into the hand of her enemies. 8. My heritage is unto me as a lion in the forest; it crieth against me: therefore have I hated it. 9. My heritage is unto me as a speckled bird; the birds round about are against her; come ye, assemble all the beasts of the field, come to devour. Many pastors have destroyed my vineyard, they have trodden my portion under foot, they have made my pleasant portion a desolate wilderness. 11. They have made it desolate, and being desolate it mourneth unto me; the whole land is made desolate, because no man layeth it to heart. 12. The spoilers are come upon all high places of.
through the wilderness: for the sword of the Lord shall devour from the one end of the land even to the other end of the land: no flesh shall have peace. 13. They have sown wheat, but shall reap thorns; they have put themselves to pain, but shall not profit; and they shall be ashamed of your revenue, because of the fierce anger of the Lord.

The people of the Jews are here marked for ruin.

1. God is here brought in, falling out with them, and leaving them desolate; and they could never have been undone, if they had not provoked God to it. The only mercy which God left, was a prophet to acquaint them with the miseries they had provoke d against their sin, in returning him hatred for his love, and their misery, in throwing themselves out of the favour of one that had such a kindness for them, and to justify God in his dealings with them: he sought not occasion against them, but if they would have conducted themselves tolerably, he would have made the best of them, for they were the beloved of his soul; but they had conducted themselves so that they had provoked him to give them into the hand of their enemies, to leave them unguarded, an easy prey to those that bore them ill will. But what was the quarrel God had with a people that had been so long dear to him? Why, truly, they were degenerated. 1. They were become like beasts of prey, which nobody loves, but every hand avoids and gets as far off from as they can; (v. 8.) Mine heritage is unto me as a lion in the forest. Their sins cry to heaven for vengeance as loud as a lion roars. Nay, they cry out against God in the threatenings and slaughter which they breathe against his prophets that speak to them in his name; and what is said and done against them, God takes as said and done against himself. They blaspheme his name, oppose his authority, and bid defiance to his justice, and so they put against God as a lion in the forest. They were the sheep of God's pasture, become barbarous and ravenous, and as ungovernable as lions in the forest, therefore I hated them: for what delight could the God of love take in a people that were now become as roaring lions and raging beasts, fit to be taken and shot at, as a vexation and torment to all about them? 2. They were become like birds of prey, and therefore no longer a peace in God's house, where neither beasts nor birds of prey were admitted to be offered in sacrifice; (v. 9.) Mine heritage is unto me as a bird with talons; (so some read it, and so the margin:) they are continually pulling and pecking at one another, they have by their unnatural contencions made their country a cock-pit. Or, as a speckled bird, dyed, or sprinkled, or bedewed, with the blood of his prey; this bird of prey is not content blood was Jerusalem's measure-filling sin, and hastened their ruin, not only as it provoked God against them, but as it provoked their neighbours likewise; for those that have their hand against every man, shall have every man's hand against them; (Gen. xvi. 12.) and so it follows here, the birds round about are against her. Some make her a speckled, fried, or motley bird, upon the account of their mix ing the superstitious customs and usages of the heathen with divine institutions in the worship of God; they were fond of a party-coloured religion, and thought it made them fine, when really it made them odious. God's turtle-dove is no speckled bird. 11. The enemies are here brought in falling upon them, and laying them desolate. And some think it is upon this account that they are compared to a speckled bird, because fowls make a noise about a bird of an odd, unusual colour. God's people are, among the birds of the air, creatures most pleasing in his eyes, but the enemies of God's people are, as it were, birds of prey, like speckled and motley ones, that kindled this fire among them, and made their enemies so furious. And who may stand before him, when he is angry? (2.) It is their sin that has... made God their Enemy, particularly their incorrigible under his rebukes; (v. 11.) The land mourns unto me, the country that lies desolate does, as it were, pour out its complaint before God, and himself under his hand; but the inhabitants are so senseless and stupid, that none of them lays it to heart; they do not mourn to God; but are unaffected with his displeasure, while they very greedily, they go upon shames them. Note, When God's hand is lifted up, and men will not see, it shall be laid on, and they shall be made to feel, Is. xxvi. 11.

4. See how unable they shall be to fence against it; (v. 13.) "They have sown wheat, they have taken a deal of pains for their own security, and promised themselves great matters from their endeavours, but it is all in vain; they shall reap thorns, that shall prove very grievous and vexatious to them; instead of helping themselves, they shall but make themselves more uneasy: they have put themselves to pain, both with their labour, and with their expectations, but it shall not profit; they shall not prevail to extricate themselves out of the difficulties into which they have plunged themselves. They shall be ashamed of your revenues, that they have depended upon, upon their own strength, and not upon God, and particularly upon their ability to bear the charges of it." Money is the sines of war; they thought they had enough of that, but shall be ashamed of it; for their silver and gold shall not profit them in the day of the Lord's anger.

14. Thus saith the Lord against all mine evil neighbours, that touch the inheritance which I have caused my people Israel to inherit; Behold, I will pluck them out of their land, and pluck out the house of Judah from among them. 15. And it shall come to pass, after that I have plucked them out I will return, and have compassion on them, and will bring them again, every man to his heritage, and every man to his land. 16. And it shall come to pass, if they will diligently learn the ways of my people, to swear by my name, The Lord liveth; (as they taught my people to swear by Baal;) then shall they be built in the midst of my people. 17. But if they will not obey, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation, saith the Lord.

The prophets sometimes, in God's name, delivered messages both of judgment and mercy to the nations that bordered on the land of Israel; but here is a message to them all in general, who had in their turns been one way or other injurious to God's people, had either oppressed them, or triumphed in their being oppressed. Observe,

1. What the quarrel was that God had with them. They were his evil neighbours, v. 14. evil neighbours to his church, and what they did against it he does not as himself, and therefore called them his evil neighbours, that should have been neighboursly to Israel, but were quite otherwise. Note, It is often the lot of good people to live among bad neighbours, that are unkind and provoking to them; and it is bad indeed when they are all so. These evil neighbours were the Moabites, Ammonites, and Amalecites, enemies that had been evil neighbours to Israel in helping to debauch them, and draw them from God; therefore God calls them his evil neighbours, and now they helped to make them desolate, and joined with the Chaldeans against them. It is just with God to make those the instruments of trouble to us, whom we have made instruments of sin. That which God lays to their charge, is, that they have meddled with the inheritance which I have caused my people Israel to inherit; they unjustly seized what was none of their own: nay, they sacrilegiously turned that to their own use, which was a great indignity to God's peculiar people. He that said, "Touch not mine inheritance; it is at your peril if you do." Not only the persons, but the estates, of God's people are under his protection.

II. What course he would take with them. 1. He would break the power they had got over his people, and force them to make restitution; I will pluck out the house of Judah from among them. He would be a great favour to God's people, who had either been taken captive by them, or, when they fied to them for shelter, had been detained and made prisoners; but it would be a great mortification to their enemies, who would be like a lion disappointed of his prey. The house of Judah either cannot, or will not, make any bold struggles toward their deliverance. 2. He would bring them out of their land, and take them out of the hands of their enemies, who were detaining them, as he plucked Israel out of Egypt. 2. He would bring upon them the same calamities that they had been instrumental to bring upon his people; I will pluck them out of their land. Judgment began at the house of God, but did not end there. For as he had wasted the land of Israel, turned his hand against their evil neighbours, and was a scourge to them.

III. What mercy God had in store for such of them as would join themselves to him, and become his people, v. 15, 16. They had drawn in God's backsliding people to join with them in the service of idols. If now they would be drawn by a returning people to join with them in the service of the true and living God, they should not only have their enmity to the people of God forgiven them, but the distance which they had been kept at before should be removed, and they should be received to stand upon the same level with the Israel of God; this had its accomplishment in part, when, after the return out of captivity, many of the people of the lands that had been evil neighbours to Israel, became Jews; and was to have its full accomplishment in the conversion of the Gentiles to the faith of Christ. Let not Israel, though injured by them, be imammable toward them, for God is not; After that I have plucked them out in justice for their sins, and in jealousy for the honour of Israel, I will return, will change my way, and have compassion on them. Though, being heathen, they can lay no claim to the mercies of the covenant, yet they shall have benefit by the compassions of the Creator, who will notwithstanding look upon them as the work of his hands. Note, God's controversies with his creatures, though they cannot be disputed, may be accommodated. Those who (as these here) have not only sinned, but enmity to God's people, by wicked works, may be reconciled, Col. i. 21.

Observe here,

1. What were the terms on which God would show favour to them. It was always provided, that they would diligently learn the ways of my people. That is, in general, the ways that they walk in, when they serve me, as my people, not the crooked ways into which they have turned aside, the ways which my people are directed to take. Note, (1.) There are good ways that are peculiarly the ways of God's people, which, however they may differ in the choice of their paths, they are all agreed to
The ways of holiness and heavenly-mindedness, of love and peaceableness, the ways of prayer and sabbath-sanctification, and diligent attendance on instituted ordinances—these, and the like, are the ways of God's people. (2.) Those that would have their lot with God's people, and their names in their book, and walk in them; must observe the rule they walk by, and conform to that rule, and the steps they take by that rule, and go forth by those footsteps. By an intimate conversation with God's people they must learn to do as they do. (3.) It is impossible to learn the ways of God's people as they should be learned, without a great deal of care and pains; we must diligently observe these ways, and diligently oblige ourselves to walk in them; look diligently (Heb. xii. 15.) and work diligently, Luke xiiii. 24. In particular, they must learn to give honour to God's name, by making all their solemn appeals to him. They must learn to say, The Lord liveth, to own him, and to adore him, and to abide by his judgment; as they taught my people to swear by Baal. It was bad enough that they did themselves swear away their own souls, and the souls of others, but worst of all that they taught God's own people, who had been better taught: and yet, if they will at length reform, they shall be accepted. Observe, [1.] We must not despair of the conversion of the worst; no, not of those who have been instrumental to pervert and debauch others; even they may be brought to repentance, and, if they be as I shall, shall be accepted in the Lord. [2.] Those whom we have been industrious to draw to that which is evil, when God opens their eyes and ours, we should be as industrious to follow in that which is good. It will be a holy revenge upon ourselves to become pupils to those in the way of duty, to whom we have been tutors in the way of sin. [3.] The conversion of the deceived may prove a happy occasion of the conversion even of the deceivers. Thus they that fell together into the ditch, are sometimes plucked together out of it. 2. What should be the tokens and fruits of this favour, when they return to God, and God to them. (1.) They shall be restored to, and re-established in, their own land; (v. 13.) I bring them again, every man to his heritage. The same hand that plucked them up, shall plant them down. (2.) They shall be brought back to the spiritual privileges of God's Israel; If they will be towedly, and learn the ways of my people, will conform themselves to the rules, and confine themselves to the restraints, of my family, then shall they be built in the midst of my people. They shall not only be brought among them, to have a name and a place in the house of the Lord, where there was a court for the Gentiles, but they shall be built among them, they shall unite with them, the former censities shall be slain, they shall be both edified and settled among them. See Isa. Ivi. 5.—7. Note, They that diligently learn the ways of God's people, shall enjoy the privileges and comforts of his people. IV. What should become of those that were still walled up to their evil ways, yea through many of their last end like theirs, must be left among them; (v. 17.) If they will not obey, if any of them continue to stand out, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation, that family, that particular person, saith the Lord. Those that will not be ruled by the grace of God, shall be ruined by the justice of God. And if disobedient nations shall be destroyed, much more disobedient churches, from whom better things are expected.

CHAP. XIII.

Still the prophet is attempting to awaken this secure and stubborn people to repentance, by the consideration of the judgments of God that were coming upon them. He is to tell them, 1. By the sign of a girdle spoiled, that their pride should be stained, v. 1. 11. By the sign of bottles filled with wine, that their judgments should be blasted, v. 12. 14. III. In consideration hereof, he is to call them to repent, and humble themselves, v. 15. 21. IV. He is to convince them that it is for their obstinacy and incorrigibility that the judgments of God are so prolonged, and brought to extremity, v. 22. 27.

1. Tlius saith the Lord unto me, Go and get thee a linen girdle, and put it upon thy loins, and put it not in water. 2. So I got a girdle, according to the word of the Lord, and put it on my loins. 3. And the word of the Lord came unto me the second time, saying, 4. Take the girdle that thou hast got, which is upon thy loins, and arise, go to Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock. 5. So I went, and hid it by Euphrates, as the Lord commanded me. 6. And it came to pass after many days, that the Lord said unto me, Arise, go to Euphrates, and take the girdle from thence, which I commanded thee to hide there. 7. Then I went to Euphrates, and digged, and took the girdle from the place where I had hid it; and, behold, the girdle was marred, it was profitable for nothing. 8. Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 9. Thus saith the Lord, After this manner will I mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem. 10. This evil people, which refuse to hear my words, which walk in the imagination of their heart, and walk after other gods to serve them, and to worship them, shall even be as this girdle, which is good for nothing. 11. For as the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, so have I caused to cleave unto me the whole house of Israel, and the whole house of Judah, saith the Lord; that they might be unto me for a people, and for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory: but they would not hear.

Here is, 1. A sign, the marring of a girdle which the prophet had worn for some time, by hiding it in a hole of a rock, near the river Euphrates. It was usual with the prophets to teach by signs, that a stupid, unthinking people might be brought to consider and believe, and be affected with what was thus set before them. 1. He was to wear a linen girdle for some time, v. 1, 2. Some think he wore it under his clothes, because it was linen, and it is said to cleave to his loins, v. 11. It should rather seem to be worn upon his clothes, for it was worn for a name and a praise, and probably was a fine sash, such as officers wear, and such as are commonly worn at this day in the eastern nations. He must not put it in water, but wear it as it was, that it might be the stronger, and less likely to rot. Linen wastes almost as much with washing as with wearing. Being wet, it was the more stiff, and less apt to ply; yet he must make a shift to wear it. Probably, it was very fine linen, which will wear long without washing. The prophet, like John Baptist, was none of those that wore soft clothing, and therefore it would be the more strange to see him with a linen girdle on, who probably used to wear a leathern one. 2. After he had worn this linen girdle for some time, he must go and hide it in a hole of a rock, (v. 4.) by the water's side, where, when the water was high, it would be wet, and when it fell, would grow dry again, and by that means would soon rot, something like a brick, which the Egyptians would twist or break. 3. After many days, he must look for it, and should find it quite spoiled, gone all to rags, and good for nothing, v. 7. It has been of old a question among interpreters, whether this was duly done, so as to be seen and observed by the people, or only in a dream or vision, as so to go no further than the prophet's own mind. It seems hard to imagine that the girdle should be sent on two long journeys as to the river Euphrates, each of which would take him up some weeks time, when he could so ill be spared at home: for that reason, most incline to think the journey, at least, was only in vision, like that of Ezekiel, from the captivity in Chaldea to Jerusalem, (Ezek. viii. 3.) and from whence back to Chaldea, ch. xli. 24. The explanation of this sign is given only to the prophet himself (v. 8.) not to the people, the sign not being public. But there being it, is probable, at that time, great conveniencies of travelling between Jerusalem and Babylon, and some part of Euphrates being not so far off, but that it was made the utmost order of the kind of promise, (Josh. i. 4.) I see no inconvenience in supposing the prophet to have made two journeys thus, as he expressly said, He did as the Lord commanded him; and thus gave a signal proof of his obsequiousness to his God, to shame the stubbornness of a disobedient people; the toll of his journey would be very proper to signify both the pains they took to corrupt themselves with their idolatries, and the sad fatigue of their captivity; and Euphrates being the river of Babylon, where he was taken captive, and the place of their bondage, was a most material circumstance in this sign.
II. The thing signified by this sign. The prophet was willing to be at any cost and pains to affect this people with the word of the Lord: ministers must spend, and be spent, for the good of souls.
We have the explanation of this sign, v. 9.—11.
1. The people of Israel had been to God as this bird is with two respects. (1.) He had been the innocent companion and companion of himself; As the girdle cleaves very close to the loins of a man, and surrounds him, so have I caused to cleave to me the houses of Israel and Judah. They were a people near to God; (Ps. cxlviii. 14.) they were his own, a peculiar people to him, a kingdom of priests that had access to him above other nations. He caused them to cleave to him by the law he gave them, the prophets he sent among them, and the favours which in his providence he showed them. He required their stated attendance in the courts of his house, and the frequent ratification of their covenant with him by sacrifices: thus they were made so to cleave to him, that one would think they could never have been parted. (2.) He had herein designed his own honour; when he took the girdle himself, he was, for a people, it was that they might be to him for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory; as a girdle is an ornament to a man, and particularly the curious girdle of the ephod was to the High Priest for glory and for beauty. Note, Those whom God takes to be to him for a people, he intends to be to him for a praise. [1.] It is their duty to honour him by doing justly, loving mercy, and walking therein at his glory, and thus adorning their profession. [2.] It is their happiness that he reckons himself honoured in them and by them. He is pleased with them, and glories in his relation to them, while they behaved themselves as becomes his people. He was pleased to take it among the titles of his honour to be the God of Israel, even a God to Israel, 1 Chron. xvii. 24. In vain do we pretend to be to God for a people, if we be not to him for a praise.
2. They had by their idolatries and other iniquities左手allow themselves from him, thrown themselves (the distances of God, he being in the heavens, and him, buried themselves in the earth, and foreign to the earth too, mingled themselves among the nations, and were so spoiled and corrupted, that they were good for nothing; they could no more be to God, as they were designed, for a name and a praise, for they would not hear either their duty to do it, or their privilege to value it; They refused to hear the words of God, by which they might have been kept still cleaving close to him; They walked in the imagination of their heart, wherever their fancy led them; and denied themselves no gratification they had a mind to, particularly in their worship; They would not cleave to God, but walked after other gods, to serve them, and to worship them; they detected upon the gods of the heathen nations that lay themselves to Babylon, so that they were quite spoiled for the service of their own God, and were as this bird, this rotten girdle, a disgrace to their profession, and not an ornament. A thousand pities it was, that such a girdle should be so spoiled, that such a people should be so wretchedly degenerate.
3. God would by his judgments separate them from him, send them into captivity, deface all their boasts, and their excellency, set the foreign people should be like a fine girdle gone to rags, a worthless, useless, despicable people. God will after this manner mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem. He would strip them of all that which was the matter of their pride, of which they boasted, and in which they trusted; it should not only be sullied and stained, but quite destroyed, like a linen girdle in their excellency, so that they should be like a fine girdle gone to rags, a worthless, useless, despicable people. God will after this manner mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem, there the temple was, and the royal courts, and therefore those citizens were more proud than the inhabitants of other cities. God takes notice of the degrees of men's pride, the pride of some,
and the great pride of others; and he will mar it, be willing to stain and deface it, He fall, for God, resists the proud. He will either mar the pride that is in us, that is, mortify it by his grace, make us ashamed of it, and, like Hezekiah, humble us for the pride of our hearts, the great pride, and cure us of it, great as it is; (and this marring of the pride will be the making of the soul; happy for us, if by humbling providences our hearts be humbled;) or else, he will mar the thing we are proud of. Parts, gifts, learning, power, external privileges, if we are proud of these, it is just with God to blast them; even the temple, when it became Jerusalem's pride, was marred and laid in ashes. It is the honour of God to look upon every one that is proud, and abuse him.
12. Therefore shalt thou speak unto them this word, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Every bottle shall be filled with wine;
and they shall say unto thee, Do we not certainly know that every bottle shall be filled with wine? 13. Then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will fill all the inhabitants of this land, even the kings that sit upon David's throne, and the priests, and the prophets, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, with drunkenness. 14. And I will dash them one against another, even the fathers and the sons together, saith the Lord; I will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, but destroy them. 15. Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud: for the Lord hath spoken. 16. Give glory to the Lord your God, before he cause darkness, and before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and while ye look for light, he turn it into the shadow of death, and make it gross darkness. 17. But if ye will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret places for your pride; and mine eyes shall weep sore, and run down with tears, because the Lord’s flock is carried away captive. 18. Say unto the king and to the queen, Humble yourselves, sit down; for your principalities shall come down, even the crown of your glory. 19. The cities of the south shall be shut up, and none shall open them; Judah shall be carried away captive all of it, it shall be wholly carried away captive. 20. Lift up your eyes, and behold them that come from the north; where is the flock that was given thee, thy beautiful flock? 21. What will thou say when he shall punish thee? (for thou hast taught them to be captains, and as chief over thee;) shall not sorrows take thee, as a woman in travail?

Here is, 1. A judgment threatened against this people, that would quite intoxicate them. This doom is pronounced against them in a figure, to make it the more taken notice of, and the more affecting, (v. 12.) Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Every bottle shall be filled with wine; those that by their sins have made themselves vessels of wrath fitted to destruction, shall be filled with the wrath of God, as a bottle is with wine: and as eyes were never prepared for glory, so shall they be full of the fury of the Lord, (Isa. li. 20.) and they shall be brittle as bottles; and as old bottles into which new wine is put, they shall burst and be broken to pieces; (Matt. ix. 17.) or, They shall have their heads as full of wine as bottles are; for so it is explained, v. 13. They shall be filled with drunkenness; that is, the people, for whom I speak, is a common proverb among them, applied divers ways; but they, not being aware of the prophet’s meaning in it, ridiculed him for it; “Do we not certainly know that every bottle shall be filled with wine? What strange thing is there in that? Tell us something that we did not know before.” Perhaps they were thus touchy with the prophet, because they apprehended this to be a reflection upon them for their drunkenness, and probably, it was in part so intended. They love flagons of wine, Hos. iii. 1. They made their king sick with bottles of wine, Hos. vii. 5. Their watchmen were all for wine, Isa. liv. 13. They love their false prophets, that prophesied to them of wine, (Mic. ii. 11.) that bid them be drunk, that they would never want their bottle to make them so. “Well,” says the prophet, “you shall have your bottles full of wine, but not such wine as you desire.” They suspected that he had some mystical meaning in it, which prophesied no good concerning them, but evil; and he owns that so he had. What he meant was this,

1. That they should be as giddy as men in drink. A drunken man is fitly compared to a bottle or cask full of wine; for when the wine is in, the wit, and wisdom, and virtue, and all that is good for any thing, are out. Now God threatens, (v. 13.) that they shall all be filled with drunkenness; they shall be all of confusion in their counsels, shall falter in all their talk, and stagger in all their motions; they shall not know what they say or do, much less what they should say or do. They shall be sick of all their enjoyments, and throw them up as drunken men do, Job xx. 15. They shall fall into a slumber, and be utterly unable to help themselves, and, like men that have drunk away their reason, shall lie at the mercy, and control of every devil which he that went about them, and, everything else, for all about them. And this shall be the condition not of some among them; (if any had been sober, they might have helped the rest;) but even the kings that sit upon the throne of David, that should have been like their father David, who was wise as an angel of God, shall be thus intoxicated. Their priests and profhetes too, their false profhetes, that pretend to guide them, were as indulgent of their lusts, and therefore were just as much deprived of their senses, as any other. Nay, and all the inhabitants both of the land and of Jerusalem were as far gone as they. Whom God will destroy, he infatuates.

2. That, being giddy, they should run upon one another. The cup of the wine of the Lord’s fury shall throw them not only into a lethargy, so that they shall not be able to help themselves another, but into a perfect frenzy, so that they shall do mischief to themselves and one another; (v. 14.) I will dash a man against his brother. Not only their drunken follies, but their drunken frays, shall help to ruin them. Drunken men are often quarrelsome, and upon that account they have soo and sorrows; (Prov. xxiii. 29, 30.) so their sin is their punishment; it was so here. God sent an spirit into families and neighbourhoods, (as Judg. ix. 23.) which made them jealous of, and spiteful towards, one another; so that the fathers and sons went together by the ears, and were ready to pull one another to pieces, which made them all an easy prey to the common enemy. This decree against them being gone forth, God says, I will not pity, nor spare, nor destroy them; for they will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, but destroy one another; see Hab. ii. 15, 16.

II. Here is good counsel given, which, by being taken, might prevent this desolation. It is, in short, to humble themselves under the mighty hand of God. If they will hearken and give ear, this is that which God has to say to them, Be not proud, v. 15. This was one of the sins for which God had a controversy with them; (v. 9.) let them mortify and forsake this sin, and God will let fall his controversy. “Be not proud; when God speaks to you by his prophets, do not think yourselves too good to be taught; be not scornful, be not wilful, let not your hearts rise against the word, nor slight the messengers that bring it you. When God is coming forth against you, if you break against his providence, and (by the time he speaks,) be not secure when he threatens, be not impatient when he strikes, for pride is at the bottom of both.” It is the great God that has spoken, whose authority is incontestable, whose power is irresistible; therefore bow to what he says, and be no proud, as you have been.

They must not be proud, for 1. They must serve God, and study how to do him honour; “Give glory to the Lord your God, and not to your idols, not to other gods.” Give him glory, by confessing your sins, owning yourselves guilty before him, and accepting the punishment of your iniquity, v. 16. Give him glory by a sincere repentance and reformation. Then, and not till then, we begin to live as we should, and to some good purpose, when we begin to give glory to the Lord our God; to make his honour your chief end, and to seek it accordingly. "Do this quickly, while your space to repent is continued to you; before he cause darkness, before he bring his judgments upon you, which you will see no way of escaping." Note, Darkness will come from the feet of the dead vial, and return, to give glory to God. When those that by the fourth vial were scourched with heat, regremented, not, to give glory to God, the next vial filled them with darkness, Rev. xvi. 9, 10. The aggravation of the darkness here threatened, is, (1.) That their attempts to escape shall hasten their ruin; Their feet shall stumble when they are making all the haste they can, to the darkness, the darkness shall fall, and be unable to get up again. Note, Those that think to outrun the judgment of God, will find their road impassable; let them make the best of their way, they can make nothing of it, the judgments that pursue them will overtake them; their way is dark and stiophery, Ps. xxxv. 6. And therefore, before it comes to that extremity, it is our wisdom, not to give glory to him, and so make our peace with him; to fly to his mercy, and then there will be no occasion to fly from his justice. (2.) That their hopes of a better state of things will be disapppinted; While ye look for light, for comfort and relief, he will turn it into the shadow of death, which is very dismal and terrible, and make it gross darkness, like that of Egypt, when Pharaoh continued to think of his cattle. So might those that might be felt. The expectation of impenitent sinners perishes, when they die, and think to have it satisfied.

2. They must abase themselves, and take shame to themselves; the prerogative of the king and queen will not exempt them from this; (v. 18.) "Say to the king and queen, that, great as they are, they must humble themselves by true repentance, and so give both glory to God and a good example to their subjects." Note, Those that are exalted above others in the world, must humble themselves before God, who is higher than the highest, and to whom kings and queens are accountable. They must humble themselves, and sit down; sit down, and consider what is coming; sit down in the dust,
and lament over themselves, so as to mitigate the wrath of God will otherwise take an effectual course to humble them. "Your principalities shall come down, the honour and power on which you value yourselves, and in which you confide, even the crown of your glory, your goodly or glorious crown; when you are led away captives, where will your principality and all the badges of it be then?
Blessed be God, there is a crown of glory, which those shall wear who do humble themselves, that shall never come down.

III. This counsel is enforced by some arguments,
if they continue proud and unhumbled.
1. It will be the prophet's unspeakable grief; (v.
13.) "If you will not hear, he will not submit to the word, but continue refractory, not only mine eye, but my soul, shall grieve in secret places." Note,
The sinners of people, in refusing to hear the word of God, will be a heart-breaking to their poor ministers, who know something of the terrors of the Lord and the worth of souls, and are so far from desiring, that they tremble at, the thoughts of the death of sinners. His grief for it was undissembled, his soul wept; and void of affection, for his pride, and secret places, where no eye saw him but his who is all eye. He would mingle his tears not only with his public preaching, but with his private devotions. Nay, thoughts of their case would make him melancholy, and he would become a perfect recluse. It would grieve him, (1.) To see their sins unrepented of; "My soul shall weep for your pride, your haughtiness, and stubbornness, and vain confidence." Note, The sins of others should be matter of sorrow to us. We must mourn for that which we cannot mend, and mourn the more for it, because we cannot mend it. (2.) To see their ca-Denity past redress and remedy; "Mine eyes shall weep sore, not so much because my relations, friends, and neighbours are threatened, but because the Lord's flock, his people, and the sheep of his pasture, are carried away captive." That should always grieve us most, by which God's honour suffers, and the interest of his kingdom is weakened.
2. It will be their own inevitable ruin, v. 19.—21.
(1.) The land shall be laid waste; The cities of the south shall be shut up. The cities of Judah lay in the southern part of the land of Canaan, and shall be straitly besieged by the enemy, so that there shall be no going in and out; or they shall be deserted by the inhabitants, that there shall be none to go in and out. Some understand it of the cities of Egypt, which was south from Judah; the places
there, whence they expected succours, shall fail them, and they shall find no access to them.
(2.) The inhabitants shall be carried away into a foreign country, there to live in slavery; Judah shall be carried away captive. Some were already carried off, which they hoped might serve to answer the prediction, and that the residue should still be left; no, it shall be carried away all of it;
God will make a full end with them, it shall be publicly carried away. So it was in the last captivity under Zedekiah, because they persisted in their resistance. (3.) The enemy was now at hand, that should do this; (v. 20.) "Lift up your eyes. I see them upon their march, and you may, if you will, behold them that come from the north, from the land of the Chaldeans; see how fast they advance, how fierce they appear." Upon this, he addresses himself to the king. This way, (because the pronouns are fe-méins, to the city or city,) v. 17. "What will you do now with the people which is committed to your charge, and which you ought to protect?
Where is the flock that was given thee, thy beauteous flock? Whither canst thou take them now for shelter? How can they escape these raving wolves?" Magistrates must look upon themselves as shepherds, and those that are under their charge as their flock, which they must take care of, and must give an account of; they must take delight in them as their beautiful flock, and consider what to do for their safety in times of public danger. Masters of families, who neglect their children, and suffer them to perish for want of a good education, and ministers who neglect their people, should think it, daily, they hear God putting this question to them, Where is the flock that was given thee to feed, that beauteous flock? It is starved, it is left exposed to the beasts of prey. What account will you give of them when the Chief Shepherd shall appear?
(2.) What have you to object against the equity of God's proceedings? What will thou say when he shall visit upon thee the former days? Thou canst not, if you will, say he is just in all that is brought upon thee. They that flatter them, they will not have of him any hopes of impunity, what will they say! What tension will cover their faces, when they shall find themselves deceived, and that God punishes them!
(3.) What thoughts will you now have of your own folly, in giving the Chaldeans such power over you, by seeking to them for assistance, and joining in league with them? They brought against them, against thyself to be captives, and to become the head." Hezekiah began, when he showed his treasures to the ambassadors of the King of Babyl-ON, tempting him thereby to come and plunder him.
Those who, having a God to trust to, court foreign alliances, and confide in them, do but make rods for themselves, and teach their neighbours how to become their masters. [4.] "How will you bear the trouble that is at the door? Shall not sorrows take thee as a woman in travail? Sorrows which thou canst not escape or put off, extremity of sorrows which are more than those of a woman in travail, that they were not expected before, and that there is no man-child to be born, the joy of which shall make them afterward to be forgotten."

22. And if thou say in thy heart, Wherefore come these things upon me? For the greatness of thine iniquity are thy skirts discovered, and thy heels made bare. 23. Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard its spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil. 24. Therefore will I scatter them as the stubble that passeth away by the wind of the wilderness. 25. This is thy lot, the portion of thy measures from me, saith the Lord; because thou hast forgotten me, and trusted in falsehood. 26. Therefore will I discover thy skirts upon thy face, that thy shame may appear. 27. I have seen thine adulteries, and thy neighings, the lewdness of thy whoredom, and thine abominations on the hills in the fields. Wo unto thee, O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be?

Here is,
1. Ruin threatened, as before, that the Jews shall go into captivity, and fall under all the miseries of beggary and bondage; shall be stripped of their clothes, their skirts discovered, for want of upper garments to cover them, and their heels made bare, for want of shoes, v. 22. Thus they used to deal with prisoners taken in war, when they drove them into captivity, naked and barefoot, Isa. xxx. 4. Being thus carried off into a strange country, they shall be scattered there, as the stubble that is blown away by the wind of the wilderness, and nobody is concerned to bring it together again, v. 24. If the stubble be taken from the fire, it shall be carried away by the wind. If one judgment do not the work, another, shall with those that by sin have made themselves as stubble. They shall be stripped of all their ornaments, and exposed to shame, as harlots that are carted, v. 26. They made their pride appear, but God will make their shame appear; so that those who have boasted on them, shall be ashamed of them.

11. An inquiry made by the people into the cause of this ruin, v. 22. Thou wilt say in thine heart, (and God knows how to give a proper answer to what men say in their hearts, though they do not speak it out; Jesus knowing their thoughts, replied to them, Matth. ix. 4.) "Wherefore came these things upon me? The question is supposed to come into the heart. 1. Of a sinner quarrelling with God, and refusing to receive correction; they could not see that they had done any thing which might justly provoke God to be thus angry with them. They durst not speak it out; but in their hearts they thus charged God with unrighteousness, as if he had laid upon them more than was meet. They seek for the cause of their calamities, when, if they had not been wilfully blind, they might easily have seen it. Or, 2. Of a sinner returning to God. If there come but a penitent thought into the heart at any time, (saying, What have I done? ch. viii. 6. Wherefore am I in affliction? Why dost God contend with me?) God takes notice of it, and is ready by his Spirit to impress the conviction, that, sin being discovered, it may be repented of.

11. An answer to this inquiry. God will be justified when he speaks, and will oblige us to justify him; and therefore will set the sin of sinners in order before them. Do they ask, Wherefore come these things upon us? Let them know, it is all owing to themselves.

1. It is for the greatness of their iniquities, v. 22. God does not take advantage against them for small faults; no, the sins for which he now punishes them are of the first rate, very heinous in their own nature, and highly aggravated; for the multitude of thine iniquity; so it may be read. Sins of every kind, and in all, an arm of flesh. In Egypt and Ethiopia we think we are more in danger from the multitude of our lesser sins than from the heinousness of our greater sins; of both we may say, Who can understand his errors?

1. It is for their obstinacy in sin; their being so long accustomed to it, that there was little hope left of their being reclaimed from it, v. 23. Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard its spots? Then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil. 24. Therefore will I scatter them as the stubble that passeth away by the wind of the wilderness. 25. This is thy lot, the portion of thy measures from me, saith the Lord; because thou hast forgotten me, and trusted in falsehood. 26. Therefore will I discover thy skirts upon thy face, that thy shame may appear. 27. I have seen thine adulteries, and thy neighings, the lewdness of thy whoredom, and thine abominations on the hills in the fields. Wo unto thee, O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be?
4 It is for their idolatry, their spiritual whoredom, that sin which is of all other most provoking to the jealous God. Therefore they are exposed to a shameful calamity, (v. 26) because they have been guilty of a shameful iniquity, and yet are shameless in it; (v. 27.) 2 I have seen thine adulteries, thine inordinate fancy for strange gods, which thou hast been impatient for the gratification of, but hast even weighed after it; even the lewdness of thy whoredoms, thine impudence and insatiableness in them, thy eager worshipping of idols on the hils in the fields, upon the high places. This is that for which a wo is denounced against thee, O Jerusalem; nay, and many woes.

V. Here is an affectionate expostulation with them, to clear the whole matter. Though it was adjusted next to impossible for them to be brought to do good, (v. 23.) yet, while there is life there is hope, and therefore still he reasons with them, to bring them to repentance, v. 27. 1. He reasons with them concerning the thing itself; Will thou not be made clean? Note, It is the great concern of those who are polluted by sin, to be made clean by repentance and faith, and universal reformation. The reason why sinners are not made clean, is, because they will not be made clean; and herein they act most unreasonably. "Will thou not be made clean? Surely thou wilt at length be persuaded to wash thee, and make thee clean, and be so wise for thyself." 2. Concerning the time of it; When shall it once be? Note, It is an instance of the wonderful grace of God, that he desires the repentance and conversion of sinners, and thinks the time long till they are brought to it; but it is an instance of the wonderful folly of sinners, that they put that off from time to time, which is of such absolute necessity, that, if it be not done some time, they are certainly undone for ever. They do not say that they will never be cleansed, but not yet; they will defer it to a more convenient season, but cannot tell us when it shall once be.

CHAP. XIV.

This chapter was penned upon occasion of a great drought, for want of rain. This judgment began in the latter end of Josiah's reign, but, as it should seem, continued in the beginning of Jeconiah's reign. For long judgments are sent to give warning of greater coming, if not prevented by repentance. This calamity was mentioned several times before, but here, in this chapter, more fully. Here is, 1. A melancholy description of it, v. 1. 6. A plentiful account of it, and the calamity, and the return in mercy to their land, v. 7. 9. IV. A severe threatening, that God would proceed in his controversy, because they proceeded in their iniquity, v. 10. 12. IV. The prophet's excusing the people, by laying the blame on their false prophets; and the doom passed both on the deceivers and the deceived, v. 13. 16. V. Directions given to the prophet, instead of interceding for them, to lament them, yet he continued to intercede for them, v. 17. 22.

THE word of the Lord that came to Jeremiah concerning the drought. 2. Judah mourneth, and the gates thereof languish; they are black unto the ground; and the cry of Jerusalem is gone up. 3. And their nobles have sent their little ones to the waters: they came to the pits, and found no water; they returned with the vessels empty; they were ashamed and confounded, and covered their heads. 4. Because the ground is chapt, for there was no rain in the earth, the ploughmen were ashamed, they covered their heads. 5. Yea, the hind also calved in the field, and forsook it, because there was no grass. 6. And the wild ass did stand in the high places, they snuffed up the wind like dragons; their eyes did fail, because there was no grass. 7. O Lord, though our iniquities testify against us, do thou it for thy name's sake: for our backslidings are many; we have sinned against thee.

8. O the Hope of Israel, the Saviour thereof in time of trouble, why shouldst thou be as a stranger in the land, and as a wayfaring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night? 9. Why shouldst thou be as a man astonished, as a mighty man that cannot save? yet thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us, and we are called by thy name; leave us not.

The first verse is the title of the whole chapter: it does indeed all concern the drought, but much of it is the prophet's prayers concerning it; yet these are not unholy to be said, The word of the Lord which came to him concerning it; for every acceptable prayer is that which God finds in our hearts; nothing is our word that comes to him, but what is first his word that comes from him. In these verses, we have,

1. The language of nature lamenting the calamity. When the heavens were as brass, and distilled no dew, the earth was as iron, and produced no fruits; and then the grief and confusion were universal.

1. The people of the land were all in tears. Destroy their vines and their fig-trees, and you cause all their mirth to cease, Hos. ii. 11. 12. All their joy fails with the joy of harvest, with that of their corn and wine, v. 2. Judah mourns, not for the sin, but for the trouble; for the withholding of the rain, not for the withdrawing of God's favour. The gates thereof, all that go in and out at their gates languish, look pale, and grow feeble, for want of the necessary supports of life, and for fear of the further fatal consequences of this judgment. The gates, through which supplies of corn formerly used to be brought into their cities, now look melancholy; when, instead of that, the inhabitants are departing through them to seek for bread in other countries.

Even then that sit in the gates languish; they are black unto the ground, they go bare as mourners, and sit on the ground; as the poor beggars at the gates are black in the face, for want of food, blacker than a coal, Lam. iv. 8. Famine is represented by a black horse, Rev. vi. 5. They fall to the ground through weakness, not being able to go along the streets. The cry of Jerusalem (that is, of the inhabitants) is gone up; for the city is served by the field; or, of people from the parts of the land, who try met at Jerusalem to pray for rain; so some. But I fear it was rather the cry of their trouble, and the cry of their sin, than the cry of their prayer.

2. The great men of the land felt from this judgment; (v. 3.) The nobles sent their little ones to the water, perhaps their own children, having been forced to part with their servants, but by which they had not wherewithal to keep them; and being forced to train up their children, when they were little, to labour, especially in a case of necessity, as this was. We find Ahab and Obadiah, the king and the lord chamberlain of his household, in their own persons, seeking for water in such a time of distress as this was, 1 Kings xviii. 5. 6. Or, rather, their meager ones, their servants, and small officers, these they sent to seek for water, which there is no living without; but there was none to be found, they returned... with their vessels empty, the springs were dried up, when there was no rain to feed them; and then they their masters that sent them were ashamed and confounded at their disappointment. They would not be ashamed of their sins, nor confounded at the sense of them, but were unhumbled under the re-proaches of the word, thinking their wealth and dig-ity set them above repentance; but God took a contrary method; he did not rebuke them because they were so proud of, when they found that even on this side hell their nobility would not purchase them a drop of water to cool their tongue. Let our reading the account of this calamity make us thankful for the mercy of water, that we may not by the feeling of the calamity be taught to value it. What is most useful is most plentifully bestowed.

2. There is the language felt most sensibly and immediately from it; (v. 4.) The ploughmen were ashamed, for the ground was so parched and hard, that it would not admit the plough, even then when it was so chapt and cleft, that it seemed as if it did not need the plough. They were ashamed to be idle, for there was nothing to be done, and therefore nothing to be expected. The sluggard, that will not plough, as the hearth, lacketh bread; but the diligent husbandman, that cannot plough by reason of heat, is ashamed of his own affliction. See what an immediate dependence hus-bbandmen have upon the Divine Providence, which therefore they should always have an eye to, for they cannot plough or sow in hope, unless God water their furrows. Ps. lxv. 10.

3. The case was of the age of grace, a moment very pitiable, v. 5, 6. Man's sin brings those judgments upon the earth, which make even the inferior creatures groan; and the prophet takes notice of this as a pity, with God for mercy; Judah and Jerusalem have sinned, but the hinds and the wild asses, what have they done? The hinds are pleasant creatures, lovely and loving, and particularly tender of their young; and yet such is the extremity of the case, that, counter to the instinct of their nature, they leave their young, even when they are newly calved, and most need them, to seek for grass elsewhere; and if they can find none, they abandon them, because not able to suckle them. It grieved not the kind so much, that she had no grass for herself; as that she had none for her young; which will shame those who spend that upon their lusts, which they should prove, not for the support of the hinds and ass;
but the provision has brought forth her young, is said to have cast forth her sorrows, (Job xxxix. 3.) and yet she continues her cares; but, as it follows there, she soon sees the good effect of them, for her young ones in a little while grow up, and trouble her no more,
v. 4. But here the great trouble of all is, that she has nothing for them. Nay, one would be sorry even for the wild ass; (though they are creatures that none have any great affection for,) for though the bare land is made their dwelling at the best, (Job xxxix. 5, 6.) yet even that is now made too hot for them, so hot, that they cannot breathe in it, but they get to the highest places they can reach, where the air is coolest, and snuff up the wind like dragons, like those creatures which, being very hot, aver to suckle their young, and so does their strength, because there is no grass to support them. The same ass, that serves her owner, is welcome to his crib, (Isa. i. 3.) and has her keeping for her labour; when the wild ass that for the wild ass that whors the crying of the driver, is forced to live upon air, and is well enough served for not serving: he that will not labour, let him not eat.

4. This case, lamenting the iniquity, and complaining to God of the calamity. The people are not forward to pray, but the prophets here prays for them, and so excites them to pray for themselves, and puts words into their mouths, which they may make use of, in hopes to speed, v. 7—9. In this prayer,

1. Sin is humbly confessed. When we come to pray for the preventing or removing of any judgment, we must always acknowledge that we deserve it, and a thousand times worse. We cannot hope by extenuating the crime to obtain a mitigation of the punishment, but we must confound it, and threaten ourselves with it, as we are doing in our iniquities testify against us. Our sins are witnesses against us, and true penitents see them to be such.

They testify, for they are plain and evident, we can not deny the charge; they testify against us, for our conviction; which tends to our present shame and confusion, and our future condemnation. They dis-prove and overthrow all our pleas for ourselves; and so not only accuse us, but answer against us, on the boast of our own excellencies, and trust to our own righteousness, our iniquities testify against us, and prove us perverse. If we quarrel with God as dealing unjustly or unkindly with us in afflicting us, our iniquities testify against us, that we do him wrong;
for our backslidings are many, and our revolts are great, whereby we have sinned against thee; too uminous a treasure of knowledge are they, too heinous to be excused, for they are against thee.

2. Mercy is earnestly begged; "Though our ini-quities testify against us, and against the granting of the favour which the necessity of our case calls for, yet do thou it." They do not say particularly what they would have done; but, as becomes penitents and beggars, they refer themselves to God;
Do with us, as thou thinketh best; but, "Thou hast given
Not. Do thou it in this way, or at this time, but,
"Do thou it for thy name's sake; that which will be most for the glory of thy name." Note, Our best pleas in prayer are those that are fetched from the glory of God's own name; "Lord, do it, that thy mercy may be magnified, thy promise fulfilled, and thine interest in the world kept up; we have nothings to plead as their thoughts, but every" thingt in thee.
There is another petition in this prayer, and it is a very modest one, (v. 9.) "Leave us not, withdraw not thy favour and presence." Note, We should dread and deprecate God's departure from us, more than the removal of any of all our creature-comforts.

3. Their relation to God, their interest in him, and their expectations from him grounded thereupon, are most pathetically pleaded with him, 8, 9.

(1.) They look upon him as one they have reason to think should deliver them when they are in discredit, yea, though their iniquities testify against them; for in him mercy has often rejoiced against judgment. The prophet, like Moses of old, is willing to make the best he can of the case of his people, and therefore, though he must own, "that they have in their own account, that they have earnestly and distinctly before the face of God, that their Saviour in time of trouble, and they look not for salvation in any other; "Thou hast many a time been such, in the time of their extremity." Note, Since God is as people's all-sufficient Saviour, they ought to hope in him, in their greatest straits; and since he is their only Saviour, they ought to set their hope in him. They plead likewise, (v. 9.) In the special tokens of thy presence with us, thy temple, thine ark, thine oracles, and we are called by thy name, the Israel of God; and therefore we have reason to hope thou wilt not leave us; we are thine, save us. Thy name is called upon us, and therefore what evils we are under reflect dishonour upon them, as if they were not able to relieve thine own." The prophet had often told the people, that their profession of religion would not protect them from the judgments of God; yet here he pleads it with God, as Moses, Exod. xxxvi. 11. Even this may go far as to temporal punishments with a God of mercy. Valeat quantum valere fecit—Let the piles of wood that thou hast set be consumed. (2.) It therefore grieves them to think that he does not appear for their deliverance; and though they do not charge it upon him as unrighteous, they humbly plead it with him why he should be gracious, for the glory of his own name. For otherwise he will seem, 1. [1] Unconcerned for his own people; What will the Egyptians say? They will say, "Israel's Hope and Saviour does not mind them, he is become as a stranger in the land, that does not at all interest himself in its interests; his temple, which he called his rest for ever, is no more so, but he is in it as a wayfaring man, that turns aside to tarry but for a night in an inn, which he never inquires into the affairs of, nor is in any care about. Though God never is; yet he seems to be, as if he were one that is become as a stranger; Christ slept when his disciples were in a storm. 2. incapable of giving them any relief; the enemies once said, Because the Lord was not able to bring his people to Cannan, he let them perish in the wilderness; (Numb. xiv. 16.) so now they will say, "Either his wisdom or his power fails him; either he is as a man astonished, who, though he has the reason of a man, yet, because he has been astonished, is quite at a loss and at his wit's end; or, as a mighty man, who is overpowered by such as are more mighty, and therefore cannot save, though mighty, yet a man, and therefore having his power limited." Either of these would be a most insupportable reproach to the divine perfections; and therefore, why is the God that we are sure is in the midst of us become as a stranger? Why does the Almighty God seem as if he were no more than a mighty man; who, when he is astonished, though he would, yet cannot save? It becomes us in prayer to show ourselves concerned more for God's glory than for our own comfort: Lord, what wilt thou do unto thy great name? 10. Thus saith the Lord unto this people, They have loved to wander, they have not restrained their feet; therefore the Lord doth not accept them: he will now remember their iniquity, and visit their sins. 11. Then said the Lord unto me, Pray not for this people for their good. 12. When they fast, I will not hear their cry; and when they offer burnt-offering and an oblation, I will not accept them; but I will consume them by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence. 13. Then said I, Ah, Lord God! behold, the prophets say unto them, Ye shall not see the sword, neither shall ye have famine; but I will give you assured peace in this place. 14. Then the Lord said unto me, The prophets prophesy lies in my name; I sent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither spake unto them: they prophesy unto you a false vision and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart. 15. Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning the prophets that prophesy in my name, and I sent them not, yet they say, Sword and famine shall not be in this land; By sword and famine shall those prophets be consumed. 16. And the people to whom they prophesy shall be cast out in the streets of Jerusalem, because of the famine and the sword; and they shall have none to bury them, their wives, nor their sons, nor their daughters; for I will pour their wickedness upon them.

The dispute between God and his prophet, in this chapter, seems to be like that between the owner and the dresser of the vineyard concerning the barren fig-tree, Luke xiii. 7. The justice of the owner condemns it to be cut down, the clemency of the dresser intercedes for a reprieve; Jeremiah had been earnest with God, in prayer, to return in mercy to this people. Now here,

1. God overrules the plea which he had offered in their favour, and shows him that it would not hold. In answer to it, he says, Concerning this people, v. 10. He does not say, Concerning my table, for he shows them, because they had broken covenant with him. It is true, they were called by his name, and had the tokens of his presence among them; but they had sinned, and provoked God to withdraw. This the prophet had owned, and hoped to obtain mercy for them, notwithstanding this, through intercession and sacrifice; therefore God here tells him,

1. That they were not duly qualified for a pardon. The prophet had owned that their backslidings were many; and though they were so, yet there was hopes for them if they returned; but they show no disposition at all to return; they have wandered, and they have loved to wander; their backslidings have been their choice and their pleasure, which should have been their shame and pain, and therefore they will be their ruin. They cannot expect God should take up his rest with them, when they take such delight in going astray from him after their idols. It is not through necessity or inadvertency that they wander, but they love it. Sinners are wanderers from God; their wanderings forfeit God's favour, but it is their loving to wander, that quite cuts them off from it. They were told what their wanderings would come to, that they would wander and be consumed, and be cut off from the land, and all to ruin; and yet they have not taken warning, and refrained their feet. So far were they from returning to their God, that neither his prophets nor his judgments could prevail with them to give themselves the least check in a sinful pursuit. This is that for which God is now reckoning with them; when he denies them rain from heaven, he is removed from their iniquity and visiting their sins, that is it for which their fruitful land is thus turned into barrenness.

2. That they had no reason to expect that the God they had rejected should accept them; no, not though they betook themselves to fasting and prayer, and put themselves to the expense of burnt-offering and an oblation, which was designed to be an expression of faith in a Mediator; though all their prayers be thus enforced, and offered up in those vehicles that used to be acceptable, yea, because they do not proceed from humble, penitent, and renewed hearts, but still they love to wander, therefore I will not hear their cry, be it ever so loud; nor will I accept them, either their persons, or their performances. It had been long since declared, The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord; and those only are accepted that do well, Gen. iv. 7. They are all rejected, and shall all be rejected; and therefore the prophet's prayers for them, because they had not regarded his preaching to them. This is the meaning of that repeated prohibition given to the prophet, (v. 11.) Pray not thou for this people for their good, as before, ch. xi. 14.—vii. 16. This did not forbid him thus to express his good will to them, (Moses continued to intercede for Israel, after God had rejected them, Deut. iv. 29. 30.) but it forbade them to expect any good effect from it, as long as they turned away their ear from hearing the law. Thus was the doom of the imperient ratified, as that of Saul's rejection was by that word to Samuel, When wilt thou cease to mourn for Saul? It therefore follows, (v. 12.) I will consume them, not only by this famine, but by the further sore judgments of sword and pestilence; for God has many arrows in his quiver, and those that will not be convinced and reclaimed by one, shall be consumed by another.

II. The prophet offers another plea, in excuse for the people's obstinacy, and it is but an excuse, but he was willing to say whatever their case would bear; it is this, That the prophets, who pretended a commission from heaven, and built upon them, and flattered them with assurances of peace, though they went on in their sinful way, v. 13. He speaks of it with lamentation, "Alas, Lord God, the poor people seem willing to take notice of what comes in thy name, and those who in thy name tell them that they shall not see the sword or famine; and they say it as from thee, with all the gravity and confidence of prophets, I will continue upon them this place, and will give you assured peace here, peace of truth; I tell them the contrary, but I am one against many, and every one is apt to credit that which makes for them; therefore, Lord, pity and spare them, for their leaders cause them to err." This excuse had been of some weight if they had not had warning given them before, of false prophets, and rules by which to discover them; so that in all this they were wrong, it was entirely their own fault. But this teaches us, as far as we can with truth, to make the best of bad, and judge as charitably of others as their case will bear.

III. God not only overrules this, but condemns both the blind leaders and the blind followers to fall together into the ditch.

1. God disowns the flatteries; (v. 14.) They prophesy lies in my name. They had no commission from God to prophesy at all; I neither sent them, nor commanded them, nor spoke unto them. They never were employed to go on any errand at all from God, he never made himself known to them, much less by them to the people; never any word of the Lord came to them, no call, no warrant, no instruction, much less did he send them on this errand. It was entirely their own work, in which they were wrong, it was entirely their own fault. So men may flatter themselves, and Satan may flatter them, but God never does. It is a false vision, and a thing of naught. Note, What is false and groundless is vain and worthless. The vision that is not true, be it ever so pleasing, is good for nothing; it is the deceit of their heart, a spider's web spun out of themselves, and yet they set it up as a shelter to themselves, but it will be swept away in a moment, and prove a great cheat. They that oppose their own thoughts to God's word, (God indeed says so, but they think otherwise,) walk in the deceit of their heart, and it will be their ruin.

2. He passes sentence upon the flatterers, v. 15. As for the prophets who put this abuse upon the people, by telling them they shall have peace, and this affront upon God by telling them so in God's name; let them know that they shall have no peace themselves. They shall fall first by those very judgments which they have flattered others with the hopes of an exemption from. They undertook to warrant people, that sword and famine should not be in the land; but it shall soon appear how little their warrants are good for, when they themselves shall be cut off by sword and famine. How should they secure others, or foretell peace to them, when they cannot secure themselves, nor have such a foresight of their own calamities, as to get out of the way of them, Note, The sorest punishments await those who promise sinners impunity in their sinful ways.

3. He lays the flattered under the same doom, v. 16. The people to whom they prophesy lies, and who willingly suffer themselves to be thus imposed upon, they shall die by sword and famine. Note, The unbelief of the deceived, with all the falsehood of the deceivers, shall not make the divine threatenings of no effect; sword and famine will come, whatever they say to the contrary; and those will be least safe that are most secure. Impenitent sinners will not escape the damnation of hell, by saying that they can never believe there is such a thing; but will feel what they will not fear. It is threatened that this people shall not only fall by sword and famine, but be cut off, either so soon that they cannot afford it, or were hanged up in chains, as monuments of that divine justice which they set at defiance; their bodies shall be cast out, even in the streets of Jerusalem, which of all places, one would think, should be kept clear from such nuisances: there they shall lie unburied; their nearest relations, who should do them that last office of love, being either so soon that they cannot afford it, as were weakened with hunger that they are not able to attend it, or so overwhelmed with grief, that they have no heart to it, or so destitute of natural affection, that they will not pay them so much respect. Thus will God pour their wickedness upon them, the punishment of their wickedness; the full vials of God's wrath shall be poured on them, to which they have made themselves obnoxious. Note, When sinners are overwhelmed with trouble, they must in it see their own wickedness poured upon them. This refers to the wickedness both of the false prophets and of the people; the blind lead the blind, and both fall together into the ditch, where they will be miserable comforters one to another.

17. Therefore thou shalt say this word unto them, Let mine eyes run down with tears night and day, and let them not cease: for the virgin daughter of my people is broken with a great breach, with a very grievous blow. 18. If I go forth into the field, then behold the slain with the sword; and if I enter into the city, then behold them that are sick with famine! yea, both the prophet and the priest go about into a land that they know not. 19. Hast thou utterly rejected Judah? hath thy soul loathed Zion? why hast thou smitten us, and there is no healing for us? we looked for peace, and there is no good; and for the time of healing, and behold trouble! 20
We acknowledge, O Lord, our wickedness, and the iniquity of our fathers; for we have sinned against thee. 21. Do not abhor us, for thy name's sake; do not disgrace the throne of thy glory: remember, break not thy covenant with us. 22. Are there any among the vanities of the Gentiles that can cause rain? or can the heavens give showers? Art not thou he, O Lord our God: therefore we will wait upon thee; for thou hast made all these things.

The present deplorable state of Judah and Jerusalem is here made the matter of the prophet's lamentation, (v. 17, 18,) and the occasion of his prayer and intercession for them; (v. 19,) and I am willing to hope that the latter, as well as the former, was by divine direction, and that these words, (v. 17,) Thus shalt thou say unto them, (or concerning them,) of their hearing, refer to the intercessory, as well as to the lamentation, and then it amounts to a revocation of the directions given to the prophet not to pray for them, v. 11. However, it is plain, by the prayers we find in these verses, that the prophet did not understand it as a prohibition, but only as a discouragement, like that, I John v. 16. I do not say he shall pray for that, Here.

I. This prayer stands weeping over the ruins of his country; God directs him to do so, that, showing himself affected, he might, if possible, affect them with the foresight of the calamities that were coming upon them. Jeremiah must say it not only to himself, but to them too; Let mine eyes run down with tears, v. 17. Thus he must signify to them, that he certainly foresaw the sword coming, and another sort of calamity, famine, more grievous even than this, which they were now groaning under; this was in the country for want of rain, that in the city through the strictness of the siege. The prophet speaks as if he already saw the miseries attending the descent which the Chaldeans made upon them; The virgin daughter of my people, that is as dear to me as a daughter to her father, is broken with a great breach, with a very grievous breaking, v. 17, and upon them, and among them, as he has yet sustained; for, (v. 18,) in the field multitudes lie dead that were slain by the sword, and in the city multitudes lie dying for want of food. Doeful spectacles! The prophets and the priests, the false prophets that flattered them with their lies, and the wicked priests that persecuted the true prophets, these are now expelled their country, and go abroad either as prisoners and captives, whateversoever their conquerors lead them, or as fugitives and vagabonds, wherever they can find shelter and relief, in a land that they know not. Some understand it of the true prophets, Ezekiel and Daniel, that were carried to Babylon with the rest. The prophet's eyes must run down with tears day and night, in prospect of this, that the people might be broken, not only by the violence of the sword, but infinitely come, and would be a very woful day indeed, but that he was far from desiring it, and would as gladly have brought them messages of peace as their false prophets, if he might have had warrant from heaven to do it. Note, Because God, though he inflicts death on sinners, yet delights not in it, it becomes his ministers, though in his name they proclaim the death of sinners, yet sadly to lament it.

II. He stands up to make intercession for them; for who knows but God will yet return and repent? While there is life, there is hope, and room for prayer. And though there were many among them, who neither prayed themselves, nor valued the prophet's prayers, yet there were some who were better affected, would join with him in his devotions, and set the seal of their Amen to them. 1. He humbly expostulates with God concerning the present deplorableness of their case, v. 19. It was very sad, for, (1.) Their expectations from their God were too high; for they had exalted Judah to be his, but now, it seems, he has utterly rejected it, and cast it off; will not own any relation to it, or concern for it. However, they thought Zion was the beloved of his soul, was his rest for ever; but now his soul even loathes Zion, loathes even the services there performed, for the sake of the sins there committed. (2.) Then no marvel if all their hopes of peace, prosperity, and endless happiness, were smitten, and their wounds were multiplied, but there was no healing for them; they looked for peace, because after a storm there usually comes a calm, and fair weather after a long fit of wet; but there was no good, things went still worse and worse. They looked for a healing time, but could not gain so much as a breathing time; (3.) Beloved, nor able at all to get any one to enter. And is it so then? Hast thou indeed rejected Judah? Justly thou mightest. Has thy soul loathed Zion? We deserve it should. But wilt thou not at length in wrath remember mercy?

2. He makes a penitent confession of sin, speaking that language which they all should have spoken, though but few did; (v. 20,) We acknowledge our iniquities, the abounding wickedness of our land, and the iniquity of our fathers, which we have imitated, and therefore justly smart for. We know, we acknowledge that we have sinned against thee, and therefore thou art just in all that is brought upon us; but, because we confess our sins, we hope to find thee faithful and just in forgiving our sins.

3. He deprecates God's displeasure, and by faith appeals to his kindness; he begins, and promise, v. 21. His petition is, Do not abhor us; though thy hand be turned against us, let thy heart be so, nor let thy mind be alienated from us. They own God might justly abhor them, they had rendered themselves odious in his eyes; yet when they pray, Do not abhor us, they mean, Receive us into favour again. Let not thy soul abhor the Zion. 19. Let not our inexcuse he our abomination, 20. Then they magnify God, that he is not so severe to his people, for the sake of the honour of his scriptures, by which he has made himself known; his word, which he has magnified above all his name; Do not abhor us for thy name's sake, that name of thine by which we are called, and which we call upon. The honour of his sanctuary is pleaded; Lord, do not abhor us, for that will disgrace the throne of thy glory, that temple, which is called a glorious high throne from the beginning, ch. xvii. 12.) let not that which has been the joy of the whole earth, be made a hissing and an astonishment; we desire to have disgrace put upon us, but let it not be so as to reflect upon thyself; let not the desolations of the temple give occasion to the heathen to reproach him that used to be worshipped there, as if he could not, or would not, or might not, or would not here be worshiped; for all the judgments our sins had been too hard for him. Note, Good men lay the credit of religion, and its profession in the world, nearer their hearts than any private interest or concern of their own; and these are powerful pleas in prayer, which are fetched from thence, and great supports to faith. We may be sure that God will not disgrace the throne of his glory, on earth; nor will he not be worshiped. But he will make providence, without so much making it shine forth, and more brightly than before, by another. God will be no loser in his honour at the long run. (2.) To the promise of God of this they are humbly hold.
to put him in mind; Remember thy covenant with us, and break not that covenant. Not that they had any distrust of his fidelity, or that they thought he needed to be put in mind of it. This inspired the prophet; but his inspiration would plead with himself, they take the liberty to plead with him; Then will I remember my covenant, Lev. xxvi. 42.

4. He professed a dependence upon God for the mercy of rain, which they were now in want of, v. 22. If they have forfeited their interest in him as their God in covenant, yet they will not let go their hold on him as the God of nature. (1.) They never now pleading to the idols of the heathen, for that would be foolish and fruitless; Are there any among the vanities of the Gentiles that cause rain? No, in a time of great drought in Israel, Bufl, though all Israel was at his devotion in the days of Ahab, could not relieve them; it was that God only, who answered by fire, that could answer by water too. (2.) They will not terminate their regards in second causes, nor expect supply from nature only; Can the heavens give showers? No, not without orders from the God of heaven: for it is he that has the key of the clouds, that opens the bottles of heaven, and waters the earth from his chambers. But, (3.) All their expectation therefore is from him, and their confidence in him; "Art not thou he, O Lord our God, from whom we may expect what we desire from whom we must apply ourselves? Art thou not he that causeth rain, and givest showers? For thou hast made all these things; then gavest them being, and therefore thou givest them law, and hast them all at thy command; thou madest that moisture in nature, which is in a constant circulation, to serve the intentions of Providence, and then directest it, and makest what use thou pleasest of it; therefore we will wait upon thee, and upon thee only, we will ask of the Lord rain, Zech. x. 1. We will trust in him to give us in due time, and be willing to tarry his time; it is fit that we should, and it will not be in vain to do so." Note, The sovereignty of God should engage, and his all-sufficiency encourage, our attendance on him, and our expectations from him, at all times.

CHAP. XV.

When we left the prophet, in the close of the foregoing chapter, so pathetically pouring out his prayers before God, we had reason to hope that in this chapter we should find God reconciled to the land, and the prophet brought into a quiet, composed frame; but, to our great surprise and confusion, we are here as before, notwithstanding the prophet's prayers, God here ratifies the sentence given against the people, and abandons them to ruin, turning a deaf ear to all the intercessions made for them, v. 1. 2. The prophet himself, notwithstanding the satisfaction he had in communion with God, still finds himself uneasy and out of temper. 1. He complains to God of his continual struggle with his persecutors, v. 10. 2. God assures him that he shall be taken under special protection, though there was a general desolation coming upon the land, v. 11. 14. 3. He appeals to God concerning his sincerity in the discharge of his professed office, and the end God had in view in his idolatry, and the innocent blood which he shed, which the Lord would not pardon. He is called the son of Hezekiah, because his relation to so good a father was a great aggravation of his sin, so far was it from being an excuse of it. The greatest part of a generation was worn off since Manasseh's time, yet his sin is brought into the account; as in Jerusalem's behalf, the Lord would remember upon it all the righteous blood shed on the earth, to show how heavy the guilt of blood will light and lie somewhere, sooner or later, and that reproves are not pardons. It is in consideration of their present impenitence. See how their sin is described; (v. 6.)

We scarcely find any where more pathetic expressions of divine wrath against a provoking people than we have here in these verses. The prophet had prayed earnestly for them, and found some among them to join with him; and yet not so much as a reproach was given, or the least mitigation of the judgment; but this answer is given to the prophet's prayers, that the decree was gone forth, was irreversible, and would shortly be executed. Observe here,

1. What the sin was, upon which this severe sentence was grounded. 1. It is in remembrance of a former iniquity; it is because of Manasseh, for that which he did in Jerusalem, v. 4. What that was, we are told, and that it was for that Jerusalem was destroyed, v. 21. 2. It is because of his idolatry, and the innocent blood which he shed, which the Lord would not pardon. He is called the son of Hezekiah, because his relation to so good a father was a great aggravation of his sin, so far was it from being an excuse of it. The greatest part of a generation was worn off since Manasseh's time, yet his sin is brought into the account; as in Jerusalem's behalf, the Lord would remember upon it all the righteous blood shed on the earth, to show how heavy the guilt of blood will light and lie somewhere, sooner or later, and that reproves are not pardons. It is in consideration of their present impenitence. See how their sin is described; (v. 6.)

"Thou hast forsaken me, my services and thy duty to me; thou art gone backward into the ways of contradiction, art become the reverse of what thou
shouldst have been, and of what God by this law would have led thee forward to. See how the impenitence is described; (v. 7.) They return not from their ways, the ways of their own hearts, into the ways of God's commandments again. There is mercy for those who have turned aside, if they will return; but what favour can they expect, that persist in their apostasy?

11. What the sentence is. It is such as denotes no less than an utter ruin.

1. God himself abandons and abhors them; My mind cannot be toward them. How can it be thought that the holy God should have any remaining complacency in those that have so long and from all time showed no regard to him? Is it not in a passion, but with a just and holy indignation, that he says, "Cast them out of my sight, as that which is in the highest degree odious and offensive; and let them go forth, for I will be troubled with them no more.

2. He will not admit of any intercession to be made for them; (v. 1.) "Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, by prayer or sacrifice to reconcile me to them, yet I could not be prevailed with to admit them into favour." Moses and Samuel were two as great favourites of Heaven, as ever were the blessings of this earth, and were particularly famed for the success of their mediation between God and his offending people; many a time they stood before the Lord, yet God had not stood before him in the breach; and to Samuel's prayers they owed their lives; (1 Sam. xii. 19.) yet even their intercessions should not prevail, no, not though they were now in a state of perfection, much less Jeremiah's, who was now subject to like passions as others.

The putting of this as a case, Though they should stand before me, supposes that they do not, and that is a very great point; it says that they are not intercessors for saints on earth. It is the prerogative of the Eternal Word, to be the only Mediator in the other world, whatever Moses and Samuel and others were in this.

3. He condemns them all to one destroying judgment or other. When God casts them out of his presence, whether shall they go forth? (v. 2.) Certainly no whither, to be safe or easy, but to be met by one judgment, while they are pursued by another, till they find themselves surrounded with mischiefs on all hands, so that they cannot escape; Such are for death, to death. By death here is meant the pestilence, (Rev. vi. 8.) for it is death without visible means. Such as are for death, to death, or for the sword, to the sword; every man shall fall in his place. The reason is, that God has appointed the law that appoints the malefactor's death, determines what death he shall die. Or, He that is by his own choice for this judgment, let him take it, or for that, let him take it, but by the one or the other they shall all fall, and none shall escape. It is a choice like that which David was put to, and was thereby put into a great strait, 2 Sam. xxiv. 14. Come and take your choice, and the sword shall be the lowest judgment of all, it being both a complication and continuance of miseries. That of the sword is again repeated, (v. 3.) and is made the first of another four frightful set of destroyers, which God will appoint over them, as officers over the soldiers to do what they please with them. As those that escape the sword shall be cut off by pestilence. And he that is of the sword, the sword shall be cut off by divine vengeance, which pursues sinners on the other side death; there shall be dogs to tear in the city, and fowls of the air and wild beasts in the field to devour. And if there be any that think to outrun justice, they shall be made the most public monuments of it; They shall be removed into all kingdoms of the earth, (v. 4.) Like Cain, who, that he might be made a spectacle of horror to all, became a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth.

4. They shall fall without being relieved. Who can do any thing to help them? When (1.) God, (v. 5.) He is come down to meet them, (so he had before,) appears against them; I will stretch out my hand against them; which denotes a deliberate, determined stroke, which will reach far, and wound deep, v. 6. I am weary of repenting, it is a strange expression; they had behaved so provokingly, especially by their treacherous professions of repentance, that they had put even infinite patience itself to the stretch. God will often seem to wait, when it is ready to break forth against them; and now he will count no more reprieves. Miserable is the case of those who have sinned so long against God's mercy, that at length they have sinned it away. (2.) Their own country expels them, and is ready to strew them out, as it had done the Canaanites that were before them; for so it was threatened, (Lev. xviii. 28.) I will fan them with a fan in the gates of the land, in their own gates, through which they shall be scattered; or, into the gates of the earth, into the cities of all the nations about them. (3.) Their own children, that should assist them when they speak with the enemy in the gate, shall be cut off from them; (v. 7.) I will bereave them of children; so that they shall have little hopes that the next generation will be able to relieve the present, when the land is wasted, and when the inhabitants are slain, the land will soon be desolate. This melancholy article is enlarged upon, v. 8, 9. where we have,

[1.] The destroyer brought upon them. When God has bloody work to do, he will find cut bloody instruments to do it with. Nebuchadnezzar is here called a spoiler at noon-day; not a thief in the night that is afraid of being seen; but one that without fear shall break through and destroy all the fences of rights and properties, and this in the face of the sun, and in defiance of its light; I have brought against the mother, a young man, a spoiler; (so some read it,) for Nebuchadnezzar, when he first invaded Judah, was but a young man, in the first year of his reign. We read it, I have brought upon them, even against the mother of the young man, a spoiler, against Jerusalem, a mother-city, that had a very numerous family of young men; or, that invasion was in a particular manner terrible to those mothers who had many sons fit for war, who must now jeopard their lives in the high places of the field: and, being an unequal match for the enemy, would be likely to fall there, to the inexpressible grief of their poor mothers, who had nursed them up with a deal of tenderness. The same God that brought the spoiler upon them, caused him to fall upon it, upon the spoil delivered to him, suddenly and by surprise; and then terrors came upon the city. The original is very abrupt, the city and terrors. O the city, what a constellation will it then be in? O the terrors that shall then seize it! Then the word is, when the spoiler shall come to the spoil, that seemed at a distance from each other. I will cause suddenly to fall upon her (upon Jerusalem) a watchter and terrors; so Mr. Gataker reads it, for the word is used for a watchter, (Dan. iv. 13, 23,) and the Chaldean soldiers were called watchters, ch. iv. 16.

[2.] The destruction made by this destroyer. A dreadful slaughter is here described. First, The wives are deprived of their husbands; Their widows are increased above the sand of the seas, so numerous are they now grown. It was promised that the men of Israel (for those only were numbered) should be as the sand of the sea for multitude; but now they shall be cut off, and their widows shall be so. But observe, God says, They are increased to me. Though the husbands were cut off by the sword of his justice, their poor widows were gathered in the arms of his mercy, who has taken it among the titles of his honour to be the God of the widows. Widows are said to be taken into the number of those whom God has particularly provided and condescended to cherish. The parents are deprived of their children; She that has borne seven sons, whom she expected to be the support and joy of her age, now languishes, when she has seen them all cut off by the sword in one day, who had been many years her burden and care. She that had many children is waxen feeble, 1 Sam. ii. 5. See what uncertain comforts children are; and let us therefore regard them, as they are removed not. When the children are slain, the mother gives up the ghost, for her life was bound up in theirs: Her sun is gone down while it was yet day; she is bereaved of all her comforts then when she thought herself in the midst of the enjoyment of them. She is now ashamed and confounded to think how proud she had been of her sons, how fond of them, and how much she promised herself from them. Some understand by this languishing mother, Jerusalem lamenting the death of her inhabitants as passionately as ever poor mother bewailed her children. Many are cut off already, and the residue of them, who have not escaped, and, as was hoped, were reserved to be the seed of another generation, even them will I deliver to the sword before their enemies, (as the condemned malefactor is delivered to the sheriff to be executed,) with the Lord, the Judge of heaven and earth, who, we are sure, herein judges right, though the judgment seem severe.

5. They shall fall without being pitted; (s. 5.) "For who shall have pity on thee, O Jerusalem? When thy God hath cast thee out of his sight, and his compassions fail, and are shut up from thee, neither thine enemies nor thy friends shall have any compassion for thee. They that have not pity with thee, they shall not bemoan thee, or be sorry for thee, they shall have no concern for thee, shall not go a step out of their way to ask how thou dost." For, (1.) Their friends, who were expected to do these friendly offices, were all involved with them in the calamities, and had enough to do to bemoan themselves. (2.) It was plain to all their neighbours that they could not bear this upon themselves by their obstinacy in sin, and that they might have easily prevented it by repentance and reformation, which they were often in vain called to: and therefore who can pity them? O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself. Those will perish for ever unpitied, that might have been saved upon such easy terms, and would not. (3.) God will thus complete their misery, he will set them a precedent, as he did Job's, at a distance from them; and his hand, his righteous hand, is to be acknowledged in all the unkindnesses of our friends, as well as in all the injuries done by us for our peace. (10.) Wo is me, my mother, that thou hast borne me a man of strife, and a man of contention to the whole earth! I have neither lent on usury, nor men have lent to me on usury; yet every one of them doth curse me. 11. The Lord said, Verily it shall be well with thy remnant, verily I will cause the enemy to entreat thee well in the time of evil, and in the time of affliction. Shall iron break the northern iron and the steel? 12. Thy substance and thy treasures will I give to the spoil without price, and that for all thy sins, even in all thy borders. 14. And I will make thee to pass with thine enemies into a land which thou knowest not; for a fire is kindled in mine anger, which shall burn upon you.

Jeremiah is now returned from his public work, and is retired into his closet; what passed between him and his God there, we have an account of in these and the following verses, which he published afterward, to affect the people with the weight and importance of his messages to them. Here is,

1. The complaint which the prophet makes to God of the many discouragements he met with in his work, v. 10. 1. He met with a great deal of contradiction and opposition. He was a man of strife and contention to the whole land; (so it might be read, rather than to the whole earth, for his business lay only in that land;) both city and country quarrelled with him, and set themselves against him, and said and did all they could to thwart him. He was a peaceable man, gave no provocation to any, nor was apt to resent the provocations given him, and yet a man of strife, not a man striving, but a man driven with; he was for peace, but, when he spake, they were for war. And, whatever they pretended, that which was the real cause of their quarrels with him, was, his faithfulness to God and to their souls. He showed them their sins, that they might be turned from them into a way to prevent that ruin, which was the greatest kindness he could do them; and yet this was it for which they were incensed against him, and looked upon him as their enemy. Even the Prince of peace himself was thus a man of strife, a sign spoken against, continually enduring the contradiction of sinners against himself. And the gospel of peace was divided, even to wrangle with this world. Matt. x. 34, 35. Luke xii. 49, 51. Now this made Jeremiah very uneasy, even to a degree of impatience; he cried out, Wo is me, my mother, that thou hast borne me. As if it were his mother's fault, that she bore him, and he had better never have been born, than be born to such an uncomfortable life; any, he is angry that she had borne him a man of strife; as if he had been fatally determined to this curse. He could never have been more kind to the startling words at his birth. He had if he had any meaning of this kind, doubtless it was very much his infirmity; we rather hope it was intended for no more than a pathetic lamentation of his own case. Note, (1.) Even those who are most quiet and peaceable, if they serve God faithfully, are often made men of strife. We can but follow peace; we have the making only of one side of the bargain, and therefore can but, as much as in us lies, live peaceably. (2.) It is very uncomfortable to those who are of a peaceable disposition, to live among those who are continually picking quarrels with them. (3.) Yet, if we cannot live so peaceably as we desire with our neighbours, we must not be so disturbed at it as thereby to lose the repose of our own minds, and put ourselves upon the fret. 15. He means, to express, name, and reproach. They every one of them cursed him; they branded him as a turbulent, factious man, as an incendiary, and a sourer of discord and sedition. They ought to have blessed him, and to have blessed God for him; but they were arrived at such a pitch of enmity against God and his word, that for his sake they cursed his messenger, spoke ill of him, wished ill to him, did all they could to make him odious; they all did so, he had scarcely one friend in Judah or Jerusalem, that would give him a good word. Note. It is often the lot of the best of men to have the worst of characters ascribed to them; So persecuted they the prophets. But one would be apt to suspect that surely Jeremiah had given them some proves cution, else he could not have lost himself thus: no, not the least; I have neither lent money, nor borrowed money; have been neither creditor nor debtor; for so general is the signification of the words here.
(1.) It is implied here, that these who deal much in the business of this world, are often involved in it by in strife and contention; meum and tuum—mine and thine are the great makelakes, lenders and borrowers, sue and are sued, and great dealers often get a deal of ill-will. (2.) It was an instance of Jeremiah's great prudence, and it is written for our learning, that, being called to be a prophet, he entangled not himself in the affairs of this life, but kept himself clear, so that he might apply himself to the more closely to the business of his profession, and might not give the least shadow of suspicion that he aimed at secular advantages in it, nor any occasion to his neighbours to contend with him. He put out no money, for he was no usurer, nor indeed had he any money to lend: he took up no money, for he was no purchaser, no merchant, no spendthrift. He was perfectly dead to this world, and the things of it: a very little served to keep him, and we find (ch. xvi. 2.) that he had neither wife nor children to keep. And yet, (3.) Though he behaved thus discreetly, and so as one would have thought should have gained him universal esteem, yet he lay under a general odium, through the iniquity of the times. Blessed be God, bad as things are,
His people are not destitute of friends; for there are those with whom virtue has its praise; yet let not those who behave most prudently, think it strange if they have not the respect and esteem they deservre.

Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you.

II. The answer which God gave to this complaint.
Though there was in it a mixture of passion and inference, yet it is most likely that God took occasion of it, because it was for his sake that the prophet suffered reproach. In this answer,

1. God assures him that he should weather the storm, and be made easy at last, v. 11. Though his neighbours quarrelled with him for what he did in the discharge of his office, yet God accepted him, and promised to stand by him. It is in the original expressed in the form of an oath: If I take not care of thee, let me never be counted faithful; verily, it shall go well with thy remnant, with the remainder of thy life; for so the word signifies. The residue of thy days shall be more comfortable to thee than those hitherto have been. Thy end shall be good; so the Chaldee reads it. Note, It is a great and sufficient support to the people of God, that, how troublesome soever their way may be, it shall be well with them in their latter end, Ps. xxxvii. 37.
They have still a remnant, a residue, something behind, and left in reserve, which will be sufficient to balance all their grievances, and the hope of it may serve to make them easy. It should seem that Jeremiah, besides the vexation that his people gave him, was uneasy at the apprehension he had of sharpest care, and he himself the sharpest care, for foreseeing; and though he mentioned not this,
God replied to his thought of it, as to Moses, Exod.
v. 19. Jeremiah thought, "If my friends are thus abusive to me, what will my enemies be?" And God had thought fit to awaken, in him an expectation of this kind, ch. xii. 5. But here he quits his mind with this promise, "Verily, I will cause the enemy to treat thee well in the time of evil, when all about thee shall be laid waste." Note, God has all men's hearts in his hand, and can turn those to favour his servants, whom they were most afraid of.
And the prophets of the Lord have often met with fairer and better treatment among open enemies than among those that call themselves his people.

When we see trouble coming, and it looks very threatening, let us not despair, but hope in God, because it may prove better than we expect. This promise was accomplished, when Nebuchadnezzar, having taken the city, charged the captain of the guard to be kind to Jeremiah, and let him have every thing he had a mind to, ch. xxxix. 11, 12.
The following words, Shall iron break the northern iron, and the steel, or braze? (v. 12.) being compared with the promise of God made to Jeremiah, (ch. i. 18.) that he would make him an iron pillar and brazen walls, seem intended for his comfort.
They were continually clashing with him, and was rough and hard as iron; but Jeremiah, being armed with power and courage from on high, is a nort-ern iron, which is naturally stronger, and as steel, which is harded by art; and therefore they shall not prevail against him; compare this with Ezek.
i. 6.—ii. 8, 9. He might the better bear their quarrelling with him, when he was sure of the victory.

2. God assures him that his enemies and persecutors should be lost in the storm, should be ruined at last, and that therein the word of God in his mouth should be accomplished, and he proved a true prophet, v. 13, 14. God here turns his speech from the prophet to the people. To them also, v. 12.
may be applied; Shall iron break the northern iron, and the steel? Shall their courage and strength, and the meat hardy and vigorous of their efforts, be able to come against, or stand before him, with the army of the Chaldeans, which are as in.
flexible, as invincible, as the northern iron, and the steel. Let them therefore hear their doom; Thy substance and thy treasure will I give to the spoil, and that without price; the spoilers shall have it gratis, it shall be to them a cheap and easy prey.
Observe, The prophet was poor, he neither lent them borrowed money, nor held any property about him, will congratulate himself, when accosted by a roper. But the people that had great estates in money and land, would be slain for what they had, or the courage, finding they had much, would use them hardly, to make them confess more. And it is their own iniquity that herein corrects them: It is for all thy sins, even in all thy borders. All parts of the country, even those which lay most remote, had contributed to the national guilt, and all shall now be brought to account. Let not one tribe lay the blame upon another, but each take shame to itself;
It is for all thy sins in all thy borders. Thus shall they stay at home till they see their estates ruined and then they shall be carried into captivity, to spend the sad remains of a miserable life in slavery:
I will make thee to pass with thine enemies, who shall lead thee in triumph, into a land thou knowest not, and therefore cannot expect to find no comfort in it. All this is the fruit of God's wrath: "It is a fire kindled in mine anger, which shall burn upon you," and, if not extinguished in time, will burn eternally.

15. O Lord, thou knowest: remember me, and visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors; take me not away in thy long-suffering: know that for thy sake I have suffered rebuke. 16. Thy words were found, and I did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of my heart: for I am called by thy name. O Lord God of hosts. 17. I sat not in the assembly of the mockers, nor rejoiced; I sat alone, because of thy hand: for thou hast filled me with indignation: 18. Why is my pain perpetual, and my wound incurable, which refuseth to be healed? wilt thou be altogether unto me as a liar, and as waters that fail? 19. Therefore thus saith the Lord, If thou return, then will I bring thee again, and thou shalt stand before me: and if thou take forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as my mouth: let them return unto thee; but return not thou unto them. 20. And I will make thee unto this people a fenced brazen wall; and they shall fight against thee, but they shall not prevail against thee: for I am with thee to save thee, and to deliver thee, saith the Lord. 21. And I will deliver thee out of the hand of the wicked, and I will redeem thee out of the hand of the terrible.

Here, as before, we have,

1. The prophet's humble address to God, containing a representation both of his integrity, and of the hardships he underwent notwithstanding. It is matter of comfort to us, that whatever ails us, we have a God to go to, before whom we may spread our case, and to whose omniscience we may appeal, as the prophet here, "O Lord, thou knowest: thou knowest my sincerity, which men are resolved they will not acknowledge; thou knowest my distress, which men disdain to take notice of." Observe here,

1. What it is that the prophet prays for, v. 15. (1.) That God would consider his case, and be mindful of him; "O Lord, remember me; think upon me for good." (2.) That God would communicate strength and comfort to him; "Visit me; not only remember me, but let me know that thou receivest me, that thou art nigh unto me." (3.) That he would appear for him against those that did him wrong; "Revenge me of my persecutors, or, rather, " Vindicate me from my persecutors; give judgment against them, and let that judgment be executed so far as is necessary for my vindication, and to compel them to acknowledge that they have done me wrong." Further than this, a good man will not desire that God would revenge him. Let no one in contentment, or satisfaction (what ever blasphemers say to the contrary) Jeremiah is a righteous man, and the God whom he serves is a righteous God. (4.) That he would yet spare him and continue him in the land of the living; "Take me not away by a sudden stroke, but in thy long-suffering lengthen out my days." The best men will own themselves so obnoxious to God's wrath, that they are indebted to his patience for the continuance of their lives. Or, "While thou exercisest long-suffering toward my persecutors, let them prevail to take me away." Though in compassion he complained of his birth, (v. 10.) yet he desires here that his death might not be hastened; for life is sweet to nature; the life of a useful man is so to grace. I pray not that thou shouldest take them away, but, Take me not away. 2. What it is that he pleads with God for, mercy and relief against his enemies, persecutors, and slanderers.

(1.) That God's honour was interested in his case; Know, and make it known, that for thy sake I have suffered rebuke. Those that lay themselves open to reproach by their own fault and folly, have great reason to bear it patiently, but no reason to expect that God should appear for them. But if it is for doing well that we suffer ill, and for righteousness take that we have all manner of evil said against us, we may hope that God will vindicate our honour with his own. To the same purport, (v. 16.) I am called by thy name, O Lord of hosts: it was for that reason that his enemies hated him, and therefore for that reason he promised himself that God would own him, and stand by him.

(2.) That the word of God, which he was employed to preach to others, he had experienced the power and power of in the world. He there had the graces of the Spirit to qualify him for the divine favour, as well as his gifts. We find some rejected of God, who yet could say, Lord, we have prophesied in thy name. But Jeremiah could say more, (v. 16.) "Thy words were found, found by me;" (he searched the scriptures, diligently studied the words, and found that in it which was reviving to him. If we seek, we shall find.) "Thou didst me," (the words which he was to deliver to others, were laid ready to his hand, were brought to him by inspiration;) "and I did not only taste them, but eat them, received them entirely, conversed with them intimately; they were welcome to me, as food to one that is hungry; I entertained them, digested them, turned them in succum et sanguinem—into blood and spirit; I dismissed myself to all the truths which I was to deliver to others." The prophet was bid to eat the roll, Ezek. ii. 8. Rev. x. 9. I did eat it, that is, as it follows, it was to me the joy and rejoicing of my heart, nothing could be more agreeable. Understand it, [1.] Of the message itself which he was to deliver. Though he was to foretell the ruin of his country, which would be occasioned to him, and in the ruin of which he (he not but have a deep share, yet all natural affections were swallowed up in zeal for God's glory, and even these messages of wrath, being divine messages, were a satisfaction to him. He also rejoiced, at first, in hope that the people would take warning, and prevent the judgment. Or, [2.] Of the commission he received to deliver this message. Though the work he was called to was not attended with any secular advantages, but, on the contrary, exposed him to contempt and persecution, yet, because it put him in a way to serve God, and do good, he took pleasure in it, was glad to be so employed, and it was his meat and drink to do the will of him that sent him. John iv. 34. Or, [3.] Of the promise God gave him, that he would assist and in him and in his work; (ch. i. 8.) he was satisfied in that, and depended upon it, and therefore hoped it should not fail him.

(3.) That he had applied himself to the discharge of his office with all possible gravity, seriousness, and self-denial, though he had had of late but little satisfaction in it, v. 17. [1.] It was his comfort, that he had given up himself wholly to the business of his office, and had done nothing in himself but it; nothing either to disfigure himself from it, or dishonour himself for it. He kept no unsuitable company; denied himself the use even of lawful recreations, ab stained from every thing that looked like levity, lest thereby he should make himself mean and less regarded. He sat alone, spent a deal of time in his closet, because of the hand of the Lord that was strong upon him to carry him out in what his hand had hasted him with, and indignation, (v. 10.) but to the pleasures of it too, as here. But, [2.] It is his complaint, that he had had little pleasure in his work. It was at first the-rejoicing of his heart, but of late it had made him melancholy; so that he had no heart to sit in the meeting of those that make merry; he cared not for company, for indeed no company cared for him; he sat alone, fretting at the people's obstinacy, and the little success of his labours among them; this filled him and him with a holy indignation. Note, It is the folly and infirmity of some good people, that they lose much of the pleasantness of their religion by the fretfulness and animosity of their meeting and company, which will do more to pollute than mortify them.

(4.) He throws himself upon God's pity and promise in a very passionate expostulation; (v. 18.) "Why is my pain perpetual, and nothing done to ease it? Why are the wounds which my enemies are continually giving both to my peace and to my reputation, incurable, and nothing done to retrieve either my comfort or my crooked bosoms? Think that I should have been thus neglected; wilt the God that has promised me his presence, be to me as a liar; the God on whom I depend, be to me as waters that fail? We are willing to make the best we can of it, and to take it as an appeal, [1.] To the mercy of God; "I know he will not let the pain of my servant be perpetual, but he will ease it, will not let his wound be incurable, but will heal my health, and my spirit of despair." [2.] To his faithfulness; "Wilt thou be to me as a liar? No, I know thou wilt not; God is not a man that he should lie. The Fountain of life will never be to his people as waters that fail."

II. God's gracious answer to this address, v. 19.—21. Though the prophet betrayed much human frailty in his address, yet God vouchsafed to answer him with good words, and comforting words; for he knows our frame. Observe, 1. What God here requires of him as the condition of the further favours he designed him. Jeremiah had done and suffered much for God, yet God no Debtor to him, but he is still upon his good behaviour, God will own him. But, (1.) He must recover his temper, and be reconciled to his work, and friends with it again, and not quarrel with it any more as he had done. He must return; must shake off these distrustful, discontented thoughts and passions, and not give way to them, must regain the peaceable possession and enjoyment of himself, and resolve to be easy. Note, When we have stepped aside into any disagreeable frame or way, our care must be to return, and compound the good, and make the best of what we have taken up; and then, we may expect God will help us, if thus we endeavour to help ourselves.

(2.) He must resolve to be faithful in his work, for he could not expect the divine protection any longer than he did approve himself so. Though there was no cause at all to charge Jeremiah with unfaithfulness, and God knew his heart to be sincere, yet God saw fit to give him this caution. Those that do their duty must not take it ill to be told their duty. In two things he must be faithful.

[1.] He must distinguish between some and others of those he preached to; Thou must take forth the precious from the vile. The righteous are the precious, be they ever so mean and poor, the wicked are the vile, be they ever so rich and great; in our conception, yet God saw fit to give him this caution. Those that do their duty must not take it ill to be told their duty. In two things he must be faithful.

[2.] He must closely adhere to his instructions, and not to the least vary from them; Let them return to thee, but return not thou to them. That is, he must do the utmost he can, in his preaching, to bring people up to the mind of God; he must tell them they must, at their peril, comply with that. They that had fawned off from him, that did not like the terms upon which God's favour was offered to them, "Let them return to thee, and, upon second thoughts, you shall find it is to your advantage to return again; but do not then return to them, do not compliment them, or comply with them, or think to make the matter easier to them than the word of God has made it." Men's hearts and lives must come up to God's law, and comply with that, for God's law will never come down to them, or comply with them.

What he here promises them, upon the performance of these conditions. If he approve himself,

(1.) God will quiet his mind, and pacify the present tumult of his spirits; If thou return, I will bring thee again; will restore thy soul, as Ps. xxiii. 3. The best and strongest saints, if at any time they have gone aside out of the right way, and are determined to return, need the grace of God to bring them again.

(2.) God will employ him in his service as a prophet, whose work, even in those bad times, had comfort and honour enough in it to be its own wages; "Thou shalt stand before me, to receive instructions from me, as a servant from his master; and thou shalt be as my mouth to deliver my messages; thou art, as it were, an ambassador or the mouth of the prince that sends him." Note, Faithful ministers are God's mouth to us; they are so to look upon themselves, and to speak God's mind, and as becomes the oracles of God; and we are so to look upon them, and to hear God speaking to us by them. Observe, If thou keep close to thine instructions, thou shalt be as my mouth, not otherwise; so far and no further, God will stand by ministers, as they go by the written word; "Thou shalt be as my mouth, what thou savest shall be made good, as if I myself had said it." See Isa. xlv. 26. 1. Sam. iii. 19.

(3.) He shall have strength and courage to face the difficulties he meets with in his work, and his spirit shall not fail again, as now it does; (v. 20.) I will make thee into this people as a fenced broken wall, as a wall of broken blocks, and broken battlements; and I will take thee upon, but cannot shake. Return not thou to them, by any sinful compliances, and then trust thy God to arm thee by his grace with holy resolutions. Be not cowardly, and God will make thee daring. He had complained that he was made a man of strife; "Expect (says God) that they will fight against thee; they will still continue their opposition to thee, but they shall not prevail against thee, thou shalt win thee off from thy work, or to cut thee off from the land of the living."

(4.) He shall have God for his Protector and mighty Deliverer; I am with thee, to save thee. Those that have God with them, have a Saviour with them, who has wisdom and strength enough to deal with the most formidable enemy; and those are only saved, and saved in a real manner, that are brought up and brought up in the hand of God, (v. 21.) either from trouble or through it. They may perhaps fall into the hand of the wicked, and they may appear terrible to them, but God will rescue them out of their hands. They shall not be able to kill them, till they have finished their testimony; they shall not prevent their happiness. God will so deliver them as to preserve them to his heavenly kingdom, in a glorious manner, for a long time, even at the last. There are many things that appear very frightful, that yet do not prove at all hurtful, to a good man.
1. THE word of the Lord came also unto me, saying, 2. Thou shalt not take thee a wife, neither shalt thou have sons nor daughters in this place. 3. For thus saith the Lord concerning the sons, and concerning the daughters that are born in this place, and concerning their mothers that bare them, and concerning their fathers that begat them in this land; 4. They shall die of grievous deaths: they shall not be lamented, neither shall they be buried; but they shall be as dung upon the face of the earth: and they shall be consumed by the sword, and by famine; and their carcasses shall be meat for the fowls of heaven, and for the beasts of the earth. 5. For thus saith the Lord, Enter not into the house of mourning, neither go to lament nor bemoan them, for I have taken away my peace from this people, saith the Lord, even loving-kindness and mercies. 6. Both the great and the small shall die in this land: they shall not be buried, neither shall men lament for them, nor cut themselves, nor make themselves bald for them: 7. Neither shall men tear themselves for them in mourning, to comfort them for the dead; neither shall men give them the cup of consolation to drink for their father or for their mother. 8. Thou shalt not also go into the house of feasting, to sit with them to eat and to drink. 9. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will cause to cease out of this place in your eyes, and in your days, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride. 10. If we would rescue others out of their security, and persuade them to sit loose to the world, we must ourselves be mortified to present things, and show that we expect the desolation.

1. Jeremiah must not marry, nor think of having a family, and being a housekeeper; (v. 2.) Thou shalt not take thee a wife, nor think of having sons and daughters in this place, not in the land of Judah, nor in Jerusalem, not in Anathoth. The Jews, more than any people, valued themselves on their early marriages, and their numerous offspring. But Jeremiah must not have such a check to the exaltation of virginity, as in diminution of it; by this it appears that it was advisable and reasonable only in calamitous times, and times of present distress, 1 Cor. vii. 26. That it is so, is a part of the calamity. There may be a time when it will be said, Blessed is the womb that bare not, Luke xxiii. 29. When we see such times at hand, it is wisdom for all, especially for prophets, to keep themselves as much as may be from being entangled with the affairs of this life, and encumbered with that which, the dearer it is to them, the more it will be the matter of their care, and fear, and grief, at such a time. The reason here given, is, because the fathers and mothers, the sons and the daughters, shall die of grievous deaths, (v. 3, 4.) As for those that have wives and children, (v. 5.) There is not such a check to the exaltation of virginity, that they cannot flee from those deaths. A singleton may make his escape, and shift for his own safety, when he that has a wife and children, can neither find means to convey them with him, nor find in his heart to go and leave them behind him. (2.) They will be in continual terror for fear of those deaths; and the more they have to lose by them, the greater will the terror and consternation be, when death appears every where in its triumphant majesty and power. (3.) The death of every child, and the aggravating circumstances of it, will be a new death to the parent. Better have no children than have them brought forth, and bred up, for the murderer, (Hos ix. 13, 14.) than see them live and die in misery. Death is grievous, but some deaths are more grievous than others, both to them that die and to their relations that survive them: hence we read of so great a death, 2 Cor. i. 10. Two things are used a little to palliate and alleviate the terror of death, as to this world, and to sugar the bitter pill; bewailing the dead, and burying them; but to make those deaths grievous indeed, these are denied; They shall not be lamented, but shall be blessed by God; if the world were to do them mercy, nay, they shall not be buried, but left exposed, as if they were designed to be monuments of justice. They shall be as dung upon the face of the earth, not only despicable, but detestable, as if they were good for nothing but to manure the ground; being consumed, some by the sword, and some by famine, their carcasses shall be meat for the fowls of heaven, and for the beasts of the earth. It will not any one say, "Better be without children, then we have to do with them to come to this." What reason have we to say, all is vanity and vexation of spirit, when those creatures that we expect to be our greatest comforts, may prove not only our heaviest cares, but our sorest crosses!

2. Jeremiah must not go to the house of mourning, upon occasion of the death of any of his right hand, his brothers or relations; (v. 5.) Enter thou not into the house of mourning. It was usual to condole with those whose relations were dead, to bemoan them, to cut themselves, and make themselves bald, which, it seems, was commonly practised, as an expression of mourning, though forbidden by the law, Deut. xiv. 1. Nay, sometimes, in a passion of grief, they tore themselves for them, (v. 6, 7.) partly in honour of the deceased, thus signifying that they thought...
There was a great loss of them; and partly, in compassion to the surviving relations, to whom the bereal will be made lighter, by their having sharers with them in their grief. They used to mourn with them, and so to comfort them for the dead, as Job's friends with him, and the Jews with Martha and Mary; and it was a friendly office to give them a cup of consolation to drink, to provide them with meat, and press them earnestly to drink of them for the support of their spirits; give wine to them that are of heavy heart, for their father or mother, that it may be some comfort to them to find that, though they have lost their parents, yet they have some friends left, that have a concern for them. Thus the usage stood, and it was a laudable usage; it is a good custom among them, as well in sending wheat and barley to the poor as going to the house of mourning. It seems the prophet Jeremiah had been wont to abound in good offices of this kind, and it well became his character, both as a pious man and as a prophet; and one would think it should have made him better beloved among his people, than it should seem he was. But now God bids him not lament the death of his friends, as, (v. 1.) His sorrow for the destruction of his country, and his grief for their particular deaths. His tears may now be turned into another channel; and there is occasion enough for them. (2.) He had little reason to lament those who died now just before the judgments entered, which he saw at the door; but rather to think them happy, who were seasonably taken away for his own trouble. It is to be a type of what was coming, when there should be such universal confusion, that all neighbourly, friendly offices should be neglected. Men shall be in deaths so often, and even dying daily, that they shall have no time, no room, no heart, for the ceremonies that used to attend death; the sorrows shall be so ponderous as not to admit relief; and every one so full of grief for his own trouble, that he will have no thoughts of his neighbour's. All shall be mourners then, and no comforters; every one will find it enough to bear his own burden; for, (v. 5.) "I have taken away my peace from this people, put a full period to their prosperity, deprived them of health, and wealth, and quiet, and friends, and every thing whereby they might comfort themselves. What a loss have we of joy, it is God's peace; it is his gift, and if he gives quietness, who then can make trouble? But if we make not a good use of his peace, he can and will take it away; and where are we then? Job xxxiv. 29. I will take away my peace, even my loving-kindness and mercies; these shall be shut up and restrained, which are the fresh springs from which all their fresh streams flow, and then farewell all good. Note, Those have cut themselves off from all true peace, that have thrown themselves out of the favour of God. All is gone, when God takes away from us his loving-kindness and his mercies. Then it follows, (v. 6.) Both the great and the small shall die, even in this land, the land of Canaan, that used to be called the land of the living. God's favour is our life; take away that, and we die, we perish, we perish, we perish. 3. Jeremiah must not go to the house of mourning, any more than to the house of mourning, v. 1. It had been his custom, and it was innocent enough, when any of his friends made entertainments at their houses, and invited him to them, to go and sit with them, not merely to drink, but to eat and to drink, soberly and cheerfully. But now he must not take that liberty. (1.) Because it was unseasonable, and inconsistent with the providences of God that fell upon the land and nation. God called loud to weeping, and mourning, and fasting; he was coming forth against them in his judgments, and it was time for them to humble themselves; and it will become the prophet, who gave them the warning, to give them an example of taking the warning, and complying with it, and so to make it appear that he did himself believe it. Ministers ought to be examples of self-denial and mortification, and to show themselves affected with these terrors of the Lord, with which they desire to affect others. And it becomes all the sons of Zion to sympathize with her in her afflictions, and not to be merry when she is jejune and lank. Amos vi. 6. (2.) Because he must thus shew the people what sad times were coming upon them. His friends wondered that he would not meet them, as he used to do, in the house of feasting. But he lets them know, it was to intimate to them that all their feasting would be at an end shortly; (v. 9.) I will cause to cease the wedding mirth. You shall have nothing to feast on, nothing to rejoice in, but be surrounded with calamities that shall mar your mirth, and cast a damp upon it. God can find ways to tame the most jovial. "This shall be done in this place, in Jerusalem, that used to be the joyous city, and thought her joys were all secure to her; it shall be done in your eyes, in your sight, to be a token of the calamities that shall come upon you; you now look so haughty, and so merry; it shall be done in your days, you yourselves shall live to see it." The voice of praise they had made to cease by their iniquities and idolatries, and therefore justly God made to cease among them the voice of mirth and gladness. The voice of God's prophets was not heard, was not heeded, among them, and therefore no longer shall the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride, of the songs that used to grace the nuptials, be heard among them. See ch. vii. 34. 10. And it shall come to pass, when thou shalt shew this people all these words, and they shall say unto thee, Wherefore hath the Lord pronounced all this great evil against us? or what is our iniquity, or what is our sin, that we have committed against the Lord our God? 11. Then shall thou say unto them, Because your fathers have forsaken me, said the Lord, and have walked after other gods, and have served them, and have worshipped them, and have forsaken me, and have not kept my law; 12. And ye have done worse than your fathers; (for, behold, ye walk every one after the imaginations of his evil heart, that they may not hearken unto me;) 13. Therefore will I cast you out of this land into a land that ye know not, neither ye nor your fathers; and there shall ye serve other gods day and night, where I will not shew you favour.

Here is, 1. An inquiry made into the reasons why God would bring those judgments upon them; (v. 10.) When thou shalt show this people all these words, the words of this curse, they will say unto thee, Wherefore has the Lord pronounced all this great evil against us? One would hope that there were some among them that asked this question with a humble, penitent heart, desiring to know what was the sin for which God contended with them, that they might cast it away, and prevent the judgment; "Show us the sin that raises the storm, and we will throw it overboard." But it seems here to be the language of those who quarrelled at the word of God, and challenged him to show what they had done, which might deserve so severe a punishment; 11. What is our iniquity? Or, what is our sin? What crime have we ever been guilty of, proportionable to such a sentence? Instead of humbling and condemning themselves, they stand upon their own judgment; and God told them, that they had done wrong, in pronouncing this evil against them, that he laid upon them more than was right, and that they had reason to enter into judgment with God, Job xxxiv. 23. Note, It is amazing to see how hardly sinners are brought to justify God, and judge themselves, when they are in trouble, and to own the iniquity and the sin that have procured them their punishment.

2. A plain and full answer given to this inquiry. Do they ask the prophet why, and for what reason, God is thus angry with them? He shall not stop their mouths by telling them that they may be sure there is a sufficient reason, the righteous God is never angry without cause, without good cause; but he must tell them particularly what is the cause, that they may be convinced and humbled, or, at least, that God may be justified. Let them know then,

(1.) That God visited upon them the iniquities of their fathers; (v. 11.) Your fathers have forsaken me, and have not kept my law; they shook off divine institutions and grew weary of them, they thought them too plain, too mean, and then they walked after other gods, who gave them more grace and punishment, being fond of variety and novelty, they served them and worshipped them; and this was the sin which God had said, in the second commandment, he would visit upon their children, who kept up these idolatrous usages, because they received them by tradition from their fathers, 1 Pet. i. 18.

(2.) That God reckoned with them for their own iniquity; (v. 12.) You have made your fathers' sin your own, and are become obnoxious to the punishment which in their days was deferred, for you have done worse than your fathers.' If they had made a good use of their fathers' reprobate, and had been led by the patience of God to repentance, they should have feared the better for it, and the judgment should have been prevented, the reprobate, in a manner, being pardoned; but, making an ill use of it, and being hardened by it in their sins, they feared the worse for it, and the reprobate being expired, an addition was made to the sentence, and it was executed with the more severity. They were more impudent and obstinate in sin than their fathers, walked every one after the imagination of his heart, made that their guide and rule, and were resolved to follow that on purpose that they might not hearken to God and his prophets. They designedly suffer their own lusts and passions to be noisy, that they might drown the voice of their consciences. No wonder then that God has taken up this resolution concerning them, (v. 13.) I will cast you out of this land, this land of light, this valley of vision; since you will not hearken to me, you shall not hear me, you shall be hurried away, not into a neighbor country which you have formerly had some acquaintance and correspondence with, but into a far country, a land that ye know not, neither you nor your fathers; in which you have no interest, nor can expect to meet with any comfortable society, to be an ally to your misery." Justly were they banished into a strange land, which dotted upon strange gods, which neither they nor their fathers knew, Deut. xxxii. 17. Two things would make their case there very miserable, and both of them relate to the soul, the better part; the greatest calamities of their captivity were those which affected that, and debarred them from its bliss. [1.] It is the happiness of the soul to be employed in the service of God; but there shall you serve other gods day and night, you shall be in continual temptation to serve them, and perhaps compelled to do it by your cruel taskmasters; and when you are forced to worship idols, you will be as averse to it as ever you were fond of it when it was forbidden you by your godly kings. See how God often makes men's sin their punishment, and fills the backslider in heart with his own ways. "You shall have no public worship at all, but the worship of idols, and then you will think with regret how you slighted the worship of the true God." [2.] It is the happiness of the soul to have some tokens of the loving-kindness of God, but you shall go to a strange land, where I will not show you favour." If they had had God's favour, that would have made even the land of their captivity a pleasant land; but, if they lie under his wrath, the yoke of their oppression will be intolerable to them.

14. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; 15. But, The Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers. 16. Behold, I will send for many fishes, saith the Lord, and they shall fish them; and after I will send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks. 17. For mine eyes are upon all their ways: they are not hid from my face, neither is their iniquity hid from mine eyes. 18. And first I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double; because they have defiled my land, they have filled mine inheritance with the carcases of their detestable and abominable things. 19. O Lord, my strength, and my fortress, and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanities, and things wherein there is no profit. 20. Shall a man make gods unto himself, and they are no gods? 21. Therefore, behold, I will this once cause them to know, I will cause them to know my hand and my might; and they shall know that my name is the Lord.

There is a mixture of mercy and judgment in these verses, and it is hard to know to which to apply some of the passages here, they are so interwoven; and some seem to look as far forward as the times of the gospel.

1. God will certainly execute judgment upon them for their idolatries. Let them expect it, for the decree is gone forth of God, but you will see it in its operation in the end. 2. God sees all their sins, though they commit them ever so secretly, and palliate them ever so artfully; (v. 17.) Mine eyes are upon all their ways. They have not their eye upon God, have no regard to him, stand in no awe of him; but he has his eye upon them, neither they nor their sins are hid from themselves; and because they themselves have not shuddered at the abominations of the Egyptians, I will cause them to know my hand, the length and weight of my punishing hand, how far it can reach, and how deep it can wound. And they shall know that my name is Jehovah, a God with whom there is no contending, who gives being to threatenings, and puts life into them as well as promises.

II. Yet he has mercy in store for them, intimations of which come in here for the encouragement of the prophet himself, and of those few among them that trembled at God's word. It was said, with an air of severity, (v. 13.) that God would banish them into a strange land; but that thereby they should be able to laugh and mock after they were driven, and where they seemed to be lost and buried in the crowd; may, I will bring them again into their own land, and settle them there. As the foregoing threatenings agreed with what was written in the law, so does this promise, (Lev. xxvi. 44.) Ye will not cast them away, Deut. xxxi. 6. This will the Lord thy God gather thee. And the following words (45.) Ye may be sure that God will send for fishers and hunters, the Medes and Persians, that shall find them out in the countries where they are scattered, and send them back to their own land; or, Zerubbabel, and others of their own nation, who should fish them out, and hunt after them, to persuade them to return; or whatever instruments the Spirit of God made use of to stir up their spirits to return, which at first they were backward to. They began to nestle in Babylon; but as an eagle stirs up her nest, and flutters over her young, so God did by them, Zech. ii. 7.

2. Their deliverance out of Babylon should, upon some accounts, be more illustrious and memorable than their deliverance out of Egypt was. Both were the Lord's doing, and marvellous in their eyes, both were proofs that the Lord liveth, and were to be kept in everlasting remembrance, to his honour, as the living God; but the fresh mercy shall be so surprising, so welcome, that it shall even abolish the memory of the former. Not but that new mercies should put us in mind of old ones, and give us occasion to renew our thanksgivings for them; yet, because we are tempted to think that the former days were better than these, and to ask, Where are all the wonders that our fathers told us of? as if God's arm were waxen short; and to cry up the age of miracles above the later ages, when mercies are wrought in a way of common providence; therefore we are allowed here comparatively to forget the bringing of Israel out of Egypt as a deliverance out of whelm, as well as to heave up the arm of might and power, this by the Spirit of the Lord of hosts, Zech. iv. 6. In this there was more of pardoning mercy (the most glorious branch of divine mercy) than in that; for their captivity in Babylon had more in it of the punishment of sin than their bondage in Egypt; and therefore that which comforts Zed in her deliverance out of Babylon, is this, that there was had mercy, God's mercies were more than the sin deserved, God glorifies himself, and we must glorify him, in those mercies that have no miracles in them, as well as in those that have. And though the favours of God to our fathers must not be forgotten, yet these to ourselves in our own day we must especially give thanks for.

3. Their deliverance out of captivity shall be accompanied with blessed reformation, and they shall return, effectually cured of their inclination to idolatry, which will complete their deliverance, and make it a mercy indeed. They had defiled their own land with their detestable things, v. 18. But when they have smarted for so doing, they shall come and humble themselves before God, v. 19.

(1.) They shall be brought to acknowledge that their God only is God indeed, for he is a God in need; My Strength to support and comfort me, my Fortress to protect and shelter me, and my Refuge to whom I may flee in the day of affliction. Note, Need drives many to God, who had set themselves at a distance from him. Those that slighted him in the day of his power, will be glad to flee to him in the day of their affliction.

(2.) They shall be quickened to return to him by the conversion of the Gentiles; The Gentiles shall come to thee from the ends of the earth; and therefore shall not we come? Or, The Jews who had by their idolatries made themselves as Gentiles, (so I rather understand it,) shall come to thee by repentance and reformation, shall return to their duty and allegiance, even from the ends of the earth, from all the countries whither they were driven. The prophet comforts himself with the hopes of this, and in a transport of joy returns to God the notice he had given him of it; "O Lord, my Strength and my Fortress, I am now easy, since thou hast given me a prospect of multitudes that shall come to thee from the ends of the earth, both of Jews and Gentiles.

(3.) They shall acknowledge the folly of their ancestors, which it becomes them to do, when they were smarting for the sins of their ancestors; Surely our fathers have inherited, not the satisfaction they procured themselves and their children, but lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit; we are now sensible that our fathers were cheated in their idolatrous worship, it did not prove what it promised, and therefore, what have we to do any more with it?" Note, It were well if the disappointment which some have met with in the service of sin, and the pernicious consequences of it to them, might prevail to deter others from trampling on inheritances.

(4.) They shall reason themselves out of their idolatry; and that reformation is likely to be sincere and durable, which results from a rational conviction of the gross absurdity there is in sin. They shall argue thus with themselves, (and it is well argued,) Should a man be such a fool, so perfectly void of the reason of a man, as to make gods to himself, the creatures of his own fancy, the work of his own hands, when they are really no gods? v. 20. Can a man be so besotted, so perfectly lost to human understanding, as to expect any divine blessing or favour from that which pretends to no divinity but what is first received from him?

(5.) They shall herein give honour to God, and make it to appear that they know both his hand in his providence, and his own fancy there, and that they are brought to know his name, by what they are made to know of his hand, v. 21. This once, now at length, they shall be made to know that which they would not be brought to know by all the pains the prophets took with them. Note, So stupid are we, that nothing less than the mighty hand of divine grace, known experimentally, can make us know rightly the name of God as it is revealed to us.

4. Their deliverance out of captivity shall be a type and figure of the great salvation to be wrought out by the Messiah, who shall gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad. And this is that which so far outshines the deliverance out of Egypt, as even to eclipse the lustre of it, and make it even to be forgot. To this some apply that of the many fishers and hunters, the preachers of the gospel, who were fishers of men, to enclasp them, and with the gospel to fan the fire in every mountain and hill, and secure them for Christ. Then the Gentiles came to God, some from the ends of the earth, and turned to the worship of him from the service of dumb idols.

CHAP. XVII.

In this chapter, I. God convicts the Jews of the sin of idolatry by the notorious evidence of the fact, and condemns them to captivity for it, v. 1-4. II. He shows them the folly of all their carnal confidences, which should stand them in no stead, when God's time was to contend with them; and that this was one of the sins upon which his controversy with them was grounded, v. 5-11. III. The prophet makes his appeal and address to God, upon occasions of the malice of his enemies against him, committing himself to the divine protection, and begging of God to appear for him, v. 12-18. IV. God, by the prophet, warns the people to keep holy the sabbath-day, assurances them that, if they did, it should be the lengthening out of their tranquillity; but that, if not, God would by some desolating judgment assert the honour of his sabbaths, v. 19-27.

1. The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond: it is graven upon the table of their heart, and upon the horns of your altars; 2. Whilst their children remember their altars and their groves by the green trees upon the high hills. 3. O my mountain in the field, I will give thy substance and all thy treasures to the spoil, and thy high places for sin, throughout all thy borders. 4. And thou, even thyself, shalt discontinue from thy heritage that I gave thee; and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies in the land which thou knowest not; for ye have kindled a fire in mine anger, which shall burn for ever.

The people had asked, (ch. xiv. 10.) What is our iniquity, and what is our sin? As if they could not be charged with any thing worth speaking of, for which God should enter into judgment with them; their challenge was answered there, but here we have a further reply to it; in which,

1. The indictment is fully proved upon the prisoners, both the fact and the fault; their sin is too plain to be denied, and too great to be excused, and they have nothing to plead either in extenuation of the crime, or in arrest and mitigation of the judgment.

(1.) They cannot plead not guilty, for their sins are upon record in the book of God's omniscience, and their own conscience; nay, and they are obvious to the eye and observation of the world, v. 1, 2. They are written before God in the most legible character; the public records of the world are their treasuries, never to be forgotten, Deut. xxxii. 34. They are written there with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond; what is so written will not be worn out by time, but is, as Job speaks, graven in the rock for ever. Note, The sin of sinners is never forgotten, till it is forgiven. It is ever before God, till by repentance it comes to be ever before us. It is graven there, as a lasting record against them, and as instead of a thousand witnesses. What is graven on the heart, though it may be coveted and closed up for a time, yet, being graven, it cannot be razed.
out, but will be produced in evidence, when the books shall be opened. Nay, we need not appeal to the tables of the heart, perhaps they will not own the convictions of their consciences. We need go no farther, for proof of the charge, than the forms of idolatry to which the blood of their idolatrous sacrifices was sprinkled, and perhaps the names of the idols, to whose honour they were erected, were inscribed. Their neighbours will witness against them, and all the creatures they have abused by using them in the service of their lusts. To complete the evidence, their own children shall be witnesses against them; they will tell truth, when they tell lies; the blood of their idolatrous sacrifices was sprinkled, and perhaps they shall remember the altars and the groves to which their parents took them when they were little, v. 2. It appears that they were full of them, and acquainted with them betimes, they talk of them so frequently, so familiarly, and with so much delight.
(2.) They cannot plead that they repent, or are come to a better mind; no, as the guilt of their sin is undeniable, so their inclination to sin is invincible and incurable. In this sense many understand v.
1, 2. Their sin is deeply engraven as with a pen of iron in the tablets of their hearts; they have a rooted affection to it, it is woven into their very nature; their sin is dear to them as that is of which we say, It is engraven on our hearts. The bias of their minds is still as strong as ever toward their idols, and they are not wrought upon either by the word or rod of God to forget them, and abate their affection to them. It is written upon the horns of their altars, for they have given up their names to their idols, and resolve to abide by what they have done; they have bound themselves, as with cords, to the horns of the altars. And v. 2. may be read fully to this sense, As they remember their children, so remember their fathers; as they remember their altars and their groves, they are as fond of them and take as much pleasure in them, as men do in their own children, and are as loath to part with them; they will live and die with their idols, and can no more forget them than a woman can forget her sucking child.
2. The indictment being thus fully proved, the judgment is affirmed, and the sentence ratified, v.
3, 4. For this is said as if they are thus wedded to their sins, and will not part with them.
(1.) They shall be made to part with their treasures, and those shall be given into the hands of strangers. Jerusalem is God's mountain in the field, it was built on a hill in the midst of a plain; all the treasures of that wealthy city will God give to the strangers. Or, My mountains with their fields, thy wealth and all thy treasures, will I expose to spoil; both the products of the country, and the stores of the city, shall be seized by the Chaldeans. Justly are men stripped of that which they have served their idols with, and have made the food and fuel of their lusts. My mountain (so the whole land was, Ps. lxxviii. 54. Deut. xi. 11.) you have turned into your high places, your worshipped vessels on the high hills, (v. 2.) and God will strip you, shall be given for a spoil in all your borders. What we make for a sin, God will make for a spoil; for what comfort can we expect in that wherewith God is disho noured?
(2.) They shall be made to part with their inheritance, with their real estates, as well as personals, and the gods of their land will pass over them, (v. 4.) Thou, even thou, or thou thyself, and those that are in thee, all the inhabitants, shall discontinue from thy heritage that I gave thee. God owns that it was their heritage, and that he gave it them; they had an unquestionable title to it, which was an aggravation of their folly in throwing themselves out of the possession of it. It is through thi
self. (So some read it.) through thine own default, that thou art dispossessed. Thou shalt discontinue, or intermit, the occupation of thy land. The law appointed them to let their land rest, (it is the word here used,) one year in seven, Exod. xxviii. 11.
They did not observe that law, and how God would compel them to let it rest; The land shall enjoy her sabbaths; (Lev. xxvi. 34.) and y. 11. shall be no rest to them, they shall serve their enemies in a land they know not. Observe, [1.] Sin works a discontent ment of our comforts, and deprives us of the enjoyment of that which God has given us. Yet, [2.] A discontentment of the possession is not a defeasance of the right, but it is indemnified, that upon their repentance, they shall recover possession again. For the present, ye have kindled it for mine anger, which burns so hot, that it seems as if it would burn for ever; and so it will, unless you repent, for it is the anger of an everlasting God fastening upon immortal souls; and who knows the power of that anger?
4. Thus saith the Lord, Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord: 6. For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited. 7. Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is:
8. For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit. 9. The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it? 10. I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings. 11. As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not; so he that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool.
It is excellent doctrine that is preached in these verses, to the general concern and use to us all,
and it does not appear to have any particular reference to the present state of Judah and Jerusalem; the prophet's sermons were not all prophetic, but some of them practical; yet this discourse, which, probably, we have here only the heads of, would be of singular use to them by way of caution, not to misplace their confidence in the day of their discovery. Let all learn what we are taught here, Concerning the judgment and retribution they will certainly meet with who depend upon creatures for success and relief when they are in trouble;
(v. 5, 6.) Cursed be the man that trusts in man;
God pronounces him cursed for the affect he thereby puts upon him; or, Cursed, that is, miserable, is the man that does so, for he leans upon a broken reed, which shall not only fail him, but will run into his hand and pierce it. Observe, [1.] We shall sin more condemned; it is trusting in man, putting that con fidence in the wisdom and power, the kindness and faithfulness of men, which should be placed in these attributes of God only; making our applications to men, and raising our expectations from them as principal agents, whereas they are but instruments in the hand of Providence. It is making flesh the

that is always green, whose leaf does not wither; they shall be cheerful to themselves, and beautiful in the eyes of others. Those who thus give honour to God by giving him credit, God will put honor upon them, and make them the ornament and delight of the places where they live, as green trees are.

3. Concerning the sinfulness of man's heart, and the divine inspection it is always under, v. 9, 10. It is folly to trust in man, for he is not only frail, but false and deceitful. We are apt to think that we have the best of others, and do not suspect to be there; nay, it is a common mistake among the children of men to think themselves, their own hearts at least, a great deal better than they really are. The heart, the conscience of man, in his corrupt and fallen state, is deceitful above all things; it is subtle and false, it is apt to supplant; so the word properly signifies, it is from which Jacob had his name, a supplanter. It calls evil good, and good evil; puts false colours upon things, and cries peace to those to whom peace does not belong. When men say in their hearts, their wishes to whisper to them, that either there is no God, or he does not see, or he will not require, or they shall have peace, though they go on; in these, and a thousand similar suggestions, the heart is deceitful; it cheats men into doing that which will be of their suggestion, that they are self-deceivers, self-deceivers. Herein the heart is desparately wicked; it is deadly, it is desperate. The case is bad indeed, and in a manner deplorable, and past relief, if the conscience, which should rectify the errors of the other faculties, is itself a mother of falsehood, and a ringleader in the delusion. What will become of a man, if that in him which should be a guide of the road, a light, to show him the right way, give a false light, if God's deputy in the soul, that is trusted to support his interests, betrays them? Such is the deceitfulness of the heart, that we may truly say, Who can know it? Who can describe how bad the heart is? We cannot know our own hearts, not what they will do in an hour of temptation, (Heze. xii. 4, 5,) do not, but what corrupt dispositions the heart has, and whether the things they have turned aside; who can understand his errors? Much less can we know the hearts of others, or have any dependence upon them. But,

2. Whatever wickedness there is in the heart, God sees it, and knows it, is perfectly acquainted with it, and apprized of it: I the Lord search the heart. This is true of all that is in the heart, all its thoughts of it, its regrets, and those things most carelessly overlooked by ourselves; all the intents of it, the closest, and those that are most artfully disguised, and industriously concealed from others. Men may be imposed upon, but God can—
He not only searches the heart with a piercing eye, but he tries the reins, to pass a judgment upon what he discovers, to give every thing its true character and due weight. He tries, as the gold is tried, whether it be standard or no; as the prisoner is tried, whether he be guilty or no. And this judgment which he makes of the heart, is in order to his passing judgment upon the man; it is to get to know the man, according to the desert and the tendency of them; life to those that walked in the ways of life, and death to those that persisted in the paths of the destroyer; and according to the fruit of his doings, the effect and influence his doings have had upon others; or, according to what is settled by the word of God to be the fruit of men's doings, blessings to the obedient, and curses to the disobedient. Note, Therefore God is Judge himself, and he alone, because he, and none besides, knows the hearts of the children of men. It is true especially of all the deceitfulness and wickedness of the heart; all its corrupt devices, desires, and designs, God observes and discerns; and (which is more than any man can do) he judges of the overt act by the heart. Note, God knows more evil of us than we do of ourselves; and which is a good reason why we should not flatter ourselves, but always stand in awe of the judgment of God.

4. Concerning the curse that attends wealth unjustly gotten: fraud and violence had been reigning, crying sins in Judah and Jerusalem; now the prophet would have those who had been guilty of these sins, and were now stripped of all they had, to read their own vocation: (24.) He that gets riches, and not by right, though he may make them his hope, he shall never have joy of them. Observe, It is possible that those who use unlawful means to get wealth may succeed therein, and prosper for a time; and it is a temptation to many to defraud and oppress their neighbours, when there is money to be got by it. He who has got treasures by vanity and a lie in tongue, may hug himself in his success, and say, I am rich; nay, and I am innocent too, (Hos. xii. 8.) but he shall leave them in the midst of his days; they shall be taken from him, or he from them; God shall cut him off with some surprising stroke then, when he says, Soul, take thine ease, thou hast goods laid up for many years, Luke xii. 19, 20. He shall leave them to him knows not whom, and not for him whom he knew, and not with him. It intimates what a great vexation it is to a worldly man at death, that he must leave his riches behind him; and justly may it be a terror to those who got them unjustly; for though the wealth will not follow them to another world, the guilt will, and the torment of an everlasting, Son, remember, Luke xvi. 25. Thus, at his end, he shall be a foil, a Nabul, whose wealth did him no good, which he had so sordidly hoarded, when his heart became dead as a stone. He was a fool all along, sometimes perhaps his own conscience told him so, but at his end he will appear to be so. Those are fools indeed, who are fools in their latter end: and such multitudes will prove, who were cried up as wise men, that did well for themselves, Ps. xlix. 13, 18. They that get great wealth, shall get the comfort of it in death, and the benefit of it to eternity; (Prov. xix. 20.) but they that place their happiness in the wealth of the world, and, right or wrong, will be rich, will rue the folly of it, when it is too late to rectify the fatal mistake. This is like the partridge that sits on eggs, and hatches them not, but they are broken (as Job xxxix. 15.) or stolen, (Ps. xli. 14.) or they are, as it were, like some sort of fowl there was, well known among the Jews, whose case this commonly was. The rich man takes a great deal of pains to get an estate together, and sits brooding upon it; but never has any comfort or satisfaction in it; his projects to enrich himself by sinful courses miscarry, and come to nothing. Let us therefore be wise in time; what we get, to get it honestly; and what we have, to use it charitably; that we may lay up in store a good foundation, and be wise for eternity.

12. A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary. 13. O Lord, the Hope of Israel, all that forsake thee shall be ashamed, and they that depart from me shall be written in the earth, because they have forsaken the Lord, the fountain of living waters. 14. Heal me, O Lord, and I shall be healed; save me, and I shall be saved: for thou art my praise. 15. Behold, they say unto me, Where is the word of the Lord? let it come now. 16. As for me, I have not hastened from being a pastor to follow thee; neither have I desired the woful day, thou knowest: that which came out of my lips was right before thee. 17. Be not a terror unto me: thou art my hope in the day of evil. 18. Let them be confounded that persecute me, but let not me be confounded; let them be dismayed, but let not me be dismayed: bring upon them the day of evil, and destroy them with double destruction.

Here, as often before, we have the prophet retired for private meditation, and alone with God. These ministers that would have comfort in their work, must be much so. In his converse here with God and his own heart, he takes the liberty, which devout souls sometimes use in their soliloquies, to pass from one thing to another, without tying themselves too strictly to the laws of method and coherence.

1. He acknowledges the great favour of God to his people, in setting up a revealed religion among them, and dignifying them with divine institutions: (v. 12.) A glorious high throne from the beginning was the place of the sanctuary; the temple at Jerusalem, where God manifested his special presence, where the lively oracles were lodged, where the people paid their homage to their Sovereign, and whether they fled for refuge in distress, was the place of their sanctuary. That was a glorious high throne; it was a throne of holiness, that made it truly glorious; it was God's throne, that made it truly high. Jerusalem is called the city of the great King, not only Israel's King, but the King of the whole earth, so that it might justly be deemed the metropolis, or royal city of the world. It was from the beginning so, from the first projecting of it by David, and building of it by Solomon, 2 Chron. ii. 9. It was the honour of Israel, that God set up such a glorious throne among them. As the glorious and high throne, that is, heaven, is the place of our sanctuary; so some read it. Note, All good men have a high value and veneration for the ordinances of God, and reckon the place of the sanctuary a glorious high throne. Jeremiah mentions this here, either as a plea with God for mercy to their land, in honour of the throne of his glory, (ch xiv. 21.) or as an aggravation of the sin of his people, in forsaking God, though his throne was among them, and so profaning his crown, and the place of his sanctuary.

2. He acknowledges the righteousness of God, in abandoning those to ruin, that forsook him, and revolted from their allegiance to him, v. 13. He
4. He complains of the infidelity and daring impiety of the people to whom he preached. It greatly troubled him, and he shows how before God this trouble; as the servant that had slights put upon him: by the guests he was sent to invite, came and showed his Lord these things. He had faithfully delivered God’s message to them; and what answer has he to return to him that sent him? Behold, they say unto me, Where is the word of the Lord? is there no God? and why was it I said, Now, v. 15. Ins. v. 19. They bantered the prophet, and made a jest of that which he delivered with the greatest seriousness. (1) They denied the truth of what he said; ‘If that be the word of the Lord, which then spakest to us, where is it? Why is it not fulfilled?’ Thus the patience of God was impudently abused, as a ground to question his sincerity, (ch. xxvii. 19.) ‘For ye have no desire of mine presence, saith the Lord of hosts; therefore I am turned away from you.’ (2) He said; ‘Let God Almighty do his worst, let all he has said come to pass, we shall do well enough; the lion is not so fierce as he is point’d, Amos v. 18. Lord, to what purpose is it to speak to men that will neither believe nor fear?’

5. He appeals to God concerning the faithful discharge of the office to which he was called, v. 16. ‘If I am in a way to trouble the people, let God make them suffer for it, and thus deal with them: Let the Lord cut off his people, to exasperate him, and make him uneasy, and tempt him to prevaricate, and alter his message, for fear of displeasing them; but, “Lord,” says he, “thou knowest I have not yielded to them.”’

(1.) He continued constant to his work. His office, instead of being his credit and protection, exposed him to reproach, contempt, and injury; ‘Yet, his enemies can have not hastened to abuse and disgrace him after thee; I have not left my work, nor sued for a discharge, or quieta.’

Prophets were pastors to the people, to feed them with the good word of God; but they were to be pastors after God, and all ministers must be so, according to his heart, (ch. iii. 15.) to follow him, and the directions and instructions he gives; such a pastor Jeremiah was; and though he met with as much difficulty and discouragement as ever any man did, yet he did not fly off as Jonah did, nor desire to be excused from going any more on God’s errands. Note, Those that are employed for God, though their success answer not their expectation, must not therefore throw up their commission, but continue to follow God, though the storm be in their faces. (2.) He kept up his affection to the people. Though they were very abusive to him, he was continually desirous of being with them, and let me not fall into their wicked hands. ‘Heal me, sanctify me by thy grace; save me, bring me to thy glory.’ ‘All that shall be saved hereafter are sanctified now; unless the disease of sin be purged out, the soul cannot live.’ To enforce this petition he pleads, (1.) The firm belief he had of God’s power; ‘Heal thou me, and then shall I be healed; the cure will certainly be wrought if thou undertak’st it; it shall be a thorough cure, and not a palliative one. Those that come to be healed, ought to be abundantly satisfied in the all-sufficiency of their Physician. Save me, and then I shall certainly be saved, be my dangers and enemies ever so threatening. If God hold us up, we shall live; if he protect us, we shall be safe.’ (2.) The sincere regard he had to God’s glory; I desire I may be healed and praise thee, that I may live and praise thee, Ps. cxix. 175. Thou art he whom I praise, and the praise due to thee I never gave to another. Thou art he whom I glory in, and boast of, for on thee do I depend. Thou art he that furnishes me with continual matter for praise, and I have given thee praise of the mouth, and God is by me exalted. Thou shalt be my praise;’ (so some read it;) ‘bless me, and save me, and thou shalt have the glory of it. My praise shall be continually of thee,’ Ps. lxvi. 6.—lxix. 13.

6. He humbly begs of God, that he would own him, and protect him, and carry him on cheerfully in that work to which God had so plainly called him, and he had so sincerely devoted himself: Two things he here desires.

(1.) That he might have comfort in serving the God that sent him; (v. 17.) Be not thou a terror to me. Surely more is implied than is expressed;

"Be thou a Comfort to me, and let thy favour rejoice my heart, and encourage me, when my enemies do all they can to terrify me, and either to drive me from my work, or to make me drive on heavily in it." Note, The best have that in them, which might justly make God a terror to them, as he was for some time to Job, (ch. vi. 4.) to Asaph, (Ps. Lxxix. 3.) to Elisha, (2 K. xii. 13.)—this is that which good men, knowing the terrors of the Lord, dread and deprecate more than any thing: nay, whatever frightful accidents may befall them, or how formidable soever their enemies may appear to them, they can do well enough, so long as God is not a Terror to them. He pleads, "Thou art my hope; and then nothing else is my fear, no, not in the day of evil, when it is most threatening, most pressing. My dependence is upon thee; and therefore be not a Terror to me." Note, These that by faith make God their Confidence, shall have him for their comfort in the worst of times, if it be not their own fault: if we make him our trust, we shall not find him our terror.

(2.) That he might have courage in dealing with the people to whom he was sent. v. 18. They persecuted him, who should have entertained and encouraged him; "Lord," says he, "let them be founded, let them be overpowered by the convictions of the world, and made ashamed of their obstinacy, or else let the judgments threaten be at length executed upon them; but let not me be confounded, let not me be terrified by their menace, so as to betray my trust. Note, God's ministers have work to do, which they need not be either ashamed or afraid to go on in, but they do need to be helped by the divine grace to go on in it without shame or fear. Jeremiah had not desired the useful day upon his country in general; but as to his persecutors, in a just and holy indignation at their malice, he prays, Bring upon them the day of evil; in hope that the day so brought upon them might prevent the bringing of it upon the country; if they were taken away, the people would be better; "Therefore destroy them with a double destruction, let them be utterly destroyed, root and branch; and let the prospect of that destruction be their present confusion." This the prophet prays, not at all that he might be avenged, nor so much that he might be eased, but that the Lord may be known by the judgments which he executes.

19. Thus saith the Lord unto me, Go and stand in the gate of the children of the people, whereby the kings of Judah come in, and by the which they go out, and in all the gates of Jerusalem; 20. And say unto them, Hear ye the word of the Lord, ye kings of Judah, and all Judah, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, that enter in by these gates: 21. Thus saith the Lord, Take heed to yourselves, and bear no burden on the sabbath-day, nor bring it in by the gates of Jerusalem; 22. Neither carry forth a burden out of your houses on the sabbath-day, neither do ye any work, but hallow ye the sabbath-day, as I commanded your fathers. 23. But they obeyed not, neither inclined their ear, but made their neck stiff, that they might not hear, nor receive instruction. 24. And it shall come to pass, if ye diligently hearken unto me, saith the Lord, to bring in no burden through the gates of this city on the sabbath-day, but hallow the sabbath-day, to do no work therein; 25. Then shall there enter into the gates of this city kings and princes sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, they, and their princes, the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem: and this city shall remain for ever. 26. And they shall come from the cities of Judah, and from the land of Benjamin, and from the plain, and from the mountains, and from the south, bringing burnt-offerings, and sacrifices, and meat-offerings, and incense, and bringing sacrifices of praise, unto the house of the Lord.

27. But if ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the sabbath-day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath-day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched.

These verses are a sermon concerning sabbath-sanctification; it is a word which the prophet received from the Lord, and was ordered to deliver in the most solemn, public manner to the people; for they were sent not only to reprove sin, and to press obedience in general, but they must descend to particulars. This message must be proclaimed in all the places of court, and therefore in the gates, not only because through them people were continually passing and repassing, but because in them they kept their courts, and laid up their stores. It must be proclaimed (as the king or queen is usually proclaimed) at the court-gate first, the gate by which the kings of Judah come in, and go out, v. 19. Let them be told their duty first, particularly this duty; for if sabbaths be not sanctified as they should be, the rulers of Judah are to be contended with, (so they were, Neh. xiii. 17.) for they are certainly wanting in their duty. He must also preach it in all the gates of Jerusalem. It is a matter of great and general concern, therefore let all take notice of it. Let the kings of Judah hear the word of the Lord, for, high as they are, he is above them; and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for, mean as they are, he takes notice of them, and of what they say and do on sabbath-days. Observe,

1. How the sabbath is to be sanctified, and what is the law concerning it, v. 21, 22. (1.) They must refrain from the work of their calling, and from their common employments, on the sabbath-day, must do no servile work. They must bear no burden into the city, or out of it, into their houses, or out of them; husbandmen's burdens of corn must not be carried in, nor manure carried out; nor must tradesmen's burdens of wares or merchandises be imported or exported. There must not be loaded loads, or cart, or waggon, be seen on the sabbath-day, either in the streets or in the reads; these must not ply on that day, nor must the servants be suffered to fetch in provisions or fuel. It is a day of rest, and must not be made a day of labour, unless in case of necessity. (2.) They must apply themselves to that which is the proper work and business of the day; "Hallow ye the sabbaths, consecrate it to the honour of God, and spend it in his service and worship." It is in order to this, that worldly business must be laid aside, that we may be entire for, and intent upon, that work which requires and deserves the whole man. (3.) They must also, like the Israelites in the wilderness, watch against every thing that borders upon the profanation of the sabbath." Where God is jealous, we must be cautious. "Take heed to yourselves, for it is at your peril, if you rob God of that part of your time which he has reserved to himself." Take heed to your souls; so the word is; in order to the right sanctifying of sabbaths, we must hold within the frame of our spirits, and have a watchful eye upon all the motions of the inward man. Let not the soul be burdened with the cares of this world on sabbath-days, but let that be employed, even all that is within us, in the work of the day. And, (4.) He refers them to the law, the statute in this case made and provided; "This is no new imposition upon you, but is what I commanded your fathers;" it is an ancient law, it was added as an original contract; nay, it was a command to the patriarchs.

2. How the sabbath had been profaned; (v. 23.) "Your fathers were required to keep holy the sabbath-day; but they obeyed not, they hardened their necks against this as well as other commands that were given them." This is mentioned, to show that there needed a reformation in this matter, which would be the fluctuation of these laws, which they had been guilty of. They hardened their necks against this command, that they might not hear and receive instruction concerning other commands. Where sabbaths are neglected, all religion sensibly goes to decay.

3. What blessings God had in store for them, if they would make conscience of sabbath-sanctification. Though their fathers had been guilty of the profanation of the sabbath, they should not only not smart for it, but their city and nation should recover its ancient glory, if they would keep sabbaths better, v. 24.—26. Let them take care to hallow the sabbath, and do no work therein; and then,

(1.) The court shall flourish. Kings in succession, or the many branches of the royal family at the same time as kings. Their princes that sit upon the throne of judgment, the princes of the house of David, (Ps. cxvii. 5.) shall ride in great pomp through the gates of Jerusalem, some in chariots, and some on horses, attended with a numerous retinue of the men of Judah. Note, The honour of the government is the joy of the kingdom; and the support of religion would contribute greatly to both.

(2.) The city shall flourish. Let there be a face of religion kept up, in Jerusalem, by sabbath-sanctification, that it may answer to its title, the holy city, and then it shall remain for ever, shall for ever be inhabited; (so the word may be rendered;) it shall not be destroyed and dispeopled, as it is threatened to be. Whatever supports religion, tends to establish the civil interests of a land.

(3.) The country shall flourish. The cities of Judah and the land of Benjamin shall be replenished with vast numbers of inhabitants, and those abounding in plenty, and living in peace, which will appear by the multitude and value of their offerings which they shall present to God. By this the flourishing of a country may be judged of; What shall this land do for the honour of God? Those that真爱 their religion, either are poor, or are in a fair way to be so.

(4.) The church shall flourish. Meat-offerings, and incense, and sacrifices of praise, shall be brought to the house of the Lord, for the maintenance of the service of that house, and the servants that attend it. God's institutions shall be conscientiously observed, no sacrifices and incense shall be offered to idols, and alienated from God, but every thing shall go in the right channel. They shall have both occasion and hearts to bring sacrifices of praise to God. This is made an instance of their prosperity.

Then a people truly flourish, when religion flourishes among them. And this is the effect of sabbath-sanctification; when that branch of religion is kept up, other instances of it are kept up likewise, but when that is lost, devotion is lost either in superstition or in profaneness. It is a true observation which some have made, That the streams of all religion run either deep or shallow, according as the banks of the sabbath are kept up or neglected.

4. What judgments they must expect would come upon them, if they persisted in the profanation of the sabbath; (v. 27.) "If you will not hearken to me in this matter, to keep the gates shut on sabbath-days, so that there may be no unnecessary entering in, or going out, on that day; if you will break through the gates, the fire that is kindled shall be a fire in common with other days, know that God will kindle a fire in the gates of your city," intimating, that it shall be kindled by an enemy besieging the city, and assaulting the gates, who shall take this course to force their entrance. Jostly shall those gates be fired, that are not used as they ought to be, to shut out sin, and to keep people in; and in the name of the law, it is a fire that shall devour even the palaces of Jerusalem, where the princes and nobles dwell, who did not use their power and interest as they ought to have done, to keep up the honour of God's sabbaths; but it shall not be quenched, until it has laid the whole city in ruins. This was fulfilled by the army of the Chaldeans, ch. lii. 13. The profanation of the sabbath is a sin in which God has often contended with a people by fire.

CHAP. XVIII.

In this chapter, we have, 1. A general declaration of God's ways in dealing with nations and kingdoms; that he can easily do what he will with them, as easily as the potter can with the clay. 1. v. 14. and following verses do what is just and fair with them. If he threaten their ruin, yet, upon their repentance, he will return in mercy to them, and when he is coming toward them in mercy, nothing but a stealing up of their fire shall stop the potter's favours, v. 7. 10. II. A particular demonstration of the folly of the men of Judah and Jerusalem, in departing from their God to idols, and so bringing ruin upon themselves, not overlooking the fair warnings given them, and God's kind intentions toward them, v. 11. 17. 11. The prophet's complaint to God of the base ingratitude and unreasonable malice of his enemies, persecutors, and slanderers, and his prayers against them, v. 18. 23.

1. The word which came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 2. Arise, and go down into the potter's house, and there will I cause thee to hear my words. Then I went down to the potter's house, and, behold, he wrought a work on the wheels. 4. And the vessel that he made of clay was marred in the hand of the potter; so he made it again another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it. Then the word of the Lord came to me, saying, 6. O house of Israel, cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the Lord. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, re ye in my hand, O house of Israel. 7. what instant I shall speak concerning a on, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck and to pull down, and to destroy it: 8. hat nation, against whom I have procurred, turn from their evil, I will repent he evil that I thought to do unto them. And at what instant I shall speak con-ing a nation, and concerning a king-i, to build, and to plant it: 10. If it do in my sight, that it obey not my voice, I will repent of the good wherewith I saidthat I would benefit them.

The prophet is here sent to the potter's house, (he knew where to find it,) not to preach a sermon, as before, to the gates of Jerusalem, but to prepare a sermon, or rather to receive it ready prepared. Those needed not to study their sermons, that had them, as he had this, by immediate inspiration. "Go to the potter's house, and see how he manages his work, and there I will cause thee, by silent whispers, to hear my words. There thou shalt receive a message, to be delivered to the people." Note, Those that would know God's mind, must observe his appointments, and attend there where they may hear his words. The prophet was never without a heavenly vail, and therefore went to the potter's house (v. 3.) and there he would observe how he wrought his work upon the wheels, just as he pleased, with a great deal of ease, and in a little time. And, (v. 4.) when a lump of clay that he designed to form into one shape, either proved too stiff, or had a stone in it, or some way or other came to be marred in his hand, he presently turned it into another shape; if it will not serve for a vessel of honour, it will serve for a vessel of dis-honour, just as seems good to the potter. It is probable that Jeremiah knew well enough how the potter wrought his work, and how easily he threw it into what form he pleased; but he must go, and observe it now, that, having the idea of it fresh in his mind, he might the more readily and distinctly apprehend that truth which God designed thereby to represent to him, and might the more easily and gently explain it to the people. God used simili-tudes by his servants the prophets, (Hos. xii. 10.) and it was requisite that they should themselves understand the similitudes they used. Ministers will make a good use of their converse with the business and affairs of this life, if they learn thereby to speak more plainly and familiarly to people about the things of God, and to expand scripture comparsions. For they ought to make all their knowledge, some way or other, serviceable to their profession. Now let us see what the message is, which Jeremiah receives, and is intrusted with the delivery of,
at the potter's house. While he looks carefully upon the potter's work, God darts into his mind these two great truths, which he must preach to the house of Israel.

1. That God has both an incontestable sovereignty over us, and an irresistible ability, to form and fashion kingdoms and nations as he pleases, so as to serve his own purposes: "Cannot I do with you as this potter, saith the Lord? v. 6. Have not I as absolute a power over you in respect both of might and of right?" Nay, God has a cleverer title to a dominion over us than the potter has over the clay, for the potter only gives it its form, whereas we have both matter and form from God. As the clay is in the potter's hand to be moulded and shaped as he pleases, so are ye in my hand. This intimates, (1.) That God has an incontestable sovereignty over us, is not Debtor to us, may dispose of us as he thinks fit, and is not accountable to us; and that it would be as absurd for us to dispute this as for the clay to quarrel with the potter. (2.) That it is a very easy thing with God to make what use he pleases of us, and to change his pleasure with us, and that we cannot resist him. One turn of the wheel, quite alters the shape of the clay, makes it a vessel, unmakes it, new-makes it. Thus are our times in God's hand, and not in our own, and it is in vain for us to strive with him. It is spoken here of nations; the most politic, the most potent, are what God is pleased to make them, and no other: 33.) That God will not be a Lozer by any in his glory, at long run, but that if he be not glorified by them, he will be glorified upon them. If the potter's vessel be marred for one use, it shall serve for another; those that will not be monuments of mercy, shall be monuments of justice: The Lord has made all things for himself, yea even the wicked for the day of evil, Prov. xvi. 4. God formed us out of the clay, (Job xxii. 6.) and we are still as clay in his hands; (Isa. xli. 3.) and therefore, no doubt, as easily managed as the clay by the potter. (3.) That God will not be a Lozer by any in his glory, at long run, but that if he be not glorified by them, he will be

7. By this is promised to Israel, that God, in the days to come, would carry out the same purposes of mercy and salvation, as he had once shown himself ready to perform. 8. God would make the greatest sinners useful instruments of good, and even the instruments of destruction into instruments of salvation, that it might appear that he was a Lozer by none. 9.) That God will not be a Lozer by any in his glory, at long run, but that if he be not glorified by them, he will be glorified upon them. If the potter's vessel be marred for one use, it shall serve for another; those that will not be monuments of mercy, shall be monuments of justice: The Lord has made all things for himself, yea even the wicked for the day of evil, Prov. xvi. 4. God formed us out of the clay, (Job xxii. 6.) and we are still as clay in his hands; (Isa. xli. 3.) and therefore, no doubt, as easily managed as the clay by the potter. (3.) That God will not be a Lozer by any in his glory, at long run, but that if he be not glorified by them, he will be

2. That, in the exercise of this authority and ability, he always goes by fixed rules of equity and goodness. He dispenses favours indeed in a way of sovereignty, but never punishes by arbitrary powers.
High is his right hand, yet he rules not with a high hand, but, as it follows there, Justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne, Ps. lxxxii. 13, 14.
God asserts his despotic power, and tells us what he might do, but at the same time assures us, that he will act as a righteous and merciful Judge.

1. When God is coming against us in ways of judgment, let us not think that the ways of God in these things, which shall appear by this, that national repentance will stop the progress of the judgments; (v. 7, 8.) If God speak concerning a nation, to pluck up its fences that secure it, and so lay it open, its fruit-trees that adorn and enrich it, and so leave it desolate; to pull down its fortifications, that the enemy may have liberty to enter in, its habitations, that the inhabitants may be under a necessity of going out, and so destroy it, as either a vineyard or a city is destroyed; in this case, if that nation take the alarm, and repent of its sins, and reform its lives, turn every one from his evil way, and return to God, God will return in mercy to them, and though he cannot change his mind, he will change his way, so that it may be said, He repents him of the evil cause that makes him to do evil. Thus often in the time of the Judges, when the oppressed people were penitent people, still God raised them up savours;
and when they turned to God, their affairs immediately took a new turn. It was Nineveh's case, and we wish it had oftener been Jerusalem's; see 2 Chron. vii. 14. It is an undoubted truth, that a sincere conversion from the evil of sin will be an effec-tual prevention of the evil of punishment, and God can as easily raise up a penitent people from their ruins, as the potter can make anew the vessel of clay, when it was marred in his hand.

2. When God is coming towards us in ways of mercy, if any stop be given to the progress of that mercy, it is nothing but sin that gives it; (v. 9, 10.) If God speak concerning a nation, to build and to plant it, to advance and establish all the true interests of it, it is his husbandry, and his building, (1 Cor. iii. 9.) and if he speak in favour of it, it is done, it is increased, it is enriched, it is enlarged, its trade flourishes, its government is settled in good hands, and all its affairs prosper, and its enterprises succeed. But if this nation, which God had thus loaded with benefits, do evil in his sight, and obey not his voice; if it lose its virtue, and become dechaunted and profane; if religion grow into contempt, and vice get to be fashionable; and so be kept in countenance and reputation, and there be a general decay of wisdom, justice, and good sense; then God will turn his hand against them, will pluck up what he was planting, and pull down what he was building; (ch. xlv. 4.) the good work that was in the doing, shall stand still, and be let fall; and what favours were further designed, shall be withheld, and this is called his repenting of the good whereof he said he would benefit them, as he changed his purpose concerning Eliphaz's house, (1 Sam. ii. 30.) and hurrying the men of Israel into the wilderness, when he had brought them within sight of Canaan. Note, Sin is the great mischief-maker between God and a people; it forfeits the benefit of his promises, and spoils the success of their prayers. It defverts his kind intentions concerning them, (Hos. vii. 1.) and baffles their pleasing expectations from him. It ruins their comforts, prolongs their grievances, brings them into straits, and retards their deliverances, Isa. xlix. 1, 2.

11. Now, therefore, go, speak to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you: return ye now every one from his evil way, and make your ways and your doings good. 12. And they said, There is no hope; but we will walk after our own devices, and we will every one do the imagination of his evil heart. 13. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Ask ye now among the heathen, who hath heard such things? the virgin of Israel hath done a very horrible thing. 14. Will a man leave the snow of Lebanon which cometh from the rock of the field? or shall the cold flowing waters that come from another place be forsaken? 15. Because my people hath forgotten me, they have burnt incense to vanity, and they have caused them to stumble in their ways from the ancient paths, to walk in paths in a way not cast up; 16. To make their land desolate, and a perpetual hissing: every one that passeth there by shall be astonished, and wag his head, 17. I will scatter them as with an east wind before the enemy: I will shew them the back, and not the face, in the day of their calamity.

These verses seem to be the application of the general truths laid down in the foregoing part of the chapter, to the nation of the Jews and their present state.

1. God was now speaking concerning them, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy; for it is that part of the rule of judgment that their case agrees with; (v. 11.) "Go, and tell them," (saith God,) "Behold, I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you. Providence in all its operations is plainly working toward your ruin. Look upon your conduct toward God, and you cannot but see that you deserve it; look upon his dealings with you, and you cannot but see that he designs it." He frames evil, as the potter frames the vessel, so as to answer the end.

II. He invites them by repentance and reformation to meet him in the way of his judgments, and so to prevent his further proceedings against them; Return ye now every one from his evil ways, that so the Lord your God may turn from the evil he had proposed to do unto you, and that providence which seemed to have been framed like a vessel on the wheel against you, shall immediately be thrown into a new shape, and the issue shall be in favour of you." Note, The warnings of God's word, and the threatenings of his providence, should be improved by us as strong inducements to us to reform our lives; in which it is not enough to turn from our evil ways, but we must make our ways and our doings good, conformable to the rule, to the law.

III. He foresees their obstinacy, and their perseverance refusal to comply with this invitation, though it tended so much to their own benefit, v. 12. They said, "There is no hope. If we must not be delivered from the difficulties of our evil ways, we may even despair of ever being delivered, for we are resolved that we will walk after our own devices. It is to no purpose for the prophets to say any more to us, to use any more arguments, or to press the matter any further; we will have our way, whatever it cost us; we will do every one the imagination of his own evil heart, and will not be under the restraint of the divine law."

IV. He upbraid them with the monstrous folly of their obstinacy, and their hating to be reformed. Surely never were people guilty of such an absurdity, never any that pretended to reason, acted so unreasonably; (v. 13.) Ask ye among the heathen, even those that had not the benefit of divine revelations, no oracles, no prophets, as Judah and Jerusalem had, yet, even among them, who hath heard such a thing? The Ninevites, when thus warned, turned from their evil ways. Some of the worst of men, when they are told of their faults, especially when they begin to smart for them, will at least promise reformation, and say that they will endeavour to mend. But the virgin of Israel bids defiance to repentance, as real sinners, that which ruins sinners, is, affecting to live as they list; they call it liberty to live at large, whereas for a man to be a slave to his lusts, is the worst of slaveries. See how strangely some men's hearts are hardened by the deceitfulness of sin, that they will not so much as promise amendment; nay, they set the judgments of God at defiance: "We will go on with our own devices, and we will go on with his; and we will venture the issue."
the most horrible thing that could be, for they put a cheat upon themselves, v. 14, 15. Will a thirsty traveller leave the snow, which, being melted, runs down from the mountains of Lebanon, and, passing over the rock of the field, flows in clear, clean, crystal streams? Will he leave these, pass these by, and think to mend himself with some dirty puddle-water? Or shall the running waters be forsaken for the strange cold waters? No; in these things men know when they are well off, and will keep so: they will not leave a certainty for an uncertainty; but my people have forgotten me, (v. 15.) have quitted a Fountain of living waters for broken cisterns; they have burnt incense to idols, that are as vain as vanity itself, that are not what they pretend to be, nor can perform what is expected from them. They had not the common wit of travellers, but even their leaders caused them to err, and they were content to be misled. (1.) They left the ancient paths, which were appointed by the divine law, which had been walked in by all the saints, which were therefore their right end, but in a dirty way, a way in which they could not but stumble; such was the way of idolatry; such is the way of all iniquity; it is a false way, it is a way full of stumbling-blocks; and yet this way they chose to walk in, and lead others in.

2. In the mischievous consequences of it. Though the thing itself had been bad, they might have had some excuse, if they could have said, they did themselves any good out of it. But the direct tendency of it was to make their land desolate, and, consequently, themselves miserable, (for so the inhabitants must needs be, if their country be laid waste,) and both themselves and their land a perpetual hissing. Those deserve to be hissed, that have fair warning given them, and will not take it. Every one that passes by their land shall make his remarks upon it, and shall be astonished, and wag his head; some wondering at, others commiserating, others triumphing in, the desolations of a country that had been the glory of all lands. They shall wag their heads in derision, upbraiding them with their folly in forsaking God and their duty, and so pulling this misery upon their own heads. Note, These things shall result from God will justly be made the scorn of all about them; and, having reproached the Lord, will themselves be a reproach. Their land being made desolate, in pursuance of their destruction, it is threatened, (v. 17.) I will scatter them as with an east-wind, which is fierce and violent; by it they shall be hurried to and fro before the face of the enemy, open to his assault. They shall not only flee before the enemy, (that they may do, and yet make an orderly retreat,) but they shall be scattered, some one way, and some another. That which completes their misery, is, I will show them the back, and not the face, in the day of their calamity. Our calamities may be easily borne, if God look towards us, and smile upon us, when we are under them, if he countenance us, and show us favour; but if he turn the back upon us, if he show himself displeased, if he be deaf to our prayers, and refuse us his help; if he forsake us, leave us to ourselves, and stand at a distance from us, we are quite undone. If he hide his face, who then can help? Job xxxiv. 39. Herein God would deal with them as they had dealt with him, (ch. ii. 27.) They have turned their back unto me, and not their face. It is a righteous thing with God to show himself strange to these in the day of their trouble, who have showed themselves rude and undutiful to him in their prosperity. This will have its full accomplishment in that day, when God will say to those, though they have been professors of piety, were yet workers of iniquity. Defect from me, I know you not, say, I never knew you.

18. Then said they, Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah; for the law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel from the wise, nor the word from the prophet: come, and let us smite him with the tongue, and let us not give heed to any of his words. 19. Give heed to me, O Lord, and hearken to the voice of them that contend with me. 20. Shall evil be recompensed for good? for they have digged a pit for my soul. Remember that I stood before thee to speak good for them, and to turn away thy wrath from them. 21. Therefore deliver up their children to the famine, and pour out their blood by the force of the sword; and let their wives be bereaved of their children, and be widows; and let their men be put to death; let their young men be slain by the sword in battle. 22. Let a cry be heard from their houses, when thou shalt bring a troop suddenly upon them; for they have digged a pit to take me, and hid snares for my feet. 23. Yet, Lord, thou knowest all their counsel against me to slay me: forgive not their iniquity, neither blot out their sin from thy sight; but let them be overthrown before thee: deal thus with them in the time of thine anger.

The prophet here, as sometimes before, brings in his own affairs, but very much for instruction to us. I. See here what are the common methods of the persecutors. We may see this in Jeremiah’s enemies, v. 18.

1. They hid their heads together, to consult what they should do against him, both to be revenged on him for what he had said, and to stop his mouth for the future. They said, Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah. The enemies of God’s people and ministers have been often very crafty themselves, and confederate with one another, to do them mischief. What they cannot act to the prejudice of religion separately, they will try to do in concert. The wicked plots against the just. Cain plots, and the chief priests and scribes did against our blessed Saviour himself. The opposition which the gates of hell give to the kingdom of heaven, is carried on with a great deal of cursed policy. God had said, (v. 11.) I devise a device against you; and now, as if they resolved to be quits with him, and to outwit Infinite Wisdom itself, they resolve to devise devices against God's prophet, not only against his person, but against the word he delivered to them, which they thought by their subtle management to defeat. 'O the prodigious madness of those that hope to disannul God's counsel!'

2. Herein they pretended a mighty zeal for the church, which, they suggested, was in danger, if Jeremiah was tolerated to preach as he did; "If we suffer him to continue, the law shall not perish from the priests: the law of truth is in their mouths," (Mal. ii. 6.) and there we will seek it; the administration of ordinances according to the law is in their hands, and neither the one nor the other shall be wrested from them. Counsel shall not perish from the wise; the administration of public affairs shall always be lodged with the privy-councillors and ministers of state, to whom it belongs; nor shall the word perish from the prophets;" they mean those of their own choosing, who prophesied to them smooth things, and flattered them with visions of peace. Two things they insinuated, (1.) That Jeremiah could not be himself a true prophet, but was a pretender and a usurper, because he was neither commissioned by the priests, nor concurred with the other prophets, whose word appeared the true word, it being, if he be suffered to go on. If Jeremiah be regarded as an oracle, farewell the reputation of our priests, our wise men and prophets; but that must be supported, which is reason enough why he must be suppressed. (2.) That the matter of his prophecies could not be from God, because it reflected sometimes upon the prophets and priests; he had charged them with being the ringleaders of all the mischief, (ch. v. 14.) and discerned the people; (ch. xiv. 14.) he had foretold that their heart should perish, and be astonished, (ch. iv. 9.) that the wise men should be dismayed, (ch. vii. 9, 10.) that the priests and prophets should be intoxicated; (ch. xiii. 13.) now this galled them more than any thing else; presuming upon the promise of God's presence with their priests and prophets, they could not believe that he would ever leave them. The guides of the church must needs be infallible, and therefore he who foretold their being infatuated, must be condemned as a false prophet. Thus, under colour of zeal for the church, have its best friends been run down.

3. They agreed to do all they could to blast his reputation; "Come, let us smite him with the tongue, fasten a bad character upon him, represent him to some as desperately fit to be slighted; to others, as dangerous, and fit to be prosecuted; to all, as odious, and not fit to be tolerated." This was their device, fortiter calumniari, auliquid adverebito—to throw the vilest calumnies at him, in hope that some would adhere, to dress him up in bear-skins, otherwise they could not bait him. They who projected this, it is likely, were men of figure, whose tongue was no small slander, whose representations, though ever so slyly contrived, were discerned by princes and people, to make him obnoxious to the justice of the one and the fury of the other. The scourge of such tongues will give not only smart lashes, but deep wounds; it is a great mercy therefore to be hid from it, Job v. 21.

4. To set others an example, they resolve that they would not themselves regard any thing he said, though it should have the apparent approbation of God; "Let us not give heed to any of his words; for, right or wrong, they will look upon them to be his words, and not the words of God. What good can be done with those who hear the word of God with a resolution not to heed it, or believe it? Nay,

5. That they may effectually silence him, they resolve to be the death of him; (v. 23.) All their counsel against me is to slay me; they hunt for the precious life; and a precious life indeed it was that they hunted for. Long was this Jerusalem's wretched character. Thos that kill all of the prophets, and wostole would have killed them all.

II. See here what is the common relief of the persecuted. This we may see in the course that Jeremiah took, when he met with this hard usage. He immediately applied himself to his God by prayer, and gave way with him.

1. He referred himself and his cause to God's cognizance, v. 19. They would not regard a word he said, would not admit his complaints, or take any notice of his grievances; but, Lord, (says he,) do thou give heed to me. It is matter of comfort to faithful ministers, that, if men will not give heed to their preaching, yet God will give heed to their praying. He appeals to God as an impartial Judge, that will hear both sides, as every judge ought to do; "Do not only give heed to me, but hearken to the voice of them that contend with me; hear what they have to say against me, and for themselves, and then make it to appear that thou sittest in the throne, judging right." Hear the voice of my contenders, how noisy and clamorous they are, how false and malicious all they say is, and let them be judged; they do, as it were, with their tongues; cause their own tongues to fall upon them.

2. He complains of their base ingratitude to him; (v. 20.) "Shall evil be recompensed for good, and shall it yet go unpunished? Wilt not thou recompense me good for that evil?" 2 Sam. xvi. 12. To render good for good is human, evil for evil is brutish, good for evil is Christian, but evil for evil is devilish; it is so very absurd and wicked a thing that we cannot think but God will avenge it. See how great the evil was, that they did against him; they dug a pit for him, which there was no fence against, Ps. cxxv. 5. But see how great the good was, which he had done for them; Remember that I stood before thee to speak good for them; he had been an intercessor with God for them, had used his interest in heaven on their behalf, which was the greatest kindness they could expect from one of his character. He is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee, Gen. xx. 7. Moses often did this for Israel, and yet they did not render him such a return. But he shook at the shake of stoning him. He did them this kindness when they were in imminent danger of destruction, and most needed it. They had themselves provoked God's wrath against them, and it was ready to break in upon them, but he stood in the gap, (as Moses, Ps. cxi. 23.) and turned away that wrath. Now, (1.) This was very base in them. Call a man ungrateful, and you cannot do it properly; it was not the recompense of the goodness of the man, but that they who had forgotten their God, did not know their best friends. (2.) It was very grievous to him, as the like was to David; (Ps. xxxv. 13.—cix. 4.) For my love they are my adversaries. Thus disingenuously do sinners deal with the great Intercessor, crucifying him afresh, and speaking against him on earth, while his blood is speaking for him in heaven. It was no comfort to the prophet, that, when they were so spiteful against him, he had the testifymony of his conscience for him, that he had done his duty to them; and the same will be our rejoicing in such a day of evil. The blood-thirsty hate the upright, but the just seek his soul, Prov. xxi. 10.

3. He imprimates the judgments of God upon them, not from a revengeful disposition, but in a prophetic indignation against their horrid wickedness, v. 21.-23. He prays, (1.) That their families might be starved for want of bread; Deliver up their children to the famine, to the famine in the country for want of rain, and that in the city through the strictness of the siege. (2.) That they might be cut off by the sword of war, which, whatever it was in the enemy's hand, would be, in God's hand, a sword of justice; "Pour them out (so the word is) by the hands of the sword; let their blood be shed as profusely as water, that their wives may be left childless and widows, their husbands being taken away by death;" (some let this that the prophet refers to sentences; let them, that are of the strength of this generation, and the hope of the next, be slain by the sword in battle. (3.) That the tyrannies and desolations of war might seize them suddenly and by surprise, that thus their punishment might answer to their sin; (v. 22.) "Let a cry be heard from their houses, loud shrieks, when thou shalt bring a troop of the Chaldeans suddenly upon them, to seize them and all they have, to make them prisoners, and their estates a prey;" for thus they would have done by Jeremiah, they aimed to ruin him at once ere he was aware; "They have digged a pit for me, as for a wild beast, and have hid snares for me, as for some ravenous, noxious fowl." (4.) That they think to insinuate others, will justly be themselves insinuated in an evil time. (4.) That they might be dealt with according to the desert of this sin which was without excuse; "Forgive not their iniquity, neither blot out their sin from thy sight; let them not escape the just punishment of it: let them lie under all the miseries of those whose sins are unpardoned." (5.) That God's wrath against them might be their ruin; "Let his anger be hard against him;" he, who is his people, he, who is the city of his children; that justice is in pursuit of them, that they endeavour to make their escape from it, but in vain; they shall be made to stumble in their flight, and, being overthrown, they will certainly be overtaken. And then, Lord, in the time of thine anger, do to them, (he does not say what he would have done to them, but,) do to them as thou thinkest fit, as thou used to do with those whom thou art angry with; deal thus with them. Now this is not written for our imitation. Jeremiah was a prophet, and, by the impulse of the spirit of prophecy, in the foresight of the ruin certainly coming upon his persecutors, might pray such prayers as we may not, and if we think, by this example, to justify ourselves in such imprecations, we know not what manner of spiri tuals were; our Master has taught us, by his precept and pattern, to bless them that curse us, and pray for them that despitefully use us; yet it is written for our instruction, and is of use to teach us, [1.] That those who have forfeited the benefit of the prayers of God's prophets for them, may justly expect to have their prayers against them. [2.] That persecution is the measure of the extent of their iniquity very fast, and will bring as sure and sure a destruction upon them as any other. [3.] Those who will not be won upon by the kindness of God and his prophets, will certainly at length feel the just recompense of both.

CHAP. XIX.

The same melancholy theme is the subject of this chapter, that was of the foregoing: the approaching ruin of Judah and Jerusalem for their sins; Jeremiah had often foretold this: here he has particular full orders to do it again. I. He must set their sins in order before them, as he had often done, especially their idolatry, v. 4, 5. II. He must describe the particular judgments which were now coming upon them for these sins, v. 6, 9. III. He must do this in the valley of Tophet, with great solemnity, and for some particular reasons, v. 2, 3. IV. He must summon a company of the elders together, to be witnesses of this, v. 1. He must confirm this, and endeavour to affect his hearers with it, by a sign, which was, the breaking of an earthen bottle, signifying that they should be dashed to pieces like a potter's vessel, v. 10, 13. VI. When he had done this in the valley of Tophet, he ratified it in the court of the temple, v. 14, 15. Thus were all likely means tried to awaken this stupid, senseless people to repentance, that their ruin might be prevented; but all in vain.

1. Thus saith the Lord, Go, and get a potter's earthen bottle, and take of the ancients of the people, and of the ancients of the priests. 2. And go forth unto the valley of the son of Hinnom, which is by the entry of the east gate, and proclaim there the words that I shall tell thee; 3. And say, Hear ye the word of the Lord, O kings of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem; Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, the which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle. 4. Because they have forsaken me, and have estranged this place, and have burnt incense in it unto other gods, whom neither they nor their fathers have known, nor the kings of Judah, and have filled this place with the blood of innocents; 5. They have built also the high places of Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burnt-offerings unto Baal, which I commanded not, nor spake it, neither came it into my mind: 6. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that this place shall no more be called Tophet, nor, The valley of the son of Hinnom, but, The valley of slaughter. 7. And I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem in this place; and I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies, and by the hands of them that seek their lives; and their carcases will I give to be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth. 8. And I will make this city desolate, and a hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss, because of all the plagues thereof. 9. And I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons, and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat every one the flesh of his friend, in the siege and strictness wherewith their enemies, and they that seek their lives, shall straiten them.

The corruption of man having made it necessary that fireseat should be upon fireseat, and line upon line, (so unapt are we to receive, and so very apt to let slip, the things of God,) the grace of God has provided that there shall be, accordingly, fireseat upon fireseat, and line upon line, that these who are irreclaimable may be inexusable. For this reason, the prophet here is sent with a message to the same purport with what he had often delivered, but with some circumstances that might make it the more taken notice of, a thing which ministers should study, for a little circumstance may sometimes be a great advantage, and they that would win souls, must be wise.

(1 Th. iv. 9). Because the elders and chief men, both in church and state, to be his auditors, and witnesses to what he said; the ancients of the people, and the ancients of the priests, the most eminent men both in the magistracy, and in the ministry, that they might be faithful witnesses, to record, as those, Isa. vii. 2. It is strange that these great men would be at the beck of a poor prophet, and obey his summons to come into the city, they had considered, and that they bear the word of God, though the generality of the elders were disaffected to him, yet it is likely that there were some few among them, who looked upon him as a prophet of the Lord, and would pay this respect to the heavenly vision. Note, Persons of rank and figure have an opportunity of honouring God by a diligent attendance on the ministry of the word, and other divine institutions; and they ought to think it an honour, and no disparagement to themselves, yea, though the circumstances be mean and despicable. It is certain that the greatest of men is less than the least of the ordinances of God.

2. He must go to the valley of the son of Hinnom, and deliver this message there; for the word of the Lord is not bound to any one place; as good a message may be preached in the valley of the son of Hinnom, as in the gate of the temple. Christ preached on a mountain, and out of a ship. This valley lay partly on the south side of Jerusalem, but the prophet's way to it was by the entry of the east gate, the sun-gate; (v. 2.) so some render it, and suppose it to look not toward the sun-rising, but the noon-sun, the fatter's gate; so some. This sermon must be preached in that place, in the valley of the son of Hinnom, and the people must hear it, who they had been guilty of the vilest of their idolatries, the sacrificing of their children to Molech, a horrid piece of impiety, which the sight of the place might serve to remind them of, and upbraid them with. (2.) Because there they should feel the sorest of their calamities; there the greatest slaughter should be made among them; and it being the common sink of the city, let them consider it that a miserable spectacle this magnificent city would be, when it should be all like the valley of Tophet. God bids him go thither, and proclaim there the words that I shall tell thee, when thou comest thither; whereby it appears, (as Mr. Gataker well observes,) that God's messages were frequently not revealed to the prophets before the very instant of time wherein they were to deliver them.

3. He must give general notice of a general ruin now shortly coming upon Judah and Jerusalem. v. 3. He must, as those that make proclamations, begin with an "Oyes, Hear ye the word of the Lord, though it be a terrible word, for you may thank yourselves if it be so." Both rulers and ruled must attend to it, at their peril; the kings of Judah, the king and his sons, the king and his princes, and people, must all hear it. He must hear it, because he is the King of kings, for, high as they are, he is above them. The inhabitants of Jerusalem also must hear what God has to say to them. Both princes and people have contributed to the national guilt, and must concur in the national repentance, or they will both share in the national ruin. Let them all know that the Lord of hosts, who is therefore able to do as he will, they be preacher in the valley of Tophet now, because he is so, will therefore punish them in the first place for their iniquities; (Amos iii. 2.) He will bring evil upon this place, upon Judah and Jerusalem, so surprising, and so dreadful, that whoever hears it, his ears shall tingle; whoever hears the prediction of it, hears the report and representation of it, it shall make such an impression of terror upon him, that he shall still think he hears it sounding in his ears, and shall not be able to get it out of his mind. This ruin of Ed's house is thus described, (1 Sann. vi. 11.) and of Jerusalem, 2 Kings xxii. 12.

4. He must plainly tell them what their sins were, for which God had this controversy with them; (v. 4, 5.) they were, apostacy from God; They have forsaken me; abuse of the privileges of the visible church, with which they had been dignified; They have estranged this place, Jerusalem, the holy city, the temple, the house of the Lord, which were designed for the honour of God, and the support of his kingdom among men, they had alienated from those purposes and (as some render the word) they had strangely abused. They had so polluted both with their wickedness, that God had disowned both, and abandoned them to ruin. He charges them with an affection for, and the adoration of, false gods, such as neither they nor their fathers have known, such as never had recommended themselves to their belief and esteem by any acts of power or goodness done for them or their ancestors, as that God had abundantly done, whom they foresook; yet they took them at a venture for their gods; nay, being fond of change and novelty, they liked them the better for their being upstarts; and new fashions in religion are often welcome in things. They also stand charged with murder, wilful murder, from malice prepense; They have filled this place with the blood of innocents. It was Manasseh's sin, (2 Kings, xxiv. 4,) which the Lord would not pardon. Nay, as if idolatry and murder, committed separately, were not bad enough, and affront enough to God and man, they have put them together, he has consolidated them into one capital crime, that of burning their children in the fire to Baal, (v. 5.) which was the most insolent defiance to all the laws both of natural and revealed religion that ever mankind was guilty of; and by it they openly declared that they loved their new gods better than ever they loved the true God, though they were such cruel taskmasters, that they required human sacrifices, and inhuman I should say, and that they were the accursed, to whom the Jews, while the sacred cities of all lives and souls are, never demanded from his worshippers; he never spake of such a thing, nor came it into his mind. See ch. vii. 31.

5. He must endeavour to affect them with the greatness of the desolation that was coming upon them. He must tell them, (as he had done before, ch. vii. 32.) that this valley of the son of Hinnom shall acquire a new name, the valley of slaughter, (v. 6.) for (v. 7.) multitudes shall fall there by the sword, when either they sally out upon the besiegers, and are repulsed, or attempt to make their escape, and are seized; They shall fall before their enemies, who not only endeavour to make themselves masters of their houses and estates, but have such an implacable enmity to them, that they seek their lives; They thirst after their blood; but the Lord, in his just Sext, will not allow a cartel for the burying of the slain, but their carcasses shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven and beasts of the earth. What a dismal place will the valley of Tophet be then? And as for those that remain within the city, and will not capitulate with the besiegers, they shall perish for want of food, when first they have eaten the flesh of the king of Judah, and daughters of his friends, through the strictness wherewith their enemies shall straiten them, v. 9. This was threatened in the law, as an instance of the extremity to which the judgments of God should reduce them. (Lev. xxvi. 29. Dent. xxviii. 33.) and was accomplished, Lam. iv. 10. And hastily, the whole city shall be dissolve, the houses laid in ashes, the inhabitants glain, or taken prisoners; there shall be no resort to it, nor any thing in it but what looks ruinful and horrid; so that every one that passeth by shall be aston-tished, (v. 8.) as he had said before, ch. xviii. 16. That place which holiness had made the joy of the whole earth, sin had made the reproach and shame of the whole earth.

There are none that will make them all their attempts to prevent and avoid this ruin, so long as they continued impenitent and unreformed, would be fruitless and vain; (v. 7.) I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem, of the princes and senators of Judah and Jerusalem, in this place, in the royal palace, which lay on the south side of the city, not far from the place where the prophet now stood. Note, There is no fleeing from God's justice, but by fleeing to his mercy. They that will not make good God's counsel, by humbling themselves under his mighty hand, God will make void their counsel, and blast their projects, which they think ever so well concerted for their own preservation. There is no counsel or strength against the Lord.

10. Then shalt thou break the bottle in the sight of the men that go with thee, 11. And shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Even so will I break this people, and this city, as one breaketh a potter's vessel, that cannot be made whole again; and they shall bury them in Tophet, till there be no place else to bury. 12. Thus will I do unto this place, saith the Lord, and to the inhabitants thereof, and even make their city as Tophet: 13. And the houses of Jerusalem, and the houses of the kings of Judah, shall be defiled, as the place of Tophet, because of all the houses upon whose roofs they have burnt incense unto all the host of heaven, and have poured out drink-offerings unto other gods. 14. Then came Jeremiah from Tophet, whither the Lord had sent him to prophesy; and he stood in the court of the Lord's house, and said to all the people, 15. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will bring upon this city, and upon all her towns, all the evil that I have pronounced against it; because they have hardened their necks, that they might not hear my words.

The message of wrath delivered in the foregoing verses is here enforced, that it might gain credit, two ways.

1. By a visible sign. The prophet was to take along with him an earthen bottle, (v. 1.) and when he had delivered his message, he was to break the bottle to pieces, (v. 10.) and the same that were auditors of the sermon, must be spectators of the sign. He had compared this people, in the chapter before, to the potter's clay, which is easily marred in the making; but some might say, "It is past that with us, we have been made and hardened long since." "And what though you be," says he, "the potter's vessel is as soon broken in the hand of any man, as the vessel while it is soft clay is marred in the potter's hand, and its case is, in this respect much worse; that the vessel, while it is soft clay, though it be marred, may be moulded again, but after it is hardened, when it is broken, it can never be pieced again." Perhaps what they see will affect them more than what they only hear talk of; that is the intention of sacramental signs, and teaching by symbols was ancienly used. In the explication of this sign, he must incantate what he had before said, with a further reference to the place where this was done, in the valley of Tophet.

1. As the bottle was easily, irresistibly, and irre-currably broken, so shall be Jerusalem by the Chaldean army, v. 11. They depended much upon the firmness of their constitution, and the fix'dness of their courage, which they thought hardened them like a vessel of brass; but the prophet shows that all that did but harden them like a vessel of earth, which, though hard, is brittle, and sooner broken than that which is not so. Thus they were vessels of earth, and of which they were not made to know, if they dishonour God and themselves, and serve not the purposes for which they were made. It is God himself who made them that resolves to unmake them; I will break this people, and this city, dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel; the doom of the heathen, (Ps. ii. 9. Rev. ii. 24.) but now Jerusalem's doom, xxx. 14. A potter's vessel, when once broken, cannot be made whole again; cannot be cured, so the word is. The ruin of Jerusalem shall be an utter ruin; no hand can repair it, but his that broke it; and if they return to him, though he has torn, he will heal.

2. This was done in Tophet to signify two things, (1.) That Tophet should be the receptacle of the slain; Their carcases were burnt there in Tophet, to bury elsewhere; (some read it,) and if they had had conveniences any where else, they would not have buried there, where all the fifth of the city was carried. Or, as we read it, They shall bury in Tophet, till there be no place to bury any more there; they shall justle for room to lay their dead; and a very little room will then serve those who, while they lived, laid house to house, and filled the field. They that would be placed alone in the midst of the earth, while they were above ground, and oblivion all about them to keep their distance, must lie with the multitude when they are under ground, for they are innumerable before them.

(2.) That Tophet should be a resemblance of the whole city; (v. 12.) I will make this city as Tophet, as they made it, that is, the whole temple of Jerusalem, the shrines which they sacrificed to their idols, so God will fill the whole city with the slain, that shall fall as sacrifices to the justice of God. We read (2 Kings xxiii. 10.) of Josiah's defiling Tophet, because it had been abused to idolatry; which he did, (as should seem, v. 14.) by filling it with the bones of men; and, whatever it was before, thenceforward it was loaded upon as a detestable place. Dead carcasses, and other filth of the city, were carried thither, and a fire continually kept there, for the burning of it. This was the posture of that valley, when Jeremiah was sent thither to prophesy; and so executable a place it was looked upon to be, that, in the language of our Saviour's time, hell was called, in allusion to it, Gehena, the valley of Hinnom. Lord, 'Tis says God;) it is since that blessed reflection, when Tophet was defiled, did not proceed as it ought to have done, nor prove a thorough reformation, but though the idols in Tophet were abolished and made odious, those in Jerusalem remained, there fore will I do with the city as Josiah did by Tophet, fill it with the bodies of men, and make it an heap of rubbish. Even the houses of Jerusalem, and those of the kings of Judah, the royal palaces not excepted, shall be defiled as the place of Tophet, (v. 13.) and for the same reason, because of the idolatries that have been committed there; since they will not defile them by a reformation, God will defile them by a destruction, because upon the roofi of their houses they have burnt incense unto the host of heaven. The flat roofs of their houses were sometimes used by devout people as convenient places for prayer, (Acts x. 6.) and by idolaters they were used as high places, on which they sacrificed to strange gods, especially to the host of heaven, the sun, moon, and stars, that there they might have a better view of them. We read of those that worshipped the host of heaven on the house-tops, (Zeph. i. 5.) and of altars on the top of the upper chamber of Ahaz, 2 Kings xxiii. 13. This sin upon the house-tops brought a curse into the house, which consumed it, and made it a dunghill like Tophet.

II. By a solemn recognition and ratification of what he had heard, this is the burden of the Lord's house, v. 14, 15. The prophet returned from Tophet to the temple, which stood upon the hill over that valley, and there confirmed, and, probably, repeated, what he had said in the valley of Tophet, for the benefit of those who had not heard it: what he had said he would stand to. Here, as often before, he both assures them of judgments coming upon them, and assigns the cause of them, which was their sin. Both the house of God and its ministers are put together in a compound sentence, with a reference to all that had gone before. 1. The accomplishment of the prophecies is here the judgment threatened. The people flattered themselves with a conceit that God would be better than his word; the threatening was but to frighten them, and keep them in awe a little; but the prophet tells them that they deceive themselves if they think so: For thus saith the Lord of hosts, who is he that saith it? to make his words good, I will bring upon this city, and upon all her towns, all the lesser cities that belong to Jerusalem the metropolis, all the evil that I have pronounced against it. Note, Whatever men may think to the contrary, the executions of Providence will fully answer the predictions of the word; and God will appear as terrible against sin and sinners as the scripture makes him; nor shall the unbelievers of men make either his promise or his threatenings of no effect, or of less effect than it was thought to be of. 2. The contempt of the prophecies is here the sin charged upon them, as the procuring cause of this judgment. It is because they have hardened their necks, and would not bow and bend them to the yoke of God's commands, would not hear my words, would not heed them, and yield obedience; the stubbornness of sinners in their sinful ways, is altogether their own fault; if their necks are hardened, it is their own act and deed, they have hardened them; if they are deaf to the word of God, it is because they have stopped their own ears. We have need therefore to pray that God, by his grace, would deliver us from hardness of heart, and contempt of his word and commandments.

CHAP. XX.

Such plain dealing as Jeremiah used in the foregoing chapter, not only to the end to convince and humble men, would provoke and exasperate them; and so it did; for here we find, I. Jeremiah persecuted by Pashur, for preaching that sermon, v. 1, 2. II. Pashur threatened for so doing, and the word, which Jeremiah had preached, confirmed, v. 3-6. III. Jeremiah complaining to God concerning it and the other instances of hard measure that he had since he began to be a prophet, and to the end to give him an answer, he had designed with the Lord (v. 7-10.) encouraging himself in God, lodging his appeal with him, not doubting but that he shall yet praise him, by which it appears that he had much grace, (v. 11-13.) and that it was a precious dying of the birth, (v. 14.) by which it appears that he had sad remembrances of corruption in him too, and was a man subject to like passions as we are.

NOW Pashur, the son of Immer the priest, who was also the chief governor in the house of the Lord, heard the word of Jeremiah prophesied these things. 2. Then Pashur smote Jeremiah the prophet, and put him in the stocks that were in the high gate of Benjamin, which was by the house of the Lord. 3. And it came to pass on the morrow, that Pashur brought forth Jeremiah out of the stocks. Then said Jeremiah unto him, The Lord hath not called thy name Pashur, but Magor-missabib. 4. For thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will make thee a terror to thyself, and to all thy friends; and they shall fall by the sword of their enemies, and thine eyes shall behold it: and I will give all Judah into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall carry them captive into Babylon, and shall slay them with the sword. 5. Moreover, Lavi will deliver all the strength of this city, and all the labours thereof, and all the precious things thereof, and all the treasures of the kings of Judah will I give into the hand of their enemies, which shall spoil them, and take them, and carry them to Babylon. 6. And thou, Pashur, and all that dwell in thy house, shall go into captivity: and thou shalt come to Babylon, and there thou shalt die, and shalt be buried there, thou, and all thy friends, to whom thou hast prophesied lies.

Here is,

1. Pashur's unjust displeasure against Jeremiah, and the fruits of that displeasure, v. 1-2. This Pashur was a priest, and therefore, one would think, should have protected Jeremiah, who was of his own order, a priest too; and the more, because he was a prophet of the Lord, whose interests the priests, his ministers, ought to consult: but this priest was a persecutor of him whom he should have patronized. He was the son of Immer; he was of the sixteenth course of the priests, of which there were seven; the ordinary bishop of the church by the power of the Lord, was his father. Thus also, the priest, David, was father, (1 Chron. xxiv. 14.) as Zechariah was of the order of Abiaia, Luke i. 5. Thus this Pashur is distinguished from another of the same name, mentioned ch. xxi. 1. who was of the fifth course. This Pashur was chief governor in the temple; perhaps he was only so pro tempore for a short period, the course he was head of being now in writing; or he was suffragan to the High Priest; or, perhaps, captain of the temple, or of the guards about it, Acts iv. 1. This was Jeremiah's great enemy. The greatest malignity to God's prophets was found among those that professed sanctity, and concern for God and the church.

We cannot suppose that Pashur was one of those ancients of the priests that went with Jeremiah to the valley of Tophet, to hear him prophesy, unless he had some wrong or grievance against him, which he supposed to be a design against him; but when he came into the courts of the Lord's house, it is probable that he was himself a witness of what he said, and so it may be read, (v. 1.) He heard Jeremiah prophesying these things. As we read it, the information was brought him by others, whose examinations he took; He heard that Jeremiah prophesied these things, and could not bear it; especially that he should dare to preach in the courts of the Lord's house, where he was chief governor, without his leave. When power in the churcL is abused, it is the most dangerous power that can be employed against it. Being incensed at Jeremiah, 1. He smote him, struck him with his hand, or staff of authority. Perhaps it was a blow intended only to disgrace him, like that which the High Priest ordered to be given Paul; (Acts xxiii. 2.) he struck him on the mouth, and bade him hold his peace. But perhaps he was only meant to amongst him; he seemed him severely, as a malefactor. It is charged upon the husbandmen, (Matt. xxi. 34.) that they beat the servants. The method of proceeding here was illegal; the High Priest, and the rest of the priests, ought to have been consulted, Jeremiah's credentials examined, and the matter inquired into, whether he had an authori- ty to go and come, and whether the executioners were set aside, and despised, as mere formalities; right or wrong, Jeremiah must be run down. The enemies of piety would never suffer themselves to be bound by the laws of equity. 2. He put him in the stocks. Some make it only a place of confine- ment; he imprisoned it. Rather it seems to be an instrument of closer restraint, and intended to put him both to pain and shame. What think it was a pilory for his neck and arms; others (as we) a pair of stocks for his legs; whatever engine it was, he continued in it all night, and in a public place too, in the high gate of Benjamin, which was in, or by the house of the Lord; probably, a gate through which they passed between the city and the temple. Pashur intended thus to chastise him, that he might not presume in prophesying to him, or expose him to contempt, and render him odious, that he might not be regarded if he did prophesy. Thus have the best men met with the worst treat- ment from this ungracious, ungrateful world; and the greatest blessings of their age have been counted as the off-scouring of all things. Would it not raise a pious indignation, to see such a man as Pashur upon the bench, and such a man as Jeremiah in the stocks? It is well that there is another life after this, when persons and things will appear with another face.

II. God's just displeasure against Pashur, and the tokens of it. On the morrow, Pashur gave Jerem- iah his discharge, brought him out of the stocks; (v. 3.) it is probable that he continued him there, in little or no punishment; but the punishment was that which he deserved. And now Jeremiah has a message from God to him. We do not find that, when Pashur put Jeremiah in the stocks, the latter gave him any check for what he did; he appears to have quietly and silently submitted to the abuse; when he suffered, he threatened not; but, when he brought him out of the stocks, then God put a word into the prophet's mouth, which would awaken his con- science, if he had any. For when the prophet of the Lord was bound, the word of the Lord was not.— What can we think Pashur aimed at, in smiting and abusing Jeremiah? Whatever it is, we shall see by what God says to him, that he is dis- pointed.

1. Did he aim to establish himself, and make himself easy, by silencing one that told of his faults, and would be likely to lessen his reputation with the people? He shall not gain this point; for, (1.) Though the prophet should be silent, his own con- science shall fly in his face, and make him always uneasy. To confirm this, he shall have a name given him, Magar-missabib—Terror round about, or, Fear on every side. God himself shall give him this name, whose calling he will make so. It seems to be a proverbal expression, bespeaking a man not only in distress, but in despair; not only in danger on every side, (that a man may be, and yet by faith may be in no terror, as David, Ps. iii. 6. xxvii. 3.) but in fear on every side; and that a man may be when there appears no danger; The wicked flee when no man pursues; are in great fear where no fear is. This shall be Pashur's case; (v. 4.) "Be- hold, I will make thee a terror to thyself; thou shalt be subject to continual frights, and thy own fancy and imagination shall create thee a constant unen- ties." Note, God can make the most daring sinner a terror to himself. We are more afraid of evil from within ourselves, than from others to be pleasurable; but, "I will make thee a terror to all thy friends; thou shalt, upon all occasions, express thy- self with so much horror and amazement, that all thy friends shall be afraid of conversing with thee, and shall choose to stand aloof from thy torment." Persons in deep melancholy and distraction are a terror to themselves and all about them; which is a good reason why we should be very thankful, so long as God continues to us the use of our reason and the peace of our consciences. (2.) His friends, whom he put a confidence in, and perhaps, studied to oblige, in what he did against Jeremiah, shall all fail him. God does not presently strike him dead for what he did against Jeremiah, but lets him live longer, as an ungrateful man, and makes him live in such a continual consternation, that, wherever he goes, he shall be a monument of divine justice: and when it is asked, "What makes this man in such contin- ual terror?" it shall be answered, "It is God's hand upon him for putting Jeremiah in the stocks." His friends, who should encourage him, shall all be cut off; they shall fall by the sword of the enemy, and his eyes shall behold it, which the prophet's words increase his terror. (3.) He shall find, in the issue, that his terror is not causeless, but that divine venge- nance is waiting for him; (v. 6.) he and his family shall go into captivity, even to Babylon; he shall neither die before the evil comes, as Josiah, nor live to survive it, as some did, but he shall die a captive, and shall in effect, be buried in his chains, he and his family, and all his substance. Let persecutors read it, and tremble; tremble to re- pentance before they be made to tremble to their ruin.

2. Did he aim to keep the people easy, to prevent the destruction that Jeremiah prophesied of, and by sinking his reputation to make his words fall to the ground? It is probable that he did; for it appears by v. 6. that he did himself set up for a prophet, and told the people that they should have peace; he prophesied lies to them, and because Jeremiah's prophecy contradicted his, and tended to awaken those whom he endeavored to rock asleep in their sins, therefore he set himself against him. But could he gain his point? No, Jeremiah stands to what he has said against Judah and Jerusalem; and God by mouth of his prophet doth all that God pleases. The word will have its course; so it had here.

(1.) The country shall be ruined; (v. 4.) I will give all Judah into the hand of the king of Babyl- on. It had long been God's own land, but he will now transfer his title to it to Nebuchadnezzar, he shall be master of the country, and dispose of the in- habitants; some to the sword, and some to captivity, as he pleases, but none shall escape him.

(2.) The city shall be ruined too, v. 5. The king of Babylon shall spoil that, and carry all that is valuable in it to Babylon. [1.] He shall seize their magazines and military stores. ••• called the
1. Here is a sad representation of the wrong that was done him, and the affronts that were put upon him; and this representation, no doubt, was according to truth, and deserves no blame, but was very justly and very fitly made to him that sent him, and, no doubt, would bear him out. He complains, 1. That he was ridiculed and laughed at; they made a jest of every thing he said and did; and this cannot but be a great grievance to an ingenuous mind; (v. 4.) 2. That he was burdened with a bursa exchequer, and the burdens that belong to it; and this is so heavy, that it presses down his back, and would hardly be able to bear it; yet he bears it under his own power, and makes himself a merry man, and one another merry with him, as if he had been a fool, good for nothing but to make sport. Thus he was continually, I was in derision daily; thus he was universally, Every one mocks me; the greatest so far forget their own gravity, and the meanness so far forget mine. Thus our Lord Jesus, on the cross, was reviled, both by, this was opposed to, and the revilings of each had their peculiar aggravation. And what was it that thus exposed him to contempt and scorn? It was nothing but his faithful and zealous discharge of his office; (v. 8.) they could find nothing for which to deride him, but his preaching; it was the word of the Lord that was made a reproach: that for which they should have honoured and respected him—that he should have been esteemed to have afforded the Lord to them, was the very thing for which they reproached and reviled him. He never preached a sermon, but, though he kept as closely as possible to his instructions, they found something or other in it, for which to banter and abuse him. Note, It is sad to think that, though divine revelation be one of the greatest blessings and honours that ever was bestowed upon the world, yet it has been turned very much to the reproach of the most zealous preachers and believers of it. Two things they derided him for, (1.) The manner of his preaching: Since he spake, he cried out. He had always been a lively, affectionate preacher, and since he began to speak in God's name, he always spake as a man in earnest; he cried aloud, and did not spare, spared neither himself, nor them to whom he preached; and this was enough for them to laugh at, who hated to be serious. It is common for these that are unaffected with, and disaffected to, the things of God themselves, to ridicule those that are much affected with them. Lively preachers are the scorn of careless, unbelieving hearers. (2.) The matter of his preaching: he cried violence and spoil. He reproved them for the violence of spoil which they were given to do to one another; and he prophesied of the violence and spoil which should be brought upon them, as the punishment of that sin; for the former they ridiculed him as overprecise, for the latter as over-credulous; in both he was provoking to them, and therefore they resolved to run him down. This was bad enough, yet he complains further, 2. That he was placed against, and this not only upon, he was not only ridiculed as a weak man, but reproached and misrepresented as a bad man, and dangerous to the government. This he laments as his grievance, v. 10. Being laughed at, though it touches a man in point of honour, is yet a thing that may be easily laughed at again; for, as it has been well observed, it is no shame to be laughed at, but to deserve it, and be those whom they laugh at, is a great misfortune, and part, with more subtlety. (1.) They spoke ill of him behind his back, when he had no opportunity of clearing himself, and were industrious to spread false report concerning him; I heard, at second-hand, the defamation of many, fear on every side, (of many Magni misabiles; so some read it,) of many such men as Pashur was, and who may therefore be called his Pashurs. On the other hand, of their defamations, they represented Jeremiah as a man that instilled fears and jealousies on every side into the minds of Pashur's doom was, to be a terror to himself; Jeremiah, even now, in this hour of temptation, is far from being so; and yet it cannot be denied but that he has here, through the infirmity of the flesh, strangely agitated within himself, good men are but men at the best; God is not extreme to mark what they say and do amiss, and therefore we must not be so, but make the best of it. In these verses, it appears that, upon occasion of the great indignation and injury that Pashur did to Jeremiah, there was a struggle in his breast between his graces and his corruptions. His discourse with himself, and with his God, upon this occasion, was somewhat perplexed; let us try to methodise it.

the people, and so made them uneasy under the government, and disposed them to a rebellion. Or, like the Jews he was not a, religious against him, that he could not but be afraid. His conduct, in what he was, he had reason to fear inferiors: so that they made him almost a Major-disgrace. These words are found in the original, verbatim, the same, Ps. xxxi. 13: I have heard the slander, or defaming of many, fear on every side. Jeremiah, in his complaint, chooses to make use of the same words that David did, and obtained for himself a comfort to him to think that other good men had suffered the abuses before him, and to teach us to make use of David's psalms with application to ourselves, as there is occasion. Whatever we have to say, we may from thence take with us words. See how Jeremiah's enemies contrived the matter; Report, say they, and we will report it. They resolve to cast an odium upon him, and this is the method they take; “Let some very bad thing be said of him, which may render him odious to the government, and though it be ever so false, we will secound it, and spread it, and add to it.” (For the reproaches of good men lose nothing by the carriage.) “Do you that frame a story plausible, or you that can pretend to some acquaintance with him, report it once, and we will be so efficient to promote it, as you pretend we come into. Do you say it, and we will swear it; do you set it agioing, and we will follow it.” And thus both are equally guilty, they that raise, and they that propagate, the false report. The receiver is as bad as the thief. (2.) They flattened him to his face, that they might get something from him, on which to ground an accusation, as the spies that came to report the sin of Achan, and by that means to bring him to his destruction. Luke xx. 20.—xxiii. 53, 54. His familiar, that he conversed freely with, and put a confidence in, watched for his halting, observed what he said, which they could by any strained innuendo put had construction upon, and carried it to his enemies. His case was very sad, when those betrayed whom he sought to be his friends. They said among themselves, “If we accost him kindly, and insinuate ourselves into his acquaintance, peradventure he will commit to own that he is in confederacy with the enemy, and a pensioner to the king of Babylon, or we shall wheedle him to speak some treasonable words; and then we shall prevail against him, and take our revenge on him for telling us of our faults, and threatening us with the judgments of God.” Note, Such was the alacrity of these enemies, that they were not satisfied with the prudence of the serpent to help it, can secure men from unjust censure and false accusation.

II. Here is an account of the temptation he was in, under this affliction; his feet were almost gone, as the Psalmist’s, Ps. xxxii. 2. And this is that which is to be most dreaded in affliction, being driven to it by sin, Neh. x. 46.

He was tempted to quarrel with God for making him a prophet. This he begins with; (v. 7.) O Lord, thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived. This, as we read it, sounds very harsh. God’s servants have been always ready to own that he is a faithful Master, and never cheated them; and therefore this is the language of Jeremiah’s folly and corruption. If, when God called him to be a prophet, and when he had made him he would set him over the kingdoms, (ch. i. 10.) and make him a defended city, he flattened himself with an expectation of having universal respect paid him as a messenger from heaven, and living safe and easy, and afterward it proved otherwise, he must not say that God had deceived him, but that he had deceived himself; for he knew how the servants of God, in those things that were appointed, and had no reason to expect better treatment. Nay, God had expressly told him that all the princes, priests, and people of the land, would fight against him, (ch. i. 19.) which he had forgotten, else he would not have lied the blame on God thus. Christ thus told his disciples what opposition they should meet with, and their weakness and weakness, Matt. x. 1, 2. But the words may very well be read thus, Thou hast persuaded me, and I was persuaded; it is the same word that was used, Gen. ix. 27. margin, God shall persuade Japhet. And Prov. xxv. 15. By much forbearance is a prince persuaded. And Hos. ii. 14. I will allure her. And this agrees with the previous verses; “Thou wast stronger than I, didst over-persuade me; But in vain didst me, and saidst overpower me by the influence of thy Spirit upon me, and thou hast prevailed.” Jeremiah was very backward to undertake the prophetic office, he pleaded that he was under age, and unfit for the service; but God overruled his pleas, and told him that he must go, ch. i. 6, 7. Now, Lord,” says he, “since thou hast put this office upon me, why dost thou not stand by me in it? Did I trust myself upon it, I might justly have been in derision; but why am I so when thou didst thrust me into it. It was Jeremiah’s infirmity to complain thus of God, as putting a hardship upon him in calling him to be a prophet, which he would not have done, had he considered the lasting honour thereby done him, and the public good, and the privileges of a present contention under. Note, As long as we see ourselves in the way of God and duty, it is weakness and folly, when we meet with difficulties and discouragements in it, to wish we had never set out in it.

2. He was tempted to quit his work, and give it over; partly because he himself met with so much hardship in it, and partly because these to whom he was sent, instead of being edified and made better, were exasperated and made worse; (v. 9.) “Then I said, Since by prophesying in the name of the Lord I gain nothing to him or myself but dishonour and disgrace, I will not make mention of him as my Author for any thing I say, nor speak any more in his name; since my enemies do all they can to silence me, I will even silence myself, and speak no more, since I may as well speak to the stones as to them.” Note, It is strong temptation to poor ministers to resolve that they will preach no more, when they see their preaching slighted and wholly ineffectual. But let people dread putting their ministers into this temptation. Let not their labour be in vain with us, lest we provoke them to say that they will take no more pains with us, and provoke God himself to take no more with them. Yet let not ministers hearken to this temptation, but go on in their duty, notwithstanding their discouragements, for this is the more thank-worthy; and though Israel be not gathered, yet they shall be glorious.

III. Here is an account of his faithful adherence to this work, and cheerful dependence on God, notwithstanding.

1. He found the grace of God mighty in him to keep him to his business, notwithstanding the temptation he was in to throw it up; “I said, in my haste, I will speak no more in his name, what I have in my heart to deliver I will stifle and suppress; but I soon found it was in my heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, which I should not put out, and when I went to be questioned and examined, and the prudence of the serpent to help it, can secure men from unjust censure and false accusation.

Vol. IV.—3 H
with forbearing to preach, and could not contain himself; nothing puts faithful ministers to pain so much as being silenced, nor to terror so much as silencing themselves. Their convictions will soon triumph over temptations of that kind; for, Wo is unto me if I preach not the gospel, whatever it cost me, 1 Cor. iv. 16. And it is really a mercy to have the word of God thus mighty in us to overpower our corruptions.

He was assured of God's presence with him, which would be sufficient to battle all the attempts of his enemies against him; (v. 11.) "They say, We shall prevail against him, the day will undoubtedly be our own; but I am sure that they shall not prevail, they shall not prosper, I can safely set them all at defiance, for the Lord is with me, is on my side, to take my part against them," (Rom. vii. 31.) to protect me from all their malicious designs upon me. He is wise enough to set me and bear me up under the burthen which now presses me down. He is with me, to make the word I preach answer the end he designs, though not the end I desire. He is with me as a mighty terrible one, to strike a terror upon them, and so to overcome them." Note, Even that in God which is terrible, is really comfortable to his servants that trust in him, for it shall strike them into and possess them with the fear of the Lord, and the terror of the people. God's being a mighty being, bespeaks him a terrible God to all those that take up arms against him, or any one that, like Jeremiah, was commissioned by him. How terrible will the wrath of God be to those that think to daunt all about them, and will themselves be daunted by nothing! The most formidable enemies that act against us, appear despised when we see the Lord for us and against them. He is a terrible one. Neh. iv. 14. Jeremiah speaks now with a good assurance, "If the Lord be with me, my persecutors shall stumble; so that when they pursue me, they shall not overtake me, (Ps. xxvii. 2.) and then they shall be greatly ashamed of their impotent malice and fruitless attempts. Nay, their everlasting confusion and infamy shall never be forgotten; they shall not forget it themselves, but it shall be to them a constant and lasting vexation, whenever they think of it; others shall not forget it, but it shall leave upon them an indelible reproach." 3. He appeals to God against them as a righteous Judge, and prays judgment upon his cause, v. 12. He looks upon God as the God that trieth the righteous, takes cognizance of them, and of every cause that they are interested in. He does not judge in favor of the, but in favor of the cause. He finds that they have right on their side, and their persecutors wrong them and are injurious to them, he gives sentence for them. He that tries the righteous, tries the unrighteous too, and he is very well qualified to do both. For he sees the reins and the heart, he certainly knows men's thoughts and affections, their aims and intentions, and therefore can pass an unerring judgment on their words and actions. Now, this is the God, (1.) To whom the prophet here refers himself, and in whose court he lodges his appeal; Unto thee have I opened my cause. Not but that God perfectly knew his cause, and all the merits of it, without his opening; but the cause we commit to God we must spread before him, he knows it, but he will know it from us, and allows us the advantage of our own opinion, to think of him, but to affect ourselves. Note, It will he an ease to our spirits, when we are oppressed and buffeted, to open our cause to God, and pour out our complaints before him. (2.) By whom he expects to be righted; "Let me see thy vengeance upon them; such vengeance as thou thinkest fit to take for their conviction and my vindication, the vengeance thou usest to take on our persecutors." Note, Whatever injuries are done us, we must not study to avenge ourselves, but must leave it to that God to do it, to whom vengeance belongs, and who hath said, I will repay.

4. He greatly rejoices and praiseth God, in a full confidence that God would appear for his deliverance, v. 13. So full is he of the comfort of God's presence with him, the divine protection he is under, and the divine promise he has to depend upon, that in a transport of joy he stirs up himself and series to sing of it. "Sing unto the Lord, praise ye the Lord." Here is a great change with him since he began this discourse; the clouds are blown over, his complaints all silenced, and turned into thanksgivings. He has now an entire confidence in that God whom (v. 7.) he was distrusting; he stirs up himself to praise that Name which (v. 9.) he was resolving no more to make mention of. It was the lively exercise of the soul. That, which before the Lord, was a sigh into songs, and his tremblings into triumphs. It is proper to express our hope in God by our praising him, and our praising God by our singing to him. That which is the matter of the praise is, He hath delivered the soul of the poor from the hand of the evil-doers; he means especially himself, his own poor soul. "He hath delivered me from my own sins; I am in the hands of the Lord, and he will continue to deliver me, 2 Cor. i. 10. He will deliver my soul from the sin that I am in danger of falling into, when I am thus persecuted. He hath delivered me from the hand of evil-doers, so that they have not gained their point, nor had their will." Note, Those that are faithful in well-doing need not fear those that are spiteful in evil-doing, for they have a God to trust to, who has well-doers under the hand of his protection, and evil-doers under the hand of his restraint.

14. Cursed be the day wherein I was born; let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed. 15. Cursed be the man that brought tidings to my father, saying, A man-child is born unto thee; making him very glad. 16. And let that man be as the cities which the Lord overthrew, and repented not; and let him hear the cry in the morning, and the shouting at noon-tide; 17. Because he slewe me not from the womb; or that my mother might have been my grave, and her womb to be always great with me. 18. Wherefore came I forth out of the womb to see labour and sorrow, that my days should be consumed with shame?

What is the meaning of this? Does there proceed out of the same mouth blessing and cursing? Could he that said so cheerfully, (v. 13.) Sing unto the Lord, praise ye the Lord, say so passionately, (v. 14.) Cursed be the day wherein I was born? How shall we reconcile these? What have we in these verses the prophet records, I suppose, to his own shame, as to his own infirmity, as to his own weakness: Sing unto the Lord, God's glory. It seems to be a relation of the ferment he had been in, while he was in the stocks, out of which by faith and hope he had recovered himself, rather than a new temptation which he afterwards fell into, and it should come in like that of David, (Ps. xxxi. 22.) I said in my haste, I am cut off. This is also implied, Ps. lxxvii. 7. When great has this happy change, it is good to remember the struggles of corruption, that we may be ashamed of ourselves and our own folly, may admite the goodness of God in not taking us at our word, and may be warned by it to double our guard upon our spirits, another time. See here how strong the temptation was, which the prophet, by divine assistance, got the victory over, and how far he yielded to it, that we may not despair, if we through the weakness of the flesh be at any time thus tempted. Let us see here,

1. What the prophet's language was, in this respect.

(1.) He fastened a brand of infamy upon his birth-day, as Job did in a heat; (ch. iii. 1.) "Cursed be the day wherein I was born. It was an ill day to me, (v. 14.) because it was the beginning of sorrows, and an inlet to all this misery." It is a wish that he had never been born. Judas in hell had reason to wish so; (Matth. xxvi. 24.) but no man on earth has reason to wish so, because he knows not but that he may yet become a vessel of mercy, much less has any good man reason to wish so. Whereas some keep their birth-day, at the return of the year, with gladness, he will look upon his birth-day as a melancholy day, and will solemnize it with sorrows, and will have it looked upon as an ominous day.

(2.) He wished ill to the messenger that brought his father the news of his birth, v. 15. It made his father very glad to hear that he had a child born, (perhaps it was his first-born,) especially that it was a man-child, for then being of the family of the priests, he might live to have the honour of serving God's altar; and yet he is ready to curse the man that brought him the tidings, when perhaps the father to whom they were brought, gave him a gratitude for the same. Here the prophet observes, "That parents are often much rejoiced at the birth of their children, when, if they did foresee what misery they are born to, they would rather lament over them than rejoice in them." He is very free and very fierce in the curses he pronounces upon the messenger of his birth; (v. 16.) "Let him be as the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, which the Lord utterly overthrew, and repented not, did not in the least mitigate or alleviate their misery. Let him hear the cry of the invading, besieging enemy in the morning, as soon as he is stirring, then let him take the alarm, and by noon let him hear their shouting for victory. And thus let him live in constant terror." He is angry that the fate of the Hebrews' children in Egypt was not his, that he was not slain from the womb, that his first breath was not his last, and that he was not strangled as soon as he came into the world, v. 17. He wishes the messenger of his birth had been better employed, and had been his murderer; nay, that his mother of whom he was born, had been, to her great misery, actually swathed, bound, etc., so, the womb in which he was conceived, would have been used, without more ado, as a grave for him to be buried in. Job intimates a near alliance and resemblance between the womb and the grave; (Job i. 21.) Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither.

(4.) He thinks his present calamities sufficient to justify these passionate wishes; (v. 18.) "Wherefore came I forth out of the womb, where I lay hid, was not seen, was not hated, where I lay safe, and knew no evil, to see all this labour and sorrow, nay to have my days consumed with shame, to be continually vexed and abused, to have my life not only spent in trouble, but wasted and worn away by trouble.

2. What use we may make of this. It is not recorded for our imitation, and yet we may learn good lessons from it.

(1.) See the vanity of human life, and the vexation of spirit that attends it. If there were not another life after this, we should be tempted many a time to wish that we had never known this, for our few days here are full of trouble.

(2.) See the folly and absurdity of sinful passion, how unreasonably it talks when it is suffered to ramble. What nonsense is it to curse a day—to curse a messenger for the sake of his message! What a brutish, barbarous thing for a child to wish his own mother had never been delivered of him! And in every lea, xii. 10. the oracle calls folly of it in others, and should take warning thence to suppress all such intemperate heats and passions in ourselves, to stifle them at first, and not to suffer these evil spirits to speak. When the heart is hot, let the tongue be bridled. Ps. xxxix. 1, 2.

(3.) See the weakness even of good men, who are but men at the best. See how much these who think they stand, are concerned to take heed lest they fall, and to pray daily, Father in heaven, lead us not into temptation!

CHAP. XXI.

It is plain that the prophecies of this book are not placed here in the same order in which they were preached; for there are chapters after this, which concern Jehoahaz, Jehoiakim, and Jeconiah, who all reigned before Zedekiah, in which the prophecies of this chapter take date. Here is 1. The message which Zedekiah sent to the prophet, to desire him to inquire of the Lord for them, v. 1, 2. 11. The answer which Jeremiah, in God's name, sent to that message; in which, 1. He foretells the certain and inevitable ruin of the city, and the fruitlessness of their attempts for its preservation, v. 3. 7. 2. He advises the people to make the best of bad, by going over to the king of Babylon, v. 8. 10. 3. He advises the king and his family to repent and reform, (v. 11, 12.) and not to trust to the strength of their city, and grow secure, v. 13, 14.

1. T

HE word which came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, when king Zedekiah sent unto him Paschur the son of Melchiah, and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, saying, 2. Inquire, I pray thee, of the Lord for us; for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon maketh war against us; if so be that the Lord will deal with us according to all his wondrous works, that he may go up from us. 3. Then said Jeremiah unto them, Thus shall ye say to Ze-dekiah, 4. Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Behold, I will turn back the weapons of war that are in your hands, wherewith ye fight against the king of Babylon, and against the Chaldeans, which besiege you without the walls, and I will assemble them into the midst of this city. 5. And I myself will fight against you with an outstretched hand, and with a strong arm, even in anger, and in fury, and in great wrath. 6. And I will smite the inhabitants of this city, both man and beast: they shall die of a great pestilence. 7. And afterward, saith the Lord, I will deliver Zedekiah king of Judah, and his servants, and the people, and such as are left in this city from the pestilence, from the sword, and from the famine, into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of those that seek their life: and he shall smite them with the edge of the sword; he shall not spare them, neither have pity, nor have mercy.

Here is, a very humble, decent message which King Zedekiah sent to Jeremiah the prophet, when he was in distress. It is indeed charged upon this Zedekiah, that he humbled himself before Jeremiah the prophet, speaking from the mouth of the Lord; (2 Chron. xxxvi. 12.) he did not always humble himself as he did sometimes; he never humbled himself till necessity forced him to it; he humbled himself so far as to desire the prophet's assistance, but not so far as to take his advice, or to be ruled by him. Observe,

1. The distress which King Zedekiah was now in; Nebuchadrezzar made war upon him, not only invaded the land, but besieged the city, and now actually invested it. Note, Those that put the evil day far from them, will be the more terrified when it comes upon them: and they who before slighted God's ministers, may then perhaps be glad to court and condescend to them. Observe,

2. The messengers he sent, Pashur and Zephaniah, one belonging to the 5th course of the priests, the other to the 24th. 1 Chron. xxiv. 9, 18. It was well that he sent, that he sent persons of rank; it had been better if he had desired a personal conference with the prophet, which, no doubt, he might easily have had if he would so far have humbled himself. Perhaps these priests were no better than the rest, and yet, when they were commanded by the king, they must carry a respectful message to the prophet, which was both a mortification to them, and an honour to Jeremiah. He had rashly said, (ch. xx. 18.) "My days are consumed with shame; and yet here we find that he lived to see better days than those were, when he made that complaint; now he appears in reputation. Note, It is folly to say, when things are bad with us, "They will always be so." It is possible that those who are despised, may come to be respected; and it is promised, that those who honour God, he will honour, and that those who have afflicted his people, shall bow to them, Isa. lx. 14.

3. The message itself, Inquire, I pray thee, of the Lord for us, v. 2. Now that the Chaldean army was got into their batteries, and was brought to their bowels, they were at length convinced that Jeremiah was a true prophet, though loath to own it, and brought too late to it. Under this conviction, they desire him to stand their friend with God, believing him to have that interest in heaven, which none of their other prophets had, who had flattered them with hopes of peace. They now employ Jeremiah, (1.) To consult the mind of God for them; "Inquire of the Lord for us," says he, "in every matter that concerneth us." Note, We should consider the measures we have hitherto taken are all broken." Note, Those that will not take the direction of God's grace, how to get clear of their sins, would yet be glad of the directions of his providence, how to get clear of their troubles. (2.) To seek the favour of God for them: some read it, "Entreat the Lord for us;" be an intercessor for us with God. Note, Those that hope for the highest prayers of God's people and ministers when they are in prosperity, may perhaps be glad of an interest in them when they come to be in distress. Give us of your oil. The benefit they promise themselves, is, It may be, the Lord will deal with us now according to the wondrous works he wrought for our fathers, that the enemy may raise the siege, and go off from us. Observe, [1.] All their care is, to get rid of their trouble; not to make their peace with God, and be reconciled to him; "That our enemy may go up from us," not, "That our God may return to us," Thus Pharoh, (Exod. x. 17.) Entreat the Lord that he may take away this death. [2.] All their hope is, that God had done wondrous works formerly in the deliverance of Jerusalem when Sennacherib besieged it, at the prayer of Isaiah; so we are told, 2 Chron. xxxii. 20, 21. And who can tell but he may make the same intercessions, (as in the history,) at the prayer of Jeremiah? But they did not consider how different the character of Zedekiah and his people was from that of Hezekiah and his people: those were days of general reformation and piety, these of general corruption and apostacy. Jerusalem is now the reverse of what it was then. Note, It is folly to think that God should do for us while we hold fast our iniquity, as he did for those that held fast their integrity.

II. A very startling, cutting reply, which God, by the prophet, sent to that message. If Jeremiah had been have answered the message of himself, we have reason to think that he would have returned a comfortable answer, in hope their sending of such a message was an indication of some good purposes in them, which he would be glad to make the use of. But he did not do it, not that God knew their hearts better than Jeremiah does, and sends them an answer which hath scarcely one word of comfort in it. He sends it in the name of the Lord God of Israel, (v. 3.) to intimate to them, that though God allowed himself to be called the God of Israel, and had done great things for Israel formerly, and had still great things in store for Israel, pursuant to his covenants with them, yet this should stand the present generation in no stead, who were Israelites in name only, and not in deed, any more than God's dealings with them should cut off his relation to Israel as their God. It is here foretold,

1. That God will render all their endeavours for their own security fruitless and ineffectual; (v. 4.) I will be so far from teaching your hands to war, and putting an edge upon your swords, that I will turn back the weapons of war that are in your hand, when you sally out upon the besiegers to beat them off, so that they shall not give the stroke you design; may, they shall recoil into your own faces, and be turned upon yourselves. Nothing can make for those who have God against them.

2. That the besiegers shall in a little time make themselves masters of Jerusalem, and of all its wealth and strength. Note, If this be not in God's providence to pull down this city, who are now surrounding it. Note, If that place, which should have been a centre of devotion, be made a centre of wickedness, it is not strange if God make it a rendezvous of destroyers.

3. That God himself will be their Enemy; and then I know not who can befriended them, no, not Jeremiah himself; (v. 5.) I will be so far from protecting them, as God had done, that you shall be the case, that I myself will fight against you. Note, Those who rebel against God may justly expect that he will make war upon them; and that, (1.) With the power of a God who is irresistibly victorious; I will fight against you with an outstretched hand, which will reach far, and with a strong arm, which will strike home, and wound deep. (2.) With the power of a God, that he at last, who was once a saviour of his people, is at last avenged of his enemies. It is a conviction in love, but an execution in anger, and in fury, and in great wrath; it is upon a sentence sworn in wrath, against which there will lie no exception: and it will soon be found what a fearful thing it is to fall into the hands of the living God.

4. That those who, for their own safety, decline sallying out upon the besiegers, and so avoid their sword, shall yet not escape the sword of God's justice; (v. 6.) I will smite those that abide in the city,
(so it may be read,) both man and beast; both the beasts that are for food, and those that are for service in war, foot and horse; they shall die of a great famine; and the sword, and famine, and pestilence, shall fall upon them and the enemies are encamped about them. Though Jerusalem's gates and walls may for a time keep out the Chaldeans, they cannot keep out God's judgments. His arrows of pestilence can reach those that think themselves safe from other arrows.

3. That the King himself, and all the people that escape the sword, famine, and pestilence, shall fall into the hands of the Chaldeans, who shall cut them off in cold blood; (v. 7.) They shall not spare them, nor have pity on them. Let not them expect to find mercy with men, who have forfeited God's compassion, and shut themselves out from his mercy. Thus was the decree gone forth; and then to what purpose was it for Jeremiah to inquire of the Lord for them?

8. And unto this people thou shalt say, Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I set before you the way of life, and the way of death. 9. He that abideth in this city shall die by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth out, and falleth to the Chaldeans that besiege you, he shall live, and his life shall be unto him for a prey.

10. For I have set my face against this city, for evil, and not for good, saith the Lord: it shall be given into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire. 11. And touching the house of the king of Judah, say, Hear ye the word of the Lord: 12. O house of David, thus saith the Lord, Execute judgment in the morning, and deliver him that is spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor, lest my fury go out like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

13. Behold, I am against thee, O inhabitant of the valley, and rock of the plain, saith the Lord; which say, Who shall come down against us? or who shall enter into our habitations? But I will punish you according to the fruit of your doings, saith the Lord: and I will kindle a fire in the forest thereof, and it shall devour all things round about it.

By the civil message which the king sent to Jeremiah, it appeared that both he and the people began to have a respect for him, which it had been Jeremiah's policy to make some advantage of for himself; but the reply which God obliges him to make, is enough to crush the little respect they begin to have for him, and to exasperate them against him more than ever. Not only the predictions in the foregoing verses, but the prescriptions in these, were provoking; for here, as at the beginning, the people are advised to surrender and desert to the Chaldeans, as the only means left them to save their lives, v. 8.—10. This counsel was very displeasing to those who were flattered by their false prophets into a desperate resolution to hold out to the last extremity, trusting to the strength of their walls and courage of their soldiery, to keep out the enemy, or to their foreign aids to raise a siege. The prophet assures them, "The city shall be given into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall not only plunder it, but burn it with fire." God himself hath set his face against this city for evil, and not for good, to lay it waste, and to protect it, for evil which shall have no good mixed with it, no mitigation, nor any alleviation; and therefore you would make the best of bad, you must quaff the cup of the Chaldeans, and surrender prisoners of war." In vain did Rabshakeh persuade the Jews to do this while they had God for them, (Isa. xxxvi. 16.) but it was the best course they could take now that God was against them. Both the law and the prophets had often set before them life and death in another sense—life, or the glorious privilege of obedience, and of a thousand blessings which they persist in disobedience, Dan. xxx. 19. But they had slighted that life which would have made them truly happy, to upbraided with them which the prophet here uses the same expression; (v. 8.) Behold, I set before you the way of life and the way of death, which denotes not, as that, a fair prepossession, but a melancholy dilemma, advising them of two evils to choose the least; and that lesser evil, a shameful and wretched captivity, is all the life now left for them to prepare to themselves. He that abides in the city, and trusts to that to secure them, shall certainly die either by the sword without the walls, or famine or pestilence within. But he that can so far bring down his spirit, and quit his vain hopes, as to go out, and fall to the Chaldeans, his life shall be given him for a prey; for the fire will fall on him, but with much difficulty and hazard, as a prey is taken from the mighty. It is an expression like that, He shall be saved, yet so as by fire. He shall escape, but very narrowly; or, he shall have such surprising joy and satisfaction in escaping with his life from such a universal destruction, as shall equal theirs that divide the spoil. They thought to have made a prey of the camp of the Chaldeans, as their ancestors did that of the Assyrians, (Isa. xxxix. 23.) but they will be sadly disappointed; if by yielding at discretion they can but save their lives, that is all the prey they must promise themselves. Now e would think this advice from a prophet, in God's name, should have gained some credit with them, and been universally followed; but, for aught that appears, there were few or none that took it; so wretchedly were their hearts hardened to their destruction.

2. He advises the king and princes to reform, and make conscience of the duty of their place. Because it was the king that sent the message to him, in the reply there shall be a particular word for the house of the king. The king is more than the king; (that was no part of a prophet's business, no more, then they did him the honour to send to him,) but to give them wholesome counsel; (v. 11, 12.) "Execute judgment in the morning; do it carefully and diligently. Those magistrates that would fill up their place with duty, had need rise betimes. Do it quickly, and do not delay to do justice upon appeals made to you, and tire out people with what they have done. Do not lie in your beds in a morning, to sleep away the debauch of the night before, nor spend the morning in pampering the body, (as those princes, Ecol. x. 16.) but spend it in the despatch of business. You would be delivered out of the hand of those that distress you, and expect that their God should do you justice; see then that you do justice to those that apply themselves to you, and deliver them out of the hand of their oppressors, lest my fury go out like fire against you in a particular manner, and you fare worst, who think to escape best, because of the evil of your doings." Now, (1.) This intimates that it was their neglect to do their duty, that brought all this desolation upon the people. It was the evil of their own doings, that kindled the fire of God's wrath. Thus plainly does he deal even with the house of the king; for those that would have the benefit of a prophet's prayers, must think-fully take a prophet's reproofs. (2.) This directs them to take the right method for a national reformation. The princes must begin, and set a good example, and then the people will be invited to reform. They must use their power for the punishment of wrong, and then the people will be obliged to reform. He reminds them that they are the House of David, and therefore should treat in his steps, who executed judgment and justice to his people. (3.) This gives them much encouragement to hope that they may have a lengthening of their temporal quaility, Dan. iv. 27. If any thing will recover their state from the brink of ruin, this will.

3. He shows them the vanities of all their hopes so long as they continued unreformed, v. 13, 14. Jerusalem is an inhabitant of the valley, guarded with mountains on all sides, which were their natural fortifications, making it difficult for an army to approach the place. It is a rock of the plain, which makes it difficult for an army to undermine them. These advantages of their situation they trusted to more than to the power and promise of God; and thinking their city by these means to be impregnable, they set the judgments of God at defiance, saying, "Who shall come down against us? None of our neighbours dare make a descent upon us; or, if they do, who shall come into our possessions?" They had good colour for this confidence; for it appears to have been the sense of all their neighbours that no enemy could force his way into Jerusalem, Lam. iv. 12. But those are least safe, that are most secure. God soon shows the vanity of that challenge, Who shall come down against us? when he says, (v. 13.) Behold, I am against thee. They had indeed by their wickedness driven God out of their city, when he would have tarried with them as a Friend; but they could not by their bulwarks keep him out of their city, when he came against them as an Enemy. If God be for us, who can be against us? But if he be against us, who can be for us, to stand us in any stead? Nay, he comes against them not as an Enemy that may lawfully and with some hope of success be resisted, but as a Judge that cannot be resisted; for he says, (v. 14.) I will punish you, by due course of law, according to the fruit of your doings, according to the merit of them, and the direct tendency of them. That shall be brought upon you, which is the natural product of sin. Nay, he will not only come with the anger of an enemy, and the justice of a judge; but with the force of a consuming fire, which has no compassion, as a judge sometimes has, nor spares anything combustible, that comes in its way. Jerusalem is hereby slain, and the city, in which God will kindle a fire that shall consume all before it; for our God is himself a consuming Fire; and who is able to stand in his sight, when once he is angry.

CHAP. XXII.

Upon occasion of the message sent in the foregoing chapter to the house of the king, we have here recorded some sermons which Jeremiah preached at court, in some preceding reigns, that it might appear they had had fair warning long before that fatal sentence was pronounced upon them, and were put in a way to have prevented it. Here is, I. A message sent to the royal family, as it should appear, in the reign of Jehoiakim, relating partly to Jehohaz, who was carried away to Egypt and partly to Jehoiakim, who succeeded him, and was now upon the throne. The king and princes are exhorted to execute judgment, and are assured that, if they do so, the royal family should be preserved, in otherwise it should be ruin, v. 1-9. Jehohaz, called here, Shallum, is lamented, v. 10, 12. Jehoiakim is reproved and threatened, v. 13-19. II. Another message sent them in the reign of Jehoiachin, the son of Jehoiakim. He is charged with an obstinate refusal to hear, and is threatened with destruction, and it is foretold, that in him Solomon's house should fall, v. 20-30.

1. Thus saith the Lord, Go down to the house of the king of Judah, and speak there this word, 2. And say, Hear the word of the Lord, O king of Judah, that sitteth upon the throne of David, thou, and thy servants, and thy people that enter in by these gates; 3. Thus saith the Lord, Execute ye judgment and righteousness, and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor; and do no wrong, do no violence to the stranger, the fatherless, nor the widow, neither shed innocent blood in this place. 4. For if ye do this thing indeed, then shall there enter in by the gates of this house kings, sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, he, and his servants, and his people. 5. But if ye will not hear these words, I swear by myself, saith the Lord, that this house shall become a desolation. 6. For thus saith the Lord unto the king's house of Judah, Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon: yet surely I will make thee a wilderness, and cities which are not inhabited. 7. And I will prepare destroyers against thee, every one with his weapons: and they shall cut down thy choice cedars, and cast them into the fire. 8. And many nations shall pass by this city, and they shall say every man to his neighbour, Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this great city? 9. Then they shall answer, Because they have forsaken the covenant of the Lord their God, and worshipped other gods, and served them. Here we have,

1. Orders given to Jeremiah to preach before the king. In the chapter before, Zedekiah sent messengers to the prophet, but here the prophet is bid den to go, in his own proper person, to the house of the king, and demand his attention to the word of the King of kings; v. 2. Hear the word of the Lord, O king of Judah. Subjects must own, that where the word of a king is, there is power over them; but kings must own, that where the word of the Lord is, there is power over them. The king of Judah is here spoken to, as sitting upon the throne of David, who was a man after God's own heart, as holding their dignity and power by the covenant made with him; let them therefore conform to his example, that they may have the benefit of the promises made to him. With the king his servants are spoken to, because a good government depends upon a good king, and a good king needs a good government. II. Instructions given him what to preach.

1. He must tell them what was their duty, what was the good which the Lord their God required of them, v. 3. They must take care, (1.) That they do all the good they can with the power they have. They must do justice, in defence of those that were injured, and must deliver the spoiled out of the hand of their oppressors. This was the duty of their place, Ps. lxxxii. 3. Hencin they must be ministers of God for good. (2.) That they do no hurt with it, no wrong, no violence. That is the greatest wrong and violence, which is done under colour of law and justice, and by those whose business it is to punish and protect from wrong and violence.
They must do no wrong to the stranger, fatherless, and widow, for these God does in a particular manner patronize, and take under his tuition, Exod. xxii. 21, 22.

2. He must assure them that the faithful discharge of their duty would advance and secure their prosperity, v. 4. There shall then be a succession of kings, an uninterrupted succession, upon the throne of David, and of his line; these enjoying a perfect tranquillity and living in great dignity, riding on chariots, and horses, as before, ch. xvii. 25. Note, The most effectual way to preserve the dignity of the government, is, to do the duty of it.

3. He must likewise assure them that the iniquity of their family, if they persisted in it, would be the ruin of their family, though it was a royal family; (v. 5.) If ye will not hear, will not obey, this house shall become a desolation, the palace of the kings of Judah shall fare no better than other habitations in Jerusalem. Sin has often been the ruin of royal palaces, though ever so stately, ever so strong. This sentence is ratified by an oath; I swear by myself, (and God can swear by no greater, Heb. vi. 13.) that this house shall be laid in ruins. Note, Sin will be the ruin of the houses of princes as well as of mean men.

4. He must show how fatal their wickedness would be to their kingdom as well as to themselves, to Jerusalem especially, the royal city, v. 6—9. (1.) It is confessed that Judah and Jerusalem had been valuable in God's eyes, and considerable in their own; Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon. The lot was cast in a place that was rich and. pleasant as Gilead; Zion was a strong hold, as stately as Lebanon: this they trusted to as their security. But, (2.) This shall not protect them; the country that is now fruitful as Gilead, shall be made a wilderness. The cities that are now strong as Lebanon, shall be cities not inhabited; and when the country is laid waste, the cities must be despised. See how easily God's judgments can ruin a nation, and how certainly sin will do it.

When this desolating work is to be done, [1.] There shall be those that shall do it effectually; (v. 7.) "I will prepare destroyers against thee; I will sanctify them," (so the word is,) "I will appoint them to this service and use them in it." Note, When destruction is designed, destroyers are prepared. Perhaps they are in the preparing, and things are working toward the designed destruction, and are getting ready for it, long before. And who can contend with the destroyers of God's preparing? They shall destroy cities as easily as men fell trees in a forest; They shall cut down thy choice cedars; and yet, when they are down, shall value them no more than thorns or briars; they shall cast them into the fire, for their choice cedars are become rotten ones, and good for nothing else. [2.] There shall be those who shall be ready to justify God in the doing of it; (v. 8, 9.) persons of many nations, when they pass by the ruins of this city in their travels, will ask, "Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this city? How came so strong a city to be overpowered? So rich a city to be impoverished? So populous a city to be depopulated? So holy a city to be profaned? And a city that had been so dear to God, to be abandoned by him? The reason is so obvious, that it shall be ready in every man's mouth. Ask them that go by the way, Job xxxi. 29. Ask the next man you meet, and he will tell you it was because they had caused God's wrath to be kindled against them; for the Lord remembered the covenant of Jehovah their own God, revoked from their allegiance to him, and from the duty which their covenant with him bound them to, and they worshipped other gods, and served them, in contempt of him; and therefore he gave them up to this destruction. Note, God never casts any off until they first cast him off. "Go, says God to the prophet, "and preach this to the royal family."

10. Weep ye not for the dead, neither mourn him; but weep sore for him that goeth away: for he shall return no more, nor see his native country. 11. For thus saith the Lord touching Shallum the son of Josiah king of Judah, which reigned instead of Josiah his father, which went forth out of this place, He shall not return thither any more: 12. But he shall die in the place whither they have led him captive, and shall see this land no more. 13. Wo unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by wrong; that useth his neighbour's service without wages, and giveth him not for his work; 14. That saith, I will build me a wide house, and large chambers, and cutteth him out windows; and it is cedared with cedar, and painted with vermilion! 15. Shalt thou reign because thou art a king in a beautiful house? Did not thy father eat and drink, and do judgment and justice, and then it was well with him? 16. He judged the cause of the poor and needy; then it was well with him: was not this to know me? saith the Lord. 17. But thine eyes and thy heart are not but for thy covetousness, and for to shed innocent blood, and for oppression, and for violence to do it. 18. Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning Jehoahaz the son of Josiah king of Judah, They shall not lament for him, saying, Ah my brother! or, Ah sister! they shall not lament for him, saying, Ah lord! or, Ah his glory! 19. He shall be buried with the burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem.

Kings, though they are gods to us, are men to God, and shall die like men; so it appears in these verses, where we have a sentence of death past upon two kings who reigned successively in Jerusalem, two brothers, and both the ungracious sons of a very pious father.

1. Here is the doom of Shallum, who doubtless is the same with Jehoahaz, for he is that son of Josiah, king of Judah, who reigned in the stead of Josiah his father, (v. 11.) which Jehoahaz did by the act of the people who made him king, though he was not the eldest son, 2 Kings xxi. 30. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 1. Among the sons of Josiah (1 Chron. iii. 15.) there is one Shalman mentioned, and not Jehoahaz. Perhaps the people preferred him before his elder brother, because they thought him a more active, daring young man, and fitter to rule; but God soon showed them the folly of their injustice, and that it could not prosper, for within three months the kings of Egypt came upon them, deposed him, and carried him away prisoner into Egypt, as God had threatened. Dint. xxxvi. 6. He does not appear that any of the people were taken into captivity with him. We have the story, 2 Kings xxiii. 34. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 4. Now here,

1. The people are directed to lament him rather than his father Josiah; "Woe not for the dead, woe not any more for Josiah." Jeremiah had been himself a true mourner for him, and had stirred up the people to mourn for him; (2 Chron. xxxvi. 25,) yet now he will have them go out of mourning for him, though it was but three months after his death, and to turn their tears into another channel, they must be engaged by himself himself, not that there was any great loss of him to the public, as there was of his father, but that his case was much more deplorable. Josiah went to the grave in peace and honour, was prevented from seeing the evil to come in this world, and removed to see the good to come in the other world; and therefore, Woe not for him, but for his unhappy son, who is likely to have a far worse and more wretched fate. Notice, Dying saints may be justly envied, while living sinners are justly pitied. And so dismal perhaps the prospect of the times may be, that tears even for a Josiah, even for a Jesus, must be restrained, that they may be reserved for ourselves and for our children, Luke xxiii. 28.

2. The reason given is, because he shall never recover his kingdom, though he is expected, and shall die there. They were loath to believe this, therefore it is repeated here again and again, he shall return no more, v. 10. He shall never have the pleasure of seeing his native country, but shall have the continual grief of hearing of the desolations of it. He is gone forth out of this place, and shall never return, v. 11. He shall die in the place whither they have led him by the hand, v. 12. This came of his forsaking the good example of his father, and usurping the right of his elder brother. In Ezekiel's lamentation for the princes of Israel, this Jehoahaz is represented as a young lion, that soon learned to catch the prey, but was taken, and brought in chains to Egypt, and was long expected to return, but in vain. See Ezek. xix. 3—5.

II. Here is the doom of Jehoiakin, which succeeded him. Whether he had any better right to the crown than Shallum, we know not; for though he was elder than his predecessor, there seems to be another son of Josiah, elder than he, called Johnan, 1 Chron. iii. 15. But this we know, he ruled no better, and reigned no better at last. Here is,

1. His sins faithfully reproved. It is not fit for a private person to say to a king, Thou art wicked; but the prophet, with a good deal of confidence, saith of God, that he will not trust him if he does not deliver it, be it ever so unpleasing, even to kings themselves. Jehoiakin is not here charged with idolatry, and, probably, he had not yet put Urijah the prophet to death, (as we find afterward he did, ch. xxxvii. 22, 23,) for then he would have been told of it here; but the crimes for which he is here reproved, are, (1.) Pride, and affectation of pomp and splendour as if the business of kings were his, vs. 13, 14. Nay, it must exceed that, for it must be painted with minim, or vermilion, which dyed red, or, as some read it, with indigo, which dyes blue. No doubt, it is lawful for princes and great men to build and beautify and furnish their houses, so as is agreeable to their dignity; but he that knows what is in man, knew that Jehoiakin did this in the pride of his heart, Ps. li. 8, 9. It was not for the service of God, but for the service of self, a sin of the first magnitude, and is in itself sinful. Those therefore that are enlarging their houses, and making them more sumptuous, have need to look well to the frame of their own spirits in the doing of it, and carefully to watch against all the workings of vanity. But that which was particularly amiss in Jehoiakin's case, was, that he did this when he could not but perceive, both by the word of God, and by his providence, that divine judgments were breaking in upon him. He reigned his three first years of his father Ahaz's reign, at a time the kingdom of Egypt, and all the rest by the permission and allowance of the king of Babylon; and yet he that was no better than a viceroy, will covet to vie with the greatest monarch in building and furniture. Observe how peremptory he is in this resolution; "I will build me a wide house; I am resolved I will, whoever advises me to the contrary." Note, It is the height of vanity, and a mark of a great lacks, to think only of the making of houses, and estates, to covet to make a fair show. Many have unhumbled hearts under humbling providences, and look most haughtily than when God is bringing them down. This is striving with our Maker. (2.) Carnal security and confidence in his wealth, depending upon the continuance of his prosperity, as if his mountain now stood so strong, that it could never be moved, and he might die in the entrance of it without any disturbance or interruption. How was he himself in cedar, (v. 13,) as if that were too fine to be assaulted, and too strong to be broken through, and as if God himself could not, for pity, give up such a stately house as that to be burned. Thus when Christ's spake of the destruction of the temple, his disciples came to him, to show him what a magnificent structure it was, Matt. xxvi. 54, 55. See xxxiv. 1. Note, Thus, wrote Ezekiel himself, who think their present prosperity is a lasting security, and dream of reigning, because they are enclosed in cedar. It is but in his own conceit, that the rich man's wealth is his strong city. (3.) Some think he is here charged with sacrilege, and robbing the house of God to beautify and adorn his own house. He cut him out my windows; so it is in the margin; which some understand as if he had taken windows out of the temple to put into his own palace, and then painted them (as it follows) with vermilion, that it might not be discovered, but might look of a piece with his own building. Note, Those cheat themselves, and ruin themselves at last, who think to enrich themselves by robbing God and his house; and however they may disguise it under fair pretences, it must be remembered that the vengeance of God is for this, that he has invaded the righteous and oppression, violence and injustice. He built his house by unrighteousness, with money unjustly got, and materials which were not honestly come by, and perhaps upon ground obtained as Ahab obtained Naboth's vineyard. And because he went beyond what he could afford, he defrauded his workmen of their wages, which is one of the sins that cries in the ear of the Lord of hosts, Jer. v. 4. God takes notice of the wrong done by the greatest of men to their poor servants and labourers, and will repay them, in justice, that will not in justice pay those whom they employ, but use their neighbour's service without wages. Observe, The greatest of men must look upon the meanest as their neighbours, and be just to them accordingly, and shun them as thieves and robbers, as if they were oppressive, not only in his buildings, but in the administration of his government. He did not do justice, made no conscience of shedding innocent blood, when it was to serve the purposes of his ambition, avarice, and revenge. He was all for oppression and violence, not to threaten it only, but to do it; and when he was set upon any act of injustice, nothing should stop him, but he would go through with it. And so, as God would himself take vengeance upon him, he would be sure to find the height of self-worship, that love of money, which is the root of all evil. Thine eyes and thine heart are not but for covetousness; they were for that, and nothing else. Observe,
In composure the heart walks after the eyes: it is therefore called the last of the eye. 1 John ii. 16. Job xxxi. 7. It is setting the eyes upon that which is not, Prov. xxxiii. 5. "The eyes and the heart are then for composure, when the aims and affections are wholly set upon the wealth of this world; and where they are so, the temptation is strong to hurry, oppose, and resign them and posterity. 7.) Thus which aggravated all his sins, was, that he was the son of a good father, who had left him a good example, if he would but have followed it; (v. 15, 16.) Did not thy father eat and drink? When Jehoiakim enlarged and enlightened his house, it is probable that he spoke scornfully of his father for containing himself with such a mean and inconvenient dwelling. 3dly. His family, those sovereign princes, and excelled him as one that had a dull fancy, a low spirit, that could not find in his heart to lay out his money, nor cared for what was fashionable; that should not serve him, that served his father: but God, by the prophet, tells him that his father, though he had not the spirit of building, was a man of an excellent spirit, a better man than he, and did better for himself. 4thly. Those who find their parents' old fashions, commonly come short of their real excellencies. Jeremiah tells him,

[1.] That he was directed to do his duty by his father's practice; He did judgment and justice; he never did wrong to any of his subjects, never oppressed them, or put any hardship upon them, but was careful to preserve all their just rights and proper station, and would not abuse his power for the support of wrong, but he used it for the maintaining of right. He judged the cause of the poor and needy, was ready to hear the cause of the meanest of his subjects, and do them justice. Note, The care of magistrates must be, not to support their grandeur and take their case, but to do good; not only not to oppress the poor themselves, but to defend those that are oppressed.

[2.] That he was encouraged to do his duty by his father's prosperity. First, God accepted him; "Was not this to know me, saith the Lord? Did he not hereby make it to appear that he rightly knew his God, and worshipped him, and, consequently, was known and owned of him?" Note, The right knowledge of God consists in doing our duty, pursing the office of our place and station in the world. Secondly, He himself had the comfort of it; Did he not eat and drink soberly and cheerfully, so as to fit himself for his business, for strength, and not for drunkenness? Ecc. x. 17. He did eat, and drink, and did judgement; he did not (as perhaps Jehoiakim and his princes did) drink, and forgot the law, and pervert the judgment of the afflicted, Prov. xxx. 5. He did eat and drink; God blessed him with great plenty, and he had the comfortable enjoyment of it himself, and gave handsome entertainments to his friends, was very hospitable, and very charitable. It was Jehoiakim's pride, that he had built a fine house, but Josiah's true praise, that he kept a good house. Many times those have least in them of true generosities, or grandeur; for, to support the extravagant expense of that, hospitality, bounty to the poor, yea, and justice itself, will be pinched. It is better to live with Josiah in an old-fashioned house, and do good, than live with Jehoiakim in a stately house, and leave debts unpaid. Josiah did justice and judgement, and then it was well with him; (v. 15.) and it is repeated again, and concerning him, and therefore this is taught. One that is comfortably, his own subjects, and all his neighbours, respected him; and, whatever he put his hand to, prospered. Note, While we do well, we may expect it will be well with us. This Jehoiakim knew, that his father found the way of duty to be the way of comfort, and yet he would not tread in his steps.

20. Go up to Lebanon, and cry; and lift up thy voice in Bashan, and cry from the passages: for all thy lovers are destroyed. 21. I spake unto thee in thy prosperity; but thou saidst, I will not hear: this hath been thy manner from thy youth, that thou obeyedst not my voice. 22. The wind shall eat up all thy lustres, and thy lovers shall go into captivity: surely then shalt thou be ashamed and confounded for all thy wickedness.

23. O inhabitant of Lebanon, that makest thy nest in the cedars, how gracious shalt thou be when pangs come upon thee, the pain as of a woman in travail! 24. As I live, saith the Lord, though Coniah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah were the signet upon my right hand, yet would I pluck thee thence; 25. And I will give thee into the hand of them that seek thy life, and into the hand of them whose face thouarest, even into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of the Chaldeans. 26. And I will cast thee out, and thy mother that bare thee, into another country, where ye were not born; and there shall ye die. 27. But to the land wherunto they desire to return, thither shall they not return.

28. Is this man Coniah a despised broken idol? is he a vessel wherein is no pleasure? wherefore are they cast out, he and his seed, and are cast into a land which they know not? 29. O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord: 30. Thus saith the Lord, Write ye this man childless, a man thou shalt not prosper in his days: for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah.

This prophecy seems to have been calculated for the ungracious, inglorious reign of Jeconiah, or Jehoiakim, the son of Jehoiakim, who succeeded him in the government, reigned but three months, and was then carried captive to Babylon, where he lived many years, Jer. lii. 31. We have, in these verses, a prophecy,

I. Of the desolations of the kingdom, which were now hastening on, v. 20.—23. Jerusalem and Judah are here spoken to, or the Jewish state as a single person, and we have it here under a threefold character.

1. Very haughty in a day of peace and safety; (v. 21.) "I spake into thee in thy prosperity; spake, by my servants the prophets, reproves, admonitions, counsels, but thou wouldest, I will not hear, I will not heed, thou obeyedst not my voice, and wast resolved that thou wouldest not, and hast the front to tell me so." It is common for these that live at ease, to live in the word of God; Jehovah wore him fat, and kicked. This is so much the worse, that they had it by kind; This has been thy manner from thy youth. They were called transgressors from the world, Isa. xlviii. 8.

2. Very timorous upon the alarms of trouble; (v. 20.) "When thou seest all thy lovers destroyed, when thou findest thine idols unable to help thee, and thy foreign alliances failing thee, thou wilt then go up to Lebanon, and cry, as one undone, and giving up all for lost, cry with a bitter cry; thou wilt cry, Help, help, or we are lost; thou wilt lift up thy voice in fearful shrieks, upon Lebanon and Bashan, two high hills, in hope to be heard from thence by the advantage of the rising ground. Thou wilt cry from the passages, from the roads, where thou wilt ever and anon be in distress." Thou wilt cry from a high mountain, as a proper name, a famous mountain in the border of Moab. Thou wilt cry, as those that are in great consternation use to do, to all about thee; but in vain, for, (v. 22.) the wind shall eat up all thy pastors, or rulers, that should protect and lead thee, and provide for thy safety; they shall be blasted, and withered, and brought to nothing, as buds and blossoms are by a bleak or freezing wind; they shall be devoured suddenly, insensibly, and irresistibly, as fruits by the wind. Thy lovers, that thou dependest upon, and hast an affection for, shall go into captivity, and shall be so far from saving thee, that they shall not be able to save themselves."

3. Very tame under the heavy and lasting pressures of trouble; "When there appears no relief from any of thy confederates, and thy own priests are at a loss, thou shalt be ashamed and confounded; shall thy wickedness, v. 22. Note, Many will never be brought to the knowledge of their sins, nor brought to confession of their sins, till they are brought to the last extremity; and it is well if we get this good by our straits, by them to be brought to confession for our sins. The Jewish state is here called an inhabitant of Lebanon, because that famous forest was within their border, (v. 23.) and all their country was wealthy, and well guarded with Lebanon's natural fastnesses; but so proud and haughty were they, that they are said to make their rest in the cedars, where they thought themselves out of the reach of all danger, and whence they looked with contempt upon all about them. "But, how gracious wilt thou be when jungles come upon thee! Then thou wilt humble thyself before God, and promise amendment. When thou art overthrown in stony places, thou wilt be glad to hear these words: as when thou weepest for prosperity, thou wilt not hear, Ps. cxli. 6. Then the Lord will be desirous to make thyself acceptable with that God whom, before, thou madest light of." Note, Many have their pangs of piety, who, when the pangs are over, show that they have no true piety. Some give another sense of it; "What will all thy pomp, and state, and wealth avail thee? What will become of all, or what comfort shall thou have of it, when thou art within in these distresses? No more than a woman in travail, full of pains and fears, can take comfort in her ornaments while she is in that condition." So Mr. Gazacker. Note, Those that are proud of their worldly advantages, would do well to consider how they will look when pangs come upon them, and how they will then have lost all their beauty.

11. Here is a prophecy of the disgrace of the king; his name was Jeconiah, but he is here once and again called Coniah, in contempt. The prophet shortens his name, and gives him, as we say, a nick-name, perhaps to denote that he should be despised of his dignity, that his reign should be shortened, and the number of his months cut off in the midst. Two instances of dishonour are here put upon him. He shall be thrust away into captive men, and shall spend and end his days in bondage. He was born to a crown, but it should quickly fall from his head, and he should exchange it for fetters. Observe the steps of this judgment.

1. God will abandon him, v. 24. The God of truth says it, and confirms it with an oath; "Though he were the signet upon my right hand, (his predecessors had been so, and he might have been so, were he had not been an instrument of his generation.) I will pluck him thence." The good kings of Judah had been as signets on God's right hand, near and dear to him; he had gloried in them, and made use of them as instruments of his government, as the prince does of his signet-ring, or sign-manual: but Coniah has made himself utterly unworthy of the honour, and therefore the privilege shall be given to others to wear it; now, standing that, he shall be thrown off. Answerable to this threatening against Jeconiah is God's promise to Zerubbabel, when he made him his people's guide in their return out of captivity; (Hag. ii. 23.) I will take thee, O Zerubbabel, my servant, and make thee as a signet. Those that think themselves as signets on God's right hand, must not be secure, but fear lest they be plucked thence.
(2.) The King of Babylon shall seize him. Those know not what enemies and mischief they are ex posed to, and shall presently fall out of God’s protec tion, v. 25. The Chaldeans are here said to be such as had a spite to Coniah, they sought his life;
no less than that, they thought, would satisfy their taste; they were such as he had a dread of, (Are there those whose face thou fearest,) which would make it the more terrible to him to fall into their hands, especially when he had taken to him self that gave him into their hands. And if God deliver him to them, who can deliver him from them?

(3.) He and his family shall be carried to Baby lon, where they shall weep out the many tedious years of their lives in a miserable captivity; he and his mother, (v. 26.) he and his seed, (v. 28.) he and all the royal family, (for he had no children of his own which he would go to policy,) or he, and the children of his loins; they shall all be cast out to another country, to a strange country, a country where they were not born, nor such a country as that where they were born, a land which they knew not, in which they have no acquaintance with whom to converse, or from whom to expect any kindness.

This they shall be carried, from a land where they were entitled to dominion, and shall be car ried to a land where they shall be compelled to serve.
But have they no hopes of seeing their own country again? No,
To the land whereunto they desire to return, thither shall they not return, v. 27. They conduct ed themselves ill in it, when they were in it, and therefore they shall never see it more. Jehohaz was carried to Egypt, the land of the south, (v. 10.) Jeconiah to Babylon, the land of the north, both remote, the quite contrary way. They must never expect to meet again, nor either of them to breathe their native air again. Those that had abused the dominion they had over others, were justly brought thus under the dominion of others. Those that had indulged and gratified their sinful desires, by their oppression, luxury, and cruelty, were justly denied the gratification of their inordinate desire to see their own native country again. We may observe some thing very emphatical in that part of this threaten ing, (v. 28.) In the country where ye were not born, shall ye die. As there is a time to be born, and a time to die, so there is a place to be born in, and a place to die in. We know where we were born, but where we shall die we know not; it is enough that God knows, Let it be known, it is written, that we die in Christ, and then it will be well with us wheresoe'er we die, though it should be in a far country.

(4.) This shall render him very mean and des picable in the eyes of all his neighbours. They shall be ready to say, (v. 28.) Is this Coniah a despis ed, broken idol? Yes, certainly he is, and much de bused from what he was. [1.] Time was when he was dignified, nay, when he was almost deified. This peopled who had seen his father lately deposed, were ready to adore him when they saw him upon the throne; but now he is a despised, broken idoi, which, when it was whole, was worshipped, but, when it is rotten and broken, is thrown by and despised, and nobody regards it, or remembers what it has been. Note, What is idolized will, first or last, be despised and broken; what is purposely honoured, will very easily be contemned, and rivals with God will be the scorn of man. Whatever we desire we shall be disappointed in, and then shall despise. [2.] Time was, when he was delighted in; but now he is a vessel in which is no pleasure, or to which there is no desire, either because grown out of fashion, or because cracked or dirtied, and so rendered unpalatable. Those who have an God has no pleasure in, will, sometime or other, be so mortified, that men will have no pleasure in them.

He shall leave no posterity to inherit his ho

The prediction of this is ushered in with a sublime preface, (v. 29.) O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord. Let all the inhabitants of the world take notice of these judgments of God upon a nation and a family that had been near and dear to him, and thence infer that God is impartial in the administration of justice. Or, it is an appeal to the earth itself, on which we tread, since those that dwell on earth are so deaf and careless, like the earth. Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth.
God’s word is to be considered as a call to men
he had, and is, and, in considera hearing that and regard the word of the Lord, that, though we arc earth, we may be found among those whose names are written in heaven.

Now the earth is here to be taken notice of, as that Jeconiah is written childless, (v. 30.) that as it follows, No man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David. In the line of Da vid was extinct as a royal line. Some think that he had children born in Babylon, because mention is made of his seed being cast out there, (v. 28.) and that they died before him. We read in the gene alogy, (1 Chron. iii. 17.) of seven sons of Jeconiah Assyry, that is, Jeconiah the captive, of which Sal athiel is the first. Some think that they were only his adopted sons, and that, when it is said, (Matth.
i. 12.) Jeconiah begat Salathiel, no more is meant than that he bequeathed to him what claims and pretensions he had to the government; the rather, because Salathiel is called the son of Zeruiah, (Luke ii. 27.) of the house of Nathan, v. 31. Whether he had children begotten, or only adopted, thus far he was childless, that none of his seed ruled as kings in Judah. He was the Augustus of that empire, in whom it determined. Whoever are childless, it is God that writes them so; and those who take no care to do good in their days, cannot expect to prosper in their days.

CHAP. XXIII.

In this chapter, the prophet, in God’s name, is dealing his reproves and threatenings. 1. Among the careless princes, or pastors of the people; (v. 1, 2.) yet promis ing to take care of the flock, which they had been want ful in the duty to, v. 3. 8. II. Among the wicked prophets and priests, whose bad character is here given at large in divers instances, especially their imposing upon the people with their pretended inspirations, at which the prophet is astonished, and for which they must expect to be punished. III. The prophet com fronts such profane people, who ridiculed God’s prophets, and ban tered them, v. 33. 40. When all have thus corrupted their way, they must all expect to be told faithfully of it.

WO be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pas ture! saith the LORD. 2. Therefore thus saith the Lord God of Israel against the pastors that feed my people, Ye have scat tered my flock, and driven them away, and have not visited them: behold, I will visit upon you the evil of your doings, saith the LORD. 3. And I will gather the rem nant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds; and they shall be fruitful and increase. 4. And I will set up shepherds over them, which shall feed them; and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the Lord. 5. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. 6. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. 7. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; 8. But, The Lord liveth, which brought up, and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land.

Here is,

I. A word of terror to the negligent shepherds; the day is at hand when God will reckon with them concerning the trust and charge committed to them: "Wo be to the pastors, to the rulers, both in church and state, who should be to those for whom they are set, as pastors to lead them, feed them, protect them, and take care of them. They are not owners of the sheep; God here calls them the shefL of my pasture, whom I am interested in, and have provided good pasture for. "Wo be to those therefore who are commanded to feed God's people, and pretend to do it; but who, instead of that, scatter the flock, and drive them away, by their violence and oppression, and have not visited them, nor taken care of their welfare, nor concerned themselves at all to do them good. In not visiting them, and doing their duty to them, they did in effect scatter them, and drive them away. The beasts of prey scattered them, and the shepherds are in the fault, who should have kept them together. "Wo be to them, when God will visit upon them the evil of their doing, and deal with them as they deserve. They would not visit the flock in a way of duty, and therefore God will visit them in a way of vengeance.

II. Here is a word of comfort to the neglected sheep. Though the under-shepherds take no care of them, no pains with them, but betray them, the chief Shepherd will look after them; "When my father and I were in the wilderness, the Lord was with us." Though the interests of God's church in the world are neglected by those who should take care of them, and postponed to their own private secular interests, yet they shall not therefore sink. God will perform his promise, though those he employs do not perform their duty.

1. The dispersed Jews shall at length return to their own land from which they were driven out, under a good government, v. 3, 4. Though there be but a remnant of God's flock left, a little remnant, that has narrowly escaped destruction, he will gather that remnant; will find them out wherever they are, and find out ways and means to bring them back out of all countries whither he had driven them. It was the justice of God, for the sin of their shepherds, that dispersed them; but the mercy of God shall gather in the sheep, when the shepherds that betrayed them are cut off. They shall be brought to their former habitations, as sheep to their folds, and there they shall be fruitful, and increase in numbers. And though their former shepherds took no care of them, it does not therefore follow that they shall have no more. If some have abused a sacred office, that is no good reason why it should be abolished; "They destroyed the sheep, but I will set shepherds over them, which shall make their peace, says the Lord." Formerly, they were continually exposed and disturbed with some alarm or other; but now they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed; they shall be in no danger from without, in no fright from within. Formerly, some or other of them were ever and anon picked up by the beasts of prey; but now none of them shall be lacking, none of them missing. Through the times may have been lost through the church, it does not follow, that they will be in danger. Such pastors as Zerubbabel and Nehemiah were, though they lived not in the pomp that Jehoiakim and Jeconiah did, nor made such a figure, were great blessings to the people as the others were plague to them. The church's peace is not bound up in the pomp of her rulers.

2. Moses, the Prince, that great and good Shepherd of the sheep, shall in the latter days be raised up to bless his church, and to be the Glory of his people Israel, v. 5, 6. The house of David seemed to be quite sunk and ruined by that threatening against Jeconiah, (ch. xxii. 39.) that none of his seed should ever sit upon the throne of David; but here is a promise which effectually secures the honour of the covenant made with David notwithstanding its being disturbed by the house being raised out of its ruins to a greater lustre than ever, and shine brighter than it did in Solomon himself. We have not so many prophecies of Christ in this book as we had in that of the prophet Isaiah but here we have one, and a very illustrious one; of him doubtless the prophet here speaks, of him, and of no other man. The first words intimate, that it would be long ere this promise should have its accomplishment; "The days come, but they are not yet; I shall see him, but not now; but all the rest intimate that the accomplishment of them will be glorious.

(1.) Christ is here spoken of as a Branch from David, the Man the Branch; (Zech. iii. 8.) his appearance mean, his beginnings small, like those of a bad or sordid, and his rise seemingly out of the earth, but growing to be great, to be beautiful, and to be the most illustrious of them all, when it seemed to be a root in a dry ground, buried, and not likely to revive. Christ is the Root and Offspring of David, Rev. xxi. 16. In him death the horn of David bud, Ps. cxxxii. 17, 18. He is a Branch of God's raising up; he sanctified him, and sent him into the world, gave him his commission and qualifications. He is a righteous Branch, his life is righteous; and though there be many, even all that are his, are made righteous; as an Advocate, he is Jesus Christ the righteous. (2.) He is here spoken of as his church's King. This Branch shall be raised as high as the throne of his father David, and there he shall reign and prosper, not as the kings that now were of the house of David, who went backward in all their affairs; no, but he shall be before them all, and be victorious over all opposition. In the chariot of the everlasting gospel he shall go forth, he shall go on conquering and to conquer. If God raise him up, he will prosper him, for he will own the work of his own hands; what is the good pleasure of the Lord, shall prosper in the hands of those to whom it is committed. He shall prosper, for he shall execute judgment and justice in the earth, all over the world; Ps. cxi. 13. The present kings of the house of David were unjust and oppressive, and therefore it is no wonder that they did not prosper; but Christ shall, by his gospel, break the usurped power of Satan, institute a perfect rule of holy living, and, as far as it prevails, make all the world righteous. The effect of this shall be holy security and serenity of mind in all his faithful, loyal subjects. In his days, under his dominion, Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; all the spiritual seed of believing Abraham and praying Jacob shall be protected from the curse of heaven and the majesty of hell; shall be privileged from the arrests of God’s law, and delivered from the attendant guilt and dominion of it, and then shall dwell safely, and be quiet from the fear of all evil. See Luke i. 74, 75. Those that shall be saved hereafter from the wrath to come, may dwell safely now; for if God be for us, who can be against us? In the days of Christ’s government in the soul, when he is uppermost there, the soul dwells at ease.

(3.) He is hitherto spoken of as The Lord our Righteousness. Observe,

1. [1.] Who and what he is. As God, he is Jehovah, the incommunicable name of God, denoting his eternity and self-existence. As Mediator, he is our Righteousness; by making satisfaction to the justice of God for the sin of man, he has brought in an everlasting righteousness, and so made it over to us in the covenant of grace, that, upon our believing concerning this covenant, it becomes ours. His Jehovah our Righteousness implies that he is so our Righteousness, as no creature could be. He is a sovereign, all-sufficient, eternal Righteousness. All our righteousness has its being from him, and by him it subsists, and we are made the righteousness of God in him. [2.] The profession and declaration of this; This is the name whereby he shall be called; not only the name, but the being known to be so. God shall call him by this name, for he shall appoint him to be our Righteousness. By this name Israel shall call him, every true believer shall call him, and call upon him. That is our righteousness, by which, as an allowed plea, we are justified before God, acquitted from guilt, and accepted into favour; and nothing else has we to plead but this, “Christ has died, yea, rather is risen again;” and we have taken him for our Lord.

3. This great salvation, which will come to the Jews in the latter days of their state, after their return out of Babylon, shall be so illustrious as far to outshine the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt; (v. 7, 8.) They shall no more say, The Lord liveth, that brought up Israel out of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, that brought them up out of the north. This we had before, ch. xvi. 14, 15. But here it seems to point more plainly than it did there to the days of the Messiah, and to compare not so much the two deliverances themselves, giving the preference to the latter, as the two states to which the church by degrees grew after these deliverances. Observe the proportion: Just 480 years after they were come out of Egypt, Solomon’s temple was built, (1 Kings vi. 1.) and at that time that nation, which was so wonderfully brought up out of Egypt, was gradually arrived to its height, to its zenith. Just 490 years (70 weeks) after they came out of Babylon, Messiah the Prince set up the gospel-temple, which was the greatest glory of that nation that was so wonderfully brought out of Babylon; see Dan. ix. 24, 25. Now the spiritual glory of the second part of that nation, especially as transferred to the gospel-church, is much more admirable and illustrious than all the temporal glory of the first part of it in the days of Solomon; for that was no glory, compared with the glory which excelleth.

9. My heart within me is broken because of the prophets; all my bones shake: I am like a drunken man, and like a man whom wine hath overcome, because of the Lord, and because of the words of his holiness. 10. For the land is full of adulterers; for because of sweating the land mourneth, the pleasant places of the wilderness are dried up, and their course is evil, and their force is not right. 11. For both prophet and priest are profane; yea, in my house have I found their wickedness, saith the Lord. 12. Wherefore their way shall be unto them as slippery ways in the darkness; they shall be driven on, and fall therein: for I will bring evil upon them, even the year of their visitation, saith the Lord. 13. And I have seen folly in the prophets of Samaria; they prophesied in Baal, and caused my people Israel to err. 14. I have seen also in the prophets of Jerusalem a horrible thing: they commit adultery, and walk in lies: they strengthen also the hands of evil-doers, that none doth return from his wickedness: they are all of them unto me as Sodom, and the inhabitants thereof as Gomorrah. 15. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts concerning the prophets, Behold, I will feed them with wormwood, and make them drink the water of gall: for from the prophets of Jerusalem is profaneness gone forth into all the land. 16. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Hearken not unto the words of the prophets that prophesy unto you; they make you vain: they speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord. 17. They say still unto them that despise me, The Lord hath said, Ye shall have peace; and they say unto every one that walketh after the imagination of his own heart, No evil shall come upon you. 18. For who hath stood in the counsel of the Lord, and hath perceived and heard his word? who hath marked his word, and heard it? 19. Behold, a whirlwind of the Lord is gone forth in fury, even a grievous whirlwind: it shall fall grievously upon the head of the wicked. 20. The anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have executed, and till he have performed, the thoughts of his heart: in the latter days ye shall consider it perfectly. 21. I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran: I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied. 22. But if they had stood in my counsel, and had caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings.

23. Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off? 24. Can any hide himself in secret places: that I shall not see him? saith the Lord. Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord. 25. I have heard what the prophets said, that prophecy lies in my name, saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed. 26. How long shall this be in the heart of the prophets that prophecy lies? yea, they are prophets of the deceit of their own heart: 27. Which think to cause my people to forget my name by their dreams, which they tell every man to his neighbour, as their fathers have forgotten my name for Baal. 28. The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord. 29. Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces? 30. Therefore, behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that steal my word, every one from his neighbour. 31. Behold, I am against them that prophecy false dreams, saith the Lord, and do tell them, and cause my people to err by their lies, and by their lightness; yet I sent them not, nor commanded them: therefore they shall not profit this people at all, saith the Lord.

Here is a long lesson for the false prophets. As none were more bitter and spiteful against God's true prophets than they, so there were none on whom the true prophets were more severe, and justly. The prophet had complained to God of those false prophets, (ch. xiv. 13,) and had often foretold that they should be involved in the common ruin; but here they have woes of their own. Jeremiah was a man that laid things much to heart, and what was any way threatening to his country, made a deep impression upon his spirit. He is here in trouble. 1. Because of the prophets, and their sin, the false doctrine they preached, the wicked lives they lived; especially it filled him with horror, to hear them making use of God's name, and pretending to have their instructions from him. Nevertheless Jeremiah was forewarned, as from the face of the word of his holiness, which will be inflicted by his wrath, according to the threatenings of his word, confirmed by his holiness. Note, Even those that have God for them, cannot but tremble to think of the misery of those that have God against them.

II. He laments the abounding abominable wickedness of the land, and the present tokens of God's displeasure they were under for it. (v. 20.) The land is full of adulterers, it is full both of spiritual and corporal whoredom; they go a whoring from God, and, having cast off the fear of him, no marvel that they abandon themselves to all manner of lewdness; and having dishonoured themselves and their own bodies, they dishonour God and his name by rash and false swearing, because of which the land mourns. Both perjury and common swearing are sins, for which God must one day wring an account; and as nothing so accelerates the destruction of a land, or it will be made to mourn under the judgments of God. Their land mourned now under the judgment of famine; the pleasant places, or, rather, the features, or, as some read it, the habitations of the wilderness, are dried up for want of rain, and yet we see no signs of repentance; they answer not the end of the correction; the tenour and tendency of it was to do more and more; they continued, and to more evil, as bad as ever, and they will not be diverted from it. They have a great deal of resolution, but it is turned the wrong way, they are zealously affected, but not in a good thing; their force is not right; their heart is fully set in them to do evil, and they are not valiant for the truth, have not courage enough to break off their evil courses, though they send God the hưởnging sound of their distress.

III. He charges it all upon the prophets and priests, especially the prophets. They are both profane; (v. 11.) the priests profane the ordinances of God they pretend to administer, the prophets profane the word of God they pretend to deliver; their converse and all their conversation are profane, and then it is not strange that the people are so debauched. They both play the hypocrite; so commonly read they tender sacred pretensions they carry on the vilest designs; yea, not only in their own houses, and the bad houses they frequent, but in my house have I found their wickedness; in the temple, where the priests ministered, where the prophets prophesied, there they were guilty both of idolatry and immorality. See a woful instance in Hophni and Phinehas, 1 Sam. ii. 22. God searches his heart, and all his speeches, and all his counsels; and, though he did not find it out; and the nearer it is to him, the more offensive is it. Two things are charged upon them: 1. That they taught people to sin by their examples. He compares them with the prophets of Samaria, the head city of the kingdom of the ten tribes, which had been long since laid waste. It was the folly of the prophets of Samaria, that they prophesied in Baal, in Baal's name; so Ahab's prophets did, and so they caused my heritage Israel to err, to forsake the service of the true God, and to worship Baal, v. 13. Now the prophets of Jerusalem did not do so, they prophesied in the name of the true God, and valued themselves upon that, that they were not like the prophets of Samaria, who prophesied in Baal; but what the better, when they debouched the nation as much by their immoralities as the others? for those are as a horrible thing in the prophets of Jerusalem, that they make use of the name of the holy God, and yet wallow in all manner of impurity? they make nothing of committing adultery, they make use of the name of the God of truth, and yet walk in lies, they not only prophesy lies, but in their common conversation one cannot believe a word they say. It is well either to abstain from sins, or to be found faithful. Thus they encourage sinners to go on in their wicked ways; for every one will say, 'Surely we may do as the prophets do; who can expect that we should be better than our teachers." By this means it is, that none returns from his wickedness; but they all say that they shall have peace, though they go on, for their prophets tell them so. By this means Judah and Jerusalem are become as Sodom and Gomorrah, that were wicked, and sinners before the Lord exceedingly; and God looked upon their thoughts, and said, they are not in their destruction, as they were, with fire and brimstone.

2. That they encouraged people in sin by their false prophecies. They made themselves believe that there was no harm, no danger in sin, and practised accordingly; and then no marvel that they made others believe so too. v. 16. They speak a vision of their own heart; it is the product of their own thoughts, the work of the imagination, not of the motion, but it is not out of the mouth of the Lord; he never dictated it to them, nor does it agree either with the law of Moses, or with what God has spoken by other prophets. They tell sinners that it shall be well with them, though they persist in their sins, v. 17. See here who they are that they encourage; those that despise God, that slight his authority, and have low and mean thoughts of his institutions, and those that walk after the imagination of their own heart, that are worshippers of idols, and slaves to their own lusts; those that are devoted to their pleasures, put contempt upon their God. Yet see how these prophets carressed and flattered them; they should have been still saying, There is no peace to them that go on in their evil ways; those that they shall have peace, though they go on. No, and a thousand woes, to them; but they still said, Ye shall have peace, no evil shall come upon you. And, which was worst of all, they told them, God has said so; so making him to patronise sin, and to contradict himself. Note, Those that are resolved to go on in their evil ways, will justly be given up to believe the strong delusions of those who tell them that they shall have peace, though they go on.

IV. God disowns all those false prophets said to soothe people up in their sins; (v. 21.) I have not sent these prophets; they never had any mission from God, they were not only not sent by him on his errand, but they were never sent by him on any errand, he never had employed them in any service or business for him; and as to this matter, what they did, had been done to them by no influence from him, to assure this people of peace, he declares that he never gave them any such instructions; yet they were very forward, they ran, they were very bold, they prophesied without any of that difficulty with which the true prophets sometimes struggled. They said to sinners, You shall have peace. But v. 18. Who hath stood in the counsel of the Lord? Who of you that hath, that is so confident of this? You deliver this message with a great deal of assurance; but have you consulted God about it? No, you never considered whether it be agreeable to the discoveries God has made of himself, whether it will consist with the honour of his holiness and justice, to let sinners go unpunished. You have not perceived and heard his word, nor marked that, you have not compared this with the scriptures; for you have a notice of that, and of the constant tenor of it, you would never have delivered such a message." The prophets themselves must try the spirits by the touchstone of the law and of the testimony, as well as those to whom they prophesy; but which of those did so, that prophesied of peace? That they did not stand in God's counsel nor hear his word, is proved afterwards, v. 22. *If they had stood in my counsel, as they pretend, 1. They would have made the scriptures their standard; They would have caused my people to hear my words, and would have conscientiously kept close to them. But, not speaking according to that rule, it is a plain evidence that there is no light in them. 2. They would have made the conversion of souls their business, and would have aimed at that in all their preaching; they would have done all they could to turn people from their evil way in general, from all the particular evil of their doings. They would have encouraged and assisted, the reformation of manners, and would have kept them in their scope in all their preaching, to part between good and evil, and to shew the conviction of sinners; God will bless his own institutions. Yet this is no certain rule; Jeremiah himself, though God sent him, prevailed with but few to turn from their evil way. V. God threatens to punish these prophets for their wickedness. They promised the people peace; to show them the folly of that, God tells them that they should have no peace to them. These were very unfit to warrant the people, and pass their word to them, that no evil shall come upon them, when all evil is coming upon themselves, and they are not aware of it, v. 12. Because the prophets and priests are profane, therefore their ways shall be unto them as slippery ways in the darkness. If they should be rejected of the people, before they misled them, and know they do so, in the souls themselves have no comfort in their way. 1. They pretend to show others the way, but they shall themselves be in the dark, or in a mist; their light or sight shall fail, so that they shall not be able to look before them, shall have no forecast for themselves. 2. They pretend to give assurances to others, but they themselves shall find no firm footing; Their ways shall be unto them as slippery ways, in which they shall not go with any steadiness, safety, or satisfaction. 3. They pretend to make the people easy with their flattering, but they shall themselves be uneasy: They shall be driven, forced forward, as captives, or making their escape as those that are pursued, and they shall fall in the way by which they were to go. 4. They pretend to prevent the evils that threatens others, but God will bring evil upon them, even the year of their visitation, the time fixed for calling them to an account; such a time is fixed concerning all that do not judge themselves, and it will be an evil time. The year of visitation is the year of recompenses. It is further threatened, (v. 15.) I will feed them with wormwood, or poison, with that which is not only nauseous, but noxious, and make them drink waters of gomor, or, as some read it, juice of hemlock; see ch. ix. 15. Justly is the cup of trembling put into their hand first, for from the prophets of Jerusalem, who should have been patterns of piety and every thing that is praise-worthy, even from them is profaneness gone forth into the land. They have actually debauched a nation, than the debauchery of ministers. VI. The people are here warned not to give any credit to these false prophets; for though they flattered them with hopes of impunity, the judgments of God would certainly break out against them, unless they repented; (v. 16.) *"Take notice of what God says, and hearken not to the words of these prophets; for you will find, in the issue, that God's word shall stand, and not theirs. God's word will make you serious, but they make you vain, feed you with vain hopes, which will fail you at last. They tell you, No evil shall come upon you; but hear what God says, (v. 19.) Behold, a whisper of the Lord is gone forth in fury: they tell you, All shall be calm and serene; but God tells you, There is a storm coming, a whirlwind of the Lord, of his sending, and therefore there is no standing before it; it is a whirlwind raised by divine wrath; it is gone forth in fury, a wind that is brought forth out of the treasures of divine vengeance, and therefore it is a grievous whirlwind, and shall light God's throne upon the head of the wicked, which they cannot avoid, nor find any shelter from. It shall fall upon the wicked prophets themselves who deceived the people, and the wicked people who suffered themselves to be deceived. A horrible tempest shall be the portion of their end, Ps. xi. 6. This sentence is bound on as irreversible; (v. 20.) The anger of the Lord is against all the heavens, and he will bring the edge of his sword upon the earth, gone forth, God will not alter his mind, nor suffer his anger to be turned away, till he have executed the sentence, and performed the thoughts of his heart. God's whirlwind, when it comes down from heaven, returns not thither, but accomplishes that for which he sent it, Isa. lv. 11. This they will not consider now; But in the latter days he shall consider it perfectly, consider it with understanding, (so the word is in the Hebrew,) and he shall not fear the threatenings, shall feel the execution of them, and will then perfectly understand what they will not now admit the evidence of, what a fearful thing it is to fall into the hands of a just and jealous God. They that will not consider in time, will be made to consider when it is too late. Son, remember.

VII. Divers things are here offered to the consideration of these false prophets for the consideration, that, if possible, they might be brought to retract their error, and acknowledge the cheat they had put upon God's people.

1. Let them consider, that though they may impose upon men, God is too wise to be imposed upon. Men cannot see through their fallacies, but God can, and does.

Here.

(1.) God asserts his own omnipresence and omniscience in general, v. 23, 24. When they told the people that no evil should befall them though they went on in their evil ways, they went upon atheistical principles, that the Lord doth not see their sin, that he cannot judge through the dark cloud, that he will not require it; and therefore they must be taught the first principles of their religion, and confronted with the most incontestable, self-evident truths. God's throne is prepared in the heavens, and this earth seems to be at a distance from him, yet he is a God here in this lower world, which seems to be afar off, as well as in the upper world, which seems to be at hand, v. 23. The eye of God is the same on earth that it is in heaven; here it runs to and fro as well as there; (2 Chron. xvi. 9.) and what is in the minds of men, whose spirits are veiled in flesh, as is clearly seen by him, as what is in the mind of angels, those unveiled spirits above, that surround his throne. The power of God is the same on earth among its inhabitants that it is in heaven among his armies. With us, nearness and distance make a great difference both in our observations and in our operations, but it is not so with God; to him darkness and light, at hand, and afar off, are both alike. [2.] That how ingenious any inventions of their own consciences and their own characters and counsels, they cannot possibly be concealed from God's all-seeing eye; (v. 24.) "Can any hide himself in the secret places of the earth, that I shall not see him? Can any hide his projects and intentions in the secret places of the heart, that I shall not see them?" No arts of concealment can hide from the eye of God, nor deceive his judgment of them. [3.] That he is everywhere present; he does not only rule heaven and earth, and uphold both by his universal providence, but he fills heaven and earth by his essential presence, Ps. xxxviii. 7, 8, &c. No place can either include him, or exclude him.

(2.) He applies this to these prophets, who had a notable art of disguising themselves; (v. 25, 26.) I have heard what the prophets said, that prophesy lies in my name. They thought that he was so far gone with the world, that he had no leisure to take cognizance of what passed in this. But God will make them know that he knows all their impostures, all the shams they have put upon the world, under colour of divine revelation. What they intended to humour the people with, they pretended to have had from God in a dream, when there was no such thing. This they could not discover; if a man tell me that he dreamed so and so, I cannot contradict his own evidence. Thus God discovered the fraud. Perhaps the false prophets whispered what they had to say in the ears of such as were their confidants, saying, So and so I have dreamed; but God overheard them. The heart-searching eye of God traced them in all the methods they took to deceive the people, and he cries out, How long? Shall I always bear with them? Is it possible to prophesy lies, and prophesy the dictates of their own hearts? Will they never see what an affront they put upon God, what an abuse they put upon the people, and what judgments they are preparing for themselves?

2. Let them consider that their palming upon people counterfeit revelations, and fathering their own错误 into the name of divine inspiration, was the ready way to bring all religion into contempt, and make men turn atheists and infidels; and this was the thing they really intended, though they frequently made mention of the name of God, and prefixed all they said with, Thus saith the Lord. Yet, says God, They think to cause my people to forget my name, by their dreams. They designed to draw people off from the worship of God, from all regard to God's laws and ordinances, and the true prophets, as their fathers forgot God's name for Baal. Note, The great thing Satan aims at, is, to make people forget God, and all that whereby he has made himself known; and he has many subtle methods to bring them to this: sometimes he does it by setting up false gods; (bring men in love with Baal, and they soon forget the name of God;) sometimes by misrepresenting God's name, and bringing them to a sort of self-love and self-worship, such a one as ourselves. Pretences to new revelation may prove as dangerous to religion as the denying of all revelation; and false prophets in God's name may perhaps do more mischief to the power of godliness than false prophets in Baal's name, as being less guarded against.

3. Let them consider what a vast difference there was between these false prophets and those that were delivered by the true prophets of the Lord; (v. 28.) The prophet that has a dream, which was the way of inspiration that the false prophets most pretended to, if he has a dream, let him tell it as a dream; so Mr. Gataker reads it. "Let him lay no more stress upon it than men do upon their dreams, nor expect any more regard to be had to it; let them wholly take it up for a dream, nor call their foolish dreams divine oracles; but let the true prophet, that has my word, speak my word faithfully, speak it as a truth." (so some read it.) "Let him keep close to his instructions, and you will soon perceive a vast difference between the dreams that the false prophets tell, and the divine dictates which the true prophets deliver; he that pretends to have a message from God, and is called by divine grace, let him declare it, and it will easily appear which is of God, and which is not. Those that have spiritual senses exercised will be able to distinguish; for what is the chaff to the wheat? the promises of peace which these prophets make to you, are more to be compared to God's promises, than chaff to wheat. Men's fancies are light, and vain, and worthless, as the chaff which the wind drives away. But the word and substance of God's word is a food for the soul, the bread of life. Wheat was the staple commodity of Canaan, that valley of vision, Deut. viii. 8. Ezek. xxvii. 17. There is as much difference between the vain fancies of men, and the pure word of God, as between the chaff and the wheat.

It follows, (v. 29.) Is not my word like a fire, saith the Lord? Is there wood like it? Has it power and efficacy that the word of God has? No; nothing like it; there is much comparison between painted fire and real fire. Theirs is an ignus fatuus—a deceiving meteor, leading men into by-paths and dangerous precipices. Note, The word of God is like fire. The law was a fiery law; (Deut. xxxii. 2.) and of the gospel, Christ says, 'I am come to send fire on the earth,' Luke xii. 49. Fire has different effects, according as the matter is on which it works; it hardens clay, but softens wax; it consumes the dross, but purifies the gold; so the word of God is to some a savour of life unto life, to others of death unto death. God appeals here to the consciences of those to whom the word was sent: 'Is not my word like fire? Has it not been so to you?' Zech. i. 6. Speak as you have found. It is compared to fire, in order to show its breaking and burning pieces. The unhumbled heart of man is like a rock; if it will not be melted by the word of God as the fire, it will be broken to pieces by it as the hammer. Whatever opposition is given to the word, it will be borne down and broken to pieces.

4. Let them consider that while they went on in this course, God was declaring against them. They are told this, v. 30, 31, 32. Behold, I am against the prophets. They pretended to be for God, and made use of his name, but were really against him; he looks upon them as they were really, and is against them. How can they be long safe, or at all easy, that have a God of almighty power against them? While these prophets were promising peace to the people, God was proclaiming war against them. They stand indicted here.

(1.) For robbery; They steal my word every one from his neighbour. Some understand it of that word which the good prophets preached; they stole their sermons, their expressions, and mingled them with their own, as hucksters mingled bad wares with some that are good, to make them vendible. Those that were strangers to the spirit of the true prophets, mimicked the language of the people, picked up some good sayings of theirs, and delivered them to the people as if they had been their own, but with an ill grace; it was not of a piece with the rest of their discourses. The legs of the lame are not equal, so is a parable in the mouth of fools, Prov. xxvi. 7. Others understand it of the word of God as it was received and conveyed by some of the false prophets; they stole it out of their hearts, as the wicked one in the parable is said to steal the good seed of the word, Matt. xiii. 19. By their insinuations they diminished the authority, and so weakened the efficacy, of the word of God upon the minds of those that seemed to be under convictions by it.

(2.) They stand indicted for counterfeiting the good. Thus God is against them, (v. 31.) because they use their tongues at their pleasure in their discourses to the people, they say what they themselves think fit, and then father it upon God, pretend they had it from him, and say, He saith it. Some read it, They smooth their tongues; they are very complaisant to the people, and say nothing but what is pleasing and plausible; they never reprove them or threaten them, but their words are smoother than butter; thus they ingratitude themselves with them, and get money by them, and they have the impudence and impiety to make God the Patron of their lies; they say, 'He saith so.' What greater indignity can be done to the God of truth than to lay the heats of the father of lies at his door?

(3.) They stand indicted as common cheats; (v. 32.) I am against them, for they prophesy false dreams, pretending that to be a divine inspiration, which is but an invention of their own; this is a horrid fraud; nor will it excuse them to say, Caret emulator.—Let the buyer take care of himself, and 3 fojulius unde deceit, deceivatur—if people will be deceived, let them. No, it is the people's fault, that they err, that they take things upon trust, and do not try the spirits; but it is much more their fault, that they cause God's people to err by their lies, and by their lightness, by the flatteries of their preaching, soothing them up in their sins, and by the looseness and lewdness of their conversation, encouraging them to persist in them. [1.] God dis owns their having any commission from him; I sent them not, nor commanded them; they are not God's messengers, nor is it what they say his message. [2.] He therefore justly denies his blessing with them, Therefore they shall not profit this people at all. All the profit they aim at, is to make them easy; but they shall not so much as do that, for God's provocations will at the same time be making them uneasy. They do not profit this people; so some read it; and more is implied than is expressed; they not only do them no good, but do them a great deal of hurt. Note, Those that corrupt the word of God, while they pretend to preach it, are so far from edifying the church, that they do it the greatest mischief imaginable.

33. And when this people, or the prophet, or a priest, shall ask thee, saying, What is the burden of the Lord? thou shalt then say unto them, What burden? I will even forsake you, saith the Lord. 34. And as for the prophet, and the priest, and the people, that shall say, The burden of the Lord, I will even punish that man and his house. 35. Thus shall ye say every one to his neighbour, and every one to his brother, What hath the Lord answered thee? and, What hath the Lord spoken? 36. And the burden of the Lord shall ye mention no more; for every man's word shall be his burden: for ye have perverted the words of the living God, of the Lord of hosts our God. 37. Thus shalt thou say to the prophet, What hath the Lord answered thee? and, What hath the Lord spoken? 38. But since ye say, The burden of the Lord; therefore thus saith the Lord, Because you say this word, The burden of the Lord, and I have sent unto you, saying, Ye shall not say, The burden of the Lord; 39. Therefore, behold, I, even I, will utterly forget you, and I will forsake you, and the city that I gave you, and your fathers, and cast you out of my presence: 40. And I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you, and a perpetual shame, which shall not be forgotten.

The profaneness of the people, with that of the priests and prophets, is here reproved in a particular instance, which may seem of small moment in comparison of their greater crimes; but profaneness in common discourse, and the debauching of the language of a nation, being a notorious evidence of the prevalency of wickedness in it, we are not to think it strange that this matter was so largely and warmly inquired into in verse 36.

1. The sin here charged upon them is, bantering God's prophets, and the dialect they used, and jesting with sacred things. They asked, What is the burden of the Lord? v. 33. and v. 34. They say, The burden of the Lord, v. 38. This was the word that gave great offence to God, that, whenever they spoke of the word of the Lord, they called it, in scorn and derision, the burden of the Lord. Note, They were charged with their word being so much used, and used it seriously, to show what a weight the word of God was upon their spirits, of what importance it was, and how pressingly it should come upon those that heard it. The words of the false prophets had nothing ponderous in them, but God's words had; those were as chaff, these as wheat. Now the profane scoffers took this word, and made a jest of it, and mocked with it, that so, when the prophets used it, they might not make people serious with it. Note, It has been the artifice of Satan, in all ages, to obstruct the efficacy of sacred things by turning them into matter of sport and ridicule; the mocking of God's messengers was the baflling of his messages. (2.) Perhaps this word was caught at and reproached by the scoffers as an improper word, new-coined by the prophets, and not used in any other sense than by this author. It was only in this and the last age, that the word of the Lord was called the burden of the Lord, and it could not be found in their lexicons to have that signification. But if men take a liberty, as we see they do, to form new phrases which they think more expressive and significant in other parts of learning, why not in divinity? But especially we must observe it as a rule, that the Spirit of God is not tied to our rules of speaking. (3.) Some think that, because, when the word of the Lord is called a burden, it signifies some word of reproof and threatening, which would lay a load upon the hearers, (yet I know not whether that observation will always hold,) that in using this word, the burden of the Lord, in a candid way, they reflected upon God as always bearing hard upon them, always tormenting them, by using the word of God a perpetual unmeaning to them. They make the word of God a burden to themselves, and then quarrel with the ministers for making it a burden to them. Thus the scoffers of the latter days, while they slight heaven and salvation, reproach faithful ministers for preaching hell and damnation. Upon the whole, we may observe, That how light soever men may make of it, the great God takes notice of, and is much displeased with, those who burlesque sacred things, and who, that they may make a jest of scripture-truths and laws, put jests upon scripture-language. In such wit as this I am sure there is no wisdom, and so it will appear at last. Be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong. Those that were here guilty of this sin, were somewhat by God's word, who persecuted, and dealt the word of God from the true prophets, some of the priests, who perhaps came to seek occasions against them, on which to ground an information, and some of the people, who had learned of the profane priests and prophets to play with the things of God. The people would not have affronted the prophet and his God thus, if the priests and the prophets, those ringleaders of the people, had not shown them the way. False prophets, when they are reproved for this profane way of speaking, they are directed how to express them selves more decently. We do not find that the prophets are directed to make no more use of this word; we find it used long after this; (Zech. ix. 1. Mal. i. 1. Nah. i. 1. Hab. i. 1.) and we do not find it once used in this sense by Jeremiah either before or after. It is true indeed, that in many cases it is advisable to make no use of such words and things as some have made bad use of, and it may be prudence to avoid such phrases as, though innocent enough, are in danger of being perverted and made stumblingblocks. But here God will have the prophet keep to his rule; (ch. xv. 19.) Let them return unto thee, but return not thou unto them. Do not thou leave off using this word, but let them leave off abusing it; ye shall not mention the burden of the Lord any more in this place. Notice here, (1.) It is perverting the words of the living God, and making a bad use of them, which is an impious, dangerous thing; for consider, he is the Lord of hosts our God. Note, If we will but look upon God, as we ought to do, in his greatness and goodness, and be but duly sensible of our relation and obligation to him, it may be hoped that we shall not dare to affront the sacred word with a jest; it is a most impudent thing to use him that is the living God, the Lord of hosts and our God. How then must they express themselves? He tells them, (v. 37.) Thus shalt thou say to the prophet, when thou art inquiring of him, What hath the Lord answered thee? And what hath the Lord spoken? And they must say thus, when they inquire of their neighbors, v. 35. Note, We must always speak of the things of God reverently and seriously, and as becomes the oracles of God. It is a commendable practice to inquire after the mind of God, to inquire of our brethren what they have heard, to inquire of our prophets what they have to say from God; but then, to show that we do it for a right end, we must do it after a right manner. Ministers may learn here, when they reprove people for what they say, and do amiss, to teach them how to say and do better.

3. Because they would not leave off this bad way of speaking, though they were admonished of it, God threatens them here with utter ruin. They would still say, The burden of the Lord, though God had sent to them to forbid them, v. 38. What little regard have those to the divine authority, that will not be persuaded by it to leave an idle word! We shall see what will come of it. (1.) Those shall be severely reckoned with, that thus pervert the words of God, that put a wrong construction on them, and make a bad use of them; and it shall be made to appear that it is a great provocation to God, to mock his messengers; I will even punish that man and his house, whether he be prophet or priest, or one of the common people, it shall be visited upon him, v. 34. Perverting God's word, and ridiculing the preachers of it, are sins that bring ruining judgments upon families, and entail a curse upon a house. Another threatening we have, v. 36. Every man's word shall be his own burden; the guilt of this sin shall be so heavy upon him, as to sink him into the pit of destruction. God shall make their own tongue to fall upon themselves, v. 35. Perverting God's word, and ridiculing the preachers of it, are sins that bring ruining judgments upon families, and entail a curse upon a house. Another threatening we have, v. 36. Every man's word shall be his own burden; the guilt of this sin shall be so heavy upon him, as to sink him into the pit of destruction. God shall make their own tongue to fall upon themselves, and their lips shall be their betrayers, so that the burden of the Lord they shall have no heart to mention any more; it will be too heavy to make a jest of. They are as the madman that casts firebrands, arrows, and death, while they pretend to be in sport. (2.) The words of God, though thus perverted, shall be accomplished. Do they ask, What is the burden of the Lord? Let the prophet ask them, What burden do you mean? Is it this? I will even forsake you, v. 33. This is the burden that shall be laid and bound upon them, (v. 39, 40.) "Behold, I, even I, will utterly forget you, and I will forsake you, saith the Lord; and I will have no thoughts of returning to you. Those are miserable indeed, that are forsaken and forgotten of God; and men's bantering God's judgments will not baffle them. Jerusalem was the city God had taken to himself as a holy city, and then given to them and their fathers; but that shall now be forsaken and forgotten. God had taken them to be a people near to him, but they shall be a people of his horror. They had been great and honourable among the nations, but now God will bring upon them an everlasting reproach and a perpetual shame; both their sin and their punishment shall be their lasting disgrace. It is here upon record, to their infamy, and will remain so to the world's end. Note, God's word will be magnified and made honourable, when those that mock at it shall be viliified and made contemptible. They that despise me shall be lightly esteemed.

CHAP. XXII.

In the close of the foregoing chapter, we had a general description of the utter ruin of Jerusalem, that it should be forsaken and forgotten; which, whatever effect it had upon others, we have reason to think, made the prophet himself very melancholy. Now, in this chapter, God encourages him, by showing him that though the devastations of Jerusalem be universal, yet all were not equally involved in it, but God knew how to distinguish, how to separate, between the precious and the vile. Some were gone into captivity already with Jerusalem, and others over the mountains with Jeremiah; and God tells him that it should turn to their good; others yet remained hardened in their sins, against whom Jeremiah had a just indignation; but those, God tells him, should go into captivity, and it should prove to their hurt. To inform the prophet of this, and affect him with it; here is, 1. A vision of two baskets of figs, one very good, and the other very bad, v. 1-5. 2. The explanation of this vision, applying the good figs to the converts already gone into captivity, and the bad figs to those that should hereafter be sent into captivity for their hurt, v. 6-10.

1. THE Lord shewed me, and, behold, two baskets of figs were set before the temple of the Lord, after that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon had carried away captive Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, and the princes of Judah, with the carpenters and smiths, from Jerusalem, and had brought them to Babylon. 2. One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe; and the other basket had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten, they were so bad. 3. Then said the Lord unto me, What seest thou, Jeremiah? And I said, Figs; the good figs, very good; and the evil, very evil, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil. 4. Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 5. Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, Like these good figs, so will I acknowledge them that are carried away captive of Judah, whom I have sent out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans for their good. 6. For I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and I will bring them again to this land: and I will build them, and not pull them down; and I will plant them, and not pluck them up. 7. And I will give them a heart to know me, that I am the Lord; and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto me with their whole heart. 8. And as the evil figs, which cannot be eaten, they are so evil; surely thus saith the Lord, So will I give Zedekiah the king of Judah, and his princes, and the residue of Jerusalem, that remain in this land, and them that dwell in the land of Egypt; 9. And I will deliver them to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth for their hurt, to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse, in all places whither I shall drive them. 10. And I will send the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, among them, till they be consumed from off the land that I gave unto them and to their fathers.

This short chapter helps us to put a very comfortable construction upon a great many long ones, by showing us that the same providence which to some is a "savour of death unto death," may by the grace and blessing of God be made to others a "savour of life unto life;" and that though God's people were worse in some of the same calamity, yet that it is not the same to them that it is to others, but is designed for their good, and shall issue in their good; to them it is a correcting rod in the hand of a tender Father, while to others it is an avenging sword in the hand of a righteous Judge.

Observe, I. The date of this sermon. It was after, a little after, Jeconiah's captivity, v. 1. Jeconiah was himself a despised, broken reed, but with him were carried away some very valuable persons, Ezekiel for one; (ch. 1. 2.) many of the princes of Judah then went into captivity; Daniel and his fellows were carried off a little before; of the people only the carpenters and the smiths were forced away, either because the Chaldeans needed some ingenious men of those trades; (they had a great plenty of astrologers and stargazers, but a great scarcity of carpenters and smiths,) or because the Jews would severely feel the loss of them, and would, for want of them, be unable to fortify their cities, and furnish themselves with weapons of war. Now, it should seem, there were many good people carried away in that captivity, which the pious prophet laid much to heart, while there were those that triumphed in it, and insulted over those to whom it fell to go into captivity. Note, We must not conclude concerning the first and greatest sufferers, that they were the worst and greatest sinners; for perhaps it may appear quite otherwise, as it did here.

II. The vision by which this distinction of the captives was represented to the prophet's mind; He saw two baskets of figs set before the temple, where ready were the instruments of their destruction, and of God. Perhaps the priests, being remiss in their duty, were not ready to receive them, and dispose of them, according to the law, and therefore Jeremiah sees them standing before the temple. But that which was the significance of the vision, was, that the figs in one basket were extraordinarily good, those in the other basket extremely bad. The children of men are all as the fruits of the fig-tree, capable of being made serviceable to God and man; (Judg. ix. 11.) but some are as good figs, than which nothing is more pleasant, others as damaged, rotten figs, than which nothing is more nauseous. What creature viler than a wicked man, and what more valuable than a godly man? The good figs were like those that are first ripe, which are most acceptable, Jeremiah, xxxiv.

(Mic. vii. 1.) and most prized, when newly come into season. The bad figs are such as could not be eaten, they were so evil; they could not answer the end of their creation, were neither pleasant, nor good for food; and what then were they good for? If God has punished them for the evil of them, he will not suffer them to do any service, they are even like the bad figs, that cannot be eaten, that will not answer any good purpose; if the salt have lost its savour, it is therefore fit for nothing but the dunghill. Of the persons that are presented to the Lord at the door of his tabernacle, some are sincere, and they are very good; others dissemble with God, and they are very bad; such as the worst of men, hypocrites, the rest of sinners. Corruptio optimi est proxima—that which is best becomes, when corrupted, the worst.

11. The exposition and application of this vision. God intended by it to raise the dejected spirits of those that were gone into captivity, by assuring them of a happy return, and to humble and awaken the proud and secure spirits of those who continued yet in Jerusalem, by assuring them of a miserable captivity.

1. Here is the moral of the good figs, that were very good, the first ripe; these represented the pious captives, that seemed first ripe for ruin, for they went first into captivity, but should prove first ripe for mercy, and their captivity should help to ripen them; these are pleasing to God, as good figs are to us, and shall be carefully preserved for use. Now observe these, 1. Those that were already carried into captivity, were the good figs that God would own. This shows, [1.] That we cannot determine of God's love or hatred by all that is before us. When God's judgments are abroad, they are not always the worst that are first sent by them. [2.] That early sufferings sometimes prove for the best to us. The sooner the chile is corrected, the better effect the correction is likely to have: those that went first into captivity were as the son whom the father loves, and chastens betimes, chastens while there is hope, and it did well; but those that stood behind were like a child long left to himself, who, when afterward corrected, is stubborn, and made worse by it, Lam. iii. 27.

2. He engages them to make use of their captivity to be his doing; whoever were the instruments of it, he ordered and directed it; (v. 5.) I have sent them out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans. It is God that puts his gold into the furnace, to be tried; his hand is, in an especial manner, to be eyed in the afflictions of good people. The judge orders the malefactor into the hand of an executioner, but the father corrects the child with his own hand. (3.) Even this disgraceful, uncomfortable captivity, God intended for their benefit; and we are sure that his intentions are never frustrated; I have sent them into the land of the Chaldeans for their good. It seemed to be every way for their hurt, not only as it was the ruin of their estates, honours, and liberties, parted them from their relations and friends, and put them under the power of their oppressors, but as it sunk their spirits, discouraged their faith, deprived them of the benefit of God's oracles and ordinances, and exposed them to temptations; and yet it was designed for their good, and proved so, in the issue, as to many of them. Out of the eater came forth meat. By their afflictions they were convinced of sin, humbled under the load of men, led from their own, made conciliating, taught to pray, and turned from their iniquity, particularly they were cured of their inclination to idolatry; and thus it was good for them that they were afflicted, Ps. cxiv. 66, 71.

(4.) God promises them that he will own them in their captivity; though they seem abandoned, they shall be acknowledged; the scornful relations they left behind will scarcely own them, or their kindred to them, but God says, I will acknowledge them. Note, The Lord knows them that are his, and will own them in all conditions; nakedness and hardship shall be no bar to the honour that he will do them; (5.) God assures them of his protection in their trouble, and a glorious deliverance out of it in due time, v. 6. Being sent into captivity for their good, they shall not be lost there; but it shall be with them as it is with gold which the refiner puts into the furnace. [1.] He has his eye upon it while it is there, and it is a careful eye, to see that it sustain no damage, and that it shall fulfil all the purposes for which it is put into the furnace; [2.] He will be sure to take it out of the furnace again, as soon as the work designed upon it is done; I will bring them again to this land. They were sent abroad for improvement awhile, under a divine discipline; but they shall be fetched back, when they have gone through their trial there, to their Father's house. [3.] He will fashion his gold when he has refined it, will make it a vessel of honour fit for his use; so, when God has brought them back from their trial, he will build them, and make them a habitation for himself, will plant them, and make them a vineyard for himself. Their captivity was to be a preparatory to their future tokens, and make them fit for his building, to prune up the young trees, and make them fit for his planting.

(6.) He engages to prepare them for these temporal mercies which he designed for them, by bestowing spiritual mercies upon them, v. 7. It is this that will make their captivity be for their good; this shall be both the improvement of their affliction, and the qualification for deliverance. If we can endure all evils and sufferings for the sake of God, who has been so mercifully and richly sanctified to us, then we may be sure that they will end well. Now that which is promised, is, [1.] That they should be better acquainted with God; they shall learn more of God by his providences in Babylon than they had learned by all his oracles and ordinances in Jerusalem; thanks to divine grace, for if that had not wrought mightily upon them in Babylon, they would for ever have forgotten it. It is not promised, I will give them, not so much a head to know me, as a heart to know me, for the right knowledge of God consists not in notion and speculation, but in the convictions of the practical judgment directing and governing the will and affections. A good understanding have all they that do his commandments, Ps. cxvi. 10. Where God gives a sincere desire and inclination to know him, he will give that knowledge. It is God himself that gives a heart to know him, else we should perish for ever in our ignorance. [2.] That they should be entirely converted to God; to his will as their rule, his service as their business, and his glory as their end; They shall return to me with their whole heart. God himself undertakes for them that they shall; and if he turn us, we shall be turned, and our hearts shall come like the hounds for those that have a heart to know God aright, will not only turn to him, but turn with their whole heart; for those that are either obstinate in their rebellion, or hypocritical in their religion, may truly be said to be ignorant of God. [3.] That thus they should be again taken into covenant with God, as much to their comfort as an infidel, and not will be their God. God will own them, as formerly, for his people, in the discoveries of himself to them, in his acceptance of their services, and in his gracious appearances on their behalf, and they shall have liberty to own him for their God, in their prayers to him, and their expectations from him. Note, These that have back-hidden from God, if they do in sincerity return to him, are admitted as freely as any to all the privileges and comforts of the everlasting covenant, which is herein well ordered, that every transgression in the covenant does not throw us out of covenant, and that afflictions are not only consistent with, but flowing from covenant-law. 1. "The word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the people of Judah, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, that was the first year of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; 2. The which Jeremiah the prophet spake unto all the people of Judah, and to all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying, 3. From the thirteenth year of Josiah the son of Amon king of Judah, even unto this day, (that is the three and twentieth year,) the word of the Lord hath come unto me, and I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking;

yet ye have not hearkened. 4. And the Lord hath sent unto you all his servants the prophets, rising early and sending them;

but ye have not hearkened, nor inclined your ear to hear. 5. They said, Turn ye again now every one from his evil way, and from the evil of your doings, and dwell in the land that the Lord hath given unto you and to your fathers for ever and ever. 6.

And go not after other gods to serve them, and to worship them, and provoke me not to anger with the works of your hands; and I will do you no hurt. 7. Yet ye have not hearkened unto me, saith the Lord; that ye might provoke me to anger with the works of your hands to your own hurt.

We have here a message from God concerning all the people of Judah, (v. 1.) which Jeremiah delivered, in his name, unto all the people of Judah, v. 2. Note, That which is of universal concern, got to be of universal cognizance. It is fit that the word which concerns all the people, as the word of God does, the word of the gospel particularly, should be divulged to all in general, and as far as may be, addressed to each in particular. Jeremiah had been sent to the house of the king, ch. xxii. 1.) and he took courage to deliver his mesgage there; here he is sent to all the people, and he takes the pains to deliver his message to them, probably when they were all come up to Jerusalem, to worship at some of the solemn feasts; then he had them together, and it was to be hoped then, if ever, they would be well disposed to hear counsel and receive instruction.

This prophecy is dated in the 4th year of Jehoi-akim, and the 1st of Nebuchadrezzar. It was in the latter end of Jehoiakim's 3d year, that Nebuchadrezzar began to reign himself alone, (having reigned some time before in conjunction with his father,) as appears, Dan. 1. 1. but Jehoiakim's 4th year was began before Nebuchadrezzar's 1st was completed.

Now that that active, daring, martial prince began to set up for the world's master, God, by his prophet, gives notice that he is his servant, and intimates what work he intends to employ him in, that his growing greatness, which was so formidable to the nations, might not be construed as any reflection

upon the power and providence of God in the co-

8. . 11. To which is annexed a promise of their deliverance out of their Jeremiah, XXV.

Jeremiah, do pass, God will reform the well. That will turn you out of it, and that shall not if you turn from it." The judgments they feared should be prevented; Provoke me not, and I will do you no hurt. Note, We should never receive from God the evil of punishment if we did not provoke him by the evil of sin. God deals fairly with us, never corrects his children without cause, nor causes grief to us unless we give offence to him.

4. Yet all was to no purpose. They were not wrought upon to take the right and only method to turn away the wrath of God. Jeremiah was a lively, affectionate preacher, yet they hearkened not to him. v. 3. The other prophets dealt faithfully with them, but neither did they hearken to them, nor incline their ear, v. 4. That very particular sin which they were told, of all others, was most offensive to God, and made them obnoxious to his justice, they wilfully persisted in; You provoke me with the works of your hands, to your own hurt. Note, What is a provocation to God will prove, in the end, hurt to ourselves, and we must bear the blame of it. O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself.

8. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, Because ye have not heard my words, 9. Behold, I will send and take all the families of the north, saith the Lord, and Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon my servant, and will bring them against this land, and against the inhabitants thereof, and against all these nations round about, and will utterly destroy them, and make them an astonishment, and a hiss, and perpetual desolations. 10. Moreover, I will take from them the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the sound of the millstones, and the light of the candle. 11. And thus whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment; and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years. 12. And it shall come to pass, when seventy years are accomplished, that I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations. 13. And I will bring upon that land all my words which I have pronounced against it, even all that is written in this book, which Jeremiah hath prophesied against all the nations. 14. For many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of them also: and I will recompense them according to their deeds, and according to the works of their own hands.

Here is the sentence grounded upon the foregoing charge. "Because ye have not heard my words, I must take another course with you," v. 8. Note, When men will not regard the judgments of God's mouth, they may expect to feel the judgments of his hands; to hear the rod, since they would not hear the word; for the sinner must either be parted from his sin, or perish in it. Wrath comes without remedy against those only that sin without repentance. It is not now upon them purposing evil, turning aside that ruins them as their not returning.

1. The ruin of the land of Judah by the king of Babylon's armies is here decreed, v. 9. God sent them his servants the prophets; and they were not heeded, and therefore God will send for his servant the king of Babylon, whom they cannot mock, and despise, and persecute, as they did his servants the prophets. Note, The messengers of God's wrath will be sent against those that would not receive the messengers of his mercy. One way or other, God will be heeded, and will make men know that he is the Lord. Nebuchadrezzar, though a stranger to the true God, the God of Israel, nay, an enemy to him, and afterward a rival with him, was yet, in the descent he made upon this country, God's servant, and he that was his servant shall be his servant. He was an instrument in his hand for the correction of his people. He was really serving God's designs when he thought he was serving his own ends. Justly therefore does God here call himself, The Lord of hosts, (v. 8.) for here is an instance of his sovereign dominion, not only over the inhabitants, but over the armies, of the earth, of which he makes himself master. He has them all in his command; the most potent and absolute monarchs are his servants. Nebuchadrezzar, who is an instrument of his wrath, is as truly his servant, as Cyrus is an instrument of his mercy. The land of Judah being to be made desolate, God here musters his army that is to do it, gathers it together, takes all the families of the north, if there be occasion for them, leads them on as their Commander in chief, brings them against this land, gives them success, not only against Judah and Jerusalem, but against all the nations round about, that there might be no dependence upon them as allies, or assistants against that threatening force. The utter destruction of this and all the neighbouring lands is here described. 2. It shall be total; The land shall be desolate, as by fire, and by sword, and by famine; but a desolation itself, both city and country shall be laid waste, and all the wealth of both be made a prey of; it shall be lasting, even perpetual desolations; they shall continue so long in ruins, and after long waiting there shall appear so little prospect of relief, that every one shall call it perpetual. This desolation shall be the ruin of their credit among the heathen; it shall be a most ruinous time. It is like the dust, shall make them an astonishment and an hissing; every one will be amazed at them, and hiss them off the stage of action with just disgrace, for deserting God who would have been their protection, for impostors who would certainly be their destruction. It will likewise be the ruin of all their comfort among themselves; it shall be a most ruinous period of their wars. If I will take them the voice of mirth, hang their harps on the willow trees, and put them out of tune for songs. I will take from them the voice of mirth; they shall neither have cause for it, nor hearts for it. They would not hear the voice of God's word, and therefore the voice of mirth shall no more be heard among them. They shall be deprived of food; the sound of the millstones shall not be heard, for when the enemy has seized their stores, the sound of the grinding must needs be low, Execli. xii. 4. An end shall be put to all business, there shall not be seen the light of a candle, and there shall be no work to be done worth candle-light. And, lastly, they shall be deprived of their liberty: Those nations shall serve the king of Babylon 70 years. The fixing of the time during which the captivity should last, would be of great use, not only for the confirmation of the prophecy, when the event (which in this particular could by no human sagacity be foreseen) should exactly answer the prediction, but for the comfort of the people of God in their case. It was an object of much prayer and hope, and an act of great faith. Daniel, who was himself a prophet, had an eye to it, Dan. ix. 2. Nay, God himself had an eye to it, (2 Chron. xxxvi. 22.) for therefor he stirred up the spirit of Cyrus, that the word spoken by the mouth of Jeremiah might be accomplished. Known unto God are all his works, from the beginning of the world; which appears by this, that, when he has thought fit, some of them have been made known to his servants the prophets, and by them to his church.

2. The ruin of Babylon, at last, is here likewise foretold, as it had been, long before, by Isaiah, v. 12.—14. The destroyers must themselves be destroyed, and the rod thrown into the fire, when the correcting-work is done with it. This shall be done when 70 years are accomplished, and the land of Babylon must make way for the deliverance of the captives. It is a great doubt when these 70 years commence; some date them from the captivity in the 4th year of Jehoiakim, and 1st of Nebuchadrezzar; others from the captivity of Jehoiachin eight years after. I rather incline to the former, because then these nations began to serve the king of Babylon, and because usually God has taken the earliest time from which to reckon the accomplishment of a promise of mercy, as will appear in computing the 400 years' servitude in Egypt. And if so, 18 or 19 years of the 70 were run out before Jerusalem and the temple were quite destroyed in the 11th year of Zedekiah. However that be, when the time, the set time, to favour Zion is come, the king of Babylon must be visited, and all the instances of his tyranny reckoned for; that nation shall be punished for their iniquity, as the other nations have been punished for theirs. That land must then be a perpetual desolation, such as they had made other lands; for the Judge of all the earth will do right, and avenge wrong, as King of nations, and King of saints. Let proud conquerors and oppressors be thundered in the dust, and their power and success, for it will come at last to their own turn to suffer; their day will come to fall. In this destruction of Babylon, which was to be brought about by the Medes and Persians, reference shall be had, (1.) To what God had said; I will bring upon that land all my words; for all the wealth and honour of Babylon shall be sacrificed to the truth of the divinity of Jesus Christ, and his kingdom; rather than one iota or tithe of God's word shall fall to the ground. The same Jeremiah that prophesied the destruction of other nations by the Chaldeans, foretold also the destruction of the Chaldeans themselves; and this must be brought upon them, v. 13. It is with reference to this very event, that God says, I will confirm the word of my servant, and perform the same; they are not no more, they are the same; I will confirm the word of my servant, and still perform the same. (2.) To what they had done; (v. 14.) I will recompense them according to their deeds, by which they transgressed the law of God, even then when they were made to serve his purposes. They had made many nations to serve them, and trampled upon them with the greatest insolence imaginable; but now that the measure of their iniquity is full, many nations and great kings, that are in alliance with, and come in to the assistance of, Cyrus king of Persia, shall serve themselves of them also, shall make themselves masters of their country, enrich themselves with their spoils, and make them the footstool by which to mount the throne of universal monarchy. They shall make use of them for servants and soldiers. He that leads into captivity, shall go into captivity.

15. For thus saith the Lord God of Israel unto me, Take the wine-cup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the nations to whom I send thee, to drink it. And they shall drink, and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them. 17. Then took I the cup at the Lord's hand, and made all the nations to drink, unto whom the Lord had sent me: 18. To wit, Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, and the kings thereof, and the princes thereof, to make them a desolation, an astonishment, a hissing, and a curse; (as it is this day;) 19. Pharaoh king of Egypt, and his servants, and his princes, and all his people; 20. And all the mingled people, and all the kings of the land of Uz, and all the kings of the land of the Philistines, and Ashkelon, and Azzah, and Ekron, and the remnant of Ashdod. 21. Edom, and Moab, and the children of Ammon, 22. And all the kings of Tyrus, and all the kings of Zidon, and the kings of the isles which are beyond the sea, 23. Dedan, and Tema, and Buz, and all that are in the utmost corners, 24. And all the kings of Arabia, and all the kings of the mingled people that dwell in the desert, 25. And all the kings of Zimri, and all the kings of Elam, and all the kings of the Medes, 26. And all the kings of the north, far and near, one with another, and all the kingdoms of the world, which are upon the face of the earth: and the king of Sheshach shall drink after them. 27. Therefore thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, because of the sword which I will send among you. 28. And it shall be, if they refuse to take the cup at thy hand to drink, then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Ye shall certainly drink. 29. For, lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished: for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, saith the Lord of hosts.

Under the similitude of a cup going round, which all the company must drink of, is here represented the universal desolation that was now coming upon that part of the world, which Nebuchadrezzar, who just now began to reign and act, was to be the instrument of, and which should at length recoil upon his own country. The cup in the vision is to be a sword in the accomplishment of it: so it is explained, v. 16. It is the sword that I will send among them, the sword of war, that should be irresistibly strong and implacably cruel. Observe, 1. Whence this destroying sword should come; from the hand of God, it is the sword of the Lord, (ch. xlvii. 6.) bathed in heaven, Isa. xxxiv. 5. Wicked men are made use of as his sword, Ps. xvi. 15. It is the wine-cup of his fury. It is the just anger of God that sends this judgment; the nations had provoked God by their sins, and they must fall under the tokens of his wrath. They are condemned to some intoxicating liquor, which they shall be forced to drink of, as formerly condemned malefactors were sometimes executed by being compelled to drink poison. The wicked are said to drink the wrath of the Almighty, Job xxxi. 20. Rev. xiv. 10. Their share of troubles in this world is represented by the dregs of a cup of red wine full of mixture, Ps. lxxxv. 8. Sec Ps. xi. 6. The wrath of God in this world is but as a cup, in comparison of the full streams of it in the other world. 2. By whose hand it should be sent them; by the hand of Jeremiah, as the judge set over the nations, (ch. i. 10.) to pass this sentence upon them; and by the hand of Nebuchadrezzar, as the executioner. What a much greater figure then does the poor prophet make that he should send this cup as the servant of God! As we look upon their relation to God, though in the eye of the world it was the reverse of it! Jeremiah must take the cup at God's hand, and compel the nations to drink it. He foretells no hurt to them, but what God appoints him to fortell; and what is foretold by a divine authority, will certainly be fulfilled by a divine power. 3. On whom it should be sent; on all the nations within the verge of Israel's acquaintance, and the lines of their communication. Jeremiah took the cup, and made all nations to drink of it, that is, he prophesied concerning each of the nations here mentioned, that they should share in this great desolation that was coming. Jerusalem and the cities of Judah are put first; (v. 18.) for judgment begins at the house of God, (1 Pet. iv. 17.) at the sanctuary. Edom and Moab (v. 19.) Nebuchadrezzar had his eye principally upon Jerusalem and Judah in this expedition or no, does not appear; probably he had; for it was as considerable as any of the nations here mentioned; however, God had his eye principally to them. And this part of the prophecy was already begun to be accomplished; this is denoted by that melancholy parenthesis, (as it is this day,) for in the 4th year of Jehoiakim things were come into a very bad posture, and all the foundations were cut out of course. Pharaoh, king of Egypt, comes next, because the Jews trusted to that broken reed; (v. 19.) the remains of them fled to Egypt, and then Jeremiah particularly foretold the destruction of that country, ch. xxxii. 10, 11. All the other nations that bordered upon Canaan, must pledge Jerusalem in this bitter cup, this cup of trembling. The mingled people, the Arvadians, so some; some rulers of divers nations that lived by rapine, so others; the kings of the land of Uz, joined to the country of the Edomites. The Philistines had been vexations to Israel, but now their cities and their lords became a prey to this mighty conqueror. Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre, and Zidon, are places well known to border upon Israel; the Isles beyond, a beside, the sea, is supposed to be the same stretch of Phoenicia and Syria, that lay upon the coast of the Mediterranean sea. Dedan, and the other countries mentioned, (v. 23, 24.) seem to have lain upon the confines of Iduma and Arabia the desert. Those of Elam are the Persians, with whom the Medes are joined, now looked upon as inconsiderable, and yet afterward able to make reprises upon Babylon for themselves and all their neighbours. The kings of the north, that lay nearer to Babylon, and others that lay up at some distance, will be sure to be seized on, and made a prey of, by the victorious sword of Nebuchadrezzar. Nay, he shall push on his victories with such incredible fury and success, that all the others, and the judicious and prudent of the then known, should become sacrifices to his ambition. Thus Alexander is said to have conquered the world, and the Roman empire is called the world, Luke ii. 1. Or it may be taken as reading the doom of all the kingdoms of the earth; one time or other they shall feel the dreadful effects of war. The world has been, and will be, a great cock-pit, while nations have been in the same inconstancy, which makes the prophet foretell it, (Jer. xi. 1.) that the conquerors may see their fate with the conquered, it concludes, The king of Sheshach shall drink after them, that is, the king of Babylon himself, who has given his neighbours all this trouble and vexation, shall, at length have it return upon his own head. That by Sheshach is meant Babylon, is plain, from ch. li. 41. but whether it was the proper name of the city, or the name of another city of the same kingdom, is uncertain. Babylon's ruin was foretold, v. 12, 13. Upon this prophecy of its being the author of the ruin of so many nations, it was very fitly repeated here again. 4. What should be the effect of it. The desolations which the sword should make in all these kingdoms, are represented by the consequences of every drink, which will make them mad, be drunken, and fall. They shall be drunken and smitten, and fall and rise no more, v. 27. Now this may serve, (1.) To make us loathe the sin of drunkenness, that the consequences of it are made use of to set forth a most woful and miserable condition. Drunkenness deprives men, for the present, of the use of their reason, makes them mad. It takes from them (Gen. xx. 16.) their wherewithal, and to that reason, is the most valuable blessing, and that is health; it makes them sick, and endangers the bones and the life. Men in drink often fall, and rise no more; it is a sin that is its own punishment. How wretchedly are they intoxicated and besotted, that suffer themselves at any time to be intoxicated, especially to be, by the frequent commission of this sin, besotted with wine or strong drinKs, v. 28. (2.) To make us guard against the habits of wine. When God sends the sword upon a nation, with warrant to make it desolate, it soon becomes like a drunken man, filled with confusion at the alarms of war, put into a hurry; its counsellors mad, and at their wit's end, staggering in all the measures they take, all the motions they make; sick at heart with continual vexation; vomiting up the riches they have greedily swallowed down; (Job xx. 15.) falling down before the enemy, and as unable to get up again, or do any thing to help themselves, as a man dead drunk is, Hab. ii. 16. 5. The undoubted certainty of it, with the reason given for it, v. 28, 29. They will refuse to take the cup at thy hand; not only they will be loath that the judgment should come, but they will be loath to behold the scenes of it, as Job is in (Job xxv. 15.) falling down before the enemy, and as unable to get up again, or do any thing to help themselves, as a man dead drunk is; called by my name; its relation to me will not exempt it from punishment, and should ye be utterly unpunished? No, If this be done in the green tree, what will be done in the dry? If they who have some good in them, smart so severely for the evil that is found in them, can they expect to escape, who have worse evils, and no good, found among them? If Jerusalem be punished for learning idolatry of the nations, shall not the nations be punished of whom they learned it? No doubt they shall: I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, for they have helped to debauch the inhabitants of Jerusalem. Upon this whole matter we may observe, (1.) That there is a God that judges in the earth, to whom all the nations of the earth are accountable, and by whose judgment they must abide. (2.) That God can easily bring to ruin the greatest nations, the most numerous and powerful, and such as have been most secure. (3.) That those who have been vexatious and mischievous to the people of God, will be reckoned with for it at last. Many of these nations had in their turns given disturbance to Israel, but now comes destruction on them. The year of the Redeemer will come, even the year of consolations for the controversy of Zion. (4.) That the burden of the word of the Lord will at last be accomplished the promises which God has foretold and prophesied long since against most of these nations, (ch. xiii. &c.) and now at length all his prophecies will have their complete fulfilling. (5.) That those who are ambitious of power and dominion, commonly become the troublers of the earth and the plagues of their generation; Nebuchadrezzar was so proud of his might, that he had no sense of right. These are the men that turned the world upside down, and yet expect to be admired and adored. Alexander thought himself a great prince, when others thought him no better than a great pirate. (6.) That the greatest pomp and power of this world are of very uncertain continuance. Before Nebuchadrezzar's greater force kings themselves must yield, and become captives.
of the shepherds, and a howling of the principal of the flock, shall be heard: for the Lord hath spoiled their pasture. 37. And the peaceable habitations are cut down, because of the fierce anger of the Lord. 38. He hath forsaken his covert, as the lion: for their land is desolate, because of the fierceness of the oppressor, and because of his fierce anger.

We have in these verses, a further description of those terrible desolations which the king of Babylon with his armies should make in all the countries and nations that he should conquer. Then, we have a remembrance, that even the temple of God had erected his temple; there were his oracles and ordinances which the neighbouring nations should have attended to, and might have received benefit by; thither they should have applied themselves for the knowledge of God and their duty, and then they might have had reason to bless God for their neighbourhood to Jerusalem; but they, instead of all, took the ill counsel of either to make war on to disturb that holy city, when God came to reckon with Jerusalem, (because it learned so much of the way of the nations;) he reckoned with the nations because they learned so little of the way of Jerusalem.

They will soon be aware of Nebuchadnezzar's making war upon them; but the prophet is here bidden to tell them that it is God himself that makes war upon them, a God with whom there is no contending.

1. The war is here proclaimed; (v. 30.) The Lord shall roar from on high; not from mount Zion and Jerusalem, (as Joel iii. 16. Amos i. 2.) but from heaven, from his holy habitation there; for now Jerusalem is one of the places against which he roars; he shall mightily roar upon his habitation on earth from that above. He has been long silent, and seemed not to take notice of the wickedness of the nations; the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now he shall give a shout, as the assailants in battle do, against all the inhabitants of the earth, to whom it shall be a shout of terror, and yet a shout of joy in heaven, as theirs that tread the grapes; for when God is reckoning with the proud enemies of his kingdom among men, there is a great voice of mighty people heard in heaven, saying, Hallelujah. Rev. xix. 1. He roars as a lion, (Amos iii. 4, 8.) as a lion that has forsaken its covert, (v. 38.) and is going abroad to seek his prey, upon which he roars, that he may the more easily seize it.

2. The manifesto is here published, showing the causes and reasons why God proclaims this war; (v. 31.) The Lord has a controversy with the nations; he has just cause to contend with them, and he will take the way of meeting with them. His quarrel with them is, in one word, for their wickedness, their contempt of him, and his authority over them, and kindness to them; He will give them that are wicked to the sword. They have provoked God to anger, and thence comes all this destruction; it is because of the fierce anger of the Lord, (v. 37.) and again (v. 38.) the fierceness of the oppressor; or, as we might better read, the fierceness of the oppressing sword (for the word is feminine) is because of his fierce anger; and we are sure that he is never angry without cause; but who knows the power of his anger?

3. The alarm is here given and taken; A noise will come even to the ends of the earth, so loud shall it roar, so far shall it reach, v. 31. The alarm is not given by sound of trumpet, or beat of drum, but by a whirlwind, a great whirlwind, storm or tempest, which shall be raised up from the coasts, the remote coasts of the earth, v. 32. The Chaldean army shall be like a hurricane raised in the north, but thence carried on with incredible fierceness and swiftness, bearing down all before it. It is like the whirlwind out of which God answered Job, which was exceeding terrible, Job xxxvii. 1.—xxxviii. 1. And when the wrath of God thus roars like a lion from heaven, no marvel if it overreaches themselves from earth; for who can choose but tremble when God thus speaks in displeasure? See Hosea xi. 10. Now the shepherds shall howl and cry, the kings and princes, and great ones of the earth, the principal of the flock; they used to be the most courageous and secure, but now their hearts shall fail them, they shall swallow themselves in the ashes, v. 34. Seeing the whirlwind makes their head against the enemy, and seeing their country, which they have the charge of, and a concern for, inevitably ruined, they shall abandon themselves to sorrow. There shall be a voice of the cry of the shepherds, and a howling of the principal of the flock shall be heard, v. 36. Those are great calamities indeed, that strike such a terror upon the great and rich; this consternation; The Lord hath spoiled their pasture, against which he roars, and their flocks, and out of which they fed themselves; the spoiling of that makes them cry out thus. Perhaps, carrying on the metaphor of a lion roaring, it alludes to the great fright that shepherds are in when they hear a roaring lion coming toward their flocks, and find they have no way to flee (v. 35.) for their security, neither can the principal of the flock escape. The enemy will be so fierce, so furious, so sedulous, and the extent of their armies so vast, that it will be impossible to avoid falling into their hands. Note, As we cannot outface, so we cannot outrun, the judgments of God. This is that for which the shepherds howl and cry.

4. The progress of this war is here described; (v. 32.) Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation; as the cup geteth up so shall every nation have its share, and take its turn, because one does not take warning by the calamities of another to repent and reform. Nay, as if this were to be a little representation of the last and general judgment, it shall reach from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth, v. 33. The day of vengeance is in his heart, and now his hand shall find out all his enemies wherever they are, Ps. xxxi. 8. Note, When our nation's enemies are to be feared, we should be concerned for our own. When one nation is a seat of war, every neighbouring nation should hear, and fear, and make its peace with God.

5. The dismal consequences of this war are here foretold; The days of slaughter and dispersions are accomplished, they are fully come, (v. 34.) the time fixed in the divine counsel for the slaughter of some and the dispersion of the rest, which will make the nations completely desolate. Multitudes shall fall by the sword of the merciless Chaldeans, so that the slain of the Lord shall be every where found; they are slain by commission from him, and are sacrificed to his justice. The slain for sin are the slain of the Lord. To complete the misery of their slaughter, they shall not be lamented in particular, so general shall the matter of lamentation be, that there shall not be lamentation, for they shall have no friends left to do it, and the enemies shall not have so much humanity in them as to do it; and then they shall be as dung upon the earth, so vile and noisome: and it is well if, as dung manures the earth, and makes it fruitful, so these horrid spectacles, which lie as monuments of divine justice, might be a means to awaken the inhabitants of the earth to learn righteousness. The effect of this war would be the desolation of the whole land that is the seat of it, (v. 38.) one land after another. But here are two expression nor more, that seem to make the case in a particular manner piteous. (1.) Ye shall fall like a pleasant vessel, v. 34. The most desirable persons among them who most valued themselves, and were most valued, shall fall by the sword; who were locked upon as vessels of honour. Ye shall fall as a Venice glass or a China dish, which is soon broken all to pieces: even the tender and delicate shall share in the common calamity; the sword devours one as well as another. (2.) Even the peaceable habitations are cut down. Those that used to be quiet, and not molested, the habitations in which ye have long dwelt in peace, shall now be no longer such, but cut down by the war; or, Those who used to be quiet, and not molesting any of their neighbours, those who lived in peace, easily, and gave no provocation to any to do them harm, shall not escape. To prevent the direful effects of war, that these were most harmless and inefficient suffer hard things. Blessed be God, there is a peaceable habitation above for all the sons of peace, which is out of the reach of fire and sword.

CHAPTER XXVI.

As in the history of the Acts of the Apostles, that of their preaching and that of their suffering are considerable; so, in this place, it is in the account we have of the prophet Jeremiah; witness this chapter, where we are told, I. How faithfully he preached, v. 1. 6. II. How sullenly he was persecuted for so doing by the priests and the prophets, v. 7. 11. III. How bravely he stood to his doctrine, in the face of his persecutors, v. 12. 15. IV. How wonderfully he was protected and delivered by the prudence of the princes and elders, v. 16. 19. Thus Ezekiel, and another prophet, was about the same time put to death by Jehoiakim, (v. 20. 23.) yet Jeremiah met with those that sheltered him, v. 24.

1. IN the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim, the son of Josiah king of Judah, came this word from the Lord, saying, 2. Thus saith the Lord, Stand in the court of the Lord's house, and speak unto all the cities of Judah, which come to worship in the Lord's house, all the words that I command thee to speak unto them: diminish not a word: 3. So be they will hearken, and turn every man from his evil way, that I may repent me of the evil, which I purpose to do unto them because of the evil of their doings. 4. And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord, If ye will not hearken to me, to walk in my law which I have set before you, 5. To hearken to the words of my servants the prophets, whom I sent unto you, both rising up early, and sending them, but ye have not hearkened; 6. Then will I make this house like Shiloh, and will make this city a curse to all the nations of the earth.

We have here the sermon that Jeremiah preached, which gave such offence, that he was in danger of losing his life for it. It is here left upon record, as it were, by way of appeal to the judgment of impartial men in all ages, whether Jeremiah was worthy to die for delivering such a message as this from God, and whether his persecutors were not very wicked and unreasonable men.

2. God directed him where to preach this sermon, and when, and to what auditory, v. 2. Let not any presume Jeremiah as indiscreet in the choice of place and time, nor say that he might have delivered his message more privately, in a corner, among his friends that he could confide in, and that he desired to smart for not acting more cautiously; for God gave him orders to preach in the court of the Lord's house, which was within the peculiar jurisdiction of his sworn enemies the priests, and who would therefore take themselves to be in a particular manner afronted. He must preach this, as it would seem, at the time of one of the most solemn festivals, where persons came from all the cities of Judah to worship in the Lord's house. These worshippers, we may suppose, had a great veneration for their priests, would credit the character they gave of men, and be exasperated against those whom they defamed, and would, consequently, side with them and strengthen their hands against Jeremiah; but none of these things must move him to desist. God commanded him to preach this sermon, which, if it were anything alarming, would be very provoking. And because the prophet might be in some temptation to palliate the matter, and make it better to his hearers than God had made it to him, to exchange an offensive expression for one more plausible, therefore God charges him particularly not to diminish a word, but to speak the thing as he found it, and these were words, that he had commanded him. Note, God's message must be delivered to his people with all truth, and keep close to their instructions, and not in the least vary from them, either to please men, or to save themselves from harm. They must neither add nor diminish, Deut. iv. 2.

2. God directed him what to preach, and it is that which could not give offence to any but such as were resolved to go on still in their trespasses.

1. He must assure them that if they would repent of their sins, and turn from them, though they were in imminent danger of ruin, and desolating judgments were just at the door, yet a stop should be put to them, and God would proceed no further in his controversy with them; (v. 3.) this was the main thing God intended in sending him to them, to try if they would return from their sins, that so God might turn from his anger, and turn away the judgments that threatened them; which he was not only willing, but very desirous to do, as soon as he could do it without prejudice to the honour of his justice and holiness. See how God waits to be gracious, waits till we are duly qualified, till we are fit for him to be gracious to, and in the mean time tries a variety of methods to bring us to be so.

2. He must assure them that if they continued obstinate to all the calls God gave them, and would persist in their disobedience, it would certainly end in the ruin of their city and temple, v. 4. 6. (1.) That which God required of them, was, that they should be observant of what he had said to them, both by the written word and by his ministers; and that they should walk in all his words, which he set before them, the law of Moses, the ordinances and commandments of it; and that they should hearken to the words of his servants the prophets, who pressed nothing upon them but what was agreeable to the law of Moses, which was set before them as a touchstone to try the spirits by; and by this they were distinguished from the false prophets, and by it the law, instead of drawing them to it. The law was written that God might set it before them. The prophets were his own servants, and were immediately sent by him to them, and sent with a great deal of care and concern, rising early to send them, lest they should come too late, when their prejudices had got possession, and were become invincible. They had hitherto been dealt better to the law and to the prophets; Ye have not hearkened; all he expects now, is, that at length they should heed what he said, and make his word their rule. A reasonable demand! (2.) That which is threatened in case of refusal, is, that this city, and the temple in it, shall fare as their predecessors did, Shiloh and the tabernacle there, for a like refusal to walk in God's law and hearken to his prophets, then when the present dispensation of prophecy just began in Samuel.
Now could a sentence be expressed more exceptionably? Is it not a rule of justice, Parium, par-sit ratio—Let those whose cases are the same, be dealt with alike? If Jerusalem be like Shiloh in respect of sin, why should it not be like Shiloh in respect of punishment? Can any other be expected?
This was not the first time he had given them warning to this effect; see ch. vii. 12—14. When the temple, which was the glory of Jerusalem, was destroyed, the city was thereby made a curse; for the temple was that which made it a blessing. If the salt lose that savour, it is thenceforth good for nothing. It shall be a curse, it shall be the pattern of a curse; if a man would curse any city, he would say, God make it like Jerusalem! Note, Those that will not be subject to the commands of God, make themselves subject to the curse of God.

7. So the priests, and the prophets, and all the people, heard Jeremiah speaking these words in the house of the Lord. 8.
Now it came to pass, when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking all that the Lord had commanded him to speak unto all the people, that the priests, and the prophets, and all the people, took him, saying, Thou shalt surely die. 9. Why hast thou prophesied in the name of the Lord, saying, This house shall be like Shiloh, and this city shall be desolate without an inhabitant? And all the people were gathered against Jeremiah in the house of the Lord. 10. When the princes of Judah heard these things, then they came up from the king's house unto the house of the Lord, and sat down in the entry of the new gate of the Lord's house.
11. Then spake the priests and the prophets unto the princes, and to all the people, saying, This man is worthy to die; for he hath prophesied against this city, as ye have heard with your ears. 12. Then spake Jeremiah unto all the princes, and to all the people, saying, The Lord sent me to prophesy against this house, and against this city, all the words that ye have heard. 13.
Therefore now amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of the Lord your God; and the Lord will repent him of the evil that he hath pronounced against you. 14. As for me, behold, I am in your hand; do with me as seemeth good and meet unto you: 15. But know ye for certain, that, if ye put me to death, ye shall surely bring innocent blood upon yourselves, and upon this city, and upon the inhabitants thereof: for of a truth the Lord hath sent me unto you, to speak all these words in your ears.

One would have hoped that such a sermon as that in the foregoing verses, so plain and practical, so rational and pathetic, and delivered in God's name, should have wrought upon even this people, especially meeting them now at their devotions, and should have prevailed with them to repent and reform; but instead of awakening their convictions, it did but exasperate their corruptions, as appears
by this account of the effect on the people.

1. Jeremiah is charged with it as a crime, that he had preached such a sermon, and is apprehended for it as a criminal. The priests and false prophets, and people, heard him speak these words, v. 7.
They had patience, it seems, to hear him out, did not disturb him when he was preaching, nor give him any interruption till he had made an end of speaking a great while. This is the account of the matter: so far they were fairer with him than some of the persecutors of God's ministers have been; they let him say all he had to say, and yet perhaps with a bad design, in hopes to have something worse yet to lay to his charge; but, having nothing worse, this shall suffice to ground an indictment upon; He hath said, This house shall be like Shiloh. See how unfair their charge is in representing his words. He had said, in God's name, If ye will not hearken to me, I will make this house like Shiloh; but they leave out God's hand in the desolation, (I will make it so,) and their own hand in it, in not hearkening to the voice of God, and charge it upon him, that he blasphemed this holy place; the crime charged both on our Lord Jesus and on Stephen. He said, This house shall be like Shiloh. Well might he complain, as David did, (Ps. lxi. 5,) Wilt thou destroy my words; and we must not think it strange if we,
and what we say and do, be thus misrepresented.
When the accusation was so weakly grounded, ne
marvel that the sentence passed upon it was unjust, Thou shalt surely die. What he had said agreed with what God had said when he took possession of the temple, (1 Kings ix. 6—9.) If you shall all turn from following after me, then this house shall be abandoned; and yet he is condemned to die for saying it. It is not out of any concern for the honour of the temple, that they appear thus warm, but because they are resolved not to part with their sins, in which they flatter themselves with a conceit that the temple of the Lord will protect them;
therefore, right or wrong, Thou shalt surely die.
This outcry of the priests and prophets, and all the people, were gathered together against Jeremiah, in a popular tumult, ready to pull him to pieces; were gathered about him; (so some read it;) they flocked together, some crying one thing, and some another. The people that were at first present, were hot against him, (v. 8,) but their clamours drew more together, only to see what the matter was.

II. He is brought before the highest court of judicature they had. Here, 1. The princes of Judah were his judges, v. 10. Those that filled the thrones of judgment, the thrones of the house of David, the elders of Israel, they, hearing of this tumult in the temple, came up from the king's house, where they usually sat near the court, to the house of the Lord, to inquire into this matter, and see what was the disturbance; they sat down in the entry of the new gate of the Lord's house,
and held a court, as it were, by a special commission of Oyer and Terminer. 2. The priests and prophets were his persecutors and accusers, and were violently set against him. They appealed to the princes and to all the people, to the court and the jury, whether this man be not worthy to die, v. 11.
The corrupt priests and counterfeit prophets have always been the most bitter enemies of the prophets of the Lord; they had ends of their own to serve, which they thought such preaching as this would be an obstruction to. When Jeremiah prophesied in the house of the king concerning the fall of the royal family, (ch. xxii. 1.) the court, though very corrupt, bore it patiently, and we do not find that they persecuted him for it: but when he comes into the house of the Lord, and touches the copyhold of the priests, and contradicts the lies and flatteries of the false prophets, then he is adjudged worthy of death. When God declares that the priests and the kings are perverted, and the priests bore rule by their means, Jer. v. 31. Observe, When Jeremiah is indicted before the princes, the stress of his accusation is laid upon what he said concerning the city, because they thought the princes would be most concerned about that. But concerning the words spoken, they appeal to the people, Ye have heard what he hath said, but it be given in evidence." 311. Jeremiah makes his defence before the princes and the people. He does not go about to deny the words, or to diminish aught from them; what he has said he will stand to, though it cost him his life; he owns that he had prophesied against this house, and this city. But 1. He asserts that he did this by good authority: not maliciously, not rashly, not out of any ill-will to his country, or any dissatisfaction to the government in church or state, but, The Lord sent me to prophesy thus; so he begins his apology, (v. 12.) and so he concludes it, for this is that he resolves to abide by as sufficient to bear him out; (v. 13.) Of a truth the Lord hath sent me unto you, to speak all these words. As long as ministers keep close to the instructions they have from heaven, they need not fear the opposition they may meet with from hell or earth. He pleads that he is but a messenger, and if he faithfully deliver his message, he must bear no blame; but he is a messenger from the Lord, to whom they were accountable as well as he, and therefore might demand regard. If he speak but what God appointed him to speak, he is under the divine protection, and whatever aught they offer to the ambassador, will be resented by the Prince that sent him. 2. He shows them that he did it with a good design, and that it was their fault if they did not make a good use of it. It was said, not by way of fatal sentence, but of fair warning; if they would take the warning, they might prevent the execution of the sentence, and take it all in a good sense. But he tells me of my danger, while I have an opportunity of avoiding it, and not rather return him thanks for it, as the greatest kindness he could do me? *I have indeed (says Jeremiah) prophesied against this city; but if you will now amend your ways and your doings, the threatened ruin shall be prevented, which was the thing I aimed at in giving you the warning." These are very unjust who complain of ministers for preaching hell and damnation, when it is only to keep them from that place of torment, and to bring them to heaven and salvation. 3. He therefore warns them of their danger, if they proceeded against him; (v. 14.) "As for me, the matter is not great what becomes of me; behold, I am in your hand; you know I am; I neither have anything to do with the things that I have said, nor is it so much my concern to save my own life; do with me as seems meet unto you; If I be led to the slaughter, it shall be as a lamb." Note, It becomes God's ministers, that are warm in preaching, to be calm in suffering, and to behave submissively to the powers that are over them, though they be persecuting powers. But for themselves, he tells them that he did not wish to put them to death; Ye shall surely bring innocent blood upon yourselves, v. 15. They might think that killing the prophet would help to defeat the prophecy, but they would prove wretchedly deceived, it would but add to their guilt, and aggravate their ruin. Their own consciences could not but tell them, that if Jeremiah was (as certainly he was) sent of God to bring them this message, it was at their utmost peril if they treated him for it as a 'malefactor. Those that persecute God's ministers, hurt not them so much as themselves. 16. Then said the princes and all the people unto the priests and to the prophets, This man is not worthy to die; for he hath spoken to us in the name of the Lord our God. 17. Then rose up certain of the elders of the land, and spake to all the assembly of the people, saying, 18. Micah the Morasthite prophesied in the days of Hezekiah king of Judah, and spake to all the people of Judah, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Zion shall be ploughed like a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of a forest. 19. Did Hezekiah king of Judah and all Judah put him at all to death? did he not fear the Lord, and besought the Lord, and the Lord prevented him of the evil which he had pronounced against them? Thus might we procure great evil against our souls. 20. And there was also a man that prophesied in the name of the Lord, Urijah the son of Shemaiah of Kirjath-jearim, who prophesied against this city, and against this land, according to all the words of Jeremiah: 21. And when Jehoiakim the king, with all his mighty men, and all the princes, heard his words, the king sought to put him to death; but when Urijah heard it, he was afraid, and fled, and went into Egypt; 22. And Jehoiakim the king sent men into Egypt; namely, Elhanan the son of Achbor, and certain men with him into Egypt: 23. And they fetched forth Urijah out of Egypt, and brought him unto Jehoiakim the king, who slew him with the sword, and cast his dead body into the graves of the common people. 24. Nevertheless, the hand of Alikam the son of Shaphan was with Jeremiah, that they should not give him into the hand of the people to put him to death. Here is, 1. The acquitting of Jeremiah from the charge exhibited against him. He had indeed spoken the words as they were laid in the indictment, but they are not looked upon to be seditious or treasonable, ill-intended, or of any bad tendency, and therefore the court and country agreed to find him not guilty. The priests and prophets, notwithstanding his rational plea for himself, continued to demand judgment against him; but the princes, and all the people, are clear in it, This man is not worthy to die; (v. 16.) for (say they) he hath spoken to us, not of himself, but in the name of the Lord our God. And are they willing to own that he did indeed speak to them in the name of the Lord, and that that Lord is their God? Why then did they not amend their ways and doings, and take the method he prescribed to prevent the ruin of their country? If they say, His prophecy is from heaven, it may just as well be asked, do they think that their case was different? Is it not possible, that those whose thoughts are shaped by the spirit of prophecy, are set up in opposition to the malice of others, do not submit to the power and influence of it themselves? 2. A precedent quoted to justify them in acquitting Jeremiah. Some of the elders of the land, either the princes before mentioned, or the more ancient men of the people, stood up, and put the assembly in mind of a former case, as is usual with us in giving judgment; for the wisdom of our predecessors is a direction to us. The case referred to is that of Micah. We have extant the book of his prophecy among the minor prophets. (1.) Was it thought strange that Jeremiah prophesied against this city and the temple? Micah did so before him, even in the reign of Hezekiah, that renowned reformer, v. 18. Micah said it as publicly as Jeremiah had now spoken to the same purport, Zion shall be cast down like a field, the building shall be all destroyed, so that nothing shall hinder but it may be ploughed; Jerusalem shall become heaps of ruins, and the mountain of the house on which the temple is built shall be as the high places of the forest, overrun with briers and thorns. That thought not to strike this, but wrote it, and left it on record; we find it, Mic. iii. 12. By this it appears that a man may be, as Micah was, a true prophet of the Lord, and yet may prophesy the destruction of Zion and Jerusalem. When we threaten secure sinners with the taking away of the Spirit of God and the kingdom of God from them, and declining churches with the removal of the candlestick, we do no more than justify ourselves against accusation, and shake not at the thoughts which we have warrant from the word of God to say. (2.) Was it thought fit by the princes to justify Jeremiah in what he had done? It was what Hezekiah did before them in a like case. Did Hezekiah, and the people of Judah, the representatives of the people, the commons in parliament, did they complain of Micah the prophet? Did they impeach him, or move an act to silence him, and put him to death? No; on the contrary, they took the warning he gave them. Hezekiah, that renowned prince, of blessed memory, set a good example before his successors, for he feared the Lord as Noah, who, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, was moved with fear. Micah's preaching drove him to his knees; he besought the Lord to turn away the judgment threatened, and to be reconciled to them; and he found it was not in vain to do so, for the Lord refuted him of the evil, and returned in mercy to them; he sent an angel, who routed the army of the Assyrians, that threatened to have ploughed Zion like a field, v. 19. Hezekiah got good by the preaching, and then you may be sure he would do no harm to the preacher. These elders conclude the same, and thus make a very pretty state, if they should gratify the importunity of the priests and prophets in putting Jeremiah to death; Thus might we procure great evil against our souls, for it would be adding sin to sin. Jehoiakim, the present king, had slain one prophet already, and then him that speaks like one of his predecessors. Hezekiah, who protected Micah, was protected; but did Jehoiakim prosper, who slew Urijah? No, they all saw the contrary. As good examples, and the good consequences of them, should encourage us in that which is good, so the examples of bad men, and the bad consequences of them, should deter us from that which is evil. But some good interpreters take this narrative from the historian that penned the book, Jeremiah had been harried and proscribed, who, to make Jeremiah's deliverance by means of the princes the more wonderful, takes notice of this that happened about the same time; for both were in the reign of Jehoiakim, and this in the beginning of his reign, v. 1. Observe, (1.) Urijah's prophecy; it was against this city, and this land, according to all the words of Jeremiah. The prophets of the Lord agreed in their testimony, and one would have thought that out of the mouth of so many witnesses the word should have been regarded. (2.) The prosecution of him for it, v. 21. Jehoiakim and his courtiers were exasperated against him, and sought to put him to death; in this wicked design the king himself was principally concerned. (3.) His abasing thereupon; When he heard that the king was determined to take away his life, he was afraid, and fled, and went into Egypt. This was certainly his fault, and an effect of the weakness of his faith, and it sped accordingly. He distrusted God, and his power to protect him and bear him out; he was too much under the power of that fear of man, which brings a snare. It looked as if he durst not stand to what he had said, or was ashamed of his Master. It was especially unbecoming him, a man who had been brought out of bondage to abandon the land of Israel, and to throw himself quite out of the way of being useful. Note, There are many that have much grace, but they have little courage; that are very honest, but withal very timorous. (4.) His execution notwithstanding. Jehoiakim's malice, one would have thought, might have contented itself with his banishment, and it might suffice to have driven him out of the country; but they are blood thirsty that hate the upright; (Prov. xxxix. 10.) It was the life, that precious life, that he hunted after, and nothing else would satisfy him. So inplacable is his revenge, that he sends a party of soldiers into Egypt, some hundreds of miles, and they bring him back by force of arms. It would not sufficiently gratify him to have him slain in Egypt, but he mustneeds his eyes with the bloody spectacle; they brought him to Jehoiakim, and he slew him with the sword, for aught I know, with his own hands. Yet neither did this satisfy his insatiable malice, but he loads the dead body of the good man with infamy, would not allow it the decent respects usually and justly paid to the remains of men in distinction, but cast it into the graves of the common people, and made no ado about his sepulchre; and thus was the shield of Saul vilely cast away, as though he had not been anointed with oil. Thus Jehoiakim hoped to ruin his reputation with the people, that no heed might be given to his predictions, and to deter others from prophesying in like manner; but in vain; Jeremiah says the same. There is no contending with the word of God. Herod though he had all the power and greatness of a king, could not consume the Baptist's head, but found himself deceived, when, soon after, he heard of Jesus Christ, and said, in a fright, This is John the Baptist. 4. Here is Jeremiah's deliverance. Though Urijah was lately put to death, and persecutors, when they have tasted the blood of saints, are apt to thirst after more, (as Herod, Acts xii. 2, 3.) yet God wonderfully preserved Jeremiah, though he did not flee, as Urijah did, but stood his ground. Ordinary ministers may use ordinary means, provided they be lawful ones, for their own preservation; but they that put on the ministry of the word must have the extraordinary protection. God raised up a friend for Jeremiah, whose hand was with him; he took him by the hand in a friendly way, encouraged him, assisted him, appeared for him. It was Ahikam the son of Shaphan, one that was a minister of state in Josiah's time; we read of him, 2 Kings xxii. 12. Some think Gedaliah was the son of this Ahikam. He was one of the nobility, and would have been a fit friend for princes, and he used it in favour of Jeremiah, to prevent the further designs of the priests and prophets against him, who would have had him turned over into the hand of the people; not those people (v. 16.) that had adjudged him innocent, but the rude and insolent mob, whom they could persuade by their cursed insinuations not only to cry, Crucify him, crucify him, but to stone him to death in a popular tumult; for perhaps Jehoiakim had been so reproached by his own conscience for sparing Urijah, that they despaired of making him the tool of their malice. Note, God can, when he pleases, raise up great men to patronise good men; and it is an encouragement to us to trust him in the way of duty, that he has all men's hearts in his hands.

CHAP. XXVII.

Jeremiah the prophet, since he cannot persuade people to submit to God's precept, and so to prevent the destruction of their country by the king of Babylon, is here persuading them to submit to God's providence, by yielding tamely to the king of Babylon, and becoming tributaries to him, which was the worst course they could now take, and would be a mitigation of the calamity, and prevent the laying of their country waste by fire and sword; the sacrificing of their liberties would be the saving of their lives. 1. He gives this counsel, in God's name, to the kings of the neighbouring nations, that they might make the best of bad, assuring them that there was no remedy, but they must serve the king of Babylon; and yet in time there should be relief, for his dominion should last but 70 years, v. 1.-11. He gives this counsel to Zedekiah king of Judah particularly, (v. 12., 13.) and to the priests and people, assuring them that the king of Babylon should still proceed against them, till things are very grievous to the last generation; and as a people in subjection there would be the only way to mitigate the calamity, and make it easy, v. 12.-22. Thus the prophet, if they would but have heartened to him, would have directed them in the paths of true policy as well as of true piety.

1. IN the beginning of the reign of Jehoia- kim the son of Josiah king of Judah, came this word unto Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 2. Thus saith the Lord to me, Make thee bonds and yokes, and put them upon thy neck. 3. And send them to the king of Edom, and to the king of Moab, and to the king of the Ammonites, and to the king of Tyrus, and to the king of Zidon, by the hand of the messengers which come to Jerusalem unto Zedekiah king of Judah; 4. And command them to say unto their masters, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Thus shall ye say unto your masters: 5. I have made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by my great power, and by my out-stretched arm, and have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me. 6. And now have I given all these lands into the hand of Ne- buchadnezzar the king of Babylon, my ser vant; and the beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him. 7. And all na tions shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the very time of his land come; and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him. 8. And it shall come to pass, that the nation and kingdom which will not serve the same Ne buchadnezzar the king of Babylon, and that will not put their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, that nation will I punish, saith the Lord, with the sword, and with the famine, and with the pestilence, until I have consumed them by his hand. 9. Therefore hearken not ye to your prophets, nor to your diviners, nor to your dreamers, nor to your enchanters, nor to your sorcerers, which speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babyl on: 10. For they prophesy a lie unto you, to remove you far from your land; and that I should drive you out, and ye should perish. 11. But the nations that bring their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him, those will I let remain still in their own land, saith the Lord; and they shall till it, and dwell therein.

Some difficulty occurs in the date of this prophecy. This word is said to come to Jeremiah in the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim, (v. 1.) and yet the messengers, to whom he is to deliver the badges of servitude, are said (v. 3.) to come to Zedekiah king of Judah, who reigned not till 11 years after the beginning of Jehoiakim's reign. Some make it an error of the copy, and that it should be read, (v. 1.) In the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah, for which some negligent scribe, having his eye fixed upon the title of the foregoing chapter, wrote Jehoiakim. And if one would admit a mistake any where, it should be here, for Zedekiah is mentioned again, (v. 12.) and the next prophecy is dated the same year, and said to be in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah, ch. xxviii. 1. Dr. Lightfoot solves it thus, In the beginning of Jehoiakim's reign, Jeremiah is to make these bonds and yokes, and to put them upon his own neck, in token of Judah's subjection to the king of Babylon, which began at that time; but he is to send them to the neighbouring kings afterward in the reign of Zedekiah, of whose succession to Jehoia- kim, and the ambassadors sent to him, mention is made by way of prediction.
II. He is to send this, with a sermon mentioned to it, to all the neighbouring princes; those a e mentioned 10. to lay next to the land of evenan.

Jerusalem was the place appointed for the sign, thither they all sent their plenipotentiaries; and it was agreed that they, should bind themselves in a league offensive and defensive, to stand by one another, in opposition to the Medes and Persians, to maintain the greatness of the king of Babylon, and to reduce his exorbitant power. They had great confidence in their strength thus united, and were ready to call themselves the High Allies; but when the envoys were returning to their respective masters, with the ratification of this treaty, Jeremiah gives each of them a yoke to carry to his master, to signify to him that he must either by consent or by compulsion become a servant to the king of Babylon, let him choose which he will. 11. In the sermon upon this sign, there are two things agreeable to the history.

1. God asserts his own indisputable right to dispose of kingdoms as he pleases, v. 5. He is the Creator of all things; he made the earth at first, established it, and it abides; it is still the same, though one generation passeth away, and another comes; he still by a continued creation, or renewing the seasons, doth give health and durability to it, by his great power and outstretched arm. His arm has infinite strength, though it be stretched out. Upon this account, he may give and convey a property and dominion to whomsoever he pleases. As he hath graciously given the earth to the children of men in general, (Ps. cxv. 16.) so he gives to each his share of it, be it more or less. Note, Whatever and how great the good things of this world, it is what God sees fit to confer upon us; we ourselves should therefore be content, though we have ever so little, and not envy any their share, though they have ever so much.

2. He publishes a grant of all these countries to Nebuchadnezzar. Know all men by these presents. Scient presentes et futuri—Let those of the present and those of the future age know. This is to certify all when it may concern, that I have given all these lands, with all the wealth of them, into the hands of the king of Babylon, even the beasts of the field, whether tame or wild, have I given to him, parks and pastures, they are all his own. Nebuchadnezzar was a proud, wicked man, an idoler; and yet God, in his providence, gives him this large dominion, these vast possessions. Note, The things that are the best things, for God often gives the largest share of them to bad men, that are rivals with him, and rebels against him. He was a wicked man, and yet what he had, he had by divine grant. Note, Dominion is not founded in grace. Those that have not any colourable title to eternal happiness, may yet have a justifiable title to their temporal good things. Nebuchadnezzar is a very bad man, and yet God calls him his servant, because he has regarded him as an instrument of his providence for the chastising of the nations, and particularly his own people; and for his service therein, he thus liberally repaid him. Those whom God makes use of, shall not lose by him; much more will he be found the bountiful Rewarder of all those that designedly and sincerely serve him. 12. He assures them that they should all be unavoidably brought under the dominion of the king of Babylon, for a time; (v. 7.) All nations, all these nations, and many others, shall serve him and his son, and his son's son. His son was Evil-merodach, and his son's Belshazzar, in whom his kingdom ceased; then the time of reckoning with his land came, when the tables were turned, and many nations and great kings, incorporated into the empire of the Medes and Persians, served themselves of him, as before, ch. xxv. 15. Thus Adonibezek was trampled upon himself, as he had trampled on other kings.

4. He threatens those with military execution, that stood out, and would not submit to the king of Babylon; (v. 8.) That nation that will not put their neck under his yoke, I will punish with sword and famine, with one judgment after another, till it is consumed. Note, God reigns unjustly and barbarously in invading the rights and liberties of his neighbours thus, and forcing them into a subjection to him; yet God had just and holy ends in permitting it, to punish these nations for their idolatry and gross immorality. They that would not serve the God that made them, were justly made to serve their enemies that sought to ruin them. 13. He shows them the vanity of all the hopes they fed themselves with, that they should preserve their liberties, v. 9, 10. These nations had their prophets too, that pretended to foretell future events by the stars, or by dreams, or enchantments; and they, to please their patrons, and because they would themselves have it so, flattered them with assurances that they should not serve the king of Babylon. Thus they designed to animate them to a vigorous resistance; and yet they had no ground for it, they hoped hereby to do them service. But he tells them that it would prove to their destruction; for by resisting thus they would provoke the conqueror to deal severely with them, to remove them, and drive them out into a miserable captivity, in which they should all be lost, and buried in oblivion. Particular prophecies against these nations that bordered on Israel severally, the ruin of which is here foretold in the general, we shall meet with, ch. xlvi. and Ezek. xxv. which had the same accomplishment with this here. Note, When God judges, he will overcome.

6. He puts them in a fair way to prevent their destruction, by a quiet and easy submission, v. 11. The nations that will be content to serve the king of Babylon, and pay him tribute for seventy years, (ten apprenticeships,) those will I let remain still in their own land. They that will bend shall not break. Perhaps the dominion of the king of Babylon may bear no harder upon them than that of their own kings had done. It is often more a point of honour than true wisdom, to prefer liberty before life. It is not mentioned to the disgrace of Issachar, that because he chose the trade of an olive, he was cut off; that he might peaceably enjoy it, he bowed his shoulder to bear, and became a servant to tribute, (Gen. lix. 14, 15.) as these here are advised to do; Serve the king of Babylon, and you shall till the land and dwell therein. Some would condemn this as the evidence of a mean spirit, but the prophet recommends it as that of a meek spirit, which yields to necessity, and by a quiet submission to the hardest terms of Providence, makes the best of bad; it is better to do so, than by struggling to make it worse.

Many might have prevented destroying providences, by humbling themselves under humbling providences. It is better to take up a lighter cross in our way than to pull a heavier on our own head.

12. I spoke also to Zedekiah king of Judah according to all these words, saying. Bring your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him and his people, and live 13 Why will ye die, thou and thy people, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, as the Lord hath spoken against the nation that will not serve the king of Babylon? 14. Therefore hearken not unto the words of the prophets that speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon: for they prophesy a lie unto you. 15. For I have not sent them, saith the Lord, yet they prophesy a lie in my name, that I might drive you out, and that ye might perish, ye, and the prophets that prophesy unto you. 16. Also I speak to the priests, and to all this people, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Hearken not to the words of your prophets that prophesy unto you, saying, Behold, the vessels of the Lord's house shall now shortly be brought again from Babylon: for they prophesy a lie unto you. 17. Hearken not unto them; serve the king of Babylon, and live: wherefore should this city be wasted? 18. But if they be prophets, and if the word of the Lord be with them, let them now make intercession to the Lord of hosts, that the vessels which are left in the house of the Lord, and in the house of the king of Judah, and at Jerusalem, go not to Babylon. 19. For thus saith the Lord of hosts concerning the pillars, and concerning the sea, and concerning the bases, and concerning the residue of the vessels that remain in this city, 20. Which Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took not, when he carried away captive Jeconiah, the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, from Jerusalem to Babylon, and all the nobles of Judah and Jerusalem; 21. Yea, thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, concerning the vessels that remain in the house of the Lord, and in the house of the king of Judah and of Jerusalem; 22. They shall be carried to Babylon, and there shall they be until the day that I visit them, saith the Lord: then will I bring them up, and restore them to this place.

What was said to all the nations, is here with a particular tenderness applied to the nation of the Jews, for whom Jeremiah was sensibly concerned. The case at present stood thus; Judah and Jerusalem had often contested with the king of Babylon, and still were worsted; many both of their valuable persons and their valuable goods were carried to Babylon already, and some of the vessels of the Lord's house particularly. Now, how this struggle would issue, was the question. They had those among them at Jerusalem, who pretended to be prophets, who bade them hold out, and they should, in a little time, be too hard for the king of Babylon, and recover all that they had lost. Now Jeremiah is sent to bid them yield and knock under, for that, instead of recovering what they had lost, they should otherwise lose all that remained; and to press them to this, is the scope of these verses.

I. Jeremiah humbly addresses the king of Judah, to persuade him to surrender to the king of Babyl lon; his act would be the people's, and would determine them, and therefore he speaks to him as to them all; (v. 12.) Bring your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and live. Is it their wisdom to submit to the heavy iron yoke of a cruel tyrant, that they may secure the lives of their bodies; and is it not much more our wisdom to submit to the mild and easy yoke of our righteous Lord and Master Jesus Christ, that we may secure the lives of our souls? Bring down your spirits to repentance and faith, and that is the way to bring up your spirits to heaven and glory. And with much more cogency and compassion may we expostulate with perishing souls than Jeremiah here expostulates with a perishing people, "Why will ye die by the sword and by famine, miserable dwellers? Wouldst thou bring thyself upon an uncertain and false pretence of avoiding miserable lives?" What God had spoken, is general, of all those that would not submit to the king of Babylon, he would have them to apply to themselves, and be afraid of. It were well if sinners would, in like manner, be afraid of the destruction threatened against all those that will not have Christ reign over them, and reason thus with themselves, "Why should we die the second death, which is a thousand times worse than that by sword and famine, when we might submit and live?"

II. He addresses himself likewise to the priests and the people, (v. 16.) to persuade them to serve the king of Babylon, that they might live, and might prevent the desolation of the city; (v. 17.) "Whether it be for the best that it be left as it will be, if you stand it out?" The priests had been Jeremiah's enemies, and had sought his life to destroy it, yet he approves himself their friend, and seeks their lives, to preserve and secure them; which is an example to us to render good for evil. When the bloodthirsty hate the upright, yet the just seek his soul, and the welfare of it, Prov. xxxix. 10. "Whether it be for the best that it be left as it will be, if you stand it out?" The priests had been Jeremiah's enemies, and had sought his life to destroy it, yet he approves himself their friend, and seeks their lives, to preserve and secure them; which is an example to us to render good for evil. When the bloodthirsty hate the upright, yet the just seek his soul, and the welfare of it, Prov. xxxix. 10.

Thus he proceeds: "Whether it be for the best that it be left as it will be, if you stand it out?" The priests had been Jeremiah's enemies, and had sought his life to destroy it, yet he approves himself their friend, and seeks their lives, to preserve and secure them; which is an example to us to render good for evil. When the bloodthirsty hate the upright, yet the just seek his soul, and the welfare of it, Prov. xxxix. 10.
lies, did, in the issue, but deceive themselves, the blind leaders and the blind followers fell together into the ditch; that ye might perish, ye, and the prophets that prophesy unto you; ye shall be so far from warranting your security, that they must themselves secure themselves. Note, They that encourage sinners to go on in their sinful ways, will in the end perish with them.

2. They prophesied that the vessels of the temple, which the king of Babylon had already carried away, should now shortly be brought back; (v. 16.) this they fed the priests with the hopes of, knowing how much they stood to lose by that, would be to them the gold of the temple better than the temple that sanctified the gold. These vessels were taken away when Jechoniah was carried captive into Babylon, v. 20. We have the story, and it is a melancholy one, 2 Kings xxiv. 13.-15. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10. All the golden vessels, that is, all the vessels of gold that were in the house of the Lord, with all the treasures, were taken as prey, and brought to Babylon. This was grievous to them above anything, for the temple was their pride and confidence, and the stripping of that was too plain an indication of that which the true prophet told them, that their God was departed from them. Their false prophets therefore had no other way to make them easy than by telling them that the king of Babylon should be forced to restore them in a little while. Now here, (1.) Jeremiah, I think, may be preserved the vessels that remained, by their prayers, rather than of bringing back those that were gone, by their prophecies; (v. 18.) If they be prophets, as they pretend, and if the word of the Lord be with them— if they have any intercourse with Heaven, and any interest there, let them improve it for the stopping of the progress of the judgment, let them step into the gap, and stand with their case before the living and the dead, between that which is carried away and that which remains, that the plague may be stayed; let them make intercession with the Lord of hosts, that the vessels which are left go not after the rest. [1.] Instead of prophesying, let them pray. Note, Prophecies must be praying men; by being much in prayer they must make it appear that they keep up a correspondence with Heaven. We must most trust that those prayers which we hear there, who do not frequently by prayer send thither. By praying for the safety and prosperity of the sanctuary they must make it appear that, as becomes prophets, they are of a public spirit; and by the success of their prayers it will appear that God favours them. [2.] Instead of being concerned for the retrieving of what they had lost, they must bestir themselves for the securing of what was left, and take it as a great favour if they can gain that point. When God's judgments are abroad, we must not seek great things, but be thankful for a little.

2. He assures them that even this point should not be gained, but the brazen vessels should go after the golden ones, v. 19.-22. Nebuchadnezzar had found so good a bountiful one, that he would be sure to come again, and take all he could find, not only in the house of the Lord, but in the king's house. They shall all be carried to Babylon in triumph, and there shall they be. But he concludes with a gracious promise, that the time should come when they should all be returned; Until the day that I visit them in mercy, according to appointment, and then I will bring those vessels up again, and restore them to this place, to their place. Surely they were under the protection of a special Providence, else they had been melted down, and put to some other use; but there was to be a second temple, for which they were to be reserved. We read particularly of the return of them, Ezra i. 8. Note, Though the return of the church's prosperity do not come in our time, shall the prophet be known that the Lord hath truly sent him.

This struggle between a true prophet and a false one, is said here to have happened in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah, and yet in the fourth year, before the siege began. This reign might well be called the beginning, or former part of it, because during those years he reigned under the dominion of the King of Babylon, and as a tributary to him; whereas the rest of his reign, which might well be called the latter part of it, in distinction from that former part, he reigned in rebellion against the king of Babylon. In this fourth year of his reign, he went in person to Babylon, (as we find, ch. li. 59,) and it is probable that this gave the people some doubts; for his negotiation in person would put a good end to the war, in which hope the false prophets encouraged them, this Hananiah particularly, who was of Gibee, a priest’s city, and therefore probably, himself a priest, as well as Jeremiah. Now here we have,

The prediction which Hananiah delivered publicly, solemnly, in the house of the Lord, and in the name of the Lord, in an august assembly, in the presence of the priests, and of all the people, who, probably, were expecting to have some message from heaven. In delivering this prophecy, he faced Jeremiah, he spake it to him, (v. 1;) designing to confront and contradict him, as much as to say, “Jeremiah, thou liest.” Now his prediction is, that the Lord, in two full years, the vessels of the temple should be brought back, and Jeconiah, and all the captives that were carried away with him, should return; whereas Jeremiah had foretold that the yoke of the king of Babylon should be bound on yet faster, and that the vessels and captives should not return for 70 years, v. 2. — 4. Now, upon the reading of this sham prophecy, and comparing it with the messages that God sent by the true prophets, we may observe what a vast difference there is between them. Here is nothing of the spirit and life, the majesty of style and sublimity of expression, that appear in the discourses of God’s prophets, nothing of that divine flame and spiritus. But that which is occasionally wanting here, is of no small value; he speaks with a great deal of confidence of his own future glory, prosperity, but here is not a word of good counsel given them to repent and reform, and return to God, to pray, and seek his face, that they might be prepared for the favours God had in reserve for them. He promises them temporal mercies, in God’s name, but makes no mention of those spiritual mercies which God always promised should go along with them, ch. xxiv. 10. I will give them a heart to know me. By all which it appears that, whatever he pretended, he had only the spirit of the world, not the spirit of God, (1 Cor. ii. 12;) that he aimed to please, not to profit.

II. Jeremiah’s reply to this pretended prophecy:

1. He heartily wishes it might prove true; such an affliction has he for his country, and so truly does he fear it, that he would be content to lie under the imputation of a false prophet, so that their ruin might be prevented. He said, Amen, the Lord do so, the Lord perform thy words, v. 5, 6. This was not the first time that Jeremiah had prayed for his people, though he had prophesied against them, and deprecated the judgments which he certainly knew and could not avoid. Christ prayed, Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me, when yet he knew it must not pass from him. Though, as a faithful prophet, he foresaw and foretold the destruction of Jerusalem, yet, as a faithful Israelite, he prayed earnestly for the preservation of it, in obedience to that command, Pray for the peace of Jerusalem. Though the will of God’s purpose is the rule of prophecy and patience, the will of his precept is the rule of prayer and practice. God himself, though he has determined, do not desire, the death of sinners, but would have all men to be saved, then it shall be known that it is impossible for people, ch. xxviii. 20. The false prophets thought it to ingratiate themselves with the people by promising them peace; now the prophet shows that he bore them as great a good-will as their prophets did, whom they were so fond of; and though he had no warrant from God to promise them peace, yet he earnestly desired it, and prayed for it. How strangely different is it, that some, who called themselves by the name of the Lord, and persecuted them, and persecuted him who did them the greatest wrong imaginably by betraying them, and they shall

2. He appeals to the event, to prove it false, v. 7. — 9. The false prophets reflected upon Jeremiah, as Ahab upon Micaiah, because he never prophesied false concerning them, but evils; now he pleads that this had been the case, as he had foretold the destruction of Babylon, which none of the other prophets had delivered, so that it ought not to be looked upon as a strange thing, or as rendering his mission doubtful, for prophets of old prophesied against many countries and great kingdoms, so bold were they in delivering the messages which God sent by them, and so far from fearing men, or seeking to please them, as Hananiah did; they made no difficulty, any more than Jeremiah did, of threatening war, famine, and pestilence, and what was spoken was regarded as coming from God; why then should Jeremiah be run down as a pestilent fellow, and a sower of sedition, who preached no otherwise than God’s prophets had always done before him? Other prophets had foretold destruction, and sometimes the destruction did not come, which yet did not disprove their divine mission, as in the case of Jonah, for God is gracious, and ready to turn away his wrath from those that turn away from their sins: but the prophet that prophesied of peace and prosperity, especially as Hananiah did, absolutely and unconditionally, without adding that necessary proviso, that they do not by wilful sin put a bar in their own door, and stop the current of God’s favours, will be proved a true prophet truly by the accomplishment of his prediction; if it come to pass, then it shall be known that the Lord has sent him, but if not, he will appear to be a cheat and an impostor.

10. Then Hananiah the prophet took the yoke from off the prophet Jeremiah’s neck, and brake it. 11. And Hananiah spake in the presence of all the people, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Even so will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon from the neck of all nations, within the space of two full years. And the prophet Jeremiah went his way. 12. Then the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah the prophet, (after that Hananiah the prophet had broken the yoke from off the neck of the prophet Jeremiah,) saying, 13. Go and tell Hananiah, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Thou hast broken the yokes of wood; but thou shalt make for them yokes of iron. 14. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, I have put a yoke of iron upon the neck of all these nations, that they may serve Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; and they shall serve him: and I have given him the beasts of the field also. 15. Then said the prophet Jeremiah unto Hananiah the prophet, Hear now, Hananiah, The Lord hath not sent thee; but thou makest this people to trust in a lie. 16. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will cast thee from off the face of the earth: this year thou shalt die, because thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord. 17. So Hananiah the prophet died the same year, in the seventh month.

We have here an instance, I. Of the insolence of the false prophet. To complete the affront he designed Jeremiah, he took the yoke from off his neck, which he carried as a memorial of what he had prophesied concerning the enslaving of the nations to Nebuchadnezzar, and he brake it, that he might give a sign of the accomplishment of his prophecy, as Jeremiah had given of his, and might seem to have conquered him, and to have defeated the intention of his prophecy. See how the lying spirit in the mouth of this false prophet mimics the language of the Spirit of truth; Thus saith the Lord, So will I break the yoke of the king of Babylon not only from the neck of this nation, but from the neck of all nations, within two full years. Whether by the force of a heated imagination Hananiah had persuaded himself to believe this, or whether he knew it to be false, and only persuaded to believe it, does not appear; but it is plain that he speaks with assurance of success. It is no new thing for lies to be fathered upon the God of truth.

II. Of the patience of the true prophet. Jeremiah quietly went his way, and, when he was reviled, he reviled not again, and would not contend with one that was in the height of his fury, and in the midst of the priests and people that were violently set against him. The reason why he went his way, was, not because he had nothing to answer, but because he was willing to stay till God was pleased to furnish him with a direct and immediate answer, which as yet he had not received. He expected that God would send a special message to Hananiah, and he would say nothing till he had received that; I, as a deaf man, heard not, for thou wilt hear, and thou shalt answer, Lord, for me. It may sometimes be our wisdom rather to retreat than to contend. Currenti cede furor—Give place unto wrath.

III. Of the justice of God in giving judgment between Jeremiah and his adversary. Jeremiah went his way, as a man in whose mouth there was no rebuke, but God soon put a word into his mouth, for he will appear for those who stilyly commit their cause to him.

1. The word of God, in the mouth of Jeremiah, is now confirmed. Let not Jeremiah himself distrust the truth of what he had delivered in God's name, because it met with such a daring opposition and contradiction. If what we have spoken be the truth of God, we must not unsay it because men gainsay it; for great is the truth, and will prevail. It will stand, therefore let us stand to it, and not fear that men's unbelief or blasphemy will make it not effective. Hananiah had broken this yoke as wood, but Jeremiah must make for them yokes of iron, which cannot be broken; (v. 13.) for (says God) I have put a yoke of iron upon the neck of all these nations, which shall lie heavier, and bind harder, upon them, (v. 14.) that they may serve the king of Babylon, and not be able to shake off the yoke, however they may struggle, for they shall serve him whether they will or no, and who is he that can contend with God's counsel? What was said before is repeated again, I have given him the beasts of the field also, is there then no thing significant in that men have by their wickedness made themselves like the beasts that perish, and therefore deserved to be ruled by an arbitrary power, as beasts are ruled, and such a power Nebuchadnezzar ruled with, for whom he would be slew, and whom he would he kept alive.

2. Hananiah is sentenced to die for contradicting it, and Jeremiah, when he has received commission from God, boldly tells him so to his face; though, before he received that commission, he went away, and said nothing.

(1.) The crimes of which Hananiah stands convicted, are, cheating the people, and affronting God; Thou makest this profile to trust in a lie, encouraging them to hope that they shall have peace, which will make their destruction the more terrible to them when it comes; yet this was not the worst; Thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord, thou hast taught them to despise all the good counsel given them in God's name by the true prophets, and hast rendered it ineffectual. Those have a great deal to answer for, who, by telling sinners that they shall have peace though they go on, harden their hearts in a contempt of the rebukes and admonitions of the word, and thus provoke God to give them a day of vengeance, and to send them into captivity, to repentance.

(2.) The judgment given against him, is, I will cast thee off from the face of the earth, as unworthy to live upon it; thou shalt be buried in it; this year thou shalt die, and die as a rebel against the Lord, to whom death will come with a sting and a curse. This sentence was executed, v. 17. Hananiah died the same year, within two months; for his prophecy lasted this time, one month and the sixth day of the seventh. Good men may perhaps be suddenly taken off by death, in the midst of their days, and in mercy to them, as Josiah was; but this being foretold, as the punishment of his sin, and coming to pass accordingly, it may safely be construed as a testimony from Heaven against him, and a confirmation of Jeremiah's mission. And if the people's hearts had not been wretchedly hardened by the deceitfulness of sin, it would have prevented their being further hardened by the deceitfulness of their prophets.

CHAP. XXIX.

The contest between Jeremiah and the false prophets was carried on before by preaching, here by writing; there we had sermon against sermon, and letter against letter; for some of the false prophets are now carried away into captivity in Babylon, while Jeremiah remains in his own country. Now here is, I. A letter which Jeremiah wrote to the captives in Babylon, against their prophets that they had there, (v. 1-3.) in which, letter, I. He endeavours to reconcile them to their captivity, to be easy under it, and to make the best of it, v. 4-7. 2. He cautions them not to give any credit to their false prophecies, who feed them with empty and ready release, v. 8-9. 3. He assures them that God would restore them in mercy to their own land again, at the end of 70 years, v. 10-14. 4. He foretells the destruction of those false prophets, and describes their punishment, and continues the prediction, that they should be persecuted with one judgment after another, and sent at last into captivity, v. 15-19. 5. He prophesies the destruction of two of their false prophets that they had in Babylon; one he foretells should be put to death, and the other have his tongue cut out; and he set them bad examples; (v. 20-23.) and this is the purport of Jeremiah's letter. II. Here is a letter which Sheemiah, a false prophet in Babylon, wrote to the priests at Jerusalem, to make up to persecute Jeremiah, (v. 24-29.) and a denunciation of God's wrath against him for writing such a letter, v. 30-32. Such struggles as these have there always been between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent.

1. NOW these are the words of the letter that Jeremiah the prophet sent from Jerusalem unto the residue of the elders which were carried away captives, and to the priests, and to the prophets, and to all the people whom Nebuchadnezzar had carried away captive from Jerusalem to Babylon, 2. (After that Jeconiah the king, and the queen, and the eunuchs, the princes of Judah and Jerusalem, and the carpenters, and the smiths, were departed from Jerusalem.) 3. By the hand of Elasab the son of Shaphan, and Gemariah the son of Hilkiah, whom Zedekiah king of Judah sent unto Babylon to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, (whom was Jeconiah) saying, 4. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, unto all that are carried away captives, whom I have caused to be carried away from Jerusalem unto Babylon, 5. Build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them; 6. Take ye wives, and beget sons and daughters; and take wives for your sons, and give your daughters to husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters; that ye may be increased there, and not diminished. 7. And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the Lord for it; for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace.

We are here told,
I. That Jeremiah wrote to the captives in Babylon, in the name of the Lord. Jeconiah had surrendered himself a prisoner, with the queen his mother, the chamberlains of his household, called here the eunuchs, many of the princes of Judah and Jerusalem, who were at that time the most active men; the carpenters and smiths likewise, being demanded, were yielded up, that those who remained might not have any proper hands to fortify their city, or furnish themselves with weapons of war; by this same submission it was hoped that Nebuchadnezzar would be pacified; So the prophet writes; 'Thus saith the Lord; I have laid his antagonist forstado; but the inexpressive conqueror grows upon their concessions, like Benhadad upon Ahab's, 1 Kings xx. 5, 6. And not content with this, when these were departed from Jerusalem, he comes again, and fetches away many more of the elders, the priests, the prophets, and the people, (v. 1.) such as he thought fit, or such as his father had put them hands on, and carries them to Babylon. The case of these captives was very melancholy, the rather, because, they being thus distinguished from the rest of their brethren who continued in their own land, looked as if they were greater sinners than all men who dwelt at Jerusalem. Jeremiah therefore writes a letter to them to comfort them, assuring them that they had no reason further to lay their hands on, or to envy their brethren that were left behind. Note, 1. The word of God written, is as truly given by inspiration of God as his word spoken was; and this was the proper way of spreading the knowledge of God's will among his children scattered abroad. 2. We may serve God, and do good, by writing to our friends at a distance pious letters of reasonable comfort and wholesome counsels. Whom we cannot speak to, we may write to; that which is written remains. This letter of Jeremiah's was sent to the captives in Babylon by the hands of the ambassadors whom king Zedekiah sent to Nebuchadnezzar, probably to buy him his tribute, and renew his submission to him, or to treat of peace with him, in which treaty the captives might perhaps hope that they should be included, ver. 3. By such messengers Jeremiah chose to send this message, to put an honour upon it because it was a message from God. Or, perhaps, because there was no settled way of sending letters to Babylon, but as such an occasion as this offered, and then it made the condition of the captives the more melancholy, that they could rarely hear from their friends and relations they had left behind, which is some reviving and satisfaction to those that are separated from one another.

II. We are here told what he wrote. A copy of a letter at large follows here to v. 24. In these verses,
1. He assures them that he wrote in the name of the Lord of hosts the God of Israel, who ended the letter; Jeremiah was but the scribe or amanuensis. It would be comfortable to them, in their captivity, to hear that God is the Lord of hosts, of all hosts, and is therefore able to help and deliver them; and that he is the God of Israel is still, a God in covenant with his people, that the comfort with them, and their enemies for the present are too hard for them; this would likewise be an admonition to them to stand upon their guard against all temptations to the idolatry of Babylon, because the God of Israel, the God whom they served, is Lord of hosts. God's sending to them in this letter might be an encouragement to them in their captivity, as it was an evidence that he had not cast them off, had not abandoned them and disinherited them, though he was displeased with them and corrected them; for if the Lord had been pleased to kill them, he would not have written to them.

2. God by him own the hand he had in their captivity; 'I have caused you to be carried away, (v. 4.) and again, v. 7. All the force of the king of Babylon could not have done it, if God had not ordered it; nor could he have any power against them, but what was given him from above. If God caused them to be carried captives, they might be sure that he neither did them any wrong, nor meant them any hurt. Note, It will help very much to reconcile us to our troubles, and to make us patient under them, to consider that they are what God approves and appoints for them; I offered not my mouth, because thou didst it.

3. He bids them think of nothing but settling there; and therefore let them resolve to make the best of it; (v. 5, 6.) Build ye houses, and dwell in them, &c. By all this it is intimated to them, (1.) That they must not feed themselves with hopes of a speedy return of the captivity, of the return of the Jews, but keep them still unsettled, and, consequently, uneasy; they would apply themselves to no business, take no comfort, but be always tiring themselves, and provoking their conquerors, with the expectations of relief; and their disappointment at last would sink them into despair, and make their condition much more miserable than otherwise it would be. Therefore, be there cheerful among them, and accommodate themselves to it as well as they can. Let them build, and plant, and marry, and dispose of their children there, as if they were at home in their own land; let them take a pleasure in seeing their families built up and multiplied, for though they must expect themselves to die in captivity, yet their children may live to see better days. If they live in the fear of God, what should hinder them but they may live comfortably in Babylon? They cannot but weep sometimes when they remember Zion; but let not weeping hinder sowing, let them not sorrow as those that have no hope, no joy, for they have both. Note, In all conditions of life, it is our wisdom and duty to make the best of that which is, and not to throw away the comfort of what we may have, because we have not all we would have. We have a natural affection for our native country, it strangely draws our minds; but the Lord with his providence would give us no good account of the sweet attraction; and therefore if Providence remove us to some other country, we must resolve to live easily there, to bring our mind to our condition, when our condition is not in everything to our mind; if the earth be the Lord's, then, wherever a child of God goes, he doth not go off his father's ground; Patria est abiecunque bene est: That place is our country in which we are well off. If things be not as they have been, instead of fretting at that, we must live in hopes that they will be better than they are.

Non si male nascere, et olim sic erit.

Though we suffer now, we shall not always.

(2.) That they must notdisquiet themselves with fears of intolerable hardships in their captivity. They might be ready to suggest (as persons in trouble are always apt to do) that it would be in vain to build houses for their lords and masters would not suffer them to dwell in them when they had built them, nor to eat the fruit of the vineyards they planted; "Never fear," says God; "if you live peaceably with them, you shall find them civil to you." Meekest and quiet people, that work, and mind their own business, have often found much better treatment, even with strangers and enemies, than they expected; and God has made his people to be fitted of those that carried them captive; (Ps. cxi. 40.) and pity it is, but that those who have built houses, should dwell in them. Nay, 4. He directs them to seek the good of the country where they were captives, (2. 7.) to pray for it, to endeavour it. This forbids them to attempt any thing against the public peace, while they were subjects to the king of Babylon; though he was a heathen, an idolater, an oppressor, and an enemy to God and his church yet, while he gave them protection, they must pay him allegiance; and live quiet and peaceable lives under him, in all godliness and honesty; not plotting to shake off his yoke, but patiently leaving it to God in due time to work deliverance for them. Nay, they must pray to God for the safety of their country, when they were, that they might oblige them to continue their kindness to them, and disprove the character that had been given their nation, that they were hurtful to kings and provinces, and moved sedition, Ezra iv. 13. Behold the wisdom of the serpent, and the innocency of the dove, required them to be true to the government they lived under; for in the peace thereof ye shall have peace; should the country be embalmed in war, they would have the greatest share in the calamitous effects of it. Thus the primitive Christians, according to the temper of their holy religion, prayed for the powers that were, though they were persecuting powers. And if they were to pray for, and seek the peace of the land of their captivity, much more reason have we to pray for the welfare of the church of God, which is in a very great measure under a good government, that in the peace thereof we and ours may have peace. Every passenger is concerned in the safety of the ship.

3. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Let not your prophets and your diviners, that be in the midst of you, deceive you, neither hearken to your dreams which ye cause to be dreamed. 9. For they prophesy falsely unto you in my name; I have not sent them, saith the Lord. 10. For thus saith the Lord, That after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon I will visit you, and perform my good word towards you, in causing you to return to this place. 11. For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end. 12. Then shall ye call upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken unto you. 13. And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart. 14. And I will be found of you, saith the Lord; and I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whith I have driven you, saith the Lord; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive.

To make the people quiet and easy in their captivity,

1. God takes them off from building upon the false bottom which their pretended prophets laid, v. 8, 9. They told them that their captivity should be short, and therefore that they must not think of taking root in Babylon, but be upon the wing to go back; "Now, herein, they deceive you," (says God,) "they prophesy a lie to you, though they prophesy in my name. But let them not deceive you, suffer not yourselves to be deluded by them." As long as we have the word of truth to try the spirits by, it is our own fault if we be deceived; for by it we may be deceived. Hearken not to your dreams, which ye cause to be dreamed. He means either the dreams or fancies which the people pleased themselves with, and with which they filled their own heads; by thinking and speaking of nothing else but a speedy enlargement when they were awake, they caused themselves to dream of it when they were asleep, and then took that for a good omen, and with it strengthened themselves in their vain expectations; or, the dreams which the prophets dreamed, and explained their prophecies upon. God tells the people, They are your dreams, because they pleased them, were the dreams that they desired and wished for; they caused them to be dreamed, for they hearkened to them, and encouraged the prophets to put such decrees upon them, desiring them to prophesy nothing but smooth things, Isa. xxxvii. 24. False prophecies would not flatter people in their sins, but that they love to be flattering, and speak smoothly to their prophets that their prophets may speak smoothly to them.

11. He gives them a good bottom to build their hopes upon. We would not persuade people to pull down the house they have built upon the sand, but that there is a good foundation under them of their hopes. God here promises them, that though they should not return quickly, they should return at length, after 70 years be accomplished. By this it appears, that the 70 years of the captivity are not to be reckoned from the last captivity, but the first. Note. Though the deliverance of the church do not come in our time, it is sufficient that it will come in God's time, and we are sure that that is the best time. The promise is, that God will visit them in mercy; though he had long seemed to be strange to them, he will come among them, and appear for them, and put honour upon them, as great men do upon their inferiors, by coming to visit them. He will put an end to their captivity, and turn away all the calamities of it. Though they are dispersed, some in one country, and some in another, he will gather them from all the places whither they are driven, will set up a standard for them all to resort to, and will set their lands in order.

That which is indeed God's word, is a good word, and therefore it will be made good, and not one iota or tittle of it shall fall to the ground. Hath he said, and shall he not do it? This will make their return out of captivity very comfortable, that it will be the performance of God's good word to them, the product of a gracious promise.

2. He shall shew the fulness of God's purposes concerning them; (v. 11.) I know the thoughts that I think toward you. Known unto God are all his works, for known unto him are all his thoughts, (Acts xv. 18.) and his works agree exactly with his thoughts: he doeth all according to the counsel of his will. We often do not know our own thoughts, nor know our own mind, but God is never at any uncertainty with himself. We are sometimes ready to fear that God's designs concerning us are all against us; but he knows the contrary concerning his own people, that they are thoughts of good, and not of evil; even that which seems evil, is designed for good. His thoughts are all working toward the expected end, which he will give in due time. The end they expect will come, though perhaps not when they expect it. Let them have patience till the fruit is ripe, and then they shall have it. He will give them an end, and an expectation; so it is in the original. (1.) He will give them to see the end, the comfortable period, of their trouble; though it last long, it shall not last always; the time to favour Zion, yea, the set time, will come: when things are at the worst, they will begin to mend; and he will give them to see the glorious perfection of their deliverance; for, as for God, his work is perfect. He that in the beginning finished the heavens and the earth, and all the hosts of both, will finish all the blessings of both to his people. When he begins in ways of mercy, he will make an end. God does nothing by halves. (2.) He will give them to see the expectation, that end which they desire and hope for, and have been long waiting for. He will give them to see the consummation of their fears, the expectations of their fancies, but the expectations of their faith; the end which he has promised, and which will turn for the best to them.

3. This shall be in answer to their prayers and supplications to God, v. 12.—14. (1.) God will stir them up to pray; Then shall ye call upon me, and ye shall go, and pray unto me. Note, Promises are given, not to supersede, but to quicken and encourage, prayer; and when deliverance is coming, we must pray the longer for it, that we may meet it. When Jeremiah understood that the 70 years were near expiring, then he set his face with more fervency than ever to seek the Lord, Dan. ix. 2, 3. (2.) He will then stir up himself to come and save them, (Ps. lxxx. 2.) I will hearken unto you, and I will be found of you. God has said it, and we may depend upon it; seek, and ye shall find. We have a general rule laid down, (v. 13.) Ye shall find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart. In seeking God, we must search for him, accomplish a diligent search, search for directions in seeking him, and encouragements to our faith and hope. We must continue seeking, and take pains in seeking, as those that search; and this we must do with our heart, in sincerity and uprightness, and with our whole heart, with vigour and fervency, putting forth all that is within us, in prayer; those who thus seek God, shall find him, and shall find him their houblous Rewarder, Heb. xi. 6. He never said to such, Seek ye me in vain.

15. Because ye have said, The Lord hath raised us up prophets in Babylon; 16. Know that thus saith the Lord of the king that sitteth upon the throne of David, and of all the people that dwelleth in this city, and of your brethren that are not gone forth with you into captivity; 17. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will send upon them the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, and will make them like vile figs, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil. And I will persecute them with the sword, with the famine, and with the pestilence, and will deliver them to be removed to all the kingdoms of the earth, to be a curse, and an astonishment, and a hissing, and a reproach, among all the nations whither I have driven them: 19. Because they have not hearkened to my words, saith the Lord, which I sent unto them by my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them; but ye would not hear, saith the Lord. 20. Hear ye, therefore, the word of the Lord, all ye of the captivity, whom I have sent from Jerusalem to Babylon: 21. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, of Abah the son of Kolaiah, and of Zedekiah the son of Manseiah, which prophesy a lie unto you in my name, Behold, I will deliver them into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and he shall slay them before your eyes; 22. And of them shall be taken up a curse by all the captivity of Judah which are in Babylon, saying, The Lord make thee like Zedekiah, and like Abah, whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire; 23. Because they have committed villainy in Israel, and have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives, and have spoken lying words in my name, which I have not commanded them; even I know, and am a witness, saith the Lord.

Jeremiah, having given great encouragement to those among the captives whom he knew to be serious and well-affected, assuring them that God had very kind and favourable intentions concerning them, here turns to those among them who slighted the counsels and comforts that Jeremiah ministered to them, and depended upon what the false prophets flattered them with. When this letter came from Jeremiah, they would be ready to say, "Why should he make himself so busy, and take upon him to advise us? The Lord has raised us up prophets in Babylon, v. 15. We are satisfied with those prophets, and can depend upon them, and have no occasion to hear from any prophets in Jerusalem. So far he was right in thinking this; as the prophets, when they prophesied lies, said that they had them from God, so the people, when they invited those prophets thus to flatter them, fathered it upon God, and said that it was the Lord that raised them up those prophets. Whereas we may be sure that those who harden people in their sins, and deceive them with false and groundless hopes of God's mercy, are no prophets of God's raising up. These prophets of their own told them that no more should be carried captive, but that those who were in captivity should shortly return. Now, in answer to this, 1. The prophet here foretells the utter destruction of those who remained still at Jerusalem, notwithstanding what those false prophets said to the contrary. As the figs of the fig-tree were dry, so also were the eyes, when you think, will be ready to bid you welcome when you return, you are deceived, they shall be followed with one judgment after another, sword, famine, and pestilence, which shall cut off multitudes; and the poor and miserable remains shall be removed into all kingdoms of the earth," v. 16.-18. And thus God will make them, or rather deal with them, like wise figs; they have made themselves so by their wickedness, and God will use them accordingly; as the salt that has lost its savour, which, being good for nothing, is cast to the dunghill; and so are rotten figs. This refers to the vision, and the prophecy upon it, which we had, ch. xxiv. And the reason given for these proceedings against them, is the same that has often been given, and will justify God in the eternal ruin of impenitent sinners, (v. 19.) Because they have not hearkened to my words; I called, but they refused. 2. He foretells the judgment of God upon the false prophets in Babylon, who deceived the people of God there. He calls upon all the children of the captivity, who boasted of them as prophets of God's raising up; (v. 20.) "Stand still, and hear the doom of the prophets you are so fond of." The two prophets are named here Abi and Zedekiah, v. 21. Other prophets were charged upon them—impiety and immorality; They prophesied lies in God's name, (v. 21,) and again, (v. 23.) They have spoken lying words in my name. Lying was bad, lying to the people of God to delude them into a false hope was worse, but fathering their lies upon the God of truth was worst of all. And no marvel if they that had the face to do it, could allow them to be the children of God, in a way of righteous judgment, gave them up. They have done villany in Israel, for they have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives. Adultery is villany, and it is an aggravation of it, if it be villany in Israel, and in such as pretend to be prophets, who by such wickedness manifestly disprove their own pretensions. And nearer, seething prolifuge wretches, quizzers and enviards. He is the Lord God of the holy prophets, not of such imposters. Here it appears why they flattered others in their sins—because they could not reprove them without condemning themselves. These few practices of theirs they knew how to conceal from the eye of the world, that they might preserve their credit; but I know it, and am a Witness, saith the Lord. The most secret sinners are known to God; he can see the villany that is covered with the thickest cloak of hypocrisy, and there is a day coming when he will bring to light all these hidden works of darkness, and every man will appear in his own colours. (2.) The judgments threatened against them; The king of Babylon shall stay them before your eyes; may he shall put them to a miserable death, roast them in the fire, v. 22. We may suppose that it was not for their impiety and immorality that Nebuchadnezzar punished them thus severely, but for sedition, and some symptoms of their turbulent spirits upon the public peace, and stirring up the people to revolt and rebel. So much of their wickedness shall then be detected, and in such a wretched manner they shall end their days, that their names shall be a curse among the captives in Babylon, v. 22. When men would imprecate the greatest evil upon one they hated, they would think they could not load them with a heavier curse, in fewer words, than to say, The Lord make thee like Zedekiah, and like Abi! Thus were they made ashamed of the prophets they had been proud of, and convinced at least of their folly in hearkening to them. God's faithful prophets were sometimes charged with being the troublemakers of the land, and, as such, were tortured and slain, but their names were blessed when they went gone, and their memory sweet, not as these here. As mule-factors are attended with infamy and disgrace, so martyrs with glory and honour. 24. Thus shalt thou also speak to Shemaiah the Neziahite, saying, 25. Thus spake the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, Because thou hast sent letters in thy name unto all the people that are at Jerusalem, and to Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah, the priest, and to all the priests, saying, 26. The Lord hath made thee priest in the stead of Jehoiada the priest, that ye should be officers in the house of the Lord, for every man that is mad, and maketh himself a prophet, that thou shouldst put him in prison, and in the stocks: 27. Now, therefore, why hast thou not reproved Jeremiah of Anathoth, which maketh himself a prophet to you? 28. For therefore he sent unto us in Babylon, saying, This captivity is long: build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them. 29. And Zephaniah the priest read this letter in the ears of Jeremiah the prophet. 30. Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, saying, 31. Send to all of them of the captivity, saying, Thus saith the Lord concerning Shemaiah the Neziahite; Because that Shemaiah hath prophesied unto you, and I sent him not, and he caused you to trust in a lie; 32. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will punish Shemaiah the Neziahite, and his seed: he shall not have a man to dwell among this people; neither shall he behold the good that I will do for my people, saith the Lord, because he hath taught rebellion against the Lord. We have perused the contents of Jeremiah's letter to the captives in Babylon, who had reason, with a great deal of thanks to God and him, to acknowledge the receipt of it, and lay it up among their treasures. He did not publish the false prophets they had among them were enraged at it, for it gave them their true character. Now here we are told concerning one of them,

1. How he discovers his malice against Jeremiah. This busy fellow is called Shemaiah the Nehuelite; the dreamer, (so the margin reads it,) because all his prophecies he pretended to have received from God, and were all written in the name of Jeremiah.

2. He sent unto us in Babylon, with the authority of a prophet, saying, This captivity is long, and therefore resolve to make the best of it. He was there in this, that it should be objected to him as a crime? The false prophets had formerly said that the captivity would never come, ch. xiv. 13. Jeremiah had said that it would come, and the event had already proved him in the right, which obliged them to give credit to him, who now said that it would be long, rather than to them who said it would be short, but had once been found liars.

3. He demands judgment against him; taking it for granted that he is mad, and makes himself a prophet. He expects that they will order him to be put in prison, and in the stocks; (v. 26.) that they will thus punish him, and by putting him to disgrace possess the people with prejudices against him, ruin his reputation, and so prevent the giving of any credit to his prophecies at Jerusalem, hoping that if they could gain that point, the captives in Babylon would not be influenced by him. Nay, he takes upon him to chide Zephaniah for his neglect, (v. 27.) Why hast thou not rebuked and restrained Jeremiah of Anathoth? See how insidious and imperious these false prophets were grown, that though they were in captivity, they would give law to the priests, who were not only at liberty but in power. It is common for those that pretend to mere knowledge than their neighbours, to be thus assuming. Now here is a remarkable instance of the hardness of the hearts of sinners, and it is enough to make us all fear, lest our hearts be at any time hardened. For here we find, (1.) That these sinners would not be convinced by the clearest evidence. God had confirmed his word in the mouth of Jeremiah, it had taken hold of them; (Zech. i. 6.) and yet, because he does not prophesy to them the smooth things they desired, they are resolved to look upon him as not duly called to the office of a prophet. None so blind as those that will not see. (2.) That they would not be reclaimed and reformed by the words of the messenger. They were now sent into a miserable thrall for mocking the messengers of the Lord, and misusing his prophets; this was the sin for which God now contended with them; and yet in their distress they trespass yet more against the Lord, 2 Chron. xxviii. 22. This very sin they are notoriously guilty of in their captivity, which shows that afflictions will not of themselves cure men of their sins, unless the grace of God work with them, but will rather still the passions; and contrivances they are intended to mortify: so true is that adage of Solomon, (Prov. xxviii. 22.) Though thou shouldest bray a fool in a mortar, yet will not his foolishness depart from him.

2. How Jeremiah came to the knowledge of this; (v. 29.) Zephaniah read this letter in the ears of Jeremiah. He was so much concerned about the matter of the priests' business was to examine every man that is mad, and makes himself a prophet. God's faithful prophets are here represented as prophets of their own making, usurpers of the office, and lay-intruders; and as men that were mad, actuated by some demon, and not divinely inspired; or as distracted men, and men in a frenzy. Thus the characters of the false prophets are here set up; the men that made it their business to be madmen and punished as pretenders, and therefore he concludes that Jeremiah must be as done to. He does not bid them examine whether Jeremiah could produce any proofs of his mission, and would hold that it was there in this, that it is taken for granted, and when once he had a bad name given him, he must be run down of course.

3. What was the sentence passed upon She-JEREMIAH, XXX.

The sermon which we have in this and the following chapter, is of a very different complexion from all those before. The prophet does indeed, by direction from God, change his voice. Most of what he had said hitherto, was by way of reproof and threatening; but these two chapters are wholly taken up with precious promises of a return out of captivity, and that typical of the glorious things reserved for the church in the days of the Messiah. The prophet did not only to preach this, but to write it, because it is intended for the comfort of the generation to come, v. 1, 3. It is here promised, 1. That they should hereafter have a joyful restoration. 1. Though they were now in a great deal of pain and terror, there was no reason why they should not be strong, v. 8, 10. 2. Though a full end was made of other nations, and they were not restored, v. 11. 4. Though all means of their deliverance seemed to fail and be cut off, v. 12., 14. 5. Though God himself had cast them into captivity, and justified, for their sins, v. 15, 16. 6. Though all about them looked upon their case as desperate, v. 17. 11. That after their joyful restoration they should have a happy settlement; that their city should be rebuilt, (v. 16.) their numbers increased, (v. 19, 20.) their government established, (v. 21.) God's covenant with them renewed, (v. 22.) and their enemies destroyed and cut off, v. 23, 24.

1. The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 2. Thus speaketh the Lord God of Israel, saying, Write thee all the words that I have spoken unto thee in a book. 3. For, lo, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the Lord; and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it. 4. And these are the words that the Lord spake concerning Israel, and concerning Judah. 5. For thus saith the Lord, We have heard a voice of trembling, of fear, and not of peace. 6. Ask ye now, and see whether a man doth travail with child? wherefore do I see every man with his hands on his loins, as a woman in travail, and all faces are turned into paleness? 7. Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it. 8. For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him: 9. But they shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them.

Chap. XXX.

Here, I. Jeremiah is directed to write what God had spoken to him; which perhaps refers to all the foregoing prophecies; he must write them and publish them, in hopes that they who had not profited by it upon once hearing it, might take more notice of it when, in reading it, they had leisure for a more considerate review in; that it might be known what the promises of their enlargement, which had been of ten mixed with his other discourses. He must collect them and put them together, and God will now add unto them many like words. He must write them for the generations to come, who should see them accomplished, and thereby have their faith in the prophecy confirmed. He must write it not in a letter, as he had done in the chapters that went before from chapter xvi. and therein he was manifestly the Lord's servant and minister in the archives, or among the public rolls or registers of the state. Daniel understood by these books when the captivity was about coming to an end, Dan. ix. 2. He must write it in a book, not in loose papers; For the days come, and are yet at a great distance, when I will bring again the captivity of Israel and Judah, of great numbers of the ten tribes, with those of the two, v. 3. And it must be written, that it may be read then also, that so it may appear how exactly the accomplishment answers the prediction, which is one end of the writing of prophecies. It is intimatted that they shall be beloved for their fathers' sakes; (Rom. xi. 28.) for therefore God will bring them again to Canaan, because it was the land that he gave to their fathers, which therefore they shall possess. II. He is directed what to write. The very words are such as the Holy Ghost teaches, v. 4. These are the words which God ordered to be written; and those promises which are written by his order, are as truly his word as the ten commandments, which were written with his finger. He must write a description of the Chaldeans made upon them, which will much magnify both the wonder and the welcomeness of their deliverance; (v. 5.) We have heard a voice of trembling—the shrieks of terror echoing to the alarms of danger. The false prophets told them that they should have peace, but there was fear, and not peace; so the margin reads it. No marvel that when without are fightings, within are fears. The men, even the men of war, shall be quite overwhelmed with the calamities of their nation, shall sink under them, and yield to them, and shall look like women in labour, whose pains come upon them in great extremity, and they know that they cannot escape them, v. 6. You never heard of a man travaling with child, and yet here you find not here and there a timorous man, but every man, with his hands on his loins, in the utmost anguish and agony, as women in travail, when they see their cities burnt and their countries laid waste. But this pain is compared to that of a woman in travail, not to that of a death-bed, because it shall end in joy at last, and the pain, like that of a travailing woman, shall be forgotten. All faces shall be turned into fulness. The word signifies not only such pales-ness as arises from a sudden fright, but that which is the effect of a bodily calamity; green sickness. The prophet laments the calamity, upon the foresight of it; (v. 7). Alas, for that day is great, a day of judgment, which is called the great day, the great and terrible day of the Lord; (Joel ii. 31. Jude 6) great, so that there has been none like it. The last destruction of Jerusalem is thus spoken of by our Saviour as unparalleled, Matt. xxiv. 21. It is even the time of Jacob's trouble, a sad time, when God's professing people shall be in distress, above other people. The whole time of the captivity was a time of Jacob's trouble; and such times ought to be greatly lamented by all that are concerned for the welfare of Jacob, and the honour of the God of Jacob.

3. He must have the assurances which God had given, that a happy end should at length be put to these calamities, (1.) Jacob's troubles shall cease; He shall be saved out of them. Though the afflictions of the church may last long, they shall not last always. Salvation belongs to the Lord, and shall be wrought for his church. (2.) Jacob's troubles shall be disabled to do him any further mischief, and shall be reckoned with for the mischief they have done him, v. 1. The Lord of hosts, who has all power in his hand, undertakes to do it; I will break his yoke from off thy neck, which has long lain so heavy, and hath so sorely galled thee; I will burst thy bonds and restore thee to liberty and ease, and thou shalt no more be at the beck and command of strangers, shall no more serve them, nor shall they any more serve themselves of thee, shall no more enrich themselves either by thy possessions or by thy labours.” And, (3.) That which crowns and completes the mercy is, that they shall be restored to the free exercise of their religion again, v. 9. They shall be delivered from serving their enemies, not that they may live at large, and do what they please, but that they may serve the Lord their God. And David their king, who have commenced a new kingdom, shall come again in order, under the established government both in church and state. Therefore they are brought into trouble and made to serve their enemies, because they had not served the Lord their God as they ought to have done, with joyfulness and gladness of heart, Deut. xxxviii. 47. But when the time is come that they should be saved out of their trouble, God will prepare and qualify them for it, by giving them a heart to serve him; and will make it doubly comfortable, by giving them opportunity to serve him. Therefore we are delivered out of the hands of our enemies, that we may serve God, Luke i. 74, 75. And their deliverances out of temporal calamities are mercies indeed to us, when we consider the extraordinary care God took of them, and the numberless benefits which God has been pleased to bestow upon them. and by the means of the throne of judgment, the throne of the house of David, as Nebuch-or hearken to, the Messiah, or Christ, the Son of David, their king. To him the Jewish interpreters apply it. That dispensation, which commenced at their return out of captivity, brought them to the Messiah. He is called David their king, because he was the Son of David, (Matt. xxi. 42.) and he answered to the name. Matt. xx. 31, 32. David was an illustrous type of him both in his humiliation and his exaltation. The covenant of royalty made with David had principal reference to him, and in him the promises of that covenant had their full accomplishment. God gave him the throne of his father David, he raised him up unto them, set him upon the holy hill of Zion. God is often in the New Testament said to have raised up Jesus, raised him up as a King, Acts iii. 26.—xxii. 23, 33. Observe, [1.] Those that serve the Lord as their God, must also serve David their king, must give up themselves to Jesus Christ, to be ruled by him. For all men must honour the Son as they honour the Father, and come into the service and worship of God by him as Mediator. [2.] Those that are de-

1. God himself appeared against them; he scattered them; (v. 11) he did all these things unto them, v. 15. All their calamities came from his hands; whoever were the instruments, he was the principal Agent. And this made them very sad, that God, even their own God, spake concerning them, to pull down and to destroy. Now, (1.) This was intended by the word in the first mention, (v. 11.) "I will correct thee in measure, or according to judgment, with discretion, no more than thou deservest, nay, no more than thou canst well bear." What God does against his people, is in a way of correction, and that correction is always moderated, and always proceeds from love. "I will not leave thee altogether unvisited, as thou art ready to think I should do; for I am, saith the Lord, thy Father." (Isa. lxviii. 10.)

2. Their friends forsook them, and were shy of them; none of those who had courted them in their prosperity, would take notice of them now in their distress, v. 13. If it come at all, the desirable time; those hang off from them, that had been their hangers-on. In two cases we are glad of the assistance of our friends, and need their service; (1.) If we be impeached, accused, or reproached, we expect that our friends should appear in vindication of us, should speak a good word for us, when we cannot put on a face to speak for ourselves; but here there is none to plead thy cause, none to stand up in thy defense, nor to intercede for thee with thine oppressors: therefore God will plead thy cause, for he might well wonder there was none to uphold a people that had been so much the favorites of heaven, Isa. lxiii. 5. (2.) If we be sick, or sore, or wounded, we expect our friends should attend us, advise us, sympathize with us, and, if occasion be, lend a hand for us, for brotherly love; but here, there is none to do that, none to bind up thy wounds, and by counsels and comforts to make proper applications to thy case; nay, (v. 14.) "All thy lovers have forgotten thee; out of sight out of mind; instead of seeking thee they forsake thee. Such as this has often been the case of religion and spiritual goodness in the world; those, that from their education, profession, and helpful beginnings, one might have expected to have been its friends and lovers, its patrons and protectors, desert it, forget it, and have nothing to say in its defense, nor will do any thing toward the healing of its wounds. Observe, Thy lovers have forgotten thee, for I have wounded thee. When God is against a people, who will for them? Who can be for them, so as to do them any kindness? See Job xxx. 11. Now, upon this account, their case seemed desperate and past relief; (v. 12.) Thy bruise is in great increase, and thy griefs, and v. 15. Thy sorrow is incurable; the condition of those in captivity was such as no human power could redress the grievances of; there they were like a valley full of dead and dry bones, which nothing less than Omnipotence can put life into. Who could imagine that a people so diminished, so impoverished, should ever be restored to their own hand, and re-established there? So many were the aggravations of their calamity, that their sorrow could admit of any alleviation, but they seemed to be hard- ened in it, and their souls refused to be comforted, till divine consolations proved strong ones, too strong to be borne down even by the floods of grief that overwhelmed them. Thy sorrow is incurable, because thy sins, instead of being repented of and for- saken, were increased. Note, Incurable griefs are owing to incurable sins; the one increases the other; and condition they are looked upon with disdain; (v. 17.) They called thee an outcast, abandoned by all, aban- doned to ruin; they said, This is Zion, whom no man seeks after. When they looked on the place where the city and temple had been built, they called that an outcast; now all was in ruins, there was no resort to it, no residence in it, none asked the way to it, none sought the tower of it, no man seeks after it. When they looked on the people that formerly dwelt in Zion, but were now in captivity, (and we read of Zion dwelling with the daughter of Baby- lon, Zech. ii. 7.) they called them outcasts; these are they who belong to Zion, and talk much of it, and weep at the remembrance of it, but no man seeks after them; they are in captivity, and have no resort or residence to them. (3.) For all this, God will work deliverance and salvation for them in due time. Though no other hand, nay, because no other hand, can cure their wound, his will and shall. (1.) Though he seemed to stand at a distance from them, yet he assures them of his presence with them, his powerful and gracious presence, in the midst of their enemies. In every case of the rejection of the people by God, (2.) Though they were at a distance, remote from their own land, afar off in the land of their captivity, yet there shall salvation find them out, and shall it fetch them, and their seed, for they also shall be known among the Gentiles, and distinguished from them, that they may re- turn, v. 10. (3.) Though they were now full of fears, and continually alarmed, yet the time shall come when they shall be in rest and quiet, safe and easy, and none shalt make them afraid, v. 10. (4.) Though the nations round about them should suffer, they shall not suffer to ruin, yet they should be preserved from that ruin; (v. 11.) Though I make a full end of the nations whither I have scattered thee, and there might be danger of thy being lost among them, yet I will not make a full end of thee. It was promised that in the peace of these nations they should have peace; (ch. xxix. 7.) and yet in the destruction of these nations they should escape. God's church may sometimes be brought very low, but he will not make a full end of it, ch. v. 10, 18. (5.) Though God correct them, and justly, for their sins, their manifold transgressions and mighty sins, yet he will return in mercy to them, and even their sin shall not prevent their deliverance when God's time is come. (6.) Though their adversaries were mighty, God will bring them down, and break their power; (v. 16.) All that devour thee shall be devoured, and thus Zion's cause will be pleaded, and will be made to appear to all the world a righteous cause. Thus Zion's deliverance will be brought about by the destruction of her oppressors the thus hither promises will be recompensed for all the injury they have done her; for there is a God that judges in the earth, a God to whom vengeance belongs: they shall every one of them, without exception, go into captivity, and the day will come when they that now spoil thee, shall be a spoil; they that lead into captivity, shall go into captivity, Rev. xiii. 10. This might serve to oblige the present conquerors to use their captives well, because the wheel would turn round, and the day would come when they also should be captives, and let them do now as they would then be done by. (7.) Though the wound would seem incurable, God will make a cure of it; (v. 17.) I will restore health unto thee. Be the disease ever so dangerous, the patient is safe if God undertake the cure. A. There is the whole matter; they are cautioned against inordinate fear and grief, for in these precious promises there is enough to silence both. (1.) They must not tremble as those that have no hope, in the apprehension of future further trouble that might threaten them; (v. 10.) Fear thou not, 0 my servant Jacob, neither be dismayed. Note, Those that are God's servants must not give way to quaking fears, whatever difficulties and dangers may be before them. (2.) They must not sorrow as those that have no hope, for the troubles which at present they lie under, v. 15. "Why criest thou for thine affliction? It is true, thy carnal confidences fail thee, creatures are physicians of no value, but I will heal thy wounds, and therefore, Why criest thou? Why dost thou fret and complain thus? It is for thy sin, (v. 14, 15.) and therefore, instead of repining, thou shouldst be repenting. Wherefore should a man complain for the punishment of his sins? The issue will be good at last, and therefore rejoice in hope."

18. Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have mercy on his dwelling-places; and the city shall be built upon her own heap, and the palace shall remain after the manner thereof. 19. And out of them shall proceed thanksgiving, and the voice of them that make merry: and I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small. 20. Their children also shall be as aforetime, and their congregation shall be established before me, and I will punish all that oppress them. 21. And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governor shall proceed from the midst of them; and I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto me: for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? saith the Lord. 22. And ye shall be my people, and I will be your God. 23. Behold, the whirlwind of the Lord goeth forth with fury, a continuing whirlwind; it shall fall with pain upon the head of the wicked.

24. The fierce anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have done it, and until he have performed the intents of his heart: in the latter days ye shall consider it.

We have here further intimations of the favour God had in reserve for them after the days of their captivity were past. It is proper therefore—

1. That the city and temple should be rebuilt, (v. 18.) Jacob's tents, and his dwelling-places, felt the effects of the captivity, for they lay in ruins when the inhabitants were carried away captives: but when they are returned, the habitations shall be repaired, and raised up out of their ruins, and therein God will have mercy upon their dwelling-places, that had been monuments of his justice. Then the city of Jerusalem shall be built upon her own heap, her own hill, though now it be no better than a ruinous heap. The situation was unexceptionable, and therefore it shall be rebuilt upon the same spot of ground. He that can make of a city a heap, (Isa. xxxv. 2.) can, when he pleases, make of a heap a city again. The palace, the temple, God's palace shall remain after the manner thereof, it shall be built after the old model; and the service of God shall be constantly kept up there, and attended as formerly.

2. That the sacred feasts should again be solemnized; (v. 19.) Out of the city, and the temple, and all the dwelling-places of Jacob, shall proceed thanksgiving, and the voice of them that make merry. They shall go with expressions of joy to the temple-service, and with the like shall return from it. Observe, The voice of thanksgiving is the same with the voice of them that make merry; for whatever is the matter of our joy, should be the matter of our praise. Is any merry? Let him sing psalms. What makes us cheerful should make us thankful. Serve the Lord with gladness.

3. That the people should be multiplied and increased, and made considerable; They shall not be few, they shall not be small, but shall become numerous and illustrious, and make a figure among the nations; for I will multiply them and I will glorify them. It is for the honour of the church to have many added to it, that shall be saved; this would make them to be of some weight among their neighbours. Let a people be ever so much diminished and despised, God can multiply and glorify them. They shall be restored to their former honour, their children shall be as aforetime, playing in the streets; (Zech. viii. 5.) they shall inherit their parents' estates and honours as formerly, and their congregations shall, both in civil and sacred things, be established before me. There shall be a constant succession of faithful magistrates in the congregation of the elders, to establish that, and of faithful worshippers in the congregation of the saints. As one generation passes away, another shall be raised up, and so the congregation shall be established before God.

4. That they shall be blessed with a good government; (v. 21.) Their nobles and judges shall be of themselves, of their own nation, and there shall no longer be rulers but strangers and enemies; their governor shall proceed from the midst of them, shall be one that has been a sharer with them in the afflictions of their captive state; and this has reference to Christ our Governor, David our King; (v. 9.) he is of ourselves, in all things made like unto his brethren. And I will cause them to draw near; this shall both be acknowledged, either by them, or by the Lord, and Israel, "I will cause them to draw near to me in the temple-service, as formerly, to come into covenant with me, as my people, (v. 22.) to approach to me in communion; for, who hath engaged, his heart, made a covenant with it, and brought it to bonds, to approach unto me?" How few are there that do so! None can do it but by the special grace of God, causing them to draw near. Note, Whenever we approach God in a become holy ordi- nances, we must engage our hearts to do it; the heart must be prepared for the duty, employed in it, and kept close to it. The heart is the main thing that God looks at and requires; but it is deceitful, and will start aside, if a great deal of care and pains be not taken to engage it to bind this sacrifice with cords. Or, (2.) It may be understood of the govern- nor, for it is a single person that is spoken of; their governor was called by his name, and draw near to God to consult him upon all occasions. God will cause him to approach to him, for otherwise, who would engage to take care of so weak a people, and let this ruin come under their hand? But when God has work to do, though attended with many discouragements, he will raise up instruments to do it. But it looks further, to Christ, to him as Mediator. Note, [1.] The proper work and office of Christ, as Mediator, is to draw near and approach unto God, not for himself only, but for us, and in our name and stead, as the High Priest of our profession. The priests are said to draw near to God, Lev. x. — xxxi. 17. Moses drew near, Exod. xx. 21. [2.] God the Father did cause Jesus Christ thus to draw near and approach to him as Mediator. He commanded and appointed him to do it, he sanctified and sealed him, anointed him for this purpose, and accepted of him, and declared himself well-pleased in him. [3.] Je- sus Christ, being caused by the Father to approach unto him as Mediator, did engage his heart to do it, he bound and obliged himself to it, undertook for his heart, (so some read it,) for his soul, that, in the fulness of time, it should be made an offering for sin. His own volup's sense of the covenant, in his own engagement, in his own approach, in his Father's will, and in compassion to fallen man, engaged him, and then his own honour kept him to it. It also intimates that he was hearty and reso- lute, free and cheerful, in it, and made nothing of the difficulties that lay in his way, Isa. lviii. 3. — 5. [4.] Jesus Christ was, in all this, truly wonder- ful; we may well ask, with admiration, Who is this that engaged to approach so much? and that he should, that he should engage his heart to such an undertaking? 5. That they shall be taken again into covenant with God, according to the covenant made with their fathers; (v. 22.) Ye shall be my people; and it is God's good work in us, that makes us to him a people, a people for his name, Acts xv. 14. I will be your God; it is his good-will to us, that is the summary of that part of the covenant. 6. That their enemies shall be reckoned with and brought down; (v. 20.) I will punish all them that oppress them, so that it shall appear to all a danger- ous thing to touch God's anointed, Ps. cv. 15. The two last verses come under this head, The whirl- wind of the Lord shall fall with pain upon the head of the wicked. These two verses we had be- fore: (ch. xxiii. 19, 20.) there they were a denuncia- tion of God's wrath against the wicked hypocrites in Israel here, against the wicked oppressors of Israel; the expressions, exactly agreeing, speak the same with that, (Isa. li. 22, 25.) I will take the cup of trembling out of thy hand, and put it into the hand of them that afflict thee. The wrath of God against the wicked is here represented to be, (1.) Very terrible, like a whirlwind, surprising and irre- sistible. (2.) Very grievous; it shall fall with pain upon them; they shall be more hurt as frighted. (3.) It shall pursue them; whirlwinds are usually short, but this shall be a continuing whirlwind. (4.) It shall accomplish that for which it is sent; The anger of the Lord shall not return, till he have done it; the purposes of his wrath, as well as the purposes of his love, will all be fulfilled; he will perform the intents of his heart: and, (3.) Those that will not lay this to heart now, will then be unable to put off the thoughts of it; In the latter days ye shall consider it, when it will be too late to prevent it.

CHAP. XXXI.

This chapter goes on with the good words and comfort- able words which we had in the chapter before, for the encouragement of the captives, assuring them that God would in due time return them or their children, to their own land, and make them a great and happy nation again, especially by sending a Mediator, on whom the kingdom and grace many of these promises were to have their full accomplishment. 1. They shall be restored to peace and honour, and joy and great plenty, v. 1-14. II. Their sorrow for the loss of their children shall be at an end, v. 15—17. III. They shall repent of their sins, and God will graciously accept them in their repentance, v. 18—20. IV. They shall be multiplied and in- creased, both their children and their cattle, and not be cut off and diminished as they had been, v. 21—30. V. God will renew his covenant with them, and enrich it with spiritual blessings, v. 31—34. VI. These blessings shall be secured to them for ever, even to the spiritual seed of Israel for ever, v. 35—37. VII. As an earnest of this, the city of Jerusalem shall be rebuilt, v. 38—40. These exceeding great and precious promises were firm foundations of hope, and full foundations of joy, to the poor captives, which may apply them to ourselves, and mix faith with them.

1. At the same time, saith the Lord, will I be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be my people. 2. Thus saith the Lord, The people which were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness; even Israel, when I went to cause him to rest. 3. The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love; therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee. 4. Again I will build thee, and thou shalt be built, O virgin of Israel: thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets, and shall go forth in the dances of them that make merry. 5. Thou shalt yet plant vines upon the mountains of Samaria: the planters shall plant, and shall eat them as common things. 6. For there shall be a day, that the watchmen upon the mount Epherim shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the Lord our God. 7. For thus saith the Lord, Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations: publish ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel. 8. Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together: a great company shall return. 9. They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble; for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born.
God has assured his people,
1. That he will again take them into a covenant-relation to himself, from which they seemed to have been cut off. At the same time, when God's anger breaks out against the wicked, (ch. xxx. 24.) his own people shall be owned by him as the children of his love; I will be the God, I will show myself to be the God, of all the families of Israel; (v. 1.) not only of the house of Aaron only, and the families of Levi, but of all of their families; not only their state in general, but their particular families, and the interests of them, shall have the benefit of a special relation to God. Note, The families of good people, in their family-capacity, may apply themselves to God, and stay themselves upon him as their God. If we and our houses serve the Lord, we and our houses shall be protected and blessed by him, Prov. iii. 33.
2. That he will do for them, in bringing them out of Babylon, as he had done for their fathers when he delivered them out of Egypt, and as he had purposed to do when he first took them to be his people. (1.) He puts them in mind of what he did to be a model; he will do as he had done before, as they were then, as these were, a people left of the sword, that sword of Pharaoh, with which he cut off all the male children as soon as they were born, (a bloody sword indeed they had narrowly escaped,) and that sword with which he threatened to cut them off when he pursued them to the Red Sea. They were then in the wilderness, where they seemed to be lost and forgotten, as they now are in a strange land, and yet they found grace in God's sight, were owned and highly honoured by him, and blessed with wonderful instances of his peculiar favour, and he was at this time going to cause them to rest in Canaan. Note, When we are brought very low, and insuperable difficulties appear in the way of our deliverance, it is good to remember that it has been so with the church formerly, and yet that it has been raised up from its low estate, and has got to Canaan through all the hardships of a wilderness; and God is still the same. (2.) They put him in mind of what God had done for their fathers, intimating that they now saw not such signs, and were ready to ask, as Gideon did, Where are all the wonders that our fathers told us of, have they seen the same wonders? (ch. xix. 4.) (v. 2.) Then they were, as these were, a people cut off from Egypt; (v. 2.) they were then, as these were, a people left of the sword; they were then in the wilderness, where God's power was tried, and God's glory appeared in the providence which he wrought to set them free. He had then, as he has now, the head city of the kingdom of Israel, in opposition to that of Jahaz; but they shall now be united, (Ezek. xxxviii.) and there shall be such perfect peace and security, that men shall apply themselves wholly to the improvement of their ground; the planters shall plant, not fearing the soldiers coming to eat the fruits of what they had planted, or to pluck it up; but they themselves shall eat them freely, as common things, not forbidden fruits, not forbidden by the law of God, (as they were till the fifth year, Lev. xix. 23-25.) not forbidden by the owners, because there shall be such plenty as to yield enough for all, for each.
4. That they shall have liberty and opportunity to worship him. Here are the ordinances of the public worship, and the outward appointments, and shall have the inward and spiritual influences and inclinations to do so; (v. 5.) There shall be a day, and a glorious day it will be, when the watchmen upon mount Ephraim, that are set to stand sentinel there, to give notice of the approach of the enemy, finding that all is very quiet, and that there is no appearance of danger, shall desire for a time to be discharged from their post, that they may go up to Zion, to praise God for the public peace. Or, the watchmen of Ephraim are forward to promote the worship of God at Jerusalem, whereas formerly the watchman of Ephraim was hatred against the house of his God, (Hos. ix. 8.) and, instead of inviting people to Zion, laid snares for those that set their faces thitherward, Hos. v. 1. Note, God can make enemies his friends, and those who have been enemies to religion, and the true worship of God, to be his followers, and leaders in them. This promise was to have its full accomplishment in the days of the Messiah, when the gospel should be preached to all these countries, and a general invitation hereby given into the church of Christ, of which Zion was a type.

5. That God shall have the glory, and the church both the honour and comfort of this blessed change; (v. 7.) Sing unto God a new song; let all the ends of the earth rejoice with her, Deut. xxxii. 43. Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people, Rom. xv. 10. The restoration of Jacob will be taken notice of by all the neighbours, it will be matter of joy to them all, and they shall all join with Jacob in his joys, and thereby pay him respect, and put a reputation upon him. Even the chief of nations, that must begin with the greatest honour, must think it a matter of excessive advantage to be the first to pour to them to congratulate the restoration of Jacob, and shall do themselves the honour to send their ambassadors on that errand. Publish ye, praise ye; in publishing these tidings, praise the God of Israel, praise the Israel of God, speak honourably of both. The publishers of the gospel must do it with praise, and therefore it is often spoken of in the Psalms, as mingled with praises, Ps. lxvii. 2, 3. 6. What we either bring to others, or take to ourselves the comfort of, we must be sure to give God the praise of. Praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people; perfect their salvation, go on to save the remnant of Israel, that are yet in bondage; as Ps. cxxxvi. 3, 4. Note, When we are praising God for what he has done, we must call upon him for the future favours. Therefore, bless his name and keep it in mind, and to this we must be sure to make our address; and so when we have a heart to praise God, and therefore must not be the losers of a day, and therefore must not be the losers of a day and the day of days. (Exod. iv. 22, 23.) Israel is my son, my first-born; let my son go, that he may serve me. If we take God for our Father, and join ourselves to the church of the first-born, we may be assured that we shall want nothing that is good for us.

10. Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattereth Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock. 11. For the Lord hath redeemed Jacob, and ransomed him from the hand of him that was stronger than he. 12. Therefore they shall come and sing in the height of Zion, and shall flow together to the goodness of the Lord, for wheat, and for wine, and for oil, and for the young of the flock, and of the herd: and their souls shall be as a watered garden; and they shall not sorrow any more at all. 13. Then shall the virgin rejoice in the dance, both young men and old together: for I will turn their mourning into joy, and will comfort them, and make them rejoice from their sorrow. 14. And I will satiate the soul of the priests with fatness, and my people shall be satisfied with my goodness, saith the Lord. 15. Thus saith the Lord, A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation, and bitter weeping: Rachel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not. 16. Thus saith the Lord, Reclaim thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy. 17. And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that

ing and praying do well together; tears put life into prayers, and express the liveliness of them, and prayers help to wipe away tears. With favours will I lead them; (so the margin reads it;) in their journey they shall be compassed with God's favours, the fruits of his favour. (3.) Though they have a perilous journey, yet they shall be safe under a divine convey. Is the country they pass through dry and thirsty? I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters, not the waters of a land-flood, which fail in summer. Is it a wilderness where there is no road, no track? I will cause them to walk in a straight way, which they shall not miss. Is it a rough and rocky country? Yet they shall not stumble. Note, Whithersoever God gives his people a clear call, he will either find them, or make them, a ready way; and while we are following Providence, we may be sure that Providence will not be wanting to us. And, lastly, here is a reason given why God will take all this care of his people; for I am a Father to Israel, a father that begat him, and therefore will maintain him, that he care and compassion of a father for him; (Ps. cli. 13.) and Ephraim is my first-born, even Ephraim, who, having gone astray from God, was no more worthy to be called a son, shall yet be owned as a first-born, particularly dear, and heir of a double portion of blessings. The same reason that was given for their release out of Egypt, is given for their release out of Babylon; they are free-born, and therefore must not be enslaved; and why should God redeem them? because he is their God, and therefore must not be the servants of men; and though they were fit to serve any one, yet they are fit to serve none but God; and therefore he will not suffer them to be the servants of any creature, (Ps. cvi. 19.) as Israel was not to the nations who were servants of idols, and therefore the Lord will redeem them; (Exod. vii. 1.) for I am a Father to Israel, saith the Lord. Therefore, as thou has a Father, so also has God a Son; (John xix. 30.) and as God is a Father to Israel, so he must be a Father to his Son; and therefore he will redeem him. And so that which the Lord has redeemed, he will give the Son; (John xiv. 3.) and he will make the Son, as he did the Son of God; (Heb. ii. 17.) and as the Son is ransomed, so shall the Father be ransomed. Therefore, the Father and Son, for whom Christ will intercede, shall be made perfect together; (Isa. liii. 12.) and the Father shall be ransomed at the same time with the Son; and when he, having a Son, will ransom him, he will ransom both himself and his Son, that both may be made perfect together, and that he may have the reward of his own salvation, and the reward of his Son's salvation.
they children shall come again to their own Lorder.

This paragraph is much to the same purport with the last, publishing to the world, as well as to the church, the purposes of God's love concerning his people. This is a word of the Lord, which the nations must hear, for it is a prophecy of a work of the Lord, which the nations cannot but take notice of. Let them hear the prophecy, that they may the better understand and improve the performance; and let them that hear it themselves declare it to others, declare it in the isles afar off. It will be a piece of news that will spread all the world over. It will look very great in history; let us see how it looks in prophecy. It is foretold,

1. That those who are dispersed, shall be brought together again from their dispersions; that scattered Israel shall gather him; for he knows whither he scattered them, and therefore where to find them, v. 10. Una eademque manus vulnus opemque tuit—The hand that inflicted the wound shall heal it.

And when he has gathered him into one body, one fold, he will keep him, as a shepherd does his flock, from being scattered again.

2. That those who are sold and alienated, shall be redeemed and brought back, v. 11. Though the enemy bought him for a price beyond all price than he, yet the Lord, who is stronger than all, has redeemed and ransomed him, not by price, but by power, as of old out of the Egyptians' hands.

3. That with their liberty they shall have plenty and joy, and God shall be honoured and served with it, v. 12, 13. When they are returned to their own land, they shall come, and sing in the high place of Zion, on the top of that holy mountain, they shall sing to the praising of the glory of God. We read that they did so when the foundation of the temple was laid there; they sang together, praising, and giving thanks to the Lord, Ezra iii. 11. They shall flow together to the goodness of the Lord; they shall flock in great numbers and with great forwardness and cheerfulness, as streams of water, to the goodness of the Lord, to the temple where he causes his goodness, and peace, to abound before his people. They shall come together in solemn assemblies, to praise him for his goodness, and to pray for the fruits of it, and the continuance of it; they shall cause him to bless his goodness, in giving them wheat, and wine, and oil, and the young of the flock and of the herd, which, now that they have obtained their freedom, they have an uncontested property in, and the quiet and peaceable enjoyment of; and which therefore they honour God with the first-fruits of, and out of which they bring offerings to his altar. Note, It is comfortable to observe the goodness of the Lord in the gifts of common providence, and even in them to taste covenant-love. Having plenty, (plenty out of want and scarcity,) they shall greatly rejoice, their soul shall be as a watered garden, flourishing and fruitful, and the fruit thereof is sweet and fragrant, and abounding in all good things. Note, Our souls are never valuable as gardens but when they are watered with the dews of God's Spirit and grace. It is a precious promise which follows, and which will not have its full accomplishment any where on this side the height of the heavenly Zion, that they shall not sorrow any more at all; for it is only in that new heaven and the new earth that there is no more sorrow, nor crying, nor any more curse, Rev. xxii. 4. However, so far it was fulfilled to the returned captives, that they had not any more those causes for sorrow, that they had had; and therefore (v. 13.) young men and old shall rejoice together; so great shall the young men be in their joys, as to keep company with the old men, and so transported shall the old men be, as to associate with the young, Saba res est, saba anex—The state prospers, and the aged dance. God will turn their mourning into joy, their fasts into solemn feasts, Zech. viii. 19. It is in their return out of Babylon that they who sowed in tears, shall rejoyce in loud songs; and make them to rejoice from their sorrow; not only rejoice after it, but rejoice from it; their joy shall be loud, and make them to forget in joy they might rejoice before; that they may have abundant satisfaction in what God gives them; (v. 14.) I will satiate the soul of the priests with fatness; there shall be such plenty of sacrifices brought to the altar, that they who live upon the altar, shall live very comfortably, they and their families shall be satisfied with fatness, they shall have enough, and that of the best; and my people shall be satisfied with my goodness, and shall think there is enough in that to make them happy, and so there is. God's people have an abundant satisfaction in God's goodness, though they have but little of this world. Let them be satisfied of God's loving-kindness, and they will be satisfied with it, and desire no more to make them happy. All this is applicable to the spiritual blessings which the redeemed enjoy now, especially among the Jews. Theion better than corn, and wine, and oil, and the satisfaction of soul which they have in the enjoyment of them.

5. That those, particularly, who had been in sorrow for the loss of their children who were carried into captivity, should have that sorrow turned into joy upon their return, v. 15.—17. Here we have,

1. The sad and lamentation which the mothers made for the loss of their children; (v. 15.) In Ramah was there a voice heard, at the time when the general captivity was, nothing but lamentation, and bitter weeping, more there than in other places, because there Nebuzaradan had the general rendezvous of his captives, as appears, ch. xi. 1. where we find him sending Jeremiah back from Ramah. Rachel is here said to weep for her children. The sepulchre of Rachel was between Ramah and Bethel, and Benjamin, one of the two tribes, and Ephraim, head of the ten tribes, were both descendants from Rachel. She had but two sons, the elder of which was one for whom his father grieved, and refused to be comforted, (Gen. xxxvii. 35.) the other she herself called Benjamin,—the son of my sorrow. Now the inhabitants of Ramah did in like manner grieve for their sons and daughters that were carried away, (as 1 Sam. xxx. 6.) and such a voice of lamentation was there, as, to speak poetically, might even have raised Rachel out of her grave to mourn with them. The tender parents even refused to be comforted for their children, because they were not, were not with them, but were in the hands of their enemies; they were never likely to see them more. This is applied by the evangelists to the future redemption of Israel. It is the voice that Bethlem for the murder of the infants there by Herod; (Matth. ii. 17, 18.) and this scripture is said to be then fulfilled. They went forth, and would not be comforted, supposing the case would not admit any ground of comfort, because they were not. Note, Sorrow for the loss of children cannot but be great sorrow, especially if we so far mistake as to think they are not. (2.) Seasonable comfort administered to them in reference hereunto, v. 16, 17. They are advised to moderate that sorrow, and to set bounds to it; Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears. We are not forbidden to mourn in such a case, allowances are made for natural affection; but we must not suffer our sorrow to run into an extreme, to hinder our joy in God, or take us off from our duty to him; though we mourn, we must not murmur, nor must we resolve, as Jacob did, to go to the grave mourning. In order to express incumbent grief, we must consider that there is hope in our end, hope that there will be an end, the trouble will not last always, that it will be a happy end, the end will be peace. Note, It ought to support us under our troubles, that we have reason to hope they will end well. The righteous has hope in his death; that will be the blessed period of his griefs, and the blessed passage to his joys. There is hope for thy latter end. (so some read it;)* though thou mayest not live to see these glorious days thyself, there is hope that thy posterity shall. Though one generation falls in the wilderness, the next shall enter Canaan. Two things thou mayest comfort thyself with the hope of, [1.] The reward of thy work; Thy suffering-work shall be rewarded. The comforts of the deliverance shall be sufficient to balance all the grievances of thy captivity. God makes his people glad according to the days wherein he has afflicted them, and so there is a proportion between the joys and the sorrows, as between the reward and the work. The glory to be revealed, which the saints hope for in their end, will abundantly counterbalance the sufferings of this present time, Rom. viii. 18. [2.] The restoration of thy children; They shall come again from the land of the enemies, v. 15. There they shall come again to their own border, v. 17. There is hope that children at a distance may be brought home; Jacob had a comfortable meeting with Joseph, after he had despaired of ever seeing him. There is hope concerning children removed by death, that they shall return to their own border, to the happy lot assigned them in the resurrection, a lot in the heavenly Canaan, that border of his sanctuary. We shall see reason to repress our grief for the death of our children that are taken into covenant with God, when we consider the hopes we have of their resurrection to eternal life. They are not lost, but gone before.

18. I have surely heard Ephraim hemoaning himself thus; Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke: turn thou me, and I shall be turned; for thou art the Lord my God. 19. Surely after that I was turned, I repented; and after that I was instructed, I smote upon my thigh: I was ashamed, yea, even confounded, because I did bear the reproach of my youth. 20. Is Ephraim my dear son? is he a pleasant child? For since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still; therefore my bowels are troubled for him: I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord. 21. Set thee up waymarks, make thee high heaps, set thy heart toward the highway, even the way which thou wentest: turn again, O virgin of Israel, turn again to these thy cities. 22. How long wilt thou go about, O thou backsliding daughter? for the Lord hath created a new thing in the earth, A woman shall compass a man. 23. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, As yet they shall use this speech in the land of Judah, and in the cities thereof, when I shall bring again their captivity: The Lord bless thee, O habituation of justice, and mountain of holiness. 24. And there shall dwell in Judah itself, and in all the cities thereof together, husbandmen, and they that go forth with flocks. 25. For I have satiated the weary soul, and I have replenished every sorrowful soul. 26. Upon this I awaked, and beheld; and my sleep was sweet unto me.

We have here,

1. Ephraim's repentance, and return to God. Not only Judah, but Ephraim, the ten tribes, shall be restored, and therefore shall thus be prepared and qualified for it. Hrs. xiv. 8. Ephraim shall say, Have I to do any more with idols? Ephraim, the people, is here spoken of as a single person, to and from any city; they shall be as one in their repentance, and shall glorify God in it with one mind and one mouth, one and all. It is likewise thus expressed, that it might be the better accommodated to particular penitents, for whose direction and encouragement this passage is intended. Ephraim is here brought in, weeping for sin, perhaps because Ephraim, the person from whom that tribe were to be gathered into a new denomination and spirit, mourned for his children many days; (1 Chron. vii. 21, 22.) and sorrow for sin is compared to that for an only son. This penitent is here brought in, (1.) Bemoaning himself, and the miseries of his present case. True penitents do thus bemoan themselves. (2.) Accusing himself, laying a load upon himself as a sinner, a great sinner. He charges upon himself, in the first place, that sin and his conscience told him that he was more especially guilty of at this time; and that was, impatience under correction; Thou hast chastised me; I have been under the rod, and I needed it; I deserved it; I was justly chastised, chastised as a bullock, who had never felt the good if he had not first rebelled against the yoke. True penitents look upon their afflictions as fatherly chastisements; "Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised; it was well that I was chastised, otherwise I had been undone; it did me good, or at least was intended to do me good; and yet I have been impatient under it." Or, it may speak his want of feeling under the affliction; "Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, that was all, I was not awakened by it, and quickened by it; I looked no further than the chastisement, and have been under the chastisement as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke, unruly and unmanageable, kicking against the yokes, like a wild bull in a net." Isa. li. 20. This is the sin he finds himself guilty of now; but (v. 19.) he reflects upon his former sins, and looks as far back as the days of his youth. The discovery of one sin should put us upon searching out more; now he remembers the reproach of his youth. Ephraim, as a people, reflects upon the misconduct of their ancestors, when they were first formed into a people. It is applicable to particular persons. Note, The sin of our youth was the reproach of our youth, and we ought often to remember it against ourselves, and to bear it in a penitential sorrow and shame. (3.) He is here brought in, angry at himself, having a severe indictment at himself for his folly: he smote upon his thigh, as the publican upon his breast; he was even amazed at himself, and at his own stupidity and frowardness; he was ashamed, yea, even confounded, could not with any confidence look up to God, nor with any comfort reflect upon himself. (4.) He is here recommending himself to the mercy and grace of God. He finds he is before, and by the power of his own keep himself close with God, much less, when he is revoked, bring himself back to God, and therefore he prays,
He shall be turned, and I shall be gathered to them, saith the Lord thy God; even if thou sawest, and didst not know; if thou hadst heard, and didst not understand; then hadst thou not endured the sight of the whole course of all this evil thing, which Israel hath done.

Thus saith the Lord, After the glory that is before me shalt thou see an enemy in all the land of Judah; in the streets thereof, in the gate thereof, and in every wall thereof; even in all the cities of Judah shall thesetContent of the people of the land be laboring and the seed of the land shall be consumed from before me, because they have forgotten me, and have made me to be profaned; but again, after the glory that I have shewn before you, saith the Lord (37:10-12).

When I saw, mine ear was filled with thy judgment, and mine eye with the judgments of my people: because that there is no justice, neither is there any judgment; they that wickedly counselled are compassed with the网 of their secrets. They met to slay thy prophets, to cast down thine altar. But as for me, mine eye shall be upon them that see not, mine ear shall hear them that hear not. But the Lord was true to my generation, and did according to all his words; he would not turn back from the thing that was right. So I said, Surely he shall not turn away from me, neither shall he give me up; he shall not turn back from me, nor give me up (Jer. 1:11-20).

Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I send out my Angel before thee, even Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, my servant, in whom my spirit is; and he shall go before thee, and prepare thy way before thee: and the Jews that are returned from captivity shall build the temple of the Lord with their own hands; they shall bring it to perfection, and they shall work in it, and they shall enrich it (Hos. 2:18-23).

Thus saith the Lord, If ye return, and keep my commandments, and do them, then shall ye eat the good of the land, and the abundance of the same; and ye shall eat the fruit of the trees and of the grass of the land. Then shall ye take delight in the Lord; and he shall be your strength, and ye shall be greatly strengthened to help you in the days of adversity (Jer. 31:12-13).

JEREMIAH, XXXI.

that land, and which had sometimes been given for a gift, Isa. vii. 14.—ix. 6. A woman, the Virgin Mary, enclosed in her womb the Mighty One, for so Geber, the word here used, signifies; and God is called Gibbor, the Mighty God, (ch. xxxii. 18.) and so is Christ there where his incarnation is spoken of, as it is supposed to be here, Isa. ix. 6. He is El-Gibbor, the Mighty God. Let this assure them that God would not cast off this people, for they are amongst the covenants of the Lord.

4. A comfortable prospect given them of a happy settlement in their own land again. (1.) They shall have an interest in the esteem and good-will of all their neighbours, who will give them a good word, and put up a good prayer for them; (v. 23.) As yet, or rather, yet again, (though Judah and Jerusalem have long been an astonishment and an hissing,) this speech shall be used, as it was formerly, concerning the land of Judah, and the cities thereof, The Lord bless thee, O habitation of justice, and mountain of holiness. This intimates that they shall return much reformed, and every way better; and this reformation shall be so conspicuous, that all about them shall take notice of it. The cities, that used to be nests of pirates, shall be habitations of justice; that are no more and no more, but shall be a blessing to all countries, and all cities; and especially mount Zion, shall be a mountain of holiness. Observe, justice toward men, and holiness toward God, must go together. Godliness and honesty, are what God has joined, and let no man think to put them asunder, or to make one to atone for the want of the other. It is well with a people when they come out of trouble thus refined, and it is a sure presage of further happiness. And we may with great comfort pray for the blessing of God upon these houses that are habitations of justice, those cities and countries that are mountains of holiness. There the Lord will undoubtedly command the blessing. (2.) There shall be great plenty of all good things among them; (v. 24, 25.) There shall dwell in Judah itself, even in it, though it has now long lain waste, both husbandmen and shepherds, the two ancient and honourable employments of Cain and Abel, Gen. iv. 2. It is comfortable dwelling in a habitation of justice, and a mountain of holiness. And the husbandmen and shepherds shall eat of the fruit of their labours, for I have satiated the weary and sorrowful souls; they that came weary from their journey, and have been long sorrowful in their captivity, shall have great plenty. This is applicable to the spiritual blessings God has in store for all true penitents, for all that are just and holy; they shall be abundantly satisfied with divine graces and comforts. In the love and favour of God the weary soul shall find rest, and the sorrowful soul joy. Lastly, The prophet tells us what pleasure the discovery of this brought to his mind, v. 26. The foresight of God had given him sometimes of the calamities of Judah and Jerusalem, were exceedingly painful to him, (as ch. iv. 19.) but these views were pleasing ones, though at a distance. Upon this I awaked, overcame with joy, which burst the fetters of sleep; and I reflected upon my dream, and it was such as had made my sleep sweet to me; I was refreshed, as men are; with quiet sleep. Those may sleep sweetly, that lie down and rise up in the fear of God, and are associated with him. Nor is any prospect in this world more pleasing to good men, and good ministers, than that of the flourishing state of the church of God. What can we see with more satisfaction than the good of Jerusalem, all the days of our life, and peace upon Israel?

27. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will sow the house of Israel, and the house of Judah, with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast. 28. And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the Lord. 29. In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge. 30. But every one shall die for his own iniquity: every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge. 31. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah; 32. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand, to bring them out of the land of Egypt; (which my covenant they brake, although I was a husband unto them; saith the Lord;) But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel: After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. 34. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

The prophet, having found his sleep sweet, made so by the revelations of divine grace, sets himself to sleep again, in hopes of further discoveries, and is not disappointed; for it is here further promised, 1. That the people of God shall become both numerous and prosperous. Israel and Judah shall be replenished both with men and cattle, as if they were sown with the seed of both, v. 27. They shall increase and multiply like a field sown with corn; and this is the product of God's blessing, (v. 25.) for whom God blessed, to them he said, Be fruitful. This should be a type of the wonderful increase of the gospel-church. God will build them, and plant them, v. 28. He will watch over them, to do them good; no opportunity shall be lost, that may further their prosperity. Every thing for a long time had turned so much against them, and all occurrences had so conspired in their ruin, that it seemed as if God had watched over them, to pluck up, and to throw down; but now every thing that falls out, shall happily fall in to strengthen and advance their interests. God will be as ready to comfort those that repent of their sins, and are humbled for them, as he is to punish those that continue in love with their sins, and are hardened in them.

2. That they shall be reckoned with no further for the sins of their fathers; (v. 29, 30.) They shall say no more, they shall have no more occasion to say, that God visits the iniquity of the parents upon the children, which God had done in the captivity; for the sins of their ancestors came into the account against them, particularly those of Manasseh: this they had complained of as a hardship. Other scriptures justify God in this method of proceeding.
and our Saviour tells the wicked Jews in his days, that they should smart for their fathers' sins, because they persisted in them, Matth. xxiii. 35, 36. But it is here promised that this severe dispensation with them shall now be brought to an end; that God would proceed no further in his controversy with them for their fathers' sins, but remember for them his covenant with their fathers, and do them good according to their days. There shall no more complain, as they have done, that the fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge; (which speaks something of an absurdity, and is an invidious reflection upon God's proceedings;) but every one shall die for his own iniquity still; though God will cease to punish them in their national capacity, yet he will still reckon with particular persons that provoke him. Note, Public salutations will give no impunity, no security to private sinners: still every man that eats the sour grapes, his teeth shall be set on edge. Note, Those that eat forbidden fruit, how temptingly soever it looks, will find it a sour grape, and it will set their teeth on edge, sooner or later they will feel from it, and reflect upon it with bitterness. There is as direct a relation made between a man's heart and his mouth, as there is in sour grapes to set the teeth on edge.

III. That God will renew his covenant with them, so that all these blessings they shall have, not by providence only, but by promise, and thereby they shall be both sweetened and secured. But this covenant refers to gospel-times, the latter days that shall come; for of gospel-grace the Jewish understandings (it had been true, &c.) where this whole passage is quoted, as a summary of the covenant of grace made with believers in Jesus Christ. Observe, 1. Who the persons are, with whom this covenant is made, with the house of Israel and Judah, with the gospel-church, the Israel of God, on which peace shall be, (Gal. vi. 16.) with the spiritual seed of believing Abraham and praying Jacob, and Israel, and the kingdom of God, but were united, after their return, in the joint favours God bestowed upon them; so Jews and Gentiles were in the gospel-church and covenant. 2. What is the nature of this covenant in general; it is a new covenant, and not according to the covenant made with them, when they came out of Egypt; not as if that made with them at mount Sinai were a covenant of works, but a covenant made with Adam in the day he was created; no; that was, for substance, a covenant of grace, but it was a dark dispensation of that covenant, in comparison with this in gospel-times. Sinners were saved by that covenant, upon their repentance, and faith in a Messiah to come, whose blood, confirming that covenant, was typified by that of the legal sacrifices, Exod. xxiv. 7, 8. Yet this may upon many accounts be called new, in comparison with that; the ordinances and promises are more spiritual and heavenly, and the discoveries much more clear. That covenant God made with them when he took them by the hand, as if they had been blind or lame, or weak, to lead them out of the land of Egypt, which covenant they brake, Observe. It was God that made this covenant, but it was the people that brake it; for our salvation is of God, but our sin and ruin are of ourselves. It was an aggravation of their breach of it, that God was a Husband to them, that he had espoused them to himself, it was a marriage-covenant that was between him and them, which they brake by idolatry, that spiritual adultery. It is a great aggravation of the breach of it, that God has been a Husband to us, a loving, tender, careful Husband, faithful to us, and yet we false to him.

3. What are the particular articles of this covenant; they all contain spiritual blessings; not, "I will give them the land of Canaan and a numerous issue," but, "I will give them pardon, and peace, and grace, good heads and good hearts." He promises, (1.) That he will incline them to their duty; I will put my law in their inward part, and write it in their heart; not, I will give them a new law, (as Mr. Gataker well observes,) for Christ came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill it; but the law shall be written in their hearts by the finger of the Spirit, as formerly it was written in the tables of stone. God writes his law in the hearts of all believers, makes it ready and familiar to them, at hand when they have occasion to use it, as that which is written in the heart, Prov. lvi. 3. He makes them in care to observe it, that when we are solicitous about, is said to lie near our hearts. God's being to us a God is the summary of all happiness, heaven itself is no more, Heb. xi. 16. Rev. xxi. 3. Our being to him a people may be taken either as the condition on our part, (those and those only shall have God to be to them a God, that are truly willing to engage themselves to be to him a people,) or as a further branch of the promise, that God should bring them in, and make them willing people, in the day of his power; and, whoever are his people, it is his grace that makes them so.

(3.) That there shall be an abundance of the knowledge of God among all sorts of people, and this will have an influence upon all good; for they that rightly know God's name, will seek him, and serve him. If we put our trust in him, God shall know me; all shall be welcome to the knowledge of God, and shall have the means of that knowledge; his way shall be known upon earth; whereas, for many ages, in Judah only was God known. Many more shall know God than did in the Old Testament times, which among the Gentiles were times of ignorance, the true God being to them in those days but a name. God shall in gospel-times be made more plain and inteligible, and level to the capacities of the meanest, than they had been, while Moses had a veil upon his face. There shall be such a general knowledge of God, that there shall not be so much need as had formerly been of teaching. Some take it as a hyperbolical expression, (and the dulness of the Jews needed such expressions to awaken them,) designed only to show that the knowledge of God, in gospel-times shall vastly exceed that knowledge of him, which they had under the law. Or, perhaps, it intimates that in gospel-times there shall be such great plenty of public preaching, statistically and constantly, by men authorised and appointed to it, as there was never before in all the church of God, and according to this sense of it, (Mr. Gataker mentions it,) that many shall have such clearness of understanding in the things of God, that they may seem rather to have been taught by some immediate irradiation than by any means of instruction. In short, the things of God shall by the gospel of Christ be brought to a clearer light than ever, (2 Tim. i. 10.) and the people of God shall by the grace of Christ be brought to a clearer sight of those things than ever, Eph. i. 17, 18.

(4.) That, in order to all these blessings, sin shall be pardoned; this is made the reason of all the rest; For I will forgive their iniquity, will not in any way take insinuation to them, nor deal with them according to the desert of that, will forgive and forget; I will remember their sin no more. It is sin that keeps good things from us, that stops the current of God's favours; let sin be taken away by pardoning mercy, and the obstruction is removed, and divine grace runs down like a river, like a mighty stream.

35. Thus saith the Lord, which gave the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar; The Lord of hosts is his name: 36. If those ordinances depart from before me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me for ever. 37. Thus saith the Lord, If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel, for all that they have done, saith the Lord. 38. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the city shall be built to the Lord, from the tower of Hananel unto the gate of the corner. 39. And the measuring-line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about to Goath. 40. And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields, unto the brook of Kidron, unto the corner of the horse-gate towards the east, shall be holy unto the Lord; it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down, any more for ever.

Glorious things have been spoken in the foregoing verses concerning the gospel-church, which that epocha of the Jewish church, that was to commence at the return from captivity, would at length terminate in, and which all those promises were to have their full accomplishments in. But may we depend upon these promises? Yes, we have here a ratification of them, and the utmost assurance imaginable given of the perpetuity of the blessings contained in them. The great thing here secured to us, is, that while the world stands, God will have a church in it, which, though sometimes it may be brought very low, shall yet be raised again, and its interests re-established; it is built upon a rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. Now here are two things offered for the confirmation of our faith in this matter; the holding of the world, and the rebuilding of Jerusalem.

1. The building of the world, and the firmness and lastiness of that building, are evidences of the power and faithfulness of that God who has undertaken the establishment of his church. He that built all things at first is God, (Heb. iii. 4.) and the same is he that makes all things now. The constancy of the glories of the kingdom of nature may encourage us to depend upon the divine promise for the continuance of the glories of the kingdom of grace, for this is as the waters of Noah, Isa. liv. 9. Let us observe here,

1. The glories of the kingdom of nature, and infer thence how happy they are that have this God, the God of nature, to be their God for ever and ever. Take notice, (1.) Of the steady and regular motion of the heavens, Rom. i. 20. The Motion of the Sun and Moon, and the Director of; He gives the sun for a light by day; (v. 35.) not only made it at first to be so, but still gives it to be so, for the light and heat, and all the influences of the sun, continually depend upon its great Creator. He gives the ordinances of the moon and stars for a light by night; their motions are called ordinances, both because they are regular and by rule, and because they are determined by the great ruler of the universe, Ps. cxxvii. 1-7. 33. (2.) Take notice of the government of the sea, and the check that is given to its proud billows; The Lord of hosts divides the sea, or, as some read it, settles the sea, when the waves thereof roar; (Divide, et impera—Divide, and rule;) when it is most tossed, God keeps it within compass, (Jer. v. 22.) and soon quiets it and makes it calm again. The power of God is glorified by us, not only in maintaining the regular motions of the heavens, but in controlling the irregular motions of the seas.

2. The securities of the kingdom of grace inferred from hence; we may be confident of this very thing, that the seed of Israel shall not cease from being a nation, for the spiritual Israel, the gospel-church, shall be a holy nation, a peculiar people; 1 Pet. ii. 9. When Israel according to the flesh is no longer a nation, the children of the promise are counted for the seed, (Rom. ix. 8.) and God will not cast off all the seed of Israel, no, not for all that they have done, though they have done very wickedly, v. 37. He justly might cast them off, but he will not. Though he cast them out from their land, and cast them down for a time, yet he will not cast them off. Some of them he casts off, but not all to this the apostle seems to refer, (Rom. xi. 1.) Hatin God cast est his own will, that we should think so! For, (v. 5.) at this time there is a remnant, enough to save the credit of the promise, that God will not cast off all the seed of Israel, though many among them throw away themselves by unbelief. Now we may be assisted in the belief of this, by considering, (1.) That the God that has undertaken the preservation of the church, is God of almighty power, who upholds all things by his almighty word. Our help stands in his name, who made heaven and earth, and therefore can do any thing. (2.) That God would not take all this care of the world, but that he designs to have some glory to himself out of it; and how shall
The word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord in the tenth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, which was the eighteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar. 2. For then the king of Babylon’s army be siege Jerusalem: and Jeremiah the prophet was shut up in the court of the prison, which was in the king of Judah’s house. 3. For Zedekiah king of Judah had shut him up, saying, Wherefore dost thou prophesy, and say, Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall take it; 4. And Zedekiah king of Judah shall not escape out of the hand of the Chaldeans, but shall surely be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, and shall speak with him mouth to mouth, and his eyes shall behold his eyes; 5. And he shall lead Zedekiah to Babylon, and there shall he be until I visit him, saith the Lord: though ye fight with the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper. 6. And Jerem- iah said, The word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 7. Behold, Hanameel, the son of Shallum, thine uncle, shall come unto thee, saying, Buy thee my field that is in Anathoth; for the right of redemption is thine to buy it. 8. So Hanameel, mine uncle’s son, came to me in the court of the prison, according to the word of the Lord, and said unto me, Buy my field, I pray thee, that is in Anathoth; for the right of inheritance is thine; and the redemption is thine; buy it for thyself. Then I knew that this was the word of the Lord. 9. And I bought the field of Hanameel, mine uncle’s son, that was in Anathoth, and weighed him the money, even seventeen shekels of silver. 10. And I subscribed the evidence, and sealed it, and took witnesses, and weighed him the money in the balances. 11. So I took the evidence of the purchase, both that which was sealed according to the law and custom, and that which was open. 12. And I gave the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, in the sight of Hanameel mine uncle’s son, and in the presence of the witnesses that subscribed the book of the purchase, before all the Jews that sat in the court of the prison. 13. And I charged Baruch before them, saying, 14. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Take these evidences, this evidence of the purchase, (both which is sealed,) and this evidence which is open, and put them in an earthen vessel, that they may continue many days: 15. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Houses, and fields, and vineyards, shall be possessed again in this land.

It appears by the date of this chapter, that we are ministers must not entangle themselves, yet they may concern themselves, in the affairs of this life.
2. That one who had neither wife nor children should buy land; we find, (ch. xvi. 2.) that he had no family of his own, yet he may purchase for his own use while he lives, and leave it to the children and his relations when he dies. 3. One would little have thought that these emblems, if it could be interpreted; how should he get money beforehand to buy land with? It is probable that he lived frugally, and saved something out of what belonged to him as a priest, which is no blemish at all to his character; but we have no reason to think that the people were kind, or that his being beforehand was owing to their generosity. Nay, 4. It was most strange of all that he should have said, that he himself knew that the whole land was now to be laid waste, and fall into the hands of the Chaldeans; and then what good would this do him? But it was the will of God that he should buy it, and he submitted, though the money seemed to be thrown away. His kinsman came to offer it him; it was not of his own seeking; he coveted not to lay hold of other men's things, and did not press it upon him; he knew that the land was for ever to be of no use; he did not want it to him, and it was, probably, a good bargain; besides, the right of redemption belonged to him, (v. 8.) and if he refused, he did not do the kinsman's part. It is true, he might lawfully refuse; but, being a prophet, in a thing of this nature, he must do that which would be for the honour of his profession; it became him to fulfill all righteousness. It was a land that lay within the suburbs of a priest's city, and if he should refuse it, he would lose the property. In these times of disorder, it might be sold to one of another tribe, which was contrary to the law, to prevent which it was convenient for him to buy it. It would likewise be a kindness to his kinsman, who, probably, was at this time in great want of money. Jeremiah had but a little, but what he had was willing to lay it out in such a manner as might tend most to the honour of God and the good of his friends and country, which he preferred before his own private interests. Observe,
(1.) How fairly the bargain was made. When Jeremiah knew by Hanameel's coming to him, as God had foretold he would, that it was the word of the Lord, that it was his mind that he should make this purchase, he made no more difficulty of it, but that night the money was ready, and the kinsman now, and exact in paying the money. He weighed him the money, did not press him to take it upon his report, though he was his near kinsman, but weighed it to him, current money. It was seventeen shekels of silver, amounting to about forty shillings of our money. It was, probably, but a little field, and of small yearly value, when the purchase was so low; besides, the right of inheritance was in Jeremiah, so that he was only to buy out his kinsman's life, the reversion was his already. Some think this was only the earnest of a greater sum; but we shall not wonder at the smallness of the price, if we consider what scarcity there was of money at this time, and how little lands were counted upon. [2.] He was very prudent and discreet in preserving the writings. They were sealed up, and the other was open.
soon broken,) that they might continue many days, for the use of Jeremiah's heirs, after the return out of captivity; for they might then have the benefit of this purchase. Purchasing reversals may be a kindness to those that come after us, and a good man thus lays up an inheritance for his children's children.

(2.) What was the design of having this bargain made? It was to signify that though Jerusalem was now besieged, and the whole country was likely to be laid waste, yet the time should come, when houses and fields and vineyards should be again possessed in this land, v. 15. As God appointed Jeremaih to confirm his predictions of the approaching destruction of Jerusalem, by his own practice in living unmarried, so he now appointed him to confirm his predictions of the future restoration of Jerusalem, by his own practice in purchasing this field. Note, It concerns ministers to make it to appear in their whole conversation, that they do themselves believe that which they preach to others; and that they may do so, and impress it the deeper upon their hearers, they must many a time deny themselves, as Jeremiah did in both these instances. God having promised that this land should again come into the possession of his people, Jeremiah will, in behalf of his heirs, put in a share. Note, It is good to manage even our worldly affairs in faith, and to do common business with an eye to the providence and promise of God. Lucius Florus relates it as a great instance of the bravery of the Roman citizens, that in the time of the second Punic war, when Hannibal besieged Rome, and was very near making himself master of it, a field on which part of his army lay, being offered to sale at that time, was immediately purchased, in a firm belief that the Roman valour would raise the siege, lib. 2. and sect. 5. And this was a proper venture to anchor our all upon the word of God, and to embark in Zion's interests, which will undoubtedly be the prevailing interests at last! Non si male nune et olim sie eir—Though now we suffer, we shall not suffer always.

16. Now when I had delivered the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, I prayed unto the Lord, saying, 17. Ah, Lord God! behold, thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched-out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee: 18. Thou shewest loving-kindness unto thousands, and recompensest the iniquity of the fathers into the bosom of their children after them: The Great, the Mighty God, the Lord of hosts, is his name. 19. Great in counsel, and mighty in work: (for thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men; to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings;) 20. Which hast set signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, even unto this day, and in Israel, and among other men; and hast made thee a name, as at this day; 21. And hast brought forth thy people Israel out of the land of Egypt, with signs, and with wonders, and with a strong hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with great terror; 22. And hast given them this land, which thou didst swear to their fathers to give them, a land flowing with milk and honey; 23. And they came in, and possessed it; but they obeyed not thy voice, neither walked in thy law: they have done nothing of all that thou commandedst them to do; therefore thou hast caused all this evil to come upon them. 24. Behold the mounts, they are come unto the city to take it, and the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans that fight against it, because of the sword, and of the famine, and of the pestilence: and what thou hast spoken is come to pass; and, behold, thou seest it. 25. And thou hast said unto me, O Lord God, Buy thee the field for money, and take witnesses; for the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

We have here Jeremiah's prayer to God, upon occasion of the discoveries God had made to him of his purposes concerning this nation, to pull it down, and in process of time to build it up again, as which purposes he prophesied, who, though he delivered his messages faithfully and justly, in reflecting upon them, was at a loss within himself how to reconcile them; in that perplexity he poured out his soul before God in prayer, and so gave himself ease. That which disturbed him was, not the bad bargain he seemed to have made for himself in purchasing a field that he was likely to have no good of; but the regard of his people, for whom he was still a kind and faithful intercessor. And he was willing to hope that if God had so much mercy in store for them hereafter as he had promised, he would not proceed with so much severity against them now as he had threatened. Before Jeremiah went to prayer, he delivered the deeds that concerned his new purchase to Baruch; which may intimate to us, that when we are going to worship God, we should get our minds as clear as may be from the cares and encumbrances of this world. Jeremiah was in prison, in distress, in the dark about the meaning of God's providences, and then he prays. Note, Prayer is a salve for every sore. Whatever is a burden to us, we may by prayer cast it upon the Lord, and then be easy.

In this prayer of meditation,

1. Jeremiah adores God and his infinite perfections, and gives him the glory due to his name as the Creator, Upholder, and Benefactor, of the whole creation; thereby owning his irresistible power, that he can do what he will, and his incontestable sovereignty, that he may do what he will, v. 17.—19. Note, When at any time we are perplexed about the particular method and dispensation of Providence, it is good for us to have recourse to our first principles, and to satisfy ourselves with the general doctrines of God's wisdom, power, and goodness. Let us consider, as Jeremiah does here, (1.) That God is the Fountain of all being, power, life, motion, and perfection; He made the heaven and the earth with a stretched-out arm; and therefore who can control him? Who has power contend with him? (2.) That with him nothing is impossible, no difficulty insuperable; Nothing is too hard for thee. When human skill and power is quite nonplussed, with God are strength and wisdom sufficient to master all the opposition. (3.) That he is a God of boundless, bottomless mercy; that is his darling attribute; is his goodness that is his glory; Thou not only art kind, but thou showest loving-kindness, not to a few, to here and there one, but to thousands, thousands of persons, thousands of generations."
That he is a God of impartial and inflexible justice.

His reprobates are not pardoned, but in mercy he spares the parents, that they may lead to repentance, yet such a hatred has he to sin, and such displeasure against sinners, that he recompenses their iniquity into the bosom of their children, and yet does them no wrong; so hateful is the unrighteousness of man, and so jealous of its own honour is the righteousness of God. (3.) That he is a God of universal dominion and command; He is the great God, for he is the mighty God, and might among men, maketh them. He is the Lord of hosts, of all hosts, that is his name, and he answers to his name, for all the hosts of heaven and earth, of men and angels, are at his beck. (6.) That he contrives every thing for the best, and effects every thing as he contrived it; He is great in counsel; so vast are the reaches, and so deep are the designs, of his wisdom; and he is mighty in doing, according to the counsel of his will. Now such a God as this is not to be quarrelled with. His service is to be constantly adhered to, and all his dispositions cheerfully acquiesced in.

2. He acknowledges the universal cognizance God takes of all the actions of the children of men, and the unerring judgment he passes upon them; (v. 19.) Thine eyes are open upon all the sons of men, wherever they are, beholding the evil and the good, and upon all their ways, both in workmanship and in every step they take, not as an unconcerned Spectator, but as an observing Judge, to give every one according to his ways, and according to his deserts, which are the fruit of his doings, for men shall find God as they are found of him.

3. He recounts the great things God had done for his people Israel formerly. (1.) He brought them out of Egypt, that house of bondage, with signs and wonders, in which they were, not in the marks of them, yet in the memorials of them, even unto this day; for it would never be forgotten, not only in Israel, who were reminded of it every year by the ordinance of the passover, but among other men; all the neighbouring nations spake of it, as that which reeminded exceedingly to the glory of the God of Israel, and made him a name as the God exalted in strength. (2.) That God brought them forth, not only with comforts and joys to them, but with glory to himself, with signs and wonders, (witness the ten plagues,) with a strong hand, too strong for the Egyptians themselves, and with a stretched-out arm, that reached Pharaoh, proud as he was, and with great terror to them and to all about them. This seems to refer to Deut. iv. 54. (2.) He brought them into Canaan, that good land, that land flowing with milk and honey; he swore to their fathers to give it them, and because he would perform his oath, he did give it to the children, (v. 22.) and they came in, and possessed it. Jeremiah mentions this both as an aggravation of their sin and disobedience, and also as a plea with God to work deliverance for them. Note, It is good for us often to reflect upon the great things that God did for them before, and especially in the first erecting of it, that work of wonder.

4. He bewails the rebellions they had been guilty of against God, and the judgments God had brought upon them for these rebellions. It is a sad account he here gives of the ungrateful conduct of that people toward God. He had done every thing that he promised they should do, (they had obeyed the King and his officers; 1 kings xxiv. 15,) but they had done nothing of all that he commanded them to do; (v. 23.) they made no conscience of any of his laws, they walked not in them, paid no respect to any of his calls by his prophets, for they obeyed not his voice. And therefore he owns that God was righteous in causing all this evil to come upon them. The city is besieged, is attacked by the sword without, is weakened and wasted by the famine and pestility within, so that it is ready to fall into the hands of the Chaldeans that fight against it; (v. 24.) It is given into their hands, v. 23. Now, (1.) He compares the present state of Jerusalem with the divine predictions, and finds that what God has spoken, is come to pass. God had given them fair warning of it before; if they had regarded this, the ruin had been prevented; but if they will not do what God has commanded, they can expect no other than that he should do what he has threatened. (2.) It is compared to the present state of Jerusalem to the divine consideration and compassion; (v. 24.) Behold the mounts, or ramparts, or the engines, which they make use of to batter the city, and beat down the wall of it. And again, "Behold, they have taken; and they have brought up the parts of their garments upon their heads." Is this the city that thou hast chosen to put thy name there? And shall it be thus abandoned? He neither complains of God for what he had done, nor prescribes to God what he should do, but desires he would behold their case, and is pleased to think that he does behold it. Whatever trouble we are in, upon a personal or public account, we may comfort ourselves with this, that God sees it, and sees how to remedy it.

5. He seems desirous to let further into the meaning of the order that God had now given him, and to purchase a field: (v. 25.) "Though the city is given into the hands of the Chaldeans, no man is likely to enjoy what he has, yet thou hast said unto me, Buy thee the field." As soon as he understood that it was the mind of God, he did it, and made no objections, was not disobedient to the heavenly vision; but when he had done it, he desired better to understand why God had ordered him to do it, because the thing looked strange and unaccountable. Note, Though we are bound to follow God with an implicit obedience, yet we should endeavour that it may be more and more intelligent obedience. We must never dispute God's statutes and judgments, but we may and must inquire, What mean these statutes and judgments? Deut. vi. 20.

26. Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, saying. 27. Behold, I am the Lord, the God of all flesh: is there any thing too hard for me? 28. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the Chaldeans, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and he shall take it. 29. And the Chaldeans, that fight against this city, shall come and set fire on this city, and burn it, with the houses upon whose roofs they have offered incense unto Baal, and poured out drink-offerings unto other gods, to provoke me to anger, 30. For the children of Israel, and the children of Judah have only done evil before me from their youth: for the children of Israel have only provoked me to anger with the work of their hands, saith the Lord. 31. For this city hath been to me as a provocation of mine anger and of my fury, from the day that they built it, even unto this day, that I should remove it from before my face; 32. Because of all the evil of the children of Israel, and of the children of Judah, which they have done to provoke me to anger, they, their kings, their princes, their priests, and their prophets, and the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem. 33. And they have turned unto me the back, and not the face; though I taught them, rising up early and teaching them, yet they have not hearkened to receive instruction. 34. But they set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to defile it. 35. And they built the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to cause their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire unto Molech, which I commanded them not, neither came it into my mind, that they should do this abomination, to cause Judah to sin. 36. And now therefore thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, concerning this city, wherof ye say, It shall be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence; 37. Behold, I will gather them out of all countries whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely: 38. And they shall be my people, and I will be their God: 39. And I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me for ever, for the good of them, and of their children after them: 40. And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. 41. Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart, and with my whole soul. 42. For thus saith the Lord, Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them. 43. And fields shall be bought in this land, wherof ye say, It is desolate without man or beast; it is given into the hand of the Chaldeans. 44. Men shall buy fields for money, and subscribe evidences, and seal them, and take witnesses in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, and in the cities of the mountains, and in the cities of the valley, and in the cities of the south: for I will cause their captivity to return, saith the Lord.

When we know not how to reconcile one word of God with another, we may yet be sure that both are true, but that the pure, both shall be made good, and not one iota or tittle of either shall fall to the ground. When Jeremiah was ordered to buy the field in Anathoth, he was willing to hope that God was about to revoke the sentence of his wrath, and to order the Chaldeans to raise the siege. "No," says God, "the execution of the sentence shall go on, Jerusalem shall be laid in ruins." Note, As many gross and atrocious enormities must not be interpreted as securities from present troubles. But, lest Jeremiah should think that his being ordered to buy this field intimated that all the mercy God had in store for his people, after their return, was only that they should have the possession of their own land again; he further acquaints him that that was but a type and figure of these spiritual blessings which should then be abundantly bestowed upon them, unspeakably more valuable than fields and vineyards. So that in this word of the Lord, which came here to Jeremiah, first as dreadful threatenings, and then as precious promises as perhaps any we have in the Old Testament; life and death, good and evil, are here set before us; let us consider and choose wisely.

1. The ruin of Judah and Jerusalem is here pronounced; the decree is gone forth, and shall not be recalled.

1. God here asserts his own sovereignty and power; v. (27.) Behold, I am Jehovah, a self-existent, self-sufficient Being; I am that I am; I am the God of all flesh, of all mankind; here called flesh, because weak, and unable to contend with God, (Ps. vii. 4.) and because wicked and corrupt, and unjust to comply with God. God is the Creator of all, and makes what use he pleases of all. He that is the God of Israel is the God of all flesh, and of the spirits of all flesh; and, if Israel were cast off, could raise up a people to his name out of some other nation. If he be the God of all flesh, he may well ask, Is anything too hard for me? What can he do, from whom all the powers of men are derived, on whom they depend, and by whom all their actions are directed and governed? Whatever he designs to do, whether in wrath or in mercy, nothing can hinder him, or defeat his designs.

2. He abides by what he had often said of the destruction of Jerusalem by the king of Babylon; v. (28.) I will give this city into his hand, now that I am justly punishing it, and shall take it, and make a prey of it, v. 29. The Chaldeans shall not set fire to it, shall burn it and all the houses in it, God's house not excepted, nor the king's neither.

3. He assigns the reason for these severe proceedings against the city that had been so much in his favour. It is sin, it is that, and nothing else, that ruins it. (1.) They were impudent and daring in sin. They transgressed the laws of God, as men ashamed or afraid of being discovered, but upon the tops of their houses, (v. 29.) in defiance of God's justice. (2.) They designed an affront to God herein. They did it to provoke me to anger, v. 29. They have only provoked me to anger with the works of their hands, v. 30. They could not promise themselves any pleasure, profit, or honour out of it, but did thereby provoke God to do great harm, and again, (v. 32.) All the evil which they have done was to provoke me to anger. They knew he was a jealous God in the matters of his worship, and there they resolved to try his jealousy and dare him to his face. Jerusalem has been to me a provocation of my anger and fury, v. 31. Their conduct is the very thing was provoking. (3.) They began betimes, and had continued all along provoking God. They have done evil before me from their youth, ever since they were first formed into a pecholiness at all times, have a good hope to support themselves in the worst of times.

2. The hope that God gives them of mercy which he had in store for them hereafter. Though their carnal minds must fall in wickedness, yet their children after them should again see this good land, and the goodness of God in it.

1. They shall be brought up from their captivity, and shall come, and settle again in this land, v. 57. They had been under God's anger and fury, and great wrath; but now they shall partake of his grace, and love, and great favour. He had preserved them in their wanderings, and had gathered together those that fled dispersed among them; those that fell into the enemies' hands were dispersed by them, in policy, to prevent combinations among them. God's hand was in both: but now God will find them out, and gather them out of all the countries whither they were driven, as he promised in the law, (Deut. xxx. 3, 4.) and the saints had prayed, Ps. civ. 47. Neh. i. 9. He had banished them, but he will bring them again to this place, which they could not but have an affectation for. For many years past, while they were in their own land, they were continually exposed, and terrified with the alarms of war; but now I will cause them to dwell safely. Being reformed, and returned to God, neither their own consciences within, nor their enemies without, shall be a terror to them. He will not only reprove them, but punish them, (Prayer of Jn. 43.) I will plant them in this land unsomely; not only I will certainly do it, but they shall here enjoy a holy security and repose, and shall take root here, shall be planted in stability, and not again be fixed and unshaken.

2. God will renew his covenant with them, a covenant of grace, the blessings of which are spiritual, and such a work good things in them, shall be a foundation for the great things God intends to do for them. It is called an everlasting covenant, (v. 40.) not only because God will be for ever faithful to it, but because the consequences of it will be for everlasting. For, doubtless, here the promises look farther than to Israel according to the flesh, and are sure to all believers, to every Israelite indeed. Good Christians may apply them to themselves, and to their posterity. God will have the benefit of them, and take the comfort of them.

1. God will own them for his, and make over himself to them to be theirs; (v. 38.) They shall be my people. He will make them his, by working in them all the characters and dispositions of his people, and then he will protect and guide and govern them as his people. And, to make them truly, completely, and eternally happy, I will be their God. They shall serve and worship God as theirs, and cleave to him only; and he will approve himself theirs. All he is, all he has, shall be engaged and employed for their good.

2. God will give them a heart to fear him, v. 39. That which he requires of those whom he takes into covenant with him as his people, is, that they should fear him. But such a heart as will dread his wrath, stand in awe of his authority, pay homage to him, and give him the glory due unto his name. Now what God requires of them he here promises to work in them, pursuant to his choice of them as his people. Note, As it is God's prerogative to fashion men's hearts, so it is his promise to his people to fashion theirs aright. They shall be a holy, fearful, and well-favoured people. It is repeated again, (v. 40.) I will put my fear in their hearts, work in them gracious principles and dispositions, that shall influence and govern their whole conversation. Teachers may put good things into our heads, but it is God only that can put them into our hearts, that can work in us both to will and to do.
[3.] He will give them one heart and one way. In order to their walking in one way, he will give them one heart; as the heart is, so will the way be, and as the heart shall be, so will it be; he will put a heart in all of them with themselves; one heart is the same with a new heart, Ezek. xi. 19. The heart is then one, when it is fully determined for God, and entirely devoted to God; when the eye is single, and God's glory alone aimed at; when our hearts are fixed, trusting in God, and we are uniform and universal in our obedience to him; then the heart is one, and the way one; had unless the heart is steady, the going will not be steadfast. From this promise we may take direction and encouragement to pray, with David, (Ps. lxxxvi. 11.) Unite my heart to fear thy name; for God says, I will give them one heart, that they may fear me. Secondly, They shall be all of them one with each other. All good Christians shall be incorporated into one body, and shall all, as far as they are sanctified, have a disposition to love one another; the gospel they profess, having in it the strongest inducements to mutual love, and the Spirit that dwells in them, being the Spirit of love. Though they may have different apprehensions about lesser things, they shall be all one in the great things of God, being renewed after the same image; though they may have many parts in their outward circumstances; yet all shall have one heart, and one spirit; and as to the profession of the gospel, they shall have one heart and one way. All the shall appear at last so to have been working for the good of the church, that it will be said, The Governor of the world is entirely taken up with the care of his church. [7.] These promises shall as surely be performed as the foregoing threatenings were, and the accomplishment of those, notwithstanding the security of the people, might confirm their expectation of the performance of these, notwithstanding their present despondency; (v. 42.) As I have brought all this great evil upon them, pursuant to the threatenings, and for the glory of divine justice, so I will bring upon them all this good, pursuant to the promise, and for the glory of divine mercy. He that is faithful to his threatenings will much more be so to his promises. In these promises, as in all others, he will appear to be consistent, according to the time he has affected them. The churches shall have rest after the days of adversity. [8.] As an earnest of all this, houses and lands shall again take a good price in Judah and Jerusalem, and though now they are a drug, there shall again be a sufficient number of purchasers; (v. 43, 44.) Fields shall be bought in this land, and people shall dwell therein, the cities of Judah, and of Israel too, whether they lie on mountains, or in valleys, or in the south, in all parts of the country, men shall buy fields, and subscribe evidences. Trade shall revive, for they shall have money enough to buy land with; husbandry shall revile, for these that have money shall covet to lay it out upon lands; laws shall again have their due course, for they shall subscribe evidences, and seal them. This is mentioned to reconcile Jeremiah to his new purchase; though he had bought a piece of ground and could not go to see it, yet he must believe that this was the pledge of many a purchase, and these but faint resemblances of the purer and blessed possessions in the heavenly Canaan, reserved for all those who have God's fear in their hearts, and do not depart from him.

CHAP. XXXIII.

The scope of this chapter is much the same with that of the foregoing; most of it is in reference to the rumour of the restoration of the Jews, notwithstanding the present desolation of their country, and dispersions of their people. And these promises have, both in type and tendency, a reference as far forward as to the church of Christ, which this second edition of the Jewish church was at length to resign its dignities and privileges. It is here promised, I. That the city shall be rebuilt and re-established in status quo—in its former state, v. 1-16. II. That the captives, having their sins pardoned, shall be restored, v. 7, 8. III. That this shall redound very much to the glory of God, v. 9. IV. That the country shall have both joy and fertility; as to the church, it shall be made for the coming of the Messiah, v. 15, 16. VI. That the house of David, the house of Levi, and the house of Israel, shall flourish again, and be established, and all the world, (and the kingdom of Christ,) a gospel-ministry and the gospel-church shall continue while the world stands, v. 17-26.

1. Moreover, the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah the second
JEREMIAH, XXXIII.

twine, while he was yet shut up in the court of the prison, saying,
2. Thus saith the Lord, the maker thereof, the Lord that formed it, to establish it; the Lord is his name;
3. Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not.
4. For thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, concerning the houses of this city, and concerning the houses of the kings of Judah, which are thrown down by the mounts, and by the sword;
5. They come to fight with the Chaldeans, but it is to fill them with the dead bodies of men, whom I have slain in mine anger, and in my fury, and for all whose wickedness I have hid my face from this city.
6. Behold, I will bring it health and cure, and I will cure them, and will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth.
7. And I will cause the captivity of Judah, and the captivity of Israel, to return, and will build them as at the first.
8. And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me.
9. And it shall be to me a name of joy, a praise and an honour before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them: and they shall fear and tremble for all the goodness, and for all the prosperity, that I procure unto it.

Observe here,

1. The date of this comfortable prophecy which God intrusted Jeremiah with. It is not in exact in the time, only that it was after the second siege, when things were still growing worse and worse; it was the second time; God speaketh once, yea, twice, for the encouragement of his people. We are not only so disobedient, that we have need of freeceft upon freeceft to bring us to our duty, but so distrustful, that we have need of promise upon promise to bring us to our comfort. This word, as the former, came to Jeremiah when he was in prison. Note, No confinement can deprive God's people of his presence; no locks or bars can shut out his gracious visits; nay, oftentimes as their afflictions abound, their consolations much more abound, and they have the most reviving communications of his favour then, when the world frowns upon them. Paul's sweetest epistles were those that bare date out of a prison.

II. The prophecy itself. A great deal of comfort is woven up in it for the relief of the captives, to keep them from sinking into despair. Observe,

1. Who it is that secures this comfort to them, v. 2. It is the Lord, the Maker thereof, the Lord that framed it. He is the Maker and Former of heaven and earth, and therefore has all power in his hands; so it refers to Jeremiah's prayer, ch. xxxii. 17. He is the Maker and Former of Judah, of Zion, built them at first, and therefore can rebuild them, built them for his own praise, and therefore will. He formed it, to establish it, and therefore it shall be established till those things be introduced, which cannot be shaken, but shall remain for ever. He is the Maker and Former of this promise; he has laid the scheme for Jerusalem's restoration, and he that has formed it will establish it, he that has made the promise will make it good; for Jehovah is his name; a God giving being to his promises by the performance of them. This is the name he has given to that name, (Exod. vi. 3.) a perfecting God; when the heavens and the earth were finished, and, not till then, the Creator is called Jehovah, Gen. i. 1.

2. How this comfort must be obtained and fetched in by prayer; (v. 3.) Call upon me, and I will answer thee. The prophet, having received some intimations of this kind, must for himself establish them with God for further discoveries of his kind intentions. He had prayed, (ch. xxxii. 16.) but he must pray again. Note, Those that expect to receive comforts from God must continue instant in prayer; we must call upon him, and then he will answer us; Christ himself must ask, and it shall be given him, Ps. ii. 8. I will show thee great and mighty things, give thee a clear and full prospect of them; hidden things, which, though in part discovered already, yet thou knowest not, thou canst not understand, or give credit to. Or, this may refer not only to the prediction of these things, which Jeremiah, if he desire it, shall be favoured with, but to the performance of the things themselves, which the people of God, encouraged by this prediction, must pray for. Note, Promises are given, not to supersede, but to quicken and encourage prayer. See Ezek. xxxvi. 37.

3. How deplorable the condition of Jerusalem was, which made it necessary that such comforts as these should be provided for it; and notwithstanding which, its restoration should be brought about in due time; (v. 4, 5.) The houses of this city, not excepting those of the kings of Judah, are thrown down by the mounts, or engines of batterie, and by the sword, or famine, or famine, or plagues, or all that is used, Ezek. xxxvi. 9. With his axes he shall break down thy towers. The strongest, statelyst houses, and those that were best furnished, were levelled with the ground. The fifth verse comes in a parenthesis, giving a further instance of the present calamitous state of Jerusalem. They that came to fight with the Chaldeans, to beat them off from the city, were in vain. The enemy was too strong for them, and their enemy to be more fierce and furious in their assaults, so that the houses in Jerusalem were filled with the dead bodies of men, who died of the wounds they received in sallying out upon the besiegers. God says, that they were such as he had slain in his anger, for the enemies' sword was his sword, and their anger his anger. But it seems, the men that were slain were generally such as had distinguished themselves by their wickedness, for they were the very men for whose wickedness God did now hide himself from this city; so that he was just in all he brought upon them.

4. What the blessings are which God has in store for Judah and Jerusalem, such as will redress all their grievances.

v. 7. Is the state diseased? Is it wounded? God will provide effectually for the healing of it, though the disease was thought mortal and incurable, ch. viii. 22. "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint; but, (v. 6.) I will bring it health and cure, I will prevent the death, remove the sickness, and set all to rights again." ch. xxx. 17. Note, Be not therefore so desperate, if God undertake the cure, he will effect it. The sin of Jerusalem was the sickness of it; (Isa. i. 6.) its reformation therefore will be its recovery. And the following words tell us how that is wrought; "I will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth; I will give it in due time, and give them an encouraging prospect of it in the mean time." Peace stands here for all good; peace and truth are peace according to the promise, and in pursuance of that; or, peace and truth are peace and the true religion; peace and the true worship of God, in opposition to the many falsehoods and deceits by which they have been led away from God. We may apply it more generally, and observe, [1.] That peace and truth are the great subject-matter of divine revelation. These promises here lead us to the gospel of Christ, and in that God has revealed to us peace and truth, the method of true peace; truth to direct us, peace to make us easy. Grace and truth, and abundance of both, come by Jesus Christ. Peace and truth are the life of the soul, and Christ came, that we might have that life, and might have it more abundantly. Christ rules by the power of truth, (John xviii. 17.) and by it he gives abundance of peace, Ps. 1xxvi. 7

11. The voice of joy, and the voice of gladness; the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride; the voice of them that shall say, Praise the Lord of hosts: for the Lord is good; for his mercy endureth for ever: and of them that shall bring the sacrifice of praise into the house of the Lord. For I will cause to return the captivity of the land, as at the first, saith the Lord. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Again in this place, which is desolate without man and without beast, and in all the cities thereof, shall be a habitation of shepherds causing their flocks to lie down. In the cities of the mountains, in the cities of the vale, and in the cities of the south, and in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, shall the flocks pass again under the hands of him that telleth them, saith the Lord. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel, and to the house of Judah. In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely: and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord our righteousness.

Here is a further prediction of the happy state of Judah and Jerusalem after their glorious return out of captivity, issuing gloriously at length in the kingdom of the Messiah.

1. It is promised, that the people who were long in sorrow, shall again be filled with joy. Every one concluded now, that the country should live for ever, desolate, that no beast should be found in the land of Judah, no inhabitants in the streets of Jerusalem, and, consequently, there would be nothing but universal and perpetual melancholy; (v. 10.) yet, though weeping may endure for a time, joy will return. It was threatened, (ch. vii. 34. and xvi. 9.) that the voice of joy and gladness should cease there; but here it is promised that they shall revive again, that the voice of joy and gladness should be heard there, because the captivity shall be returned; for then were their mouth filled with laughter, Ps. cxxxvi. 1, 2. (1.) There shall be common joy there, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride; marriages shall again be celebrated, as formerly, with songs, which in Babylon they had laid aside,

10. Thus saith the Lord, Again there shall be heard in this place (which ye say shall be desolate without man and without beast, even in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, that are desolate without man, and without inhabitant, and without beast.)

there shall be religious joy there; temple-songs shall be revived, the Lord's songs, which they could not sing in a strange land. There shall be heard, in their private houses, and in the cities of Judah, as well as in the temple, the voice of them that shall say, Praise the Lord of hosts. Note, Nothing is more pleasing to God than to have praises sung to his name, and therefore he has praised and honoured among them. This shall complete the mercy of their return and restoration, that with it they shall have hearts to be thankful for it, and give God the glory of it, the glory both of the power and of the goodness by which it is effected; they shall praise him both as the Lord of hosts, and as the God who is good, and whose name is famous among nations. (1) This, though a song of old, yet, being joined upon this occasion, will be a new song. We find this literally fulfilled at their return out of Babylon, Ezra iii. 11. They sang together in praising the Lord, because he is good, for his mercy endures for ever. (2) The public worship of God shall be diligently and constantly attended upon; They shall bring the sacrifice of praise to the house of the Lord. All the sacrifices were inferior to that which God has introduced into the New Testament, as the means of the spiritual sacrifice of humble adorations and joyful thanksgivings, the cates of our lips, (Hos. xiv. 2.) which shall please the Lord better than an ox or a bullock. The Jews say, that in the days of the Messiah all sacrifices shall cease, but the sacrifice of praise, and to these days this promise has a further reference.

(3) It is foretold, that the country, which had lain long desolate, shall be replenished and stocked again; It was now desolate, without man, and without beast; but, after their return, the pastures shall again be clothed with flocks, Ps. lxxv. 13. In all the cities of Judah and Benjamin there shall be a habitation of shepherds, v. 12, 13. This speaks, (1) The wealth of the country, after their return. It shall not be a habitation of beggars, who have nothing, but of shepherds and husbandmen, men of substance, with good stocks upon the ground they are returned to.

(2) The peace of the country. It shall not be a habitation of soldiers, nor shall there be tents and barracks set up to lodge them, but there shall be shepherd's tents; for they shall hear no more the alarms of war, nor shall there be any to make even the shepherds afraid. See Ps. cxlv. 13, 14. (3) The prosperity and peace shall tend to confirm their original plainness and simplicity, from which, in the corrupt ages, they had sadly degenerated. The seed of Jacob, in their beginning, gloried in this, that they were shepherds, (Gen. xlvi. 3.) and so they shall now be again, giving themselves wholly to that innocent employment, causing their flocks to lie down, (v. 12.) and to pass under the hands of him that tendeth them; (v. 13.) for though their flocks are numerous, they are not numberless, nor shall they omit to number them, that they may know if any be missing, and may seek after it. Note, It is the prudence of those who have ever so much of the world, to keep an account of what they have. Some think that they pass under the hand of him that tendeth them, that they may be tithed, Lev. xxvii. 32. They thus make the church what we have, when God has had his dues out of it. Now because it seemed incredible that a people, reduced as now they were, should ever recover such a degree of peace and plenty as this, here is subjoined a general ratification of these promises; (v. 14.) I will perform that good thing which I have promised. Though the promise may sometimes work slowly towards an accomplishing, yet it works sure; The days will come, though they are long in coming.

(4) To crown all these blessings which God has in store for them, here is a promise of the Messiah, and of that everlasting righteousness which he shall bring in, (v. 15, 16.) and, probably, this is that good thing, that great good thing, which, in the latter days, days that were yet to come, God would perform, as he had promised to Judah and Israel, and which their return out of captivity, and their settlement again in their own land, respected. As this promise of the Messiah is one of the famous periods, Matth. i. 17. This prediction of the Messiah we had before; (ch. xxiii. 5, 6.) and there it came in as a confirmation of the promise of the shepherds which God would set over them, which would make one think that the promise here concerning the shepherds and their flocks, which introduces it, is to be understood figuratively. Christ was a Branch of righteousness, not a Shepherd, for he grew up into David, descends from his loins, with whom the covenant of royalty was made, and is that Seed with whom that covenant should be established, so that his title is unexceptionable. As a righteous King, righteous in enacting laws, waging wars, and giving judgment; righteous in vindicating those that suffer wrong, and punishing them that do wrong; so he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. This may point at Zerubbabel in the type, who governed with equity, not as Jehoiakim had done; (ch. xxvii. 17.) but it has a further reference to him to whom all judgment is committed, and who shall judge the world in righteousness. (5) As a King that shall protect his subjects from all injury. By him Judah shall be saved from enemies, and the city Jerusalem shall dwell safely, quiet from the fear of evil, and enjoying a holiness and security of mind, in a dependence upon the conduct of this Prince of peace, this Prince of their peace. (6) As a King that shall be praised by his subjects; "This is the name whereby they shall call him;" (so the Chaldee reads it, the Syriac, and vulgar Latin.) this name of his they shall celebrate and triumph in, and by this name they shall call upon him. It may be read, more agreeably to the original, This is he who shall call her, The Lord our Righteousness, as Moses's altar is called Jehovah-nissi, (Exod. xvii. 15.) and Jerusalem, Jehovah-shammah, (Ezek. xviii. 33.) intimating that they glory in Jehovah as present with them, and their Banner; so here the city is called, The Lord our Righteousness, because they glory in Jehovah as their Righteousness, which was before said to be the name of Christ, (says Mr. Gataker.) is here made the name of Jerusalem, the city of the Messiah, the church of Christ. He it is that imparts righteousness to her, for he is made of God to us righteousness, and she, by bearing that name, professes to have her whole righteousness, not from herself, but from him. In the Lord have I righteousness and strength, (Isa. xlv. 24.) and we are made the righteousness of God in him. The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall have this name of the Messiah so much in their mouths, that they shall themselves be called by it.

17. For thus saith the Lord, David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel; 18. Neither shall the priests the Levites want a man before me, to offer burnt-offerings, and to kindle meat-offerings, and to do sacrifice continually. 19. And the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, saying, 29. Thus saith the Lord, If you can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season; 21. Then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, my ministers. 22. As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured; so will I multiply the seed of David my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me. 23. Moreover, the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, saying, 24. Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? Thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them. 25. Thus saith the Lord, If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth; 26. Then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them.

Three of God's covenants, that of royalty with David and his seed, that of the priesthood with Aaron and his seed, and that of peculiar favors with Abraham and his seed, seemed to have been all broken and lost while the captivity lasted; but it is here promised, that, notwithstanding that interruption and discontinuance for a time, they shall all three take place again, and the full accomplishment of them all shall be abundantly answered in the New Testament blessings typified by those covenants on the Jew's return from the captivity. 1. The covenant of royalty shall be secured, and the promises of it shall have their full accomplishment, in the kingdom of Christ, the Son of David, v. 17. The throne of Israel was overturned in the captivity, the crown was fallen from their head, there was not a man to sit on the throne of Israel, Jeconiah was written childless. After their return, the throne of David was restored again, and through the Messiah that this promise is performed, that David shall never want a man to sit on the throne of Israel; and that David shall have always a Son to reign upon his throne. For as long as the Man Christ Jesus sits on the right hand of the throne of God, rules the world, and rules it for the good of the church, to which he is a quickening Head, and glorified Head over all things, as long as he is King upon the holy hill of Zion, David does not want a successor, nor is the covenant with him broken. When the first-begotten was brought into the world, it was declared concerning him, that the Lord God shall give him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, Luke i. 33. But the accomplishment of this, it is promised, (1.) That the covenant with David shall be as firm as the ordinances of heaven; to the stability of which that of God's promise is compared, ch. xxxii. 35, 36. There is a covenant of nature, by which the common course of providence is settled, and on which it is founded, here called, a covenant of the day and the night, (v. 26, 25.) because that is one of the articles of it. That there shall be day and night in their season, according to the distinction put between them in the creation, when God divided between the light and the darkness, and esta-

ished their mutual succession, and a government to each, that the sun should rule by day, and the moon and stars by night, (Gen. i. 4, 5, 16,) which establishment was renewed after the flood, (Gen. viii. 22.) and has continued ever since, Ps. xii. 2. The morning and the evening have both of them their regular outgoings; (Ps. lxxiv. 8.) the day-spring knows its place, knows its time, and keeps both, so that the shadow of the evening; and while the world stands, this covenant shall not be broken, this view shall not be broken. The ordinances of heaven and earth, (of this communication between heaven and earth, the dominion of these ordinances of heaven upon the earth,) which God has appointed, (v. 25. compare Job xxxviii. 33.) shall never be disappointed. Thus firm shall the covenant of redemption be with the Redeemer—God's servant, but David our King, v. 21. This intimates, that Christ shall have a church on earth to the world's end, he shall see a seed in which he shall prolong his days till time and days shall be no more. Christ's kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and when the end cometh, and not till then, it shall be delivered up to God, even the Father. But it intimates that the condition of it in this world shall be intermixed and counteracted, preserved and subdued one to another, as light and darkness, day and night. But this is plainly taught us, that, as sure as we may be, that though the sun will set to-night, it will rise again to-morrow morning, whether we live to see it or no, so sure we may be, that though the kingdom of the Redeemer in the world may for a time be clouded and eclipsed by corruptions and perse- cutions, yet the sun will shine on with the same bright and everlasting lustre, in the time appointed. (2.) That the seed of David shall be as numerous as the host of heaven, the spiritual seed of the Messiah, that shall be born to him by the efficacy of his gospel, and his Spirit working with it; from the womb of the morning he shall have the dew of their youth, to be his willing people, Ps. cx. 3. Christ's seed are not, as David's were, his successors, but his subjects; yet the day is coming when they also shall reign with him; (v. 22.) As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, so will I multiply the seed of David, so that there shall be no danger of the kingdom's being extinct, or extirpated for want of heirs. The children are numerous; and if children, then heirs. 2. The covenant of priesthood shall be secured, and the promises of it shall have their full accomplishment. This seemed likewise to have been forgotten during the captivity, when there was no altar, no temple-service, for the priests to attend upon; but this also shall revive. It did so; immediately upon their coming back to Jerusalem, there were priests and Levites ready to offer burnt-offerings, and to do sacrifice continually, (Ezra ii. 2, 3.) as he here promised, v. 18. But though this priesthood soon grew corrupt, the covenant of Levitical offices was unfurled, (as appears Mal. ii. 8.) and in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans it came to a final period. We must therefore look elsewhere for the performance of this word, that the covenant with the Levites, the priests, God's ministers, shall be as firm, and last as long, as the covenant with the land and the house of David, v. 33. But that this covenant was performed, (1.) In the priesthood of Christ, which surpasses that of Aaron, and is the substance of that shadow. While that great High Priest of our profession is always appearing in the presence of God for us, presenting the virtue of his blood by which he made atonement in the lances of his intercession, it may truly be said, that the Levites do not want a man to sit on the throne of their office, but, Heb. viii. 3. He is a Priest for ever. The establishment of the priesthood is called a covenant of peace, (Num. xxv. 12.) of life and peace, Mal. ii. 5. Now we are sure that this covenant is not broken, or in the least weakened, while Jesus Christ is himself our Life and our Peace. This covenant of priesthood is here again and again joined with that of royalty, for Christ is a Priest upon his throne, as Mclchize-dek. (2.) In a settled gospel-ministry. While there are faithful ministers to preside in religious assemblies, and to instruct the people in the practice of prayer and praise, the priests, the Levites do not want successors, and such as have obtained a more excellent ministry. The apostle makes those that preach the gospel, to come in the room of those that served at the altar, 1 Cor. ix. 13, 14. (3.) In all true believers, who are a holy priesthood, a royal priesthood, (1 Pet. ii. 5, 9.) who are made to our God and Father by the blood of Jesus Christ, spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God, and themselves, in the first place, living sacrifices. Of these Levites, this promise here must be understood, (v. 22.) that they shall be as numerous as the sand of the sea, the same that is promised concerning Israel in general; (Gen. xxviii. 17.) for all God's spiritual Israel are spiritual priests, Rev. v. 9, 10.—vii. 9.

3. The covenant of peculiarity likewise shall be secured, and the promises of that covenant shall have their full accomplishment in the gospel-Israel. Observe, (1.) How this covenant was looked upon as broken during the captivity, v. 24. God asks the prophet, "Hast thou not heard, and dost thou not consider, what this people have spoken?" Either the enemies of Israel, who triumphed in the extermination of a people that had made such a noise in the world, or the unbelieving Israelites themselves, this people, among whom thou dwellest, they have broken covenant with God, and then quarrelled with him, as if he had not dealt faithfully with them. The two families which the Lord hath chosen, Israel and Judah, whereas they were but one when he chose them, he hath even cast them off. Thus have the despightful thing been done toward the house of Jacob, after all the privileges of raising my people, as if it were a privilege of no value at all. The neighbouring nations despised them, as now no more a nation, but the ruins of a nation, and looked upon all their honour as laid in the dust; but, (2.) See how firm the covenant stands notwithstanding, as firm as that with day and night; sooner will God suffer day and night to cease, than he will cast away the seed of Jacob. This oft referring of the prophet to the flesh, for they are cast away, but to the Christian church, in which all these promises were to be lodged, as appears by the apostle's discourse, Rom. xi. 1, 8c. Christ is that Seed of David, that is to be perpetual Dictator to the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and as this people shall never want such a King, so this King shall never want such a people. Christianity shall continue to the dominion of Christ, and the subjection of Christians to him, till day and night come to an end. And as a pledge of this, that promise is again repeated, I will cause their captivity to return; and, having brought them back, I will have mercy on them. Whom this promise refers to, appears, Gal. vi. 16, where all that walk according to the gospel-rule, are made to be the Israel of God, on whom peace and mercy shall be.

CHAP. XXXIV.

In this chapter, we have two messages which God sent by Jeremiah. 1. One, to foretell the fate of Zedekiah king of Judah, that he should fall into the hands of the king of Babylon, that he should live a captive, and should at length die a shameful death. 2. One, to foretell the doom both of prince and people for their treacherous dealings with God, in bringing back their servants into bondage, whom they had released according to the law, and so playing fast and loose with God. They had walked at all adventures with God, (v. 8. 11.) and therefore God would walk at all adventures with them, in bringing the Chaldean army upon them again, then when they began to hope that they were got clear of them, v. 12. 22.

1. The word which came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, (when Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and all his army, and all the kingdoms of the earth of his dominion, and all the people, fought against Jerusalem, and against all the cities thereof,) saying, 2. Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, Go, and speak to Zedekiah king of Judah, and tell him; Thus saith the Lord. Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire. 3. And thou shalt not escape out of his hand, but shalt surely be taken, and delivered into his hand; and thine eyes shall behold the eyes of the king of Babylon, and he shall speak with thee mouth to mouth, and thou shalt go to Babylon. 4. Yet hear the word of the Lord, O Zedekiah king of Judah; Thus saith the Lord of thee, Thou shalt not die by the sword; 5. But thou shalt die in peace: and with the burnings of thy fathers, the former kings which were before thee, so shall they burn odours for thee; and they will lament thee, saying, Ah, lord! for I have pronounced the word, saith the Lord. 6. Then Jeremiah the prophet spake all these words unto Zedekiah king of Judah in Jerusalem, 7. When the king of Babylon's army fought against Jerusalem, and against all the cities of Judah that were left, against Lachish, and against Azekah: for these defenced cities remained of the cities of Judah.

This prophecy concerning Zedekiah was delivered to Jeremiah, and by him to the parties concerned, before he was shut up in the prison, for we find this prediction here made the ground of his commitment, as appears by the recital of some passages out of it, ch. xxxvii. 4. Observe, 1. The time when this message was sent to Zedekiah; it was when the king of Babylon, with all his forces, some out of all the kingdoms of the earth that were within his jurisdiction, fought against Jerusalem, and the cities thereof. (v. 1.) 2. The reason why he gave this message to the prince, for we find the Chaldeans having been so long the enemies of Judah, that they were thought by the prophet so much the greater power, he thought it fit to use this argument with them, the cities that now remained, and yet held out, are named, (v. 7.) Lachish and Azekah. This intimates that things were now brought to the last extremity, and yet Zedekiah obstinately stood it out, his heart being hardened to his destruction.

2. The message itself that was sent him. (1.) Here is a threatening of Zedekiah. He is told that again, which he had been often told before, that the city shall be taken by the Chaldeans, and burnt with fire, (v. 2.) that he shall himself fall into the enemy's hands, shall be made a prisoner, shall be brought before that furious prince Nebuchadnezzar, and be carried away captive into Babylon; (v. 3.) yet Ezekiel prophesied that he should not see Babylon; not only, for his eyes were put out, Ezek. xii. 13. This Zedekiah brought upon himself from God by his other sins, and from Nebuchadnezzar by his breaking of his faith with him.
(2.) Here is a mixture of mercy. He shall die a captive, but he shall not die by the sword, he shall die a natural death; (v. 4.) he shall end his days with some comfort, shall die in peace, v. 5. He never had been one of the worst of the kings, but we are willing to hope that what evil he had done in the sight of the Lord, he repented of it in his captivity, as Manasseh had done, and it was forgiven to him; and, God being reconciled to him, he might truly be said to die in peace. Note, A man may die in peace, and yet die as a sinner; they that are none of God's people, have not a good conscience, though they have a true conversation.

It will be a testimony of the Lord to him, that he had led his days with some reputation, more than one would expect, all things considered. He shall be buried with the burnings of his fathers, with the respect usually shown to their kings, especially those that had done good in Israel. It seems, in his captivity he had conducted himself so well toward his own people, that they were willing to do him this honour, and toward Nebuchadnezzar, that he suffered it to be done. If Zedekiah had continued in his prosperity, perhaps he would have grown worse, and would have departed at last without being desired; but his afflictions wrought such a change in him, that his death was looked upon as a great loss. It is better to live and die penitent in a prison, than live and die impenitent in a palace. They will lament the enemy, the Lord will lament the man, because the Lord Jehezekiel had not, ch. xxii. 18. The Jews say that they lamented thus over him, Alas! Zedekiah is dead, who drank the dregs of all the ages that went before him, who suffered for the sins of his ancestors, the measure of iniquity being filled up in his days. They shall thus lament him, saith the Lord, for I have pronounced the word; and what God hath spoken shall without fail be made good.

3. Jeremiah's faithfulness in delivering this message; though he knew it would be ungrateful to the king, and might prove, as indeed it did, dangerous to himself, (for he was clapped up for it,) yet he spake all these words to Zedekiah, v. 6. It is a mercy to great men to have those about them that will deal faithfully with them, and tell them the evil consequences of their evil courses, that they may reform, and live.

8. This is the word that came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, after that the king Zedekiah had made a covenant with all the people which were at Jerusalem, to proclaim liberty unto them; 9. That every man should let his man-servant, and every man his maid-servant, being a Hebrew or a Hebrewess, go free; that none should serve himself of them, to wit, of a Jew his brother. 10. Now, when all the princes, and all the people which had entered into the covenant, heard that every one should let his man-servant, and every one his maid-servant, go free, that none should serve themselves of them any more; then they obeyed, and let them go. 11. But afterwards they turned, and caused the servants, and the handmaids, whom they had let go free, to return, and brought them into subjection for servants and for handmaids. 12. Therefore the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 13. Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, I made a covenant with your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen, saying, 14. At the end of seven years, let ye go every man his brother a Hebrew, which hath been sold unto thee; and, when he hath served thee six years, thou shalt let him go free from thee: but your fathers hearkened not unto me, neither inclined their ear. 15. And ye were now turned, and had done right in my sight, in proclaiming liberty every man to his neighbour; and ye had made a covenant before me in the house which is called by my name: 16. But ye turned, and polluted my name, and caused every man his servant, and every man his handmaid, whom ye had set at liberty at their pleasure, to return, and brought them into subjection, to be unto you for servants and for handmaids. 17. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Ye have not hearkened unto me, in proclaiming liberty every one to his brother, and every man to his neighbour; behold, I proclaim a liberty for you, saith the Lord, to the sword, to the pestilence, and to the famine; and I will make you to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth. 18. And I will give the men that have transgressed my covenant, which have not performed the words of the covenant which they had made before me, when they cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof, 19. The princes of Judah, and the princes of Jerusalem, the eunuchs, and the priests, and all the people of the land, which passed between the parts of the calf; 20. I will even give them into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life; and their dead bodies shall be for meat unto the fowls of the heaven, and to the beasts of the earth. 21. And Zedekiah king of Judah, and his princes, will I give into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life, and into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which are gone up from you. 22. Behold, I will command, saith the Lord, and cause them to return to this city; and they shall fight against it, and take it, and burn it with fire: and I will make the cities of Judah a desolation without an inhabitant.

We have here another prophecy upon a particular occasion, the history of which we must take notice of, as necessary to give light to the prophecy. 1. When Jerusalem was closely besieged by the Chaldean army, the princes and people agreed upon a reformation in one instance, and that was concerning their servants.

2. The law of God was very express, that those of their own nation should not be held in servitude above seven years, but after they had served one apprenticeship, they should be discharged, and have their liberty; yea, though they had sold themselves to servitude for the payment of their debts, or though they were sold by the judges for the punishment of their crimes. This decision was put between their brethren and strangers, that those of other nations, taken in war, or bought with money, might be held in perpetual slavery, they and their;
but we, to us must serve but for twenty years and the longest. This God calls the covenant that he had made with them, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt, v. 13, 14. This was the first of the judicial laws which God gave them, (Exod. xxii.
2.) and there was good reason for that law.
(1.) God had put honour upon that nation, and he would have them thus to preserve the honour of it that they were good, and to make sure he put it to other nations. (2.) God had brought them out of slavery in Egypt, and he would have them thus to express their grateful sense of that favour, by letting those go, to whom their houses were houses of bondage, as Egypt had been to their forefathers.
That deliverance is therefore mentioned here, (v.
13.) as the ground of that law. Note, God's compassion to his people leads us should engage ourselves towards our hard breth'ren with mercy and release: as we are released, forgive as we are forgiven, and relying as we are relieved. And this is called a covenant:
for our performance of the duty required is the condition of the continuance of the favours God has bestowed.

2. This law they and their fathers had broken;
their worldly profit swayed men with the time God's command or covenant. When these servants had lived seven years with them, they understood their business, and how to apply themselves to it, better than they did when they first came to them,
and therefore they would then by no means part with them, though God himself by his law had made them free; Your fathers hearkened not to me in this matter, (v. 14.) so that from the days of their fathers they had been in this trespass; and they thought they might do it, because their fathers did it, and their servants had by disuse lost the benefit of the provision God made for them; whereas against an express law, especially against an express law of God, no custom, usage, or prescription, is to be admitted in plea. For this sin of theirs, and their fathers, God now brought them into servitude, and justly.

3. When they were besieged, and closely shut in, by the army of the Chaldeans, they, being told of their fault in this matter, immediately reformed, and let go all their servants that were entitled to their freedom by the law of God; as Pharaoh, who, when the plague was upon him, consented to let the people go, and bound themselves in a covenant to do so. (1.) The prophets faithfully admonished them to returning their sins. From them they heard that they should let their Hebrew servants go free,
v. 10. They might have read it themselves in the book of the law, but did not, or did not heed it, therefore the prophets told them what the law was. See what need there is of the preaching of the word;
people must hear the word preached, because they will not make the use they ought to make of the word. (2.) The law of God had been so long concurred in this reformation. The king, and the princes, and all the people, agreed to let go their servants, whatever loss or damage they might sus-tain by so doing. When the king and princes led in this good work, the people could not for shame but follow. The example and influence of great men would go very far towards extinguishing the most invertebrate corruptions. (3.) They bound themselves by a solemn oath and covenant, that they would do this, whereby they engaged themselves to God and one another. Note, What God has bound us to by his precept, it is good for us to bind ourselves to by our promise. This covenant was very solemn: it was made in a sacred place, made before me, in the house which is called by my name, (v.
15.) in the special presence of God, the tokens of which, in the temple, ought to strike an awe upon them, and make them very sincere in their appeals and promises. It was to be bound by oath, as by the law of God, cut a calf in two, and flained between the pieces of the sacrifice, in allusion to this federal rite, Gen. xv. 17. Note, That we may effectually oblige ourselves to our duty, it is good to alarm ourselves with the apprehensions of the terror of the wrath and curse to which we expose ourselves, if we live in the contempt of it, that wrath which will cut sinners asunder; (Matt. xxi.
31.) and serious signs may be of use to make the impression of it likewise in our hearts. (4.) They conformed themselves herein to the command of God, and their covenant with him; they did let their servants go, though at this time, when the city was besieged, they could very ill spare them.
Thus they did right in God's sight, v. 15. Though it was their trouble that drove them to it, yet he was well pleased with it; and if they had ever discovered it of wrong to the poor, to their poor servants, it might have been a lengthening of their tranquillity, Dan. iv. 27.

II. When there was some hope that the siege was raised, and the danger over, they repented of their repentance, undid the good they had done, and forced the servants they had released, into their respective services again. 1. The king of Babylon's army was now gone out from them, v. 21. Pharaoh was bringing an army of Egyptians to oppose the progress of the king of Babylon's victories, upon the tidings of which the Chaldeans raised the siege for a time, as we find, ch. xxxviii. 5. They departed from Jerusalem. See how ready God was to put a stop to his judgments, upon the first instance of reformation, so slow is he to anger, and so swift is he to show mercy. Though he, in his displeasure, might let their servants go free, God let them go free. 2. When they began to think themselves safe from the besiegers, they made their servants come back into subjection to them, (v. 11.) and again, v. 16. This was a great abuse to their servants, to whom servitude would be more irksome, after they had had some taste of the pleasures of liberty. It was a great shame to themselves, that they could not keep in a good mind when they were in it. But it was especially an affront to God; in doing this, they ful-lated his name, v. 16. It was a contempt of the command he had given them, as if that were of no force at all, but they might either keep it, or break it, as they thought fit. It was a contempt of the covenant they had made with him, and of that wrath which they had incurred by breaking that covenant. It was jesting with God Almighty, as if he could be imposed upon by fallacious promises, which, when they had gained their point, they would look upon themselves no longer obliged by. It was lying to God with their mouths, and flattering him with their tongues.
It was likewise a contempt of the judgments of God, and setting them at defiance; and the course of them was stopped a little and interrupted, they would never proceed again, and the judgment would never be reviv'd. Whereas re
It." Note, (1.) As confidence in God is a hopeful presage of approaching deliverance, so security in sin is a sadomen of approaching destruction. (2.) When judgments are removed from a people before they have done their work, leave them, but leave them unhambled and unformed, (it is cum animo revertendo—with a design to return,) they do but retreat to come on again with so much the greater force. (3.) When God judges, he will overrule and deal with them for their long-endured cheat upon their own souls; for the Lord, whose name is Jealous, is a jealous God. It is here threatened with an observable air of displeasure against them, 1. That since they had not given liberty to their servants to go where they pleased, God would give all his judgments liberty to take their course against them without control; (v. 17.) You have professed your proclaimed liberty to your servants. Though they had done it, (v. 16.) yet they might truly be said not to have done it, because they did not stand to it, but undid it again; and Pactum non dietur quod non perseveratum—That is not said to be done, which does not last. The righteousness that is forsaken and turned away from, shall be forgotten, and not mentioned, any more than if it had never been; (v. 18.) The more you talk of it, you show your intention against it. Therefore I will proclaim a liberty for you; I will discharge you from my service, and put you out of my protection, which those forfeit that withdraw from their allegiance. You shall have liberty to choose which of these judgments you will be cut off by, sword, famine, or jeaulices; such a liberty as was offered to David, which put him into a great service. An xvi. 14. The enemy in subjection to the law of God put themselves into subjection to the wrath and curse of God. But this shows what liberty to sin really is—it is but a liberty to the sorest judgments. 2. That, since they had brought their servants back into confinement in their houses, God would make them to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth, where they shall live in servitude, and being strangers, could not expect the privileges of free-born subjects. 3. That, since they had broken the covenant which they ratified by a solemn imprecation, God would bring on them the evil which they imprecated upon themselves, in case they should break it. Out of their own mouth will he judge them, and so shall their doom be; the penalty of their bond shall be recovered of them with compound interest; for so some read v. 18. "I will make the men which have transgressed my covenant, as the calf which they cut in pieces; I will divide them in sunder as they divided it in sunder." 4. That, since they would not let go their servants out of their hands, God would deliver them into the hands of those that hated them. Even the princes and nobles, both of Judah and Jerusalem, of the country and of the city; the eunuchs, chamberlains, or great officers of the court, the priests, and all the people, they had all dealt treacherously with God, and therefore shall all be involved in the common ruin, without exception; (v. 19.) they shall all be given into the hands of their enemies, that seek, not their wealth only; or their service, but their life. And they shall have what they seek; but neither shall God bring it upon them again; "They are now gone up from you, and your sight is over for the present, but I will command them to face about as they were; they shall return to this city, and take it and burn it."
days, we, our wives, our sons, nor our daughters; 9. Nor to build houses for us to dwell in; neither have we vineyard, nor field, nor seed: 10. But we have dwelt in tents, and have obeyed, and done according to all that Jonadab our father commanded us. 11. But it came to pass, when Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came up into the land, that we said, Come, and let us go to Jerusalem for fear of the army of the Chaldeans, and for fear of the army of the Syrians: so we dwell at Jerusalem.

This chapter is of an earlier date than many of those before; for what is contained in it, was said and done in the days of Jehoiakim (v. 1) but then it must be in the latter part of his reign, for it was after the king of Babylon with his army came up into the land, (v. 11.) which seems to refer to the invasion mentioned 2 Kings xxiv. 2. which was upon occasion of Jehoiakim's rebelling against Nebuchadnezzar, and destroying his temple. When Moses was no more, upon this rebellious people, he continued to deal with them by his prophets, to turn them from sin, that his wrath might turn away from them. He endeavours it by the example of the Rechabites, a family that kept distinct by themselves, and were no more numbered with the families of Israel than they with the nations. They were originally Kenites, as appears 1 Chronicles ii. 55. These are the descendants of Hammah, the daughter of Rechab. The Kenites, at least, at least of these of them that gained a settlement in the land of Israel, were of the posterity of Hobab, Moses' father-in-law, Judg. i. 16. We find them separated from the Amalekites, 1 Samuel xv. 6. See Judg. iv. 17. One family of these Kenites had their denomination from Rechab: his son, or a lineal descendant from him, was Jonadab, a man famous in his time for wisdom and piety. He flourished in the days of Jehu, king of Israel, near 300 years before this; for there we find him counted by that rising prince, when he affected to appear zealous for God, (2 Kings x. 15, 16.) which he thought nothing more likely to confirm people in the opinion of, than to have so good a man as Jonadab ride in the chariot with him. Now we are told,

The habits of Rechab, probably by his last will and testament, in writing, and duly executed, charged his children, and his posterity after him, throughout all generations, religiously to observe; and we have reason to think that they were such as he himself had all his days observed.

1. He forbad them to drink wine, according to the law of the Nazarites. Wine is indeed given to make glad the heart of man, and we are allowed the sober and moderate use of it; but we are so apt to abuse it, and get hurt by it, and a good man, who has his heart made continually glad with the light of God's countenance, has so little need of it for that purpose, (Ps. iv. 6, 7.) that it is a commendable piece of self-denial, either not to use it at all, or very sparingly and medicinally, as Timothy used it, 1 Timothy v. 23. 2. He appointed them to dwell in tents, and not to build houses, or rent, or occupy either, v. 7. This was an instance of strictness and mortification beyond what the Nazarites were obliged to. Tents were mean dwellings, so that this would teach them to be humble; they were cold dwellings, so that this would teach them to be hardy, and not to indulge the body; they were moveable dwellings, so that this would teach them not to think of settling or taking root any where in this world. They must dwell in tents all their days, not for a few days, as Israel at the feast of tabernacles, not only in summer days, as soldiers and shepherds, but all their days. They must from the beginning accustom themselves to endure hardiness, and then it would be no difficulty to them, no, not under the decays of old age.

Now why did Jonadab prescribe these rules of living to his posterity? It was not merely to show his strictness and holiness, which were so conspicuous in him, by imposing upon them what he thought fit; but it was to show his wisdom, and the real concern he had for their welfare, by recommending to them what he knew would be beneficial to them; yet, not tying them by any oath or vow, or under any penalty, to observe these rules, but only advising them to conform to this discipline, as far as they found it for education, yea, and even for the preservation of necessity, as here, v. 11. He prescribed these rules to them, (1.) That they might preserve the ancient character of their family, which, however looked upon by some with contempt, he thought its real reputation. His ancestors had addicted themselves to a pastoral life, (Exod. ii. 16.) and he would have his posterity keep to it, and not degenerated from it, as Israel had done, with their abominations, and by their posterity despised. (2.) That they might comport with their lot, and bring their mind to their condition, Moses had put them in hopes that they should be naturalized; (Num. x. 32.) but, it seems, they were not, they were still strangers in the land, (v. 7.) had no inheritance in the land, and therefore it was their aim, which was a good reason why they should accustom themselves to hard fare and hard lodging: for strangers, such as they were, must not expect to live as the landed men, so plentifully and delicately. Note, It is our wisdom and duty to accommodate ourselves to our place and rank, and not aim to live above it. What has been the lot of our fathers, why may we not be content that it should be our lot, and live according to it? Mind not high things. (3.) That they might not be envied and disturbed by their neighbours among whom they lived. If they that were strangers should live great, rank estates, and fare sumptuously, the natives would grudge them their abundance, and have a jealousy upon them, as the Philistines had upon Isaac, (Gen. xxvi. 14.) and would seek occasions to quarrel with them; and yet he thought it would be their prudence to keep low, for that would be the way to continue long; to live meanly, that they might live many days in the land where they were strangers.

Note, Humility and contentment in obscurity are often the best policy, and men's surest protection. (4.) That they might be armed against temptations to luxury and sensuality, the prevailing sin of the age and place they lived in. Jonadab saw a general corruption of manners; the drunkards of Ephraim abounded, and he was afraid lest his children should be debauched and ruined by them: and therefore he obliged them to live by themselves, retired in the country; and that, they might not run into any unlawful pleasures, to deny themselves the use even of lawful delights. They must be very sober, and, to exercise a dominion over them, and contribute to the health both of mind and body, and to their living many days and easy ones, and such as they might reflect upon with comfort in the land where they were strangers. Note, The consideration of this, that we are strangers and pilgrims, should oblige us to abstain from all fleshly lusts, to live above the things of sense, and look upon them with a generous and gracious contempt. (5.) That they might be prepared for times of trouble and calamity. Jonadab might, without a spirit of prophecy, foresee the destruction of a people so wretchedly de generated, and he would have his family provided, that, if they could not in the peace thereof, yet even in the midst of the troubles thereof, they might have peace. Let them therefore have little to lose, and then losing times would be the less dreadful to them: let them sit loose to what they had, and then they might with less pain be strip'd of it. Note, Those are but imperfect persons, who are mortified to the world, and live a life of self denial.

(6.) That in general they might learn to live by rule, and under discipline. It is good for us all to do so, and to teach our children to do so. Those that have lived long, as Jonadab, probably, had done, when he left this charge to his posterity, can speak by experience of the vanity of the world, and the danger of its allurements. It is part of their wisdom and pleasures, and therefore ought to be regarded, when they were those that come after them to stand upon their guard.

II. We are here told how strictly his posterity observed these rules, v. 8—10. They had in their respective generations all of them obeyed the voice of Jonadab their father, had done according to all that he commanded them. They drank no wine, though they dwelt in a country where there was plenty of it; their wives and children drank no wine, for they that are temperate themselves should take care that all under their charge should be so too. They built no houses, tilled no ground, but lived upon the products of their cattle. This they did, partly in obedience to their ancestor, and out of a fear that in charge of his name and authority, and partly from the experience they themselves had of the benefit of living such a mortified life. See the force of tradition, and the influence that antiquity, example, and great names have upon men, and how that which seems very difficult, will by long usage and custom become easy, and in a manner natural.

Now, (1.) As to one of the particulars he had given them in charge, we are here told how in a case of necessity they dispensed with the violation of it; (v. 11.) When the king of Babylon came into the land, with his army, though they had hitherto dwelt in tents, they now quitted their tents, and came and dwelt in Jerusalem, and in such houses as they could furnish themselves with there. Note, The rules of a strict discipline must not be made too strict; but, as an addition of a particular, the necessity of the case calls for it; which, therefore, in making vows of that nature, it is wisdom to provide expressly for, that the way may be made the more clear, and we may not afterward be forced to say, It was an error, Eccles. v. 6. Commands of that nature are to be understood with such limitations. These Rechabites had tempted God, and not trusted him, if they had not used proper means for their own safety in a time of common calamity, notwithstanding the law and custom of their family.

(2.) As to the other particular, we are here told how, notwithstanding the greatest urgency, they religiously adhered to it. Jeremiah took them into the temple, (v. 2.) into a prophet's chamber there, rather than into the chamber of the princes, that joined to it, because he had a message from God, which would look more like itself, when it was delivered in the chambers of a man of God. There he not only asked the Rechabites, Whether they drank any wine, but he set pots full of wine before them, and cups to drink out of, made the temptation as strong as possible, and said, "Drink ye wine, ye shall have it on free cost; ye have broken one of the rules of your order, in coming to live at Jerusalem; why may ye not break this too, and what more suffer, as they there do?" But they peremptorily refused, they all agreed in the refusal; "No, we will drink no wine; for with us it is against the law." The prophet knew very well they would deny it, and when they did, urged it no further, for he saw they were steadfastly resolved. Note, Those temptations are of no force with men of confirmed sobriety, which yet daily overcome such as, notwithstanding their convictions, are of no resolution in the paths of virtue.

12. Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, saying, 13. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Go and tell the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, Will ye not receive instruction to hearken to my words? saith the Lord. 14. The words of Jonadab the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons not to drink wine, are performed; for unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment: notwithstanding I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; but ye hearkened not unto me. 15. I have sent also unto you all my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them, saying, Return ye now every man from his evil way, and amend your doings, and go not after other gods to serve them, and ye shall dwell in the land which I have given to you and to your fathers; but ye have not inclined your ear, nor hearkened unto me. 16. Because the sons of Jonadab the son of Rechab have performed the commandment of their father, which he commanded them; but this people hath not hearkened unto me: 17. Therefore thus saith the Lord God of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will bring upon Judah, and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, all the evil that I have pronounced against them: because I have spoken unto them, but they have not heard; and I have called unto them, but they have not answered. 18. And Jeremiah said unto the house of the Rechabites, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Because ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, and kept all his precepts, and done according unto all that he hath commanded you; 19. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before me for ever.

The trial of the Rechabites' constancy was intended but for a sign; now here we have the application of it.

1. The Rechabites' observance of their father's charge to them is made use of as an aggravation of the disobedience of the Jews to God. Let them see it, and be ashamed. The prophet asks them, in God's name, "Will ye not at length receive instructions? v. 13. Will nothing affect you? Will nothing fasten upon you? Will nothing prevail to discover sin and duty to you? You see how obedient the Rechabites are to their father's commandment; (v. 14.) but you have not inclined your ear to me," (v. 15.) though one might much more reasonably expect that the people of God should have obeyed him, than that the sons of Jonadab should have obeyed him; and the aggravation is very high, for,
(1. The Rechabites were obedient to one who was but a man like themselves, who had but the wisdom and power of a man, and was only the father of their flesh; but the Jew that was disobedient to an infinite and eternal God, who had an absolute authority over them, as the Father of their spirits.
(2. Jonadab was long since dead, and was ignorant of them, and could neither take cognizance of their disobedience to his orders, nor give correction for it: but God lives for ever, to see how his laws are observed, and is in a readiness to revenge all disobedience.
(3. The Rechabites were never put by them, or, of any of their obligations to their fathers; but God often sent his prophets to his people, to put them in mind of their duty to him, and yet they would not do it. This is insisted on here as a great aggravation of their disobedience; “I have myself spoken to you, rising early, and speaking, by the written word and the dictates and admonitions of conscience;” (v. 14.) nay, “I have sent unto you all my servants the prophets, men like yourselves, whose terrors shall not make you afraid, rising up, early and sending them, (v. 15.) and yet all in vain.”
(4. Jonadab never did that for his seed, that God had done for his people; he left them a charge, but left them no estate to bear the charge; but God had given his people a good land, and promised them, that, if they would be obedient, they should still have it in their hands, in the possession and interest and interest to be obedient, and yet they would not hear, they would not hearken. (5. God did not tie up his people to so much hardship, and to such instances of mortification, as Jonadab obliged his seed to; and yet Jonadab’s orders were obeyed, and God’s were not.
2. Judgments are threatened, as often before, against Judah and Jerusalem, for their disobedience thus aggravated. The Rechabites shall stand up in judgment against them, and shall condemn them; for they very punctually performed the commandment of their father, and continued and persevered in their obedience to it; (v. 16.) but this people, this rebellious and gainsaying people, have not hearkened unto me; and therefore, (v. 17.) because they have not obeyed the precepts of the word, and the commandments of the law that I have bring upon them, by the Chaldean army, all the evil pronounced against them, both in the law and in the prophets, for I have spoken to them, I have called to them; spoken in a still small voice to them that were near, and called aloud to them that were at a distance; tried all ways and means to convince and reduce them; spoken by my word, called by my providence, both for the same purpose, and yet all to no purpose; they have not heard, nor answered.
3. Mercy is here promised to the family of the Rechabites, for their steady and unanimous adherence to the laws of their house; though it was only for the shaming of Israel that their constancy was tried; yet, being unshaken, it was found unto praise, and honour, and glory. And God takes occasion from it to tell them that he had favours in reserve for them, (v. 18.) and that he should have the comfort of them. It is promised, (1.) That the family should continue as long as any of the families of Israel, among whom they were strangers and sojourners. It shall never want a man to inherit what they had, though they had no inheritance to leave them. Note, Sometimes those that have the smallest estates have the most need both of piety, but he that sends mouths, will be sure to send meat.
(2. That religion shall continue in the family;
He shall not want a man to stand before me, to serve me.” Though they are neither priests nor Levites, nor appear to have had any post in the temple-service, yet, in a constant course of regular devotion, they stand before God, to minister to him. Note, [1.] The greatest blessing that can be entailed upon a family, is, to have the worship of God kept up in it from generation to generation. [2.] Temporance, self-denial, and mortification to the world, do very much befriend the exercises of piety, and help to transmit the observance of them to posterity. The more dead we are to the delights of sense, the better we are disposed for the service of God; but nothing is more fatal to the entail of religion in a family than pride and luxury.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Here is another expedient tried to work upon this heedless and unawake people, but it is tried in vain. A roll of a book is thus introduced, containing a table of the all of the sermons that Jeremiah had preached to them, that they might be put in mind of what they had heard, and might the better understand it, when they had it all before them at one view. Now here we have,
1. The writing of this roll by Baruch, as Jeremiah dictated it, v. 1. 4. II. The reading of the roll by Baruch to all the people publicly on a fast-day, (v. 5.) afterward by Baruch to the princes privately, (v. 11.) and lastly by Jehudi to the king, v. 20. 21. III. The burning of the roll by the king, with orders to prosecute Je-emiah and Baruch, v. 22. 23. IV. The writing of another roll, with large additions, particularly of Jehoiakim’s doom for burning the former, v. 27. 32.

And it came to pass, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, that this word came unto Je-emiah from the Lord, saying, 2. Take thee a roll of a book, and write therein all the words that I have spoken unto thee against Israel, and against Judah, and against all the nations, from the day I spake unto thee, even to the day of the death of Josiah even up to this day. 3. It may be that the house of Judah will hear all the evil which I purpose to do unto them; that they may return every man from his evil way, that I may forgive their iniquity and their sin. 4. Then Jeremiah called Baruch the son of Neriah: and Baruch wrote from the mouth of Je-emiah all the words of the Lord, which he had spoken unto him, upon a roll of a book.
5. And Jeremiah commanded Baruch, saying, I am shut up; I cannot go into the house of the Lord: Therefore go thou, and read in the roll, which thou hast written from my mouth, the words of the Lord, in the ears of the people, in the Lord’s house upon the fast-day: and also thou shalt read them in the ears of all Judah that come out of their cities. 7. It may be they will present their supplication before the Lord, and will return every one from his evil way: for great is the anger and the fury that the Lord hath pronounced against this people.
8. And Baruch the son of Neriah did according to all that Jeremiah the prophet commanded him, reading in the book the words of the Lord in the Lord’s house.

In the beginning of Ezekiel’s prophecy we meet with a roll written in vision, for the discovery of the things therein contained to the prophet himself, who was to receive and digest them, Ezek. ii. 10.—
JEREMIAH, XXXVI.

1. Here in the latter end of Jeremiah's prophecy, we meet with a roll, written in fact, for the discovery of the things contained therein to the people, who were to hear and give heed to them; for the written word and other good books are of great use both to ministers and people. We have here,

1. The command which God gave to Jeremiah to write a summary of his sermons, of all the reproofs and all the warnings he had given in God's name, to bring forth his name, to be a preacher, in the 12th year of Josiah, to this day, which was in the 4th year of Jehoiakim, v. 2, 3. What had been spoken only, must now be written, that it might be reviewed, and that it might spread the further, and last the longer. What had been spoken at large, with frequent repetitions of the same things, perhaps in the same words, (which has its advantage one way,) must now be contracted, and put into less compass, that the several parts of it might be better compared together, which has its advantage another way. What they had heard once, must be recapitulated, and rehearsed to them again, that what was forgotten, might be called to mind again, and what made no impression upon them at the first hearing, might take hold of them when it was written, for men, perhaps already written, and published in single sermons, must be collected into one volume, that none might be lost. Note, The writing of the scripture is by divine appointment. And observe the reason here given for the writing of this roll; (z. 3.) It may be, the house of Judah will hear. Not that the divine presence was at any uncertainty concerning, or concern'd, with that there is no peradventure; God knew certainly that they would deal very treacherously, Isa. xlvi. 8. But the divine wisdom directed to this as a proper means for attaining the desired end; if it failed, they would be the more inexcusable. And though God foresaw that they would not hear, he did not tell the prophet so, but prescribed this method to him as a probable one, to be used, in the hope that they would hear, that is, heed and regard what they heard, take notice of it, and mix faith with it: for otherwise our hearing of the word, though an angel from heaven were to read or preach it to us, would stand us in no stead. Now observe here, (1.) What, it is hoped, they will thus hear; All that evil which I purpose to do unto them. Note, The serious consideration of the evil that will come, and of its extent, will be a proper means for bringing us to God. (2.) What, it is hoped, will be produced thereby; They will hear, that they may return every man from his evil way. Note, The conversion of sinners from their evil courses, is that which ministers should aim at in preaching; and people hear the word in vain, if that point be not gained with them. To what purpose do we hear the evil God will bring upon us for sin, if we continue, notwithstanding, to do evil against him? (3.) Of what vast advantage their consideration and conversion will be to them; that I may forgive their iniquity. This plainly implies the honour of God's justice, with which it is not consistent that he should forgive the sin, unless the sinner repent of it, and turn from it; but it plainly exposes to us the mercies of God, how ready he is to forgive sin, and only waits till the sinner be qualified to receive forgiveness, and therefore uses various means to bring us to repentance, that he may forgive.

2. The instructions which Jeremiah gave to Baruch his scribe, pursuant to the command he had received from God, and the writing of the roll accordingly, v. 4. Jeremiah's name, as it should seem, he had not the pen of a ready writer, he could not write fast, or fair, so Baruch could, and therefore he made use of him as his amanuensis. St. Paul wrote but few of his epistles with his own hand, Gal. vi. 11. Rom. xvi. 22. God dispenses his gifts variously; some have a good faculty of speaking, others at writing, and neither can say to the other, We have no need of you, 1 Cor. xii. 21. The Spirit of God dictated to Jeremiah, and he to Baruch, who had been employed by Jeremiah as trustee for him in his purchase of the field, (ch. xxxix. 12.) and now was advanced to be his scribe under his supervision, and to assist him as far as he might, may credit the Apocryphal book that bears his name, he was afterward himself a prophet to the captives in Babylon. Those that begin low are likely to rise high, and it is good for those that are designed for preachers to have their education under preachers, and to be serviceable to them. Baruch wrote what Jeremiah dictated in a roll of a book, on pieces of parchment, or vellum, which were joined together, the top of one to the bottom of the other, so making one long scroll, which was rolled perhaps upon a staff.

3. The orders which Jeremiah gave to Baruch, to read what he had written to the people. Jeremiah, it seems, was shut up, and could not go to the house of the Lord himself; (v. 5.) though he could deliver a message, and make no occasion to send officers to seize him, (v. 26.) yet he was forbidden by the king to appear in the temple, was shut out thence, where he might be serving God, and doing good, which was as bad to him as if he had been shut up in a dungeon. Jehoiakim was ripening apace for ruin, when he thus silenced God's faithful messengers. But when Jeremiah could not go to the temple himself, he sent one that was deputed by him, to read to the people what he would himself have said. Thus St. Paul wrote epistles to the churches which he could not visit in person. Nay, it was what he himself had often said to them. Note, The writing and repeating of the sermons that have been preached, may contribute very much toward the answering of the great ends of preaching. What we have heard and known, it is good for us to hear again, that we may know it better. To preach and write the same thing is safe and profitable, and many times very necessary, (Phil. iii. 1.) and we must be glad to hear a good word from God, though we have it, as here, at second-hand. Both ministers and people must do what they can, when they cannot do what they would. One of the ends of delivering the reading of the roll, he said, It may be, they will hear, and return from their evil ways, v. 3. When Jeremiah orders it, he says, It may be, they will pray, (they will present their supplications before the Lord,) and will return from their evil way. Note, Prayer to God for grace to turn us, is necessary in order to our turning; and those that are convinced by the word of God of the necessity of returning to him, will present their supplications to him for that grace. And the consideration of this, that great is the anger which God has pronounced against us for sin, should quicken both our prayers and our endeavours. Now according to these orders, Baruch did read out of the book the words of the Lord, whenever there was a holy convocation, v. 8.

9. And it came to pass, in the fifth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, in the ninth month, that they proclaimed a fast before the Lord to all the people in Jerusalem, and to all the people that came from the cities of Judah unto Jerusalem.

10. Then read Baruch in the book the words of Jeremiah in the house of the Lord, in the chamber of Gemariah the son of Shaphan the scribe, in the higher court, at the entrance of the new gate of the Lord's house, in the ears of all the people. 11. When Michaiah the son of Gemariah, the son of Shaphan, had heard out of the book all the words of the Lord, 12. Then he went down into the king's house, into the scribe's chamber, and, lo, all the princes sat there, even Elishama the scribe, and Delaiah the son of Shemaiah, and Elnathan the son of Achbor, and Gemariah the son of Shaphan, and Zedekiah the son of Hananiah, and all the princes. 13. Then Michaiah declared unto them all the words that he had heard, when Baruch read the book in the ears of the people. 14. Therefore all the princes sent Jehudi the son of Nethaniah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Cushi, unto Baruch, saying, Take in thy hand the roll wherein thou hast read in the ears of the people, and come. So Baruch the son of Neriah took the roll in his hand, and came unto them. 15. And they said unto him, Sit down now, and read it in our ears. So Baruch read it in their ears. 16. Now it came to pass, when they had heard all the words, they were afraid both one and other, and said unto Baruch, We will surely tell the king of all these words. 17. And they asked Baruch, saying, Tell us now, How didst thou write all these words at his mouth? 18. Then Baruch answered them, He pronounced all these words unto me in the book, and I wrote them with ink in the book. 19. Then said the princes unto Baruch, Go hide thee, thou and Jeremiah, and let no man know where ye be.

It should seem that Baruch had been frequently reading out of the book, to all companies that would give him the hearing, before the most solemn reading of it altogether, which is here spoken of; for the directions were given about it in the 4th year of Jehoiakim, whereas this was done in the 5th year, v. 9. But some think that the writing of the book fair over, took up so much time, that it was another year ere it was perfected; and yet perhaps it might not be past a month or two, he might begin in the latter end of the 4th year, and finish it in the beginning of the 5th, for the 5th year refers to the conversion of the year in general, not to the year of that reign. Now observe here,

1. The government appointed a public fast to be religiously observed, (v. 9.) on account either of the distress they were brought into by the army of the Chaldeans, or of the want of rain; (ch. xiv. 1.) They proclaimed a fast to the people; whether the king and princes, or the priests, ordered this fast, is not certain; but it was plain that God by his providence called them aloud to it. Note, Great shows of piety and devotion may be found even among those, who, though they keep up these forms of godliness, are strangers and enemies to the power of it. But what will such hypocritical services avail? Fasting, without reforming, and turning away from sin, will never turn away the judgments of God, Jonah iii. 10. Notwithstanding this fast, God proceeded in his controversy with these people.

2. Baruch repeated Jeremiah's sermons publicly in the house of the Lord, on the fast-day. He stood in a chamber that belonged to Gemariah, and out of a window, or balcony, read to the people that were in the court, v. 10. Note, When we are speaking to God, we must be willing to hear from him; and therefore on days of fasting and prayer, it is requisite that the word be read and preached. Hearken unto me, that God may hearken unto you, Judg. ix. 7. For our help in sinning out mercy and grace, it is proper that we should be told of sin and duty.

3. An account was brought of this to the princes that attended the court, and were now together in the secretary's office, here called the scribe's chamber, v. 12. It should seem, though the princes had called the people to meet in the house of God, to fast, and pray, and hear the word, they did not think fit to attend there themselves, which was a sign that it was not from a principle of true devotion, but merely for fashion-sake, that they proclaimed this fast. We are willing to hope that it was not with a bad design, to bring Jeremiah into trouble for his preaching, but with a good design, to bring the princes into trouble for their sins, that Michaiah and others of the princes had read; for his father Gemariah so far countenanced Baruch, as to lend him his chamber to read out of. Michaiah finds the princes sitting in the scribe's chamber, and tells them, they had better have been where he had been, hearing a good sermon in the temple, which he gives them the heads of. Note, When we have heard some good word that has affected and edified us, we should be ready to communicate it to others, that did not hear it, for their edification. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaks.

4. Baruch is sent for, and is ordered to sit down among them, and read it all over again to them, (v. 14, 15.) which he readily did, not complaining that he was weary with his public work, and therefore desiring to be excused, nor upbraiding the princes with their being absent from the temple, where they might have heard it when he read it there. Note, God's ministers must become all things to all men, if by any means they may gain some; must comply with them in circumstances, that they may secure the substance. St. Paul preached privately to them of reputation, Gal. ii. 5. The princes were for the present much affected with the word that was read to them, v. 16. Observe, They heard all the words, they did not interrupt him, but very patiently attended to the reading of the whole book; for otherwise how could they make a competent judgment of it? And when they had heard all, they were afraid, were all afraid, one as well as another; like Felix, who trembled at Paul's reasons. The reproves were just, the threatenings true, and the predictions now in a fair way to be fulfilled; so that, laying all together, they were in a great consternation. We are not told what impressions this reading of the roll made upon the people, (v. 10.) but the princes were put into a fright by it, and (as some read it) looked one upon another, not knowing what to say. They were all convinced that it was worthy to be regarded; but not knowing what to do, they agreed to tell the king of all these words; and if he think fit to give credit to them, they will, otherwise not, no, though it were to prevent the ruin of the nation. And yet at the same time they knew the king's mind so far, that they advised Baruch and Jeremiah to hide themselves, (v. 19.) and to shift as they could for their own safety, expecting no other than that the king, instead of being convinced, would be exasperated. Note, It is common for sinners, under convictions, to endeavour to shake them off, by shifting off the prosecution of them to other persons, as these princes here, or to another more convenient season, as Felix.

6. They asked Baruch a trilling question, How he wrote all those words? v. 17. They suspected there was something extraordinary in it; but Baruch gives them a plain answer, that there was nothing but what was common in the manner of the writing—Jeremiah dictated, and he wrote, v. 18. But thus it is common for those who would avoid the convictions of the word of God, to start needless questions about the way and manner of the inspiration of it.

20. And they went in to the king into the court, but they laid up the roll in the chamber of Elishama the scribe, and told all the words in the ears of the king. 21. So the king sent Jehudi to fetch the roll; and he took it out of Elishama the scribe's chamber: and Jehudi read it in the ears of the king, and in the ears of all the princes which stood beside the king. 22. Now the king sat in the winter-house, in the ninth month: and there was a fire on the hearth burning before him. 23. And it came to pass, that when Jehudi had read three or four leaves, he cut it with the pen-knife, and cast it into the fire that was on the hearth, until all the roll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth. 24. Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, neither the king, nor any of his servants that heard all these words. 25. Nevertheless, Elhanan, and Delaiah, and Gemariah, had made intercession to the king that he would not burn the roll; but he would not hear them.

But the king commanded Jerahmeel (the son of Hammalech, and Seraiah the son of Azriel, and Shelemiah the son of Abdeel, to take Baruch the scribe, and Jeremiah the prophet: but the LORD hid them. 27. Then the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah, (after that the king had burnt the roll, and the words which Baruch wrote at the mouth of Jeremiah,) saying, 28. Take thee again another roll, and write in it all the former words that were in the first roll, which Jehoiakim the king of Judah hath burnt. 29. And thou shalt say to Jehoiakim king of Judah, Thus saith the LORD, Thou hast burnt this roll, saying, Why hast thou written therein, saying, The king of Babylon shall certainly come and destroy this land, and shall cause to cease from thence man and beast? 30. Therefore thus saith the LORD of Jehoiakim king of Judah, He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David; and his dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost. 31. And I will punish him, and his seed, and his servants, for their iniquity; and I will bring upon them, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and upon the men of Judah, all the evil that I have pronounced against them: but they hearkened not. 32. Then took Jeremiah another roll, and gave it to Baruch the scribe, the son of Neriah; who wrote therein, from the mouth of Jeremiah, all the words of the book which Jehoiakim king of Judah had burnt in the fire: and there were added besides unto them many like words.

We have traced the roll to the people, and to the princes, and here we are to follow it to the king; and we find,

1. That, upon notice given him concerning it, he sent for it, and ordered it to be read to him, v. 20, 21. He did not desire that Baruch would come and read it himself, who could read it more intelligently, and with more authority and affection, than any one else; nor did he order one of his princes to do it; (though it had been no disparagement to the greatest of them) much less would he vouchsafe to read it himself; but Jehudi, one of his pages now in waiting, who was sent to fetch it, is bid to read it, who, perhaps, scarcely knew how to make sense of it. But those who thus despise the word of God, will soon make it appear, as this king here did, that they hate it too, and have not only low but ill thoughts of it.

2. That he had not patience to hear it read through as the princes had, but that, when he had heard three or four leaves read, in a rage, he cut it with his pen-knife, and threw it piece by piece into the fire, that he might be sure to see it all consumed, v. 22, 23. This was a piece of as daring impiety as a man could lightly be guilty of, and a most impudent affront to the God of heaven, whose message this was. (1.) Thus he showed his impatience of reproof; being resolved to persist in sin, he would by no means bear to be told of his faults. (2.) Thus he showed his indignation at Baruch and Jeremiah; he would have cut them in pieces, and burned them, as he had cut them in his reach, when he was in this passion. (3.) Thus he showed his obstinate resolution, never to comply with the designs and intentions of the warnings given him; he will do what he will, whatever God by his prophets says to the contrary. (4.) Thus he foolishly hoped to defeat the threatenings denounced against him; as if God knew not how to execute the sentence when the roll was gone in which it was written. (5.) Thus he thought he had effectually provided that the things contained in this roll should spread no further, which was the care of the chief-priest concerning the gospel, Acts iv. 17. They had told him how this roll had been read to the people and to the princes; “But,” (says he) “I will take a course that shall prevent its being read any more.” See what enmity and enmity and unkindness against God in the carnal mind, and wonder at the patience of God, that he bears with such indignities done to him!

3. That neither the king himself, nor any of his princes, were at all affected with the word; They were not afraid, (v. 24.) no, not those princes that trembled at the word, when they heard it the first time, v. 16. So soon, so easily, do good impressions wear off! They showed some concern till they saw how light the king made of it, and then they shook off all that concern. They rent not their garments, as Josiah did; this Jehoiakim's own father did, when he had the book of the law read to him, though it was not so particular as the contents of this roll were, nor so immediately adapted to the present posture of affairs.

4. That there were three of the princes who had so much sense and grace left as to interpose for the preventing of the burning of the roll, but in vain, v. 17. If they had from the first prevented that crime themselves, as they ought to have done, affected with the word, perhaps they might have brought the king to a better mind, and have persuaded him to bear it patiently; but frequently they that will not do the good they should, put it out of their own power to do the good they would.

5. That Jehoiakim, when he had thus in effect bowed under the power of the prophet, was arrested, as it were in a way of revenge, now that he thought he had got the better, signed a warrant for the apprehension of Jeremiah and Baruch, God's ministers; v. 26. But the Lord hid them. The princes bid them abscond, (v. 19.) but it was neither the princes' care for them, nor theirs for themselves, that secured them, it was under the divine protection that they were safe. Note, God will find out a shelter for his people, though their persecutors be ever so industrious to get them into their power, till their hour be come; nay, and then he will himself be their hiding-place.

6. That Jeremiah had orders and instructions to write in another roll the same words that were written in the roll which Jehoiakim had burnt, v. 27, 28. Note, Though the attempts of hell against the word of God have not been always successful, yet it shall fall to the ground, nor shall the unbeliever of man make the word of God of no effect. Enemies may prevail to burn many a Bible, but they cannot abolish the word of God, can neither extinguish it, nor defeat the accomplishment of it. Though the tables of the law were broken, they were renewed again; and so out of the ashes of the roll that was burnt, there rose another Phoenix. The word of the Lord endures forever.

7. That the king of Judah, though a king, was severely reckoned with by the King of kings for this indignity done to the written word. God noticed what it was in the roll that Jehoiakim took so much offence at. Jehoiakim was angry, because it was written therein, saying, Surely the king of Babylon shall come and destroy this land, v. 29. And did not he come, and during two years burnt the robes, and go far toward the destroying of this land? He did so, (2 Chron. xxxvi. 6, 7.) in his third year, Dan. i. 1. So that God and his prophets were therefore become his enemies, because they told him the truth, told him of the desolation that was coming, but at the same time putting him into a fair way to prevent it. But if this be the thing he takes so much amiss, let him know, (4.) That the wrath of God shall come upon him and his family, in the first place, by the hand of Nebuchadnezzar; he shall be cut off, and in a few weeks his son shall be dethroned, and exchange his royal robes for prison garments, so that he shall have none to sit upon the throne of David; the glory of that illustrious house shall be eclipsed, and die, in him; his dead body shall lie unburied, on which condition he shall be buried with the burial of an ass, that is, thrown into the next ditch; it shall lie exposed to all weathers, heat and frost, which will occasion its putrifying, and becoming loathsome, the sooner.

"Not that his body" (says Mr. Gataker) "could be sensible of such usage, or himself, being deceased, of aught that should befoul his body; but that the king's body being in a condition shall show a hideous spectacle, and a horrid monument of God's heavy wrath and indignation against him, unto all that should behold it." Even his seed and his servants shall fare the worse for their relation to him, (v. 31.) for they shall be punished, not for his int

quity, but so much the sooner for their own. (3.) That all the evil pronounced against Judah and Jerusalem in that roll, shall be brought upon them. Though the copy be burnt, the original remains in the divine counsel, which shall again be copied out after another manner in bloody characters. Note, There is no escaping of God's judgments by struggling with them; who ever hardened his heart against God, and prospered?

Lastly, That, when the roll was written anew, there were added to the former many like words, (v. 32.) many more threatenings of wrath and vengeance; for since they will yet walk contrary to God, he will hear the former words bitter. Note, As God is in one mind, and none can turn him, so he has still more arrows in his quiver; and those who contend with God's woes, do but prepare for themselves heavier of the same kind.

CHAP. XXXVII.

This chapter brings us very near the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, for the story of it lies in the latter end of Zedekiah's reign; we have in it, CHAP. XXXVII. 1. A general idea of the bad character of that reign, v. 1, 2. II. The message which Zedekiah, notwithstanding, sent to Jeremiah to desire his prayers, v. 3. III. The flattering hopes which the people had expected, that the Chaldeans would quit the siege of Jerusalem, v. 5. IV. The assurance God gave them by Jeremiah, (who was now at liberty, v. 4.) that the Chaldean army should renew the siege, and take the city, v. 5, 6, 7, 10. V. The imprisonment of Zedekiah, under pretence that he was a deserter, v. 11. 15. VI. The kindness which Zedekiah showed him when he was a prisoner, v. 16, 21. 1. A king Zedekiah, the son of Josiah, A. 847 was reigned instead of Coniah the son of Jehoiakim, whom Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon made king in the land of Judah.

2. But neither he, nor his servants, nor the people of the land, did hearken unto the words of the Lord, which he spake by the prophet Jeremiah. 3. And Zedekiah the king sent Jehucal the son of Shelemiah, and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, to the prophet Jeremiah, saying, Pray now unto the Lord our God for us. 4. Now Jeremiah came in and went out among the people; for they had not put him into prison.

5. Then Pharaoh's army was come forth out of Egypt: and when the Chaldeans that besieged Jerusalem heard tidings of them, they departed from Jerusalem. 6. Then came the word of the Lord unto the prophet Jeremiah, saying, 7. Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, Thus shall ye say to the king of Judah, that sent you unto me to inquire of me; Behold, Pharaoh's army, which is come forth to help you, shall return to Egypt into their own land. 8. And the Chaldeans shall come again, and fight against this city, and take it, and burn it with fire. 9. Thus saith the Lord, Deceive not yourselves, saying, The Chaldeans shall surely depart from us: for they shall not depart. 10. For though ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained but wounded men among them, yet should they rise up every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire.

Here is,

1. Jeremiah's preaching slighted, v. 1, 2. Zedekiah succeeded Coniah, or Jechoniah, and though he saw in his predecessor the fatal consequences of contemning the word of God, yet he did not take warning, nor give any more regard to it than others had done before him: Neither he, nor his courtiers, nor the people of the land, hearkened unto the words of the Lord, though they already began to be fulfilled. Note, Those have hearts wretchedly hard indeed, that see God's judgments on others, and feel them on themselves, and yet will not be humbled, and brought to heed what he says. These had proved sufficient that it was the Lord who spake by Jeremiah the prophet, and yet they would not hearken to him.

2. Jeremiah's prayers desired. Zedekiah sent messengers to him, saying, Pray now unto the Lord our God for us. He did so before; (ch. xxi. 1, 2.) and one of the messengers, Zephaniah, is the same there and here. Zedekiah is to be commended for this, and it shows that he had some good in him, some sense of his need of God's favour, and of his own unworthiness to ask it for himself, and some value for good people, and good ministers, who had an interest in Heaven. Note, When we are in distress, we ought to desire the prayers of our ministers and Christian friends, for thereby we put an honour upon prayer, and an esteem upon our brethren. Kings themselves should look upon their praying people as the strength of the nation. (Ezek. xxi. 5, 10.) And yet this does but help to condemn Zedekiah out of his own mouth. If indeed he looked upon Jeremiah as a prophet, whose prayers might avail much both for him and his people, why did he not then believe him, and hearken to the words of the Lord, which he spake by him? He desired his good prayers, but would not take his good counsel, nor be ruled by him, though he spake in God's name, and it appears by this that Zedekiah knew he did. Note, It is common for those to desire to be prayed for, who yet will not be advised; but herein they put a cheat upon themselves; for how can we expect that God should hear others speaking to him for us, if we will not hear them speaking to us from him, and for him? Many who despise prayer thus, have been in great danger of it when they are in adversity; Note, Give us of your oil. When Zedekiah sent to the prophet to pray for him, he had better have sent for the prophet to pray with him; but he thought that below him: and how can they expect the comforts of religion, who will not stoop to the services of it?

3. Jerusalem flattered by the retreat of the Chaldean army from it. Jeremiah was now at liberty, (v. 4.) he went in and out among the people, might freely speak to them, and he spoken to by them. Jerusalem also, for the present, was at liberty, v. 5. Zedekiah, though a tributary to the king of Babylon, had entered into a private league with Pharaoh king of Egypt, (Ezek. xvii. 15.) pursuant to which, when the king of Babylon came to chastise him for his league with Egypt, Zedekiah, no more in person, after that great defeat which Nebuchadnezzar gave him in the reign of Jehoiakim, (2 Kings xxv. 7.) yet sent some forces to relieve Jerusalem when it was besieged; upon notice of the approach of which, the Chaldeans raised the siege, probably not for fear of them, but in policy, to fight them at a distance, before any of the Jewish forces could join them. But this showed the Chaldeans resolved to themselves to hope that Jerusalem was delivered for good and all out of the hands of its enemies, and that the storm was quite blown over. Note, Sinners are commonly hardened in their security by the intermissions of judgments, and the slow proceedings of them; and those who will not be awakened by the word of God, may justly be lulled asleep by the providence of God.

4. Jerusalem threatened with the return of the Chaldean army, and with ruin by it. Zedekiah sent to Jeremiah to desire him to pray for them, that the Chaldean army might not return; but Jeremiah was a sinner, to pray for the recovery of his ruin, and he continued in that course, and it went on; and that it was but a folly for them to expect peace, for God had begun a controversy with them, which he would make an end of; This saith the Lord, deceive not yourselves, v. 9. Note, Satan himself, though he is the great deceiver, could not deceive us, if we did not deceive ourselves; and thus sinners are their own destroyers by being their own deceivers; of which this is an application, that they are so frequently warned of it, and cautioned not to deceive themselves; and they have the word of God, the great design of which is to undeceive them. Jeremiah uses no dark metaphors, but tells them plainly,

(1.) That the Egyptians shall retreat, and either give back, or be forced back, into their own land, (Ezek. xxi. 9.) and which was said of old, (Isa. xxx. 7.) and is here said again, v. 7. That the Egyptians shall help in vain; they shall not dare to face the Chaldean army, but shall retire with precipitation Note, If God help us not, no creature can. As no power can prevail against God, so none can avail without God, nor counteract his departures from us.

(2.) That the Chaldeans shall return, and shall renew the siege, and prosecute it with more vigour than ever. They shall not depart for good and all, v. 9. They shall come again; (v. 8.) they shall fight against the city. Note, God has the sovereign command of all the hosts of men, even of those that know him not, that own him not, and they are all made to serve his purposes. He directs their marches, their counter-marches, their retreats, their returns, as it pleases him; and furious armies, like stormy waves, in all their motions are fulfilling his word.

(3.) That Jerusalem shall certainly be delivered into the hand of the Chaldeans! They shall take it, and burn it with fire, v. 8. The sentence passed upon it shall be executed, and they shall be the executors. "O but (say they) "the Chaldeans and the Egyptians shall not be able to stand against us; the enterprise is impracticable;" "And though they have," says the prophet, "may, thou hadst given their army, so that many were slain, and all the rest wounded, yet those wounded men should rise up, and burn this city," v. 10. This is designed to denote that the doom passed upon Jerusalem is irrevocable, and its destruction inevitable; it must be laid in ruins, and these Chaldeans are the men that must do it, and it is now in vain to think of evading the stroke, or contending with it. Note, Whatever instruments God has determined to make use of in any service for him, whether of mercy or judgment, they shall accomplish that for which they are designed, whatever incapacity or disability they may lie under, or be reduced to. These by whom God has resolved to work in his present service, they shall be the same that shall destroy, and they shall be, yea, though they were all wounded; for as when God has work to do, he will not want instruments to do it with, though they may seem far to seek; so when he has chosen his instruments, they shall do the work, though they may seem very unlikely to accomplish it.

11. And it came to pass, that when the army of the Chaldeans was broken up from Jerusalem for fear of Pharaoh's army,
Then Jeremiah went forth out of Jerusalem to go into the land of Benjamin, to separate himself thence in the midst of the people.

13. And when he was in the gate of Benjamin, a captain of the ward was there, whose name was Irijah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Hananiah; and he took Jeremiah the prophet, saying, Thou fallen away to the Chaldeans.

14. Then said Jeremiah, It is false; I fall not away to the Chaldeans. But he heartened not to him: so Irijah took Jeremiah, and brought him to the princes.

15. Wherefore the princes were wroth with Jeremiah, and smote him, and put him in prison in the house of Jonathan the scribe; for they had made that the prison. 16. When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the cabins, and Jeremiah had remained there many days; 17. Then Zedeckiah the king sent, and took him out; and the king asked him secretly in his house, and said, Is there any word from the LORD? And Jeremiah said, There is: for, said he, thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon. 18. Moreover, Jeremiah said unto king Zedeckiah, What have I offended against thee, or against thy servants, or against this people, that ye have put me in prison? 19. Where are now your prophets which prophesied unto you, saying, The king of Babylon shall not come against you, nor against this land? 20. Therefore hear now, I pray thee, O my lord the king: let my supplication, I pray thee, be accepted before thee; that thou cause me not to return to the house of Jonathan the scribe, lest I die there. 21. Then Zedeckiah the king commanded that they should commit Jeremiah into the court of the prison, and that they should give him daily a piece of bread out of the bakers' street, until all the bread in the city were spent. Thus Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

We have here a further account concerning Jeremiah, who relates more passages concerning himself than any other of the prophets; for the histories of the lives and sufferings of God's ministers have been very serviceable to the church, as well as their preaching and writing.

I. We are here told that Jeremiah, when he had an opportunity for it, attempted to retire out of Jerusalem into the country; (v. 11, 12.) When the Chaldeans had broken up from Jerusalem, because of Pharaoh's army, and of the multitude of Reasons who were avanc ing towards them, Jeremiah determined to go into the country, and (as the margin reads it) to slip away from Jerusalem in the midst of the people, who, in that interval of the siege, went out into the country to look after their affairs there; he endeavoured to steal away in the crowd, for, though he was a man of great eminence, he could well reconcile himself to obscurity; though he was one of a thousand, he was content to be lost in the multitude, and buried alive in a corner, in a cottage. Whether he designed for Anathoth or no, does not appear; his concerns might call him thither, but his neighbours there were such as, unless they were mended since, (ch. xi. 21.) might discountenance him from coming among them; or he might intend to hide himself somewhere where he was not known, and fulfi his own wish, (ch. xi. 2.) Oh that I had in the wilderness a lodging place! Jeremiah found he could do no good in Jerusalem, he laboured in vain among there; and therefore he determined to leave them. Note, There are times when it is the wisdom of good men to retire into privacy, to enter into the chamber, and shut the doors about them, (Isa. xxvi. 20.)

II. That in this attempt he was seized as a deserter, and committed to prison; (v. 13.—15.) He was in the gate of Benjamin, so far he had gained his point, when a captain of the ward, who, probably, had the charge of that gate, in order to keep them, and took him into custody. He was the grandson of Hananiah, who, the Jews say, was Hananiah the false prophet, who contested with Jeremiah, (ch. xxviii. 16.) and that this young captain had a spite to Jeremiah upon that account. He could not arrest him without some pretence, and that which he charges upon him is, Thou fallen away to the Chaldeans; an account of what the Chaldeans were now gone off, Jeremiah could not reach them: or if he could, who would go over to a baffled army? Jeremiah, therefore, with good reason, and with both the confidence and the mildness of an innocent man, denies the charge, "It is false, I fall not away to the Chaldeans, I am going upon my own lawful occasions." Note, It is no new thing for the church's best friends to be represented as in the interest of her worst enemies; thus have the blackest characters been put upon the fairest, purest minds, and, in such a malicious world as this is, innocence, nay, excellency itself, is no fence against the basest calumny. When at any time we are thus falsely accused, we may do as Jeremiah did, boldly deny the charge, and then commit our cause to him that judges righteously. Jeremiah's protestation of his integrity, though he be a prophet, a man of God, a man of honour and sincerity, though he is a priest, and is ready to say it in verbo sacerdotis—on the word of a priest, is not regarded; but he is brought before the privy-council, who, without examining him and the proofs against him, but upon the base, malicious insinuation of the captain, fell into a passion with him, they were wroth; and what justice could be expected from men thus affected? what would you, would hear no reason? They beat him, without any regard had to his coat and character, and then put him in prison, in the worst prison they had, that in the house of Jonathan the scribe; either it had been his house, and he had quitted it for the inconveniences of it, but it was thought good enough for a prison; or it was now his house, and perhaps he was a rigid severe man, that made it a house of cruel bondage to his prisoners. Into this prison Jeremiah was thrust, into the dungeon, which was dark and cold, damp and dirty, the most uncomfortable, unheathful place in it; in the cells or cabins, there he must lodge, among which there is no choice, for they are all alike miserable lodging places; there Jeremiah remained many days, and, for aught appears, it might remain many more; and then it may be thought that the inhabitants of the prison have dealt more severely to him. See what a world this is! The wicked princes, who are in rebellion against God, lie at ease, lie in state, in their palaces, while godly Jeremiah, who is in the service of God, lies in pain, in a loathed dungeon. It is well that there is a world to come!

III. That Zedeckiah at length sent for him, and showed him kindness, and probably, not till the Chaldean army was returned, and had laid hard siege to the city; when their vain hopes, with which they fed themselves, (and in confidence of which
The death; for a petition Thus "14) had re-enslaved their servants, ch. xxxiv. 11.) were all vanished, then they were in a greater confusion and consternation than ever; "O then" (says Zedekiah) "send in all haste for the prophet; let me have some talk with him. When the Chaldæans were withdrawn, he only sent to the prophet to pray for him; but now that they had again invested the city, he sent for him to consult him. Thus gracious will men be when pangs come upon them!

1. The king sent for him to give him private audience as an ambassador from God. He asked him secretly in his house, being ashamed to be seen in his company, "Is there any word from the Lord? v. 15. They give me no comfort! Canst thou give us any hopes that the Chaldæans shall again retire?" Note, Those that will not hearken to God's admonitions when they are in prosperity, would be glad of his consolations when they are in adversity, and expect that his ministers should then speak words of peace to them; but how can they expect it? What have they to do with peace? Jeremiah's life and comfort are in Zedekiah's hand, and he has now a petition to present to him for his favour, and yet, having this opportunity, he tells him plainly, that there is a word from the Lord, but no word of comfort for him or his people; Thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon. If Jeremiah had consulted with flesh and blood, he would have given him a plausible answer, and though he would not have dissuaded him from making his request, yet he would have told him the worst at this time; what occasion was there for it, when he had so often told it him before? But Jeremiah was one that had obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful, and would not, to obtain mercy of man, be unfaithful either to God or to his prince; he therefore tells him the truth, the whole truth. And, since there was no reason why he might not be true, and in vain attempt to make Zedekiah believe the worst of his condition, he tells him the worst of his own, and he might provide to make the best of bad. Jeremiah takes this occasion to upbraid him and his people with the credit they gave to the false prophets, who told them that the king of Babylon should not come at all, or when he was withdrawn, should not come again against them, v. 17. "There sat down your prophets, who told you that you should have peace." Note, Those who deceive themselves with groundless hopes of mercy, will justly be upbraided with it when the event has undeceived them.

2. He improved this opportunity for the presentating of a private petition, as a poor prisoner, v. 18, 19. It was not in Jeremiah's power to reverse the sentence God had passed upon Zedekiah, but it was in Zedekiah's power to reverse the sentence which the princes had given against him; and therefore, since he thought him fit to be used as a prophet, he would not think him fit to be abused as the worst of malefactors. He humbly expostulates with the king; "What have I offended against thee, or thy ser vant, that thou hast not caused me to come up to thee in the house of Jonathan the scribe, lest I die there? This was the language of innocent nature, some one of the duties of a good subject, grievances, and solicits for its own preservation. Though he was not at all unwilling to die of God's martyr, yet, having so fair an opportunity to get relief, he would not let it slip, lest he should die his own murderer. When Jeremiah delivered God's message, he spake, as one having authority, with the greatest boldness; but when he presented his own request, he spake as one under authority, with the greatest submissiveness; Hear me, I pray thee, O my Lord the king, let my supplications, I pray thee, be accepted before thee. Here is not a word of complaint of the princes that unjustly committed him, no offer to bring an action of false imprisonment against them, but all in a way of modest supplication to the king, to teach us that even when we act with the courage that becomes the faithful servants of God, yet we must conduct ourselves with the humility and modesty that become dutiful subjects to the government God hath set over us. A lion in God's cause, must be a lamb in his own. And we find that God gave Jeremiah favour in the eyes of the king. (1.) He gave him his request, took care that he should not die, v. 1. He ordered that he should have the liberty of the court of the prison, where he might have a pleasant walk, and breathe a free air. (2.) He gave him more than his request, took care that he should not die for want, as many did that had their liberty, by reason of the strictness of the siege; he ordered him his daily bread out of the public stock (for the prison was within the verge of the court) till all the bread was spent. Zedekiah ought to have released him, nay, to have preferred him, to have made him a privy-counsellor, as Joseph was taken from prison to be the second man in the kingdom; but he had not courage to do that,—it was well he did as he did, and it is an instance of the care God takes of his people, who are in a dungeon, to make even their confinement turn to their advantage, and the court of their prison to become as green pastures to them, and raise up such friends to provide for them, that in the days of famine they shall be satisfied. At destruction and famine thou shalt laugh.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

In this chapter, just as in the former, we have Jeremiah greatly deboxed under the frowns of the princes, and yet greatly honoured by the favour of the king; they used him as a criminal, he used him as a privy-counsellor. Here, I. Jeremiah for his faithfulness is put into the dungeon by the princes, v. 1. 6. II. At the intercession of Ehud-meelech the Ethiopian, by special order from the king, he is taken up out of the dungeon, and confined only to the court of the prison, v. 7., 13. III. He has a private conference with the king upon the present juncture of affairs, v. 14., 23. IV. Care is taken to keep that conference private, v. 24., 26.

1. THEN Sheplotiah the son of Mattan, and Gedaliah the son of Pashur, and Jucal the son of Shelemiah, and Pashur the son of Malchiah, heard the words that Jeremiah had spoken unto all the people, saying, 2. Thus saith the Lord, He that remaineth in this city shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth forth to the Chaldæans shall live; for he shall have life for a prey, and shall live. 3. Thus saith the Lord, This city shall surely be given into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which shall take it. 4. Therefore the princes said unto the king, We beseech thee, let this man be put to death; for thus he weakened the hands of the men of war that remain in this city, and the hands of all the people, in speaking such words unto them: for this man seeketh not the welfare of this people, but the hurt. 5. Then Zedekiah the king said, Behold, he is in your hand: for the king is not he that can do any thing against you. 6. Then took they Jeremiah, and cast him into the dungeon of Malchiah the son of Hammelech, that was in the court of the prison: and they let down Jeremiah with cords. And in the dungeon there was no water, but mire: so Jeremiah sunk in the mire. 7. Now when Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, one of the eunuchs, which was in the king's house, heard that they had put Jeremiah in the dungeon, (the king then sitting in the gate of Benjamin,) 8. Ebed-melech went forth out of the king's house, and spake to the king, saying, 9. My lord the king, these men have done evil in all that they have done to Jeremiah the prophet, whom they have cast into the dungeon; and he is like to die for hunger in the place where he is; for there is no more bread in the city. 10. Then the king commanded Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Take from hence thirty men with thee, and take up Jeremiah the prophet out of the dungeon, before he die. 11. So Ebed-melech took the men with him, and went into the house of the king under the treasury, and took thence old cast clouts and old rotten rags, and let them down by cords into the dungeon to Jeremiah. 2. And Ebed-melech the Ethiopian said unto Jeremiah, Put now these old cast clouts and rotten rags under thine arm-holes, under the cords. And Jeremiah did so. 13. So they drew up Jeremiah with cords, and took him up out of the dungeon: and Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

Here, 1. Jeremiah persists in his plain preaching; what he had many a time said, he still says, (v. 3.) 'This city shall be given into the hand of the king of Babylon; though it hold out long, it will be taken at last; nor would he have so often repeated this unwelcome message, but that he could put them in a certain way, though not to save the city, yet to save themselves; so that every man might have his own life given him for a prey, if he would be advised.' v. 2. Let him not stay in the city, in hopes to defend that, for it will be to no purpose, but let him go forth to the Chaldeans, and throw himself upon their mercy, before things come to extremity, and then he shall live; they will not put him to the sword, but give him quarter, Satta est prostrasse tecum.—It suffices the lion to lay his antagonist prostrate, and he shall escape the famine and pestilence, which will be the death of many within this city. Note, Those do better for themselves, who patiently submit to the rebukes of Providence, than those who contend with them. And if we cannot have our liberty, we must reckon it a mercy to have our lives, and not foolishly throw them away upon a point of honour; they may be reserved for better times.

2. The princes persist in their malice against Jeremiah. He was faithful to his country, and his trust as a prophet, though he had suffered many a time for his faithfulness; and though at this time he ate the king's bread, yet that did not stop his mouth. But his persecutors were still bitter against him, and complained that he abused the liberty he had of walking in the court of the prison, for though he could not go to the temple to preach, yet he ventured the same things in private conversation to those that came to visit him; and therefore (v. 4.) they represented him to the king as a dangerous man, disaffected to him, and that he lived under; He seeks not the welfare of this people, but the hurt: an unjust insinuation, for no man had laid out himself more for the good of Jerusalem than he had done. They represent his preaching as having a bad tendency; the design of it was plainly to bring men to repent, and turn to God, which would have been as much as any thing a strengthening to the hands both of the soldiery and of the people; and yet they represented it as weakening their hands, and discouraging them; if he did this, it was their own fault. Note, It is common for wicked people to look upon God's faithful ministers as their enemies, only because they show them what enemies they are to themselves while they continue impenitent.

3. Jeremiah, hereupon, by the king's permission, is put into a dungeon, with a view to his destruction there. Zedekiah, though he felt a conviction that Jeremiah was a prophet, sent of God, had not courage to own it, but yielded to the violence of his persecutors, v. 5. He is in your hand; and a worse sentence he could not have passed upon him. We found in Jehovah's reign, that the princes were better affected to the prophet than the king was, (g. xxxvi. 25.) but now they were more violent against him, than against Jehovah. Opening the dungeon for ruin. Had it been in a cause that concerned his own honour or profit, he would have let them know that the king is he who can do what he pleases, whether they will or no; but in the cause of God and his prophet, which he was very cool in, he basely sneaks, and truckles to them, The king is not he that can do any thing against you. Note, Those will be more assuredly guilty of this crime, though they have a secret kindness for good people, dare not own it in a time of need, nor will do what they might do, to prevent mischief designed them. The princes having this general warrant from the king, immediately put poor Jeremiah into the dungeon of Malchiah, that was in the court of the prison, (v. 6.) a deep dungeon, for they let him down into it, and was no water in it, but mire; and he sunk in the mire, up to the neck, says Josephus. They that put him here, doubtless designed that he should die here, die for hunger, die for cold, and so die miserably, die obscurely, fearing, if they should put him to death openly, the people might be affected with what he would say, and be incensed against them. Many of God's faithful witnesses have thus been privately made away, and starved to death in prisons, whose blood will be brought to account in the day of discovery. We are not here told what Jeremiah did in this distress, but he tells us himself, (Lam. iii. 55. 57.) I called upon thy name, O Lord, out of the low dungeon, and thou didst hear, saying, Fear not. Application is made to the king by an honest courtier, Ebed-melech, one of the gentlemen of the bed-chamber, in behalf of the poor sufferer. Though the princes carried on the matter as privately as they could, yet it came to the ear of this good man, who, probably, sought opportunities to do good. It may be, he came to the knowledge of it by hearing Jeremiah's moans out of the dungeon, for it is in the king's house, v. 7. Ebed-melech was an Ethiopian, a stranger to the commonwealth of Israel, and yet had in him more humanity, and more divinity too, than native Israelites had. Christ found more faith among Gentiles than among Jews. Ebed-melech lived in a wicked court, and a very corrupt, degenerate age, and yet had a great sense both of equity and piety. God has his remnant in all places, among all sorts. There were saints even in Cesar’s household. The king was now sitting in the gates of Benjamin, to try causes, and receive appeals and petitions, or perhaps holding a council of war there: thither Ebed-melech went immediately to him, for the case would not admit delay; the cause was so pressing. He had been brought true or parent till he had an opportunity of speaking to the king in private. No time must be lost when life is in danger, especially so valuable a life. He boldly asserts that Jeremiah had a great deal of wrong done him, and is not afraid to tell the king so, though they were princes that did it, though they were now present in court, and though they had the king’s war: from the very beginning. Wherefore did I Whither was brought, and innocence fee for protection but to the throne, especially when great men are its oppressors? Ebed-melech appears truly brave in this matter; he does not mince the matter; though he had a place at court, which he would be in danger of losing for his plain dealing, yet he tells the king faithfully, let him take it as he will: These men have done ill in all that they have done to Jeremiah. They dealt unjustly with him, for he had not deserved any punishment at all; and they had dealt barbarously with him, so as they used not to deal with the vilest malefactors. And they needed not to have put him to this miserable death, for if they had let him alone where he was, he was likely to die for hunger in the place where he was, in the court of the prison to which he was confined. More than this, he could have escaped the stores out of which he was to have his allowance, (ch. xxxvii. 21.) were in a manner spent. See how God can raise up friends for his people in distress, where they little thought of them, and spirit men for his service even beyond expectation! 5. Orders are immediately given for his release, and Ebed-melech takes care to see them executed. The king who, but now, durst do nothing against the princes, had his heart wonderfully changed on a sudden, and will now have Jeremiah released, in defiance of the princes, for therefore he orders no less than 50 men, and those of the life-guard, to be employed in fetching him out of the dungeon, lest the princes should raise a party to oppose it, v. 10. Let this encourage us to appear boldly for God—we must succeed here, if we can; we might have thought, that for the hearts of kings are in the hand of God. Ebed-melech gained his point, and soon brought Jeremiah the good news; and it is observable how particularly the manner of his drawing him out of the dungeon is related: (for God is not unrighteous to forget any work or labour of love which is showed to his people or ministers, no, nor any circumstance of it, Heb. vi. 10.) special notice is taken of his great tenderness in providing old soft rags for Jeremiah to put under his arm-holes, to keep the cords from hurting him, wherewith he was to be drawn up, his arm-holes being, probably, galled by the cords wherewith he was let down. Nor did he throw the rags down to him, lest they should be lost in the mire, but carefully let them down, v. 11, 12. Nor was his kindness only looked to, it was relieved, but relieved with compassion and marks of respect; all which shall be placed to account, and abound to a good account in the day of recompense. See what a good use even old rotten rags may be put to, which therefore should not be made waste of, any more than broken meat: even in the king’s house, and under the treasury too, these were carefully preserved for the use of the poor or sick. Jeremiah is brought up out of the dungeon, and is now where he was, in the court of the prison, v. 13. Perhaps Ebed-melech could have made interest with the king to have got him his discharge from thence also, now that he had the king’s ear, but he thought him safer, and better provided for there, than he would be anywhere else. God can, when he pleases, make a prison to become a refuge and hiding-place to his people in distress and danger. 14. Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took Jeremiah the prophet unto him into the third entry that is in the house of the Lord: and the king said unto Jeremiah, I will ask thee a thing; hide nothing from me. 15. Then Jeremiah said unto Zedekiah, If I declare it unto thee, wilt thou not surely put me to death? and if I give thee counsel, wilt thou not hearken unto me. 16. So the king sware secretly unto Jeremiah, saying, As the Lord liveth, that made us this soul, I will not put thee to death, neither will I give thee into the hand of these men that seek thy life. 17. Then said Jeremiah unto Zedekiah, Thus saith the Lord, the God of hosts, the God of Israel, If thou wilt assuredly go forth unto the king of Babylon’s princes, then thy soul shall live, and this city shall not be burnt with fire; and thou shalt live, and thy house: 18. But if thou wilt not go forth to the king of Babylon’s princes, then shall this city be given into the hand of the Chaldeans, and they shall burn it with fire, and thou shalt not escape out of their hand. 19. And Zedekiah the king said unto Jeremiah, I am afraid of the Jews that are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand, and they mock me. 20. But Jeremiah said, They shall not deliver thee. Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the Lord, which I speak unto thee: so it shall be well unto thee, and thy soul shall live. 21. But if thou refuse to go forth, this is the word that the Lord hath showed me: 22. And, behold, all the women that are left in the king of Judah’s house shall be brought forth to the king of Babylon’s princes: and those women shall say, Thy friends have set thee on, and have prevailed against thee: thy feet are sunk in the mire, and they are turned away back. 23. So they shall bring out all thy wives and thy children to the Chaldeans; and thou shalt not escape out of their hand, but shalt be taken by the hand of the king of Babylon: and thou shalt cause this city to be burnt with fire. 24. Then said Zedekiah unto Jeremiah, Let no man know of these words, and thou shalt not die. 25. But if the princes hear that I have talked with thee, and they come unto thee, and say unto thee, Declare unto us now what thou hast said unto the king, hide it not from us, and we will not put thee to death; also what the king said unto thee; 26. Then thou shalt say unto them, I present my supplication before the king, that he would not cause me to return to Jonathan's house, to die there. 27. Then came all the princes unto Jeremiah, and asked him: and he told them according to all these words that the king had commanded. So they left off speaking with him: for the matter was not perceived. 28. So Jeremiah abode in the court of the prison until the day that Jerusalem was taken: and he was there when Jerusalem was taken.

In the foregoing chapter, we had the king in close conference with Jeremiah, and here again, though (v. 4.) he had given him up into the hands of his enemies; such a struggle there was, in the breast of this unhappy prince, between his convictions and his corruptions. Observe,

1. The honour that Zedekiah did to the prophet. When he was newly fetched out of the dungeon, he sent for him to advise with him privately. He met him in the third entry, or, as the margin reads it, the third year. This is that which is mentioned adjuto, the house of the Lord, v. 14. In appointing this place of interview with the prophet, perhaps he intended to show a respect and reverence for the house of God, which was proper enough now that he was desiring to hear the word of God. Zedekiah would ask Jeremiah a thing: it should rather be rendered, a word; "I am here asking the word for a word of prediction, of counsel, of comfort, a word from the Lord, ch. xxxvii. 17. Whatever word thou hast for me, hide it not from me, let me know the worst." He had been told plainly what things would come to, in the foregoing chapter, but, like Balaam, he asks again, in hopes to get a more pleasing answer, as if God, who is in one mind, were altogether such a one as himself, who was in many minds.

2. The bargain that Jeremiah made with him, before he would give him his advice, v. 15. He would indent, (1.) For his own safety; Zedekiah would have him deal faithfully with him; "And if I do," says Jeremiah, "will thou not put me to death? I am afraid thou wilt;" (so some take it;) "what else can I expect when thou art led blind-fold by thine own counsel and that which is thine own? Will thou promise that thou wilt not." Not that Jeremiah was backward to seal the doctrine he preached, with his blood, when he was called to it; but, in doing our duty, we ought to use all lawful means for our own preservation; even the apostles of Christ did so. (2.) He would indent for the success of his advice, being no less concerned for Zedekiah's welfare than for his own. He is willing to give him wholesome advice, and does not upbraid him with his unkindness in suffering him to be put into the dungeon, nor bid him go and consult with his princes, whose judgments he had such a value for. Ministers must with meekness instruct even those that oppose themselves, and render good for evil. He is desirous that he should hear counsel, and receive instruction. "Will thou not hearken unto me? I have reason to fear thou wilt not, and that it is to thy own disadvantage. But, I hope in finding thee pliable at last, and now in this thy day willing to know the things that belong to thy peace." Note, Then, and then only, there is hope of sinners, when they are willing to hearken to good counsel. Some read it as spoken despairingly; "If I give thee counsel, thou wilt not hearken unto me; I have reason to fear thou wilt not, and that it is to thy own disadvantage. But, I hope in finding thee pliable at last, and now in this thy day willing to know the things that belong to thy peace." Note, Ministers have little heart to speak to those who have long and often turned a deaf ear to them. Now, as to this latter concern of Jeremiah's, Zedekiah makes him no answer, will not promise to hearken to his advice: though he desires to know what is the mind of God, yet he will reserve himself at liberty, when he does know it, to do as he thinks fit; as if it were the prerogative of a prince not to have his ruin prevented by good counsel. But, as to the prophet's safety, he promises him, upon the word of a king, and confirms his promise with an oath. It cost him much to do this, for he should have known by this time, he had no advantage should be taken of him; for "I will neither put thee to death, nor deliver thee into the hands of those that will, v. 16. This, he thought, was a mighty favour, and yet Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar, when Daniel read their doom, not only protected him, but preferred and rewarded him, Dan. ii. 29, 48. Zedekiah's oath on this occasion but of the devil, and this no advantage; "As the Lord liveth, who made us this soul, we gave me none of those thine. I dare not take away thy life unjustly, knowing that then I should forfeit my own to him that is the Lord of life." Note, God is the Father of spirits; souls are his workmanship, and they are more fearfully and wonderfully made than bodies are. The soul both of the greatest prince and of the poorest poorest is God's making; He fashioned their hearts alike easily. In all our dealings both with ourselves and others, we ought to consider this, that the living God made us these souls.

3. The good advice that Jeremiah gave him, with good reasons why he should take it, not from any prudence or politics of his own, but in the name of the Lord, the God of hosts and God of Israel; not as a statement, but as a prophecy, he advises him by all means to surrender himself and the city to the king of Babylon's princes; "Go forth to them, and make the best terms thou canst with them," v. 17. This was the advice he had given to the people, (v. 2.) and before, (ch. xxii. 9.) to submit to divine judgments, and not think of contending with them. Note, In dealing with God, that which is good counsel to the meanest, is so to the greatest, for there is no respect of persons with him. To persuade him to take this counsel, he sets before him good and evil, life and death. (1.) If he will tamely yield, he shall save his children from the sword, and Jerusalem from the flames. The white flag is yet hung out; if he will but acknowledge God's justice, he shall experience his mercy; "The city shall not be cast into the fire, and thy house. But, (2.) If he will obstinately stand it out, it will be the ruin both of his house and Jerusalem; (v. 18.) for when God judges he will overcome. This is the case of sinners with God; let them humbly submit to his grace and government, and they shall live; let them take hold on his strength, that they may make peace, and they shall make peace; but if they harden their hearts against his proposals, it will certainly be to their destruction; they must either bend or break.

4. The objection which Zedekiah made against the prophet's advice, v. 19. Jeremiah spake to him by prophecy, in the name of God, and therefore if he had had a due regard to the divine authority, wisdom, and goodness, as soon as he understood what were spoken to him, he should immediately have acquiesced in it, and resolved to observe it without disputing; but, as if it had been the dictate only of Jeremiah's prudence, he advances against it some prudential considerations of his own; but human wisdom is folly when it contradicts the divine counsels. All he suggests, is, "I am afraid, not of the Chaldeans, their princes are men of honour, but of the seed of my own people, the seed of the Chaldeans; when they see me follow them, who had so much opposed their going, they will laugh at me, and say, Art thou also become weak as water?"
Isa. xiv. 10. Now, (1.) It was not at all likely that he should be thus exposed and ridiculed, that the Chaldeans should so far gratify the Jews, or trample upon them, as to deliver them into their hands; nor that the Jews, who were themselves captives, should be in such a gay humour, as to make a jest of the misery of their prince. (2.) We often frighten ourselves from our duty by foolish, causeless, groundless fears, that are merely the creatures of our own fancy and imagination. (3.) If he should be taunted at a little by the Jews, could he not deeply and justly taunt them with their own condition and do it? Note, Those have very weak and fretful spirits indeed, that cannot bear to be laughed at for that which is both their duty and their interest. (3.) Though it had been really the greatest personal mischief that he could have imagined it to be, yet he ought to have ventured it, in obedience to God, and for the preservation of his family and city. He thought it would be looked upon as a piece of cowardice to surrender, whereas it would be really an instance of true courage cheerfully to bear a lesser evil, the mocking of the Jews, for the avoiding of a greater, the ruin of his family and kingdom.

3. The pressing importunity with which Jeremiah followed the advice he had given the king. He assures him that if he had not complied with the will of God, that which he feared would now fall upon him; (v. 20.) They shall not deliver thee, but treat thee as becomes thy character. He begs of him, after all the foolish games he had played, to manage wisely the last stake, and now at length to do well for himself; Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the Lord, because it is his voice, so it shall be well unto thee. But he tells him what would be the consequence if he would not obey. (1.) He himself would fall into the hands of the Chaldeans, as impenitent enemies, whom he might now make his friends, by throwing himself into their hands. If he must fall, he should contrive how to fall easily; "Thou shalt not escape, as thou hast hoped to do," v. 23. (2.) He would himself be chargeable with the destruction of Jerusalem, which he pretended a concern for the preservation of; "Thou shalt cause this city to be burned with fire," for by a little submission and self-denial thou mightest have prevented it. Thus subjects often suffer for the pride and wilfulness of their rulers, who should be their protectors, but prove their destroyers. (3.) Whereas he carelessly feared an unjust reproach for surrendering Jerusalem under a just reproach for standing it out, and that from wrong too, v. 22. The court-ladies who were left when Jehoiakim and Jeconiah were carried away, will now at length fall into the hands of the enemy, and they shall say, "The men of thy peace, whom thou didst consult with, and confide in, and who promised thee peace if thou wouldst be ruled by them; they have set thee up, and have encouraged thee to be bold and by the women, when all his wives and children shall be made a prey to the conquerors, v. 23. Note, What we seek to avoid by sin, will be justly brought upon us by the righteousness of God. And those who decline the way of duty, for fear of reproach, will certainly meet with much greater reproach in the way of disobedience. The fear of the wicked, it shall come upon him, Prov. x. 24.

6. The care which Zedekiah took to keep this conference private; (v. 24.) Let no man know of these words. He does not at all incline to take God's counsel, nor so much as promise to consider of it; for so intimate has he been to the calls of God, and so wilful in the ways of sin, that though he has good counsel given him, he seems to be given up to walk in his own counsels. He has nothing to object against Jeremiah's advice, and yet he will not follow it. Many hear God's words, but will not do them. (1.) Jeremiah is charged to let no man know of what had past between the king and him. Zedekiah was concerned to keep it private, not so much for Jeremiah's safety, (for he knew his own way, and would do him no hurt without his permission,) but for his own reputation. Note, Many have really a better affection to good men and good things than they are willing to own. God's prophets are manifest in their consciences, (2 Cor. v. 11.) but they care not for manifesting that to the world; they would rather do them a kindness than have it known that they do; such, it is to be feared, love the praise of men more than the praise of God.

(2.) He is instructed what to say to the princes, if they should examine him about it. He must tell them that he was petitioning the King not to remand him back to the house of Jonathan the scribe, (v. 25, 26.) and he did tell them so, (v. 27.) and no doubt, it was the truest and fairest opportunity of engaging the King's favour and concord that was; this was no lie or equivocation, but a part of the truth, which it was lawful for him to put them off with when he was under no obligation at all to tell them the whole truth. Note, Though we must be harmless as doves, so as never to tell a wilful lie, yet we must be wise as serpents, so as not needlessly to expose ourselves to danger by telling all we know.

CHAP. XXXIX.

As the prophet Isaiah, after he had largely foretold the delights of the coming out of Egypt, and the destruction of Assyria, gave a particular narrative of the story, that it might appear how exactly the event answered to the prediction, so the prophet Jeremiah, after he had largely foretold the delivering of Jerusalem into the hands of the king of Babylon, gives a particular account of that event for the same reason. That melancholy story we have in this chapter, which serves to disprove the false, flattering prophets, and to confirm the word of God's messengers. We are here told, 1. That Jerusalem, after eighteen months' siege, was taken by the Chaldean army, v. 1. - 3. 2. That king Zedekiah, attempting to make his way out, was seized and made a miserable captive to the king of Babylon, v. 4. - 7. 3. That Jerusalem was burnt to the ground, and the people carried captive, except the poor, v. 8. - 10. 4. That the Chaldeans were very kind to Jeremiah, and took particular care of him, v. 11. - 14. 5. That Ebed-melech too, for his kindness, had a protection from God himself in this day of desolation, v. 15. - 18.

1. In the ninth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the tenth month, came Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and all his army against Jerusalem, and they besieged it.

2. And in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, in the fourth month, the ninth day of the month, the city was broken up. 3. And all the princes of the king of Babylon came in, and sat in the middle gate, even Nergal-sharezar, Sambaz-nebo, Sarsechim, Rab-saris, Nergal-sharezar, Rab-mag, with all the residue of the princes of the king of Babylon.

4. And it came to pass that when Zedekiah the king of Judah saw them, and all the men of war, then they fled, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the king's garden, by the gate betwixt the two walls; and he went out the way of the plain. 5. But the Chaldeans' army pursued after them, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho: and when they had taken him, they brought him up to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon to Riblah, in the land of Hamath, where he gave judgment upon him. 6. Then the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah in Riblah before his eyes: also the king of Babylon slew all the nobles of Judah. 7. Moreover, he put out Zedekiah's eyes, and bound him with chains, to carry him to Babylon. 8. And the Chaldeans burned the king's house, and the houses of the people, with fire, and brake down the walls of Jerusalem. 9. Then Nebuzar-adan, the captain of the guard, carried away captive into Babylon the remnant of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to him, with the rest of the people that remained. 10. But Nebuzar-adan, the captain of the guard, left of the poor of the people, which had nothing, in the land of Judah, and gave them vineyards and fields at the same time.

We were told, in the close of the foregoing chapter, that Jeremiah abode patiently in the court of the prison, until the day that Jerusalem was taken. He gave the princes no further disturbance by his prophecying, nor they him by their persecutions, for he had no more to say than what he had said, and, the siege being carried on briskly, God found them other work to do. See here what it came to.

1. The city is at length taken by storm; for how could it hold out when God himself fought against it? Nebuchadnezzar's army sat down before it in the ninth year of Zedekiah, in the tenth month, (v. 1.) in the depth of winter. Nebuchadnezzar himself soon after retired to take his pleasure, and left his generals to carry on the siege: they intermitted it awhile, but soon renewed it with redoubled force and vigour. At length, in the eleventh year, in the fourth month, about midsummer, they entered the city, the soldiers being so weakened by famine, and all their provisions being now spent, that they were not able to make any resistance, v. 2. Jerusalem was so strong a place, that nobody would have believed the enemy could ever have entered its gates, Lam. iv. 12. But sin had provoked God to withdraw his protection, and then, like Samson when his hair is cut, it is weak as other dykes.

The princes of the king of Babylon take possession of the middle gate, v. 3. Some think that it was the same with that which is called the second gate, (Zeph. i. 10.) which is supposed to be in the middle wall that divided between one part of the city and the other; here they cautiously made a halt, and durst not go forward into so large a city, among men that perhaps would sell their lives as dear as they could, until they had given directions for the searching of all places, that they might not be surprised by any ambush. They sat in the middle gate, from thence to take a view of the city, and give orders. The princes are here named, rough and unseemly names they are, to intimate what a sad change sin had made; there where Elakim and Hilkiah, who bare the name of the God of Israel, used to sit, now sit Nergal-sharrezar, and Sangarnebo, &c. who bare the names of the heathen gods. Rab-saris and Rab-mag are supposed to be not the names of distinct persons, but the titles of those whose names go before. Sarsæchim was Rab-saris, that is, captain of the guard, and Nergal-sharrezar, to distinguish him from the other of the same name that is put first, is called Rab-mag, that is, camp-master, either muster-master, or quarter-master: these and the other great generals sat in the gate. And now we have had what Jeremiah prophesied long since, (ch. i. 15.) that the families of the kingdoms of the north should set every one his throne in the entering of the gates of Jerusalem; justly do the princes of the heathen set themselves there, where the gods of the heathen had been so often set up.

3. Zedekiah having, in disguise perhaps, seen the princes of the king of Babylon take possession of one of the gates of the city, thought it high time to shift for his own safety, and, loaded with guilt and fear, he went out of the city, under no other protection but that of the night, (v. 4.) which soon failed him, for he was discovered, pursued, and overtaken; though he made the best of his way, he could make nothing of it, could not get forward, but in the plains of Jericho fell into the hands of the pursuers; (v. 5.) and thence was brought prisoner to Riblah, where the king of Babylon passeth sentence upon him as a rebel, not sentence of death, but one may almost say, a worse thing. For, (1.) He slew his sons before his eyes, and they must all be little, some of them infants, for Zedekiah himself was now but thirty-two years of age. The deaths of these sweet babes must needs be so many deaths to himself, especially when he considered that his own obstinacy was the cause thereof. (2.) His sons were treacherously betrayed to Riblah, (v. 6.) without his consent, and without his demand of this thing; (ch. xxxviii. 23.) They shall bring forth thy wives and children to the Chaldeans. (2.) He slew all the nobles of Judah, (v. 6.) probably not those princes of Jerusalem who had advised him to this desperate course, (it would be a satisfaction to him to see them cut off,) but the great men of the country, who were innocent of the matter. (3.) He ordered Zedekiah to have his eyes put out, (v. 7.) so condemning him to darkness, for life, when he had shut his eyes against the clear light of God's word, and was of those princes who will not understand, but walk on in darkness, Ps. lxiii. 5. (4.) He bound him with two brazen chains of fetters, (so the margin reads it,) to carry him away to Babylon, there to spend the rest of his days in misery. All this sad story we had before, 2 Kings xxv. 4, &c.

4. Some time after, the city was burnt, temple and palace and all, and the wall of it broken down, v. 8. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem! this comes of killing the prophets, and stoning them that were sent to thee. O Zedekiah, Zedekiah! thou mightiest have prevented, if thou wouldest but have taken God's counsel, and yielded in time.

5. The people that were left were all carried away captive to Babylon; v. 9. Not one must bid a final farewell to the land of their nativity, that pleasant land, and to all their possessions and enjoyments in it; must be driven some hundreds of miles, like beasts, before their conquerors, that were now their cruel masters; must lie at their mercy in a strange land, and be servants to them who would be sure to rule them. The city of Jerusalem is carried away by a Chaldean standard, and is often used in the Chaldean paraphrase, as if the Chaldeans, when they were lords, tyrannized more than any other: we have reason to think that the poor Jews had reason to say so. Some few were left behind, but they were the poor of the people, that had nothing to lose, and therefore never made any resistance. And they not only had their liberty, and were left to carry at
I. A gracious providence concerning Jeremiah. When Jerusalem was laid in ruins, and all men’s hearts failed them for fear, then might he lift up his head with comfort, knowing that his redemption drew nigh, as Christ’s followers, when the second destruction of Jerusalem was hastening on, Luke xxxi. 28.

28. Nebuchadnezzar had given particular orders that care should be taken of him, and that he should be in all respects well used, v. 11, 12. Nebuzar-adan and the rest of the king of Babylon’s princes observed these orders, and discharged him out of prison, and did every thing to make him easy, v. 13, 14. Now let us look upon this,

3. As a very generous act of Nebuchadnezzar, who, though he was a haughty potentate, yet took cognizance of this poor prophet; doubtless he had received information concerning him from the scribes, that he had foretold the king of Babylon’s successes against Judah and other countries, that he had pressed his prince and people to submit to him, and that he had suffered very hard things for so doing; and in consideration of all this, (though perhaps he might have heard also that he had foretold the destruction of Babylon at length,) he gave him some extraordinary marks of his favour. Note, It is the character of a gracious God, to give peculiar tokens of his love and care for the services and sufferings of the meanest. It was honourably done of the king, to give this charge, even before the city was taken, and of the captains to observe it, even in the heat of action, and it is recorded for imitation.

4. As a reproach to Zedekiah and the princes of Israel; they put him in a prison, and the king of Babylon and his princes put him out of God’s people and ministers have often found fairer and kinder usage among strangers and infidels than among those that call themselves of the holy city. St. Paul found more favour and justice with king Agrippa than with Ananias the high-priest.

5. As the performance of God’s promise to Jeremiah, in recompense for his services; (ch. xv. 11.) I will cause to be known to them thy name also, and will make thee a sign and a feast day of evil. Jeremiah had been faithful to his trust as a prophet, and now God approves himself faithful to him, and the promise he had made him. Now he is comforted, according to the time wherein he had been afflicted, and sees thousands fall on each hand, and himself safe. The false prophets fell by those judgments which they said should never come, (ch. xiv. 13.) but the rich man was afraid of terrible to them. The true prophet escaped those judgments which he said would come, and that made his escape the more comfortable to him. The same that were the instruments of punishing the persecutors, were the instruments of relieving the persecuted; and Jeremiah thought never the worse of his deliverance for its coming by the hand of the king of Babylon, but saw in their misery the more terrible to them. A fuller account of this matter we shall meet with in the next chapter.

6. A gracious message to Ebed-melech, to assure him of a recompense for his kindness to Jeremiah. This message was sent him by Jeremiah himself, who, when he returned him thanks for his kindness to him, thus turned him over to God to be his instrument of delivering him, by a direct revelation to him, of a prophet, and thereby he had a true prophet’s reward. This message was delivered to him immediately after he had done that kindness to Jeremiah, but it is mentioned here after the taking of the city, to show that as God was kind to Jeremiah at that time, so he was to Ebed-melech for his sake: and it was a token of special favour to both, and they ought so to account it, that they were not involved in any of the common calamities. Jeremiah is bid to tell him, 1. That God would certainly bring upon Jerusalem the ruin that had been long and often threatened: and, for his further satisfaction, in having been kind to Jeremiah, he should see him abundantly proved a true prophet, v. 16. 2. That God took notice of the fear he had of the judgments coming. Though he was brave and bold in the service of God, yet he was afraid of the rod of God. The enemies were men of whom he was afraid. Note, God knows how to adapt and accommodate his comforts to the fears and griefs of his people, for he knows their souls in adversity. 3. That he shall be delivered from having a share in the common calamity; I will deliver thee, I will surely deliver thee. He had been instrumental to deliver God’s prophet out of the dungeon and now God delivers him; for he will be behind-hand with none for any service they do, directly or indirectly, for his name: Thou hast saved Jeremiah’s life, that was pre-
CHAP. XL.

We have attended Jerusalem's funeral pile, and have taken our leave of the captives that were carried to Babylon, not expecting to hear any more of them in this book, perhaps we may in Ezekiel, and must in this and the four following chapters observe the story of those few Jews that were left to remain in the land after their brethren were carried away, and it is a very melancholy story; for, though at first there were some hopeful prospects of their well-doing, they soon appeared as obdurate in sin and rebellion against the Lord and the rest of the judgments, threatened in Deut. xxviii., being brought upon them, that which in the last verse of that dreadful chapter completes the threatenings, was accomplished. The Lord shall bring thee into Egypt again. In this chapter we have, I. A more particular account of Jeremiah's discharge, and his settlement with Gedaliah, v. 1-6. II. The great resort of the Jews that remained scattered in the neighbouring countries to Gedaliah, who was made their governor under the king of Babylon; and the good posture they were in for awhile under him, v. 7-12. III. A treacherous design formed against Gedaliah, by Ishmael, which we shall find executed in the next chapter, v. 13-16.

1. The word which came to Jeremiah from the Lord, after that Nebuzaradan the captain of the guard had let him go from Ramah, when he had taken him, being bound in chains among all that were carried away captive of Jerusalem and Judah, which were carried away captive unto Babylon. 2. And the captain of the guard took Jeremiah, and said unto him, The Lord thy God hath pronounced this evil upon this place; he had fair warning given them of it, but they would not take the warning, and now the Lord hath brought it, and as by his mouth he said it, so by his hand hath the thing come to pass. 3. Jeremiah was the chosen instrument to fulfil that which Jeremiah had been his messenger to foretell; and upon that account it was indeed the most glorious action he had ever done. He tells all the people that were now in chains before him, It is because ye have sinned against the Lord, that this thing is come upon you. The princes of Israel would never have brought to acknowledge this, though it was as evident as if it had been written with a sun-beam; but this heathen prince plainly sees it, that a people that had been so favoured as they had been by the divine goodness, would never have been abandoned thus, had they not been very provoking. The people of Israel had been often told this from the pulpit, but they were not regarded; now they are told it from the bench of their conqueror, whom they dare not contradict, and who will make them regard it. Note, Sooner or later, men shall be made sensible that their sin is the cause of all their miseries.

2. He gives him leave to dispose of himself as he thought fit. He loosed him from his chains a second time, and invited him to come along with him to Babylon, not as a captive, but as a friend, as a companion; and I will set my eye upon thee, so the word is; Not only I will look well to thee, but I will show thee respect, will countenance thee, and will see that thou be safe and well provided for.
If he was not disposed to go to Babylon, he might dwell where he pleased in his own country, for it was all now at the disposal of the conquerors. He may go to Anathoth if he please, and enjoy the field he had purchased there. A great change with this good man! He that but lately was tossed from one prison to another, may now walk at liberty from one possession to another.

3. He advises him to go to Gedaliah, and settle with him. This Gedaliah was made governor of the land under the king of Babylon, an honest Jew, who (it is probable) betimes went over with his friends to the Chaldeans, and approved himself so well, that he had this great trust put into his hands; v. 3. While Gedaliah was not yet gone back, but stood considering what he should do, Nebuzar-adan, perceiving him neither inclined to go to Babylon, nor determined whither to go, turned the scale for him, and bid him by all means go to Gedaliah. Sudden thoughts sometimes prove wise ones. But when he gave this counsel, he did not design to oblige him by it, nor will he take it ill if he do not follow it. Go wheresoe'er it seemeth convenient unto thee. It is friendly in such cases to give advice, but not friendly to prescribe, and to be angry if our advice be not taken. Let Jeremiah steer what course he please, Nebuzar-adan will agree to it, and believe he does for the best. Nor does he only give him his liberty, and an approbation of the measures he shall take, but provides for his support; he gave him his own wages, either in clothes or money, and so let him go. See how considerate the captain of the guard was in his kindness to Jeremiah. He set him at liberty, but it was in a country that was laid waste, and in which, as the posture of it now was, he might have perished, though it was his own country, if he had not thus kindly furnished him with necessaries. Jeremiah not only accepted his kindness, but took his advice, and went to Gedaliah, to Mizpah, and dwelt with him. v. 6. Whether we may herein commend his prudence, I know not; the event does not commend it, for it did not prove at all to his comfort. However, we may commend his pious affection to the land of Israel, that, unless he were forced out of it, as Ezekiel and Daniel and other good men were, he would not forsake it, but chose rather to dwell with the poor in the holy land, than with princes in an unholy one.

7. Now when all the captains of the forces which were in the fields, even they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam governor in the land, and had committed unto him men, and women, and children, and of the poor of the land, of them that were not carried away captive to Babylon; 8. Then they came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan and Jonathan the sons of Kareah, and Sarainah the son of Tanhumeth, and the sons of Ephai the Netophathite, and Jezariah the son of a Maachathite, they and their men. 9. And Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, sware unto them, and to their men, saying, Fear not to serve the Chaldeans: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you. 10. As for me, behold, I will dwell at Mizpah, to serve the Chaldeans which will come unto us: but ye, gather ye wine, and summer-fruits, and oil, and put them in your vessels, and dwell in your cities that ye have taken. 11. Likewise, when all the Jews that were in Moab, and among the Ammonites, and in Edom, and that were in all the countries, heard that the king of Babylon had left a remnant of Judah, and that he had set over them Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan: 12. Even all the Jews returned out of all places whither they were driven, and came to the land of Judah, to Gedaliah, unto Mizpah, and gathered wine and summer-fruits very much. 13. Moreover, Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were in the fields, came to Gedaliah to Mizpah. 14. And said unto him, Dost thou certainly know that Baalis the king of the Ammonites hath sent Ishmael the son of Nethaniah to slay thee? But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam believed them not. 15. Then Johanan the son of Kareah spake to Gedaliah in Mizpah secretly, saying, Let me go, I pray thee, and I will slay Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and no man shall know it: wherefore should he slay thee, that all the Jews which are gathered unto thee should be scattered, and the remnant in Judah perish? 16. But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam said unto Johanan the son of Kareah, Thou shalt not do this thing; for thou speakest falsely of Ishmael.

We have, in these verses,

1. A bright sky opening upon the remnant of the Jews that were left in their own land, and a comfortable prospect given them of some peace and quietness, after the many years of trouble and terror which they had been afflicted. Jeremiah in his deed had never in his prophecies spoken of any such good days reserved for the Jews immediately after the captivity; but Providence seemed to raise and encourage such an expectation, and it would be to that miserable people as life from the dead. Observe the particulars.

1. Gedaliah, one of themselves, is made governor in the land, by the king of Babylon, v. 7. To show that he designed to make and keep them easy, he did not give this commission to one of the princes of Babylon, but to one of their brethren, who, they might be sure, would seek their peace. He was the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, one of the princes. We read of his father, (ch. xxvi. 24.) that he took Jeremiah's part against the people. He seems to be a man of great wisdom and a mild temper, and under whose government the few that were left might be very happy. The King of Babylon had a good opinion of him, and reposea a confidence in him, for to him he committed all that were left behind.

There is great resort to him from all parts, and all those that were now the Jews of the dispersion came and put themselves under his government and protection. (1.) The great men that had escaped the Chaldeans by force, came and quietly submitted to Gedaliah for their own safety and common preservation. Divers are here named; (v. 8.) they came with their men, their servants, their soldiers, and so strengthened one another; and the king of Babylon had such a good opinion of Gedaliah his delegate, that he was not at all jealous of the increase of their numbers, but rather pleased with it. (2.) The poor men that had escaped by flight into the neighbouring countries of Moab, Ammon, and Edom, were induced by the love they bare to their own land, to return to it again, as soon as they heard that Gedaliah was in authority there, vi. 11, 12.assures us, it "would be an unsafe, unpleasant country, if there were no government or governors there, and those that loved it dearly would not come back to it till they heard there were. It would be a great reviving to them that were dispersed, to come together again; that were dispersed into foreign countries, to come together in their own country; that were under strange kings, to be under a governor of their own nation. See here the love the Chaldeans, as is well remembered mercy, and yet admitted some of them upon a further trial of their obedience.

3. The model of this new government is drawn up and settled by an original contract, which Gedaliah confirmed with an oath, a solemn oath; (v. 9.) He swore to them, and to their men, it is probable, according to the warrant and instructions he had received from the prophet. vi. 11. 12. 13. (2.) He commanded to must own the property of their lands to be in the Chaldeans; "Come," (says Gedaliah,) "fear not to serve the Chaldeans. Fear not the sin of it." Though the divine law had forbidden them to make leagues with the heathen, yet the divine sentence had obliged them to yield to the king of Babylon. "Fear not the reproach of it, and the disparagement it will be to your nation; it is what God hath brought you to, has bound you to, and it is no disgrace to any to comply with y, F,, Fear not the consequences of it, as if it would certainly make you and yours miserable; no, you will find the king of Babylon not so hard a landlord as you apprehend him to be; if you will but live peaceably, peaceably you shall live; disturb not the government, and it will not disturb you. Serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you." If they should make any difficulty of doing personal homage, or should be apprehensive of danger, when the Chaldeans should come among them, Gedaliah, probably by instruction from the king of Babylon, undertakes upon all occasions to act for them, and make their applications acceptable to the king; (v. 20.) As for me, behold, I will dwell at Anathoth among the Chaldeans, says Gedaliah, with them in the name of the whole body, if there be occasion, to receive orders, and to pay them their tribute when they come to us." All that passes between them and the Chaldeans shall pass through his hand; and if the Chaldeans put such a confidence in him, surely his own countrymen may venture to do it. Gedaliah is willing thus to give them the assurance he had desired, to put them out of harm, and in protecting them, but being apt to err (as many good men are) on the charitable side, it did not require an oath from them, that they would be faithful to him, else the following mischief might have been prevented. However, protection draws allegiance, though it be not sworn; and, by joining in with Gedaliah, they did, in effect, consent to the terms of good offices he offered them. "Gather ye wine and summer-fruits, and take them for your own use; put them in your vessels, to be laid up for winter-store, as those do that live in a land of peace, and hopethe fruit of your hand; nay, the labour of other people's hands, for you reap what they sowed." Or perhaps they were the spontaneous products of that fertile soil, for which none had laboured. And accordingly they find (v. 13.) "That they gathered wine and summer-fruits very much, such as were at present upon the ground, for their corn-harvest was over some time before Jerusalem was taken. While Gedaliah was in care for the public safety, he left them to enjoy the advantages of the public plenty, and, for aught appears, demanded no tribute from them; for he sought not his own profit, but the good and welfare of the people. (1.) Thus the soldiers and poor men that were removed into the Chaldean kingdom enjoyed the peace of Gedaliah, in a country where there was no government or governors, and the love and affection of such poor countrymen as were left in the land of Israel, to their own country, was strengthened and increased by Gedaliah's government. (2.) All of the Chaldeans who had escaped from the captivity of the Chaldeans and Babylon, and had taken refuge in any other country, were to come and join Gedaliah, who was at Anathoth, vi. 11. 12. 13. 14. (3.) The king of Babylon, in Gedaliah, had a friendly governor to receive him, and serve him, vi. 11. 12. 13. 14. (4.) The king of Babylon was willing to make a new covenant, vi. 11. 12. 13. 14. (5.) The Chaldeans were willing to give their tribute, vi. 11. 12. 13. 14. II. Here is a dark cloud gathering over this infant state, and threatening a dreadful storm. How soon is this hopeful prospect blasted! For when God begins in judgment he will make an end. It is here intimated to us,

1. That Baalis the king of the Ammonites had a particular spite at Gedaliah, and was contriving to take him off, either out of malice to the nation of the Jews, whose welfare he hated the thought of, or a personal pique against Gedaliah, v. 14. Some make Baalis to signify the queen-mother of the king of the Ammonites, or queen-dowager, as if she were the first mover of this bloody and treacherous design. One would have thought this little remnant might have been safe, when the great king of Babylon protected them; and yet it is ruined by the artifice of this petty prince or princess. Happy they that have the king of kings on their side, who can take the wise in their own craftiness; for the greatest earthly kingdom can neither all his power secure us against fraud and treachery.

2. That he employed Ishmael, the son of Nethaniah, as the instrument of his malice, instigated him to murder Gedaliah; and that he might have a fair opportunity to do it, he directed him to go and enrol himself among his subjects, and promise him fealty. Nothing could be more barbarous than the design itself, nor more base than the method of compassing it. How wretchedly is human nature corrupted and degenerated, (even in those that pretend to the best blood,) when it is capable of admitting the thought of such abominable wickedness! Ishmael was of the seed royal, and would therefore be easily tempted to envy and hate one that set up for a governor in Judah, who was not, as he was, of David's line, though he had ever so much of David's spirit.

3. That Johanan, a brisk and active man, having got scent of this plot, informed Gedaliah of it, yet taking it for granted he could not but know of it before, the proofs of the matter being so very plain; Dost thou certainly from thy mouth? He not, v. 14. He gave him private intelligence of it, (v. 15.) hoping he would then take the more notice of it. He proffered his service to prevent it, by taking off Ishmael, whose very name was ominous to all the seed of Isaac; I will slay him. Wherefore should he slay thee? Herein he showed more courage and zeal than sense of justice; for if it be lawful to kill for prevention, who can be safe, since malice always supposes the least? 4. That Gedaliah, being a man of sincerity himself, would by no means give credit to the information given him of Ishmael's treachery. He said, Thou speakest falsely of Ishmael. Herein he discovered more good humour than discretion, more of the innocency of the dove than the wisdom of the serpent. Princes be more serviceable to themselves and about them than when they are jealous. Queen Elizabeth said, that she would believe no more evil of her people, than a mother would believe of her own children; yet many have been ruined by being over-confident of the fidelity of those about them.

Chap. XLII.

It is a very tragical story that is related in this chapter, and shows that evil purposes sinners. The black cloud that was gathering in the foregoing chapter, here bursts in a dreadful storm. Those few Jews that escaped their captivity were proud to think that they were still in their own land, when their brethren were gone they knew not whither; were laden of the wine and summer-fruits they had seen in Babylon, and were very secure under Gedaliah's protectorship, when, on a sudden, even these remains prove ruins too. 1. Gedaliah is barbarously slain by Ishmael, v. 1, 2. 2. All the Jews that were with him were taken captive, v. 3, and a pit filled with their dead bodies, v. 9. III. Some devout men, to the number of fourscore, that were going toward Jerusalem, were drawn in by Ishmael, and murdered likewise, v. 4. and the ten of them escaped, v. 8. IV. Those that escaped the sword were taken prisoners by Ishmael, and carried off toward the country of the Ammonites, v. 10. V. By the conduct and course of Johanan, the prophet, the land of Judah was not revenged, yet the prisoners are recovered, and he now becomes their commander in chief, v. 11. 16. VI. His project is to carry them into the land of Egypt, (v. 17, 18.) which we shall hear more of in the next chapter.

1. NOW it came to pass in the seventh month, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, the son of Elishama, of the seed royal, and the princes of the king, even ten men with him, came unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, to Mizpah; and there they did eat bread together in Mizpah.

2. Then arose Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and the ten men that were with him, and smote Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, with the sword, and slew him, whom the king of Babylon had made governor over the land. 3. Ishmael also slew all the Jews that were with him, even with Gedaliah at Mizpah, and the Chaldeans that were found there, and the men of war. 4. And it came to pass, the second day after he had slain Gedaliah, and no man knew it, that there came certain from Shechem, from Shiloh, and from Samaria, even fourscore men, having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, and having cut themselves, with offerings and incense in their hand, to bring them to the house of the Lord. 6. And Ishmael the son of Nethaniah went forth from Mizpah to meet them, weeping all along as he went: and it came to pass, as he met them, he said unto them, Come to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam. 7. And it was so, when they came into the midst of the city, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah slew them, and cast them into the midst of the pit, he, and the men that were with him. 8. But ten men were found among them that said unto Ishmael, Slay us not; for we have treasures in the field, of wheat, and of barley, and of oil, and of honey. So he forbade, and slew them not among their brethren. 9. Now the pit wherein Ishmael had cast all the dead bodies of the men, whom he had slain because of Gedaliah, was it which Asa the king had made for fear of Baasha king of Israel; and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah filled it with them that were slain. 10. Then Ishmael carried away captive all the residue of the people that were in Mizpah, even the king's daughters, and all the people that remained in Mizpah, whom Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had committed to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah carried them away captive, and departed and went over to the Ammonites.

It is hard to say which is more astonishing, God's permitting, or men's perpetrating, such villainies as here we find committed. Such base, barbarous, bloody work is here done by men, who by their birth and education were designed to be under the protection of the king, and as such were to be secure under his constitution. And by such men as these, which are represented as just men, and this done upon those of their own nature, their own nation, their own religion, and now their brethren in affliction, when they were all brought under the power of the victorious Chaldeans, and smarting under the judgments of God, upon no provocation, nor with any prospect of advantage; all done, not only in cold blood, but with art and management. We have scarcely such an instance of perfidious cruelty in all the scripture; so that with John, when he saw the woman drunk with the blood of the saints, we may well wonder with great admiration. But God permitted it for the completing of the ruin of an unhumbled people, and the filling up of the measure of their judgments, who had filled up the measure of their iniquities. Let it pass us with an indigation at the wickedness of men, and an awe of God's righteousness.

1. Ishmael and his party treacherously killed Gedaliah himself in the first place. Though the king of Babylon had made him a great man, had given him a commission to be governor of the land which he had conquered; though God had made him a good man, and a great blessing to his country, and his agency for its welfare was as life from the dead; yet neither could secure him. Ishmael came of the seed royal, (v. 1.) and therefore jealous of Gedaliah's growing greatness, and enraged that he should merit and accept a commission under the king of Babylon. He had ten men with him, that were princes of the king too, guided by the same peevish resentments that he was; these had been with Gedaliah before, to put themselves under his protection, (ch. xl. 8.) and now they came again to make him a guest; and they did eat bread together in Mizpah. He entertained them generously, and entertained no jealousy of them, notwithstanding the information given him by Johanan. They pretended friendship to him, and gave him no warning to stand on his guard; he was in sincerity friendly to them, and did all he could to oblige them, but they that did eat bread with him lifted up the heel against him. They did not pick a quarrel with him, but watched an opportunity, when they had him alone, and assassinated him, v. 2.

2. They likewise put all to the sword that they found in arms there, both Jews and Chaldeans, all that were employed under Gedaliah, or were in any way connected with his death, v. 3. And enough of the blood of Israelites had not been shed by the Chaldeans, their own princes here mingled it with the blood of the Chaldeans. The vine-dressers and the husbandmen were busy in the fields, and knew nothing of this bloody massacre; so artfully was it carried on and concealed!

3. Some good, honest men, that were going all in tears to lament the desolations of Jerusalem, were drawn in by Ishmael, and murdered with the rest. Observe, (1.) From whence they came; (v. 5.) from Shechem, Samaria, and Shiloh, places that had been famous, but were now reduced; they belonged to the ten tribes, but there were some those countries that retained an affection for the worship of the God of Israel. (2.) Whither they were going; to the house of the Lord, the temple at Jerusalem, which, no doubt, they had heard of the destruction of, and might go to pay their respects to its ruins, to see its ruins, that their eye might affect their heart with sorrow for them. They favoured the dust thereof, Ps. cii. 14. They took offerings and incense in their hand, that if they should find any altar there, though it were but an altar of earth, and any priest ready to officiate, they might not be without something to offer; if not, yet they showed their good-will, as Abiah, when he came up to Mount Sinai, and saw the pillar of cloud, and fire, 2 Chron. xiv. 14. The people of God used to go rejoicing to the house of the Lord, but these went in the habit of mourners, with their clothes rent, and their heads shaven; for the providence of God loudly called to weeping and mourning, because it was not with the faithful worshippers of God as in months past. (3.) How they were decoyed into a fatal snare by Ishmael’s malice. Hearing of their approach, he resolved to be the death of them too; so bloodthirsty was he! He seemed as if he hated every one that had the name of an Israelite, or the face of an honest man; these pilgrims toward Jerusalem he had a spite to, for the sake of their errand. Ishmael went out to meet them with crocodile’s tears, pretending to bewail the desolations of Jerusalem as much as they, and, to try how the sudden sorrow of God might influence them, he courted them into the town, and found them to have a respect for him, which confirmed him in his resolution to murder them. He said, Come to Gedaliah, pretending he would have them come, and live with him, when really he intended that they should come, and die with him, v. 6. They had heard such a character of Gedaliah, that they were willing enough to be acquainted with him; but, when they came to Gedaliah, he had them in the midst of the town, fell upon them, and slew them, (v. 7.) and, no doubt, took the offerings they had, and converted them to his own use; for he that would not stick at such a murder, would not stick at sacrilege. Notice is taken of his disposing of the dead bodies of these, and the rest that he had slain; he tumbled them all into a great pit, (v. 7.) the same pit that Asa king of Judah had digged for the cities of his great cities, which led him to fly there, when he was in danger; when he built or fortified Mizpah, (1 Kings xv. 22.) to be a frontier garrison against Baasha king of Israel, and for fear of him, v. 9. Note, Those that dig pits with a good intention know not what bad use they may be put to, one time or other. He slew so many, that he could not afford them each a grave, or would not do them so much honour, but threw them all promiscuously into one pit.

Among these last that were doomed to the slaughter, there were ten that obtained a pardon, by working, not on the compassion, but the crouutiousness, of those that had them at their mercy, v. 8. They said to Ishmael, when he was about to sack their blood, like an insatiable horse-leech, after that of their companions, Stay us not, for we have treasures in the field, country-treasures, large stocks upon the ground, abundance of such commodities as the country affords, wheat and barley, and oil and honey; intimating that they would discover it to him, and put him in possession of it all, if he would spare them. Skin for skin, and all that a man has, will he give for his life. This bait prevailed. Ishmael saved them, not for the love of mercy, but for the love of money. Here were riches to be got for the owners thereof, not to their hurt, (Eccle. v. 13,) and to cause them to lose their lives, (Job xxxi. 39.) but to their good, and the preserving of their lives. Solomon observes, that sometimes the ransom of a man’s life is his riches. But those who think have to bribe death, when it comes with commission, and plead with it, saying, Stay us not, for we have treasures in the field, will find death inexorable, and themselves wretchedly deceived. 4. He carried off the people prisoners; the king’s daughters, whom the Chaldeans cared not for troubling themselves with, when they had the king’s sons; and the poor of the land, the vine-dressers and husbandmen, that were committed to Gedaliah’s charge, were all led away prisoners to the country of the Ammonites; (v. 10.) Ishmael probably intending to make a present of them, as the trophies of his barbarous victory, to the king of that country that set him on. This melancholy story is a warning to us, never to be secure in this world. Worse may be yet to come then, when we think the worst is over; and that end of one trouble, which we fancy to be the end of all trouble, may prove to be the beginning of another, of a greater. These here thought, Surely the bitterness of death and of captivity is past; and yet some died by the sword, and others went into captivity. When we think ourselves safe, and begin to be easy, destruction may come that way that we little expected it. There is many a ship wrecked in the harbour. We can never be sure of peace on this side heaven.

11. But when Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, heard of all the evil that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had done, 12. Then they took all the men, and went to fight with Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and found him by the great waters that are in Gibon. 13. Now it came to pass, that when all the people which were with Ishmael saw Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, then they were glad. 14. So all the people that Ishmael had carried away captive from Mizpah cast about, and returned, and went unto Johanan the son of Kareah. 15. But Ishmael the son of Nethaniah escaped from Johanan with eight men, and went to the Ammonites. 16. Then took Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, all the remnant of the people whom he had recovered from Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, from Mizpah, (after that he had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam,) even mighty men of war, and the women, and the children, and the eunuchs, whom he had brought again from Gibon: 17. And they departed, and dwelt in the habitation of Chimham, which is by Beth-lehem, to go to enter into Egypt. 18. Because of the Chaldeans: for they were afraid of them, because Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, whom the king of Babylon made governor in the land.

It had been well if Johanan, when he gave information to Gedaliah of Ishmael’s treasurables design, though he could not obtain leave to kill Ishmael, and to prevent it that way, yet had stayed with Gedaliah; for he, and his captains, and their forces, might have been a life-guard to Gedaliah, and... terror to Ishmael, and so have prevented the mischief, without the effusion of blood: but it seems, they were out upon some expedition, perhaps no good one, and so were out of the way when they should have been upon the best service. Those that affect to ramble are many times out of their place when they are most needed. However, at length they hear of all the evil that Ishmael had done, (v. 11,) and are resolved to try an after-game, with the most violent and forceable measures. 1. We heartily wish Johanan could have taken revenge upon the murderers, but he prevailed only to rescue the captives. They that had shed so much blood, it was pity but their blood should have been shed; and it is strange that vengeance suffered them to live; yet it did. Johanan gathered what forces he could, and went to fight with Ishmael; (v. 16,) and mightily stopped them all (for though he concealed it for a time, (v. 4.) yet murder will out,) and which way he was gone, he pursued him, and overtook him by the great fool of Gibeah, which we read of, 2 Sam. ii. 13. And upon his appearing with such a force, Ishmael's heart failed him, his guilty conscience flew in his face, and he durst not stand his ground against an enemy that looked like a thing for him. The most cruel are often the most cowardly. The poor captives were glad when they saw Johanan, and the captains that were with him, looking upon them as their deliverers, (v. 13,) and they immediately found a way to wheel about, and come over to them, (v. 14.) Ishmael not offering to detain them when he saw Johanan. Note, Those that would be helped must help themselves. These captives stayed not till their conquerors were beaten, but took the first opportunity to make their escape, as soon as they saw their friends appear, and their enemies thereby disheartened. Ishmael quitted his prey, to save his life, and escaped with eight men, v. 15. It seems, two of his ten men, that were his banditti or assassins, spoken of, v. 1. either deserted him, or were killed in the engagement; but he made the best of his way to the Ammonites, as a perfect renegade, that had quite abandoned all relation to the commonwealth of Israel, though he was of the seed royal, and we hear no more of him. 2. We heartily wish that Johanan, when he had rescued the captives, would have sitten down quietly with them, and governed them peaceably, as Gedaliah did; but, instead of that, he is for leading them up to his own design, as he led them before into the land of the Ammonites, so that though he got the command over them in a better way than Ishmael did, and honestly enough, yet he did not use it much better. Gedaliah, who was of a meek and quiet spirit, was a great blessing to them; but Johanan, who was of a fierce and restless spirit, was set over them for their hurt, and to complete their ruin, even after they were, as they thought, redeemed. Thus did God still walk contrary to them. (1.) The resolution of Johanan and the captives was very rash; nothing would serve them but they would go to enter into Egypt, (v. 17,) and, in order to that, they encamped for a time in the habitation of Chimham, by Bethlehem, David's city. Probably it was some land which David gave to the Levites, Joshua 21:9, 10; though it returned to David's family, at the year of Jubilee, yet still bore the name of Chimham. Here Johanan made his head-quarters, steering his course towards Egypt, either from a personal affection to that country, or an ancient national confidence in the Egyptians for help in distress. Some of the mighty men of war, it seems, had escaped; these he took with him, and the women and children, whom he had recovered from Ishmael, who were thus emptied from vessel to vessel, because they were yet unchanged. (2.) The reason for this resolution was very frivolous. They pretended that they were afraid of the Chaldeans, that they would come and do I know not what with them, because Ishmael had killed Gedaliah, v. 18. I cannot think they really had any apprehensions of danger upon this account; for though it is true that the Chaldeans had cause enough to resent the murder of their viceroy, yet they were not so unreasonably, or unjustly, as to revenge it upon those who appeared so vigorously against the murderers. But they only made use of this as a sham to cover that corrupt inclination of their unbelieving ancestors, which was so strong in them, to return into Egypt. Those will justly lose their comfort in real fears, that excuse themselves in sin with pretended fears.

CHAP. XLII.

Johanan and the captains being strongly bent upon going into Egypt, either their affections or politics advising them to take that course, they had a great desire that God should direct them to do so too; like Balaam, who, when he was determined to go curse Israel, asked God leave. Here is, 1. The fair bargain that was made between Jeremiah and them about consulting God in this matter, v. 1. - 6. II. The message at large which God sent them, in answer to their inquiry; in which, I. They are commanded and encouraged to continue the land of Judah, and assured that if they did so, it should be well with them, v. 7. - 12. 2. They are forbidden to go to Egypt, and are plainly told that if they did, it would be their ruin, v. 13. - 18. 3. They are condemned, v. 19. - 22.

1. THEN all the captains of the forces, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and Jezamah the son of Hoshiah, and all the people, from the least even to the greatest, came near, 2. And said unto Jeremiah the prophet, Let, we beseech thee, our supplication be accepted before thee, and pray for us unto the Lord thy God, even for all this remnant; (for we are left but a few of many, as thine eyes do behold us;) 3. That the Lord thy God may shew us the way wherein we may walk, and the thing that we may do. 4. Then Jeremiah the prophet said unto them, I have heard you; behold, I will pray unto the Lord your God according to your words, and it shall come to pass, that whatsoever thing the Lord shall answer you, I will declare it unto you; I will keep nothing back from you. 5. Then they said to Jeremiah, The Lord be a true and faithful witness between us, if we do not even according to all things for which the Lord thy God shall send thee to us. 6. Whether it be good, or whether it be evil, we will obey the voice of the Lord our God, to whom we send thee that it may be well with us, when we obey the voice of the Lord our God.

We have reason to wonder how Jeremiah the prophet escaped the sword of Ishmael; it seems he did escape, and it was not the first time that the Lord hid him. It is strange also that in these violent turns he was not consulted before now, and his advice asked and taken. But it should seem as if they knew not that a prophet was among them; though this people were as brands plucked out of the fire, yet have they not returned to the Lord. This people has a revolting and a rebellious heart; and contempt of God and his providence, God and his prophet, is still the sin that most easily besets them. But now at length, to serve a turn, Jeremiah is sought out, and all the captains, Johanan himself not excepted, with all the people from the least to the greatest, make his faithful visit; they came near, (v. 1.) and truly desired him to return; and hitherto they had kept at a distance from the prophet, and had been shy of him. Now here, 1. They desire him by prayer to ask direction from God; what they should do in the present critical juncture, v. 2, 3. They express themselves wonderfully well. (1.) With great respect to the prophet. Though he was poor and low, and under their command, yet they apply themselves to him, with humility and submissiveness, as petitioners for his assistance, which yet they intimate their own unworthiness of; Let, we beseech thee, our supplication be accepted before thee. They compliment him thus, in hopes to persuade him to say as they would have him say. (2.) With a great opinion of his interest in heaven; Pray for us, who know not how to pray for our own. Pray to the Lord thy God, for we are unworthy to call him ours, nor have we reason to expect any favour from him.” (3.) With a great sense of the need of divine direction. They speak of themselves as objects of compassion; “We are but a remnant, but a few of many; how easily will such a remnant be swallowed up, and yet it is pity that it should. Thine eyes see what distress we are in, what a plunge we are at; if thou canst do any thing, help us.” (4.) With desire of divine direction; Let the Lord thy God take this ruin into his thoughts, and under his hand, and shew us the way wherein we may walk, and may expect to have his presence with us, and the thing that we may do, the course we may take for our own safety.” Note, In every difficult, doubtful case, our eye must be up to God for direction. They then might expect to be directed by a spirit of prophesy, which is now ceased, but we may still in faith pray to be guided by a spirit of wisdom in our hearts, and the hints of Providence.

2. Jeremiah faithfully promises them to pray for direction for them, and, whatever message God should send to them by him, he would deliver it to them just as he received it, without adding, altering, or diminishing, v. 4. Ministers may hence learn to prudently apply for guidance in their prayers; I will pray for you, according to your words. Though they had slighted him, yet, like Samuel, when he was slighted, he will not sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for them, 1 Sam. xii. 23. (2.) Conscientiously to advise those who desire their advice, as near as they can to the mind of God, not keeping back any thing that is favorable for them, whether it be pleasant or not, but to declare to them the whole counsel of God, that they may approve themselves true to their trust.

3. They hereby promise that they will be governed by the will of God, as soon as they know what it is, (v. 5, 6) and they had the impudence to appeal to God concerning their sincerity herein, though at the same time they dissemble; “The Lord be gracious unto us, and forgive us all our iniquities;” do thou in the fear of God tell us truly what your mind is, and then we will in the fear of God comply with it; and for this, the Lord the Judge be judge between us.” Note, Those that expect to have the benefit of good ministers’ prayers, must conscientiously hearken to their preaching, and be governed by it, as far as it agrees with the mind of God. Nothing could be better said than this here, Whether it be good, or whether it be evil, we will obey the voice of the Lord our God, that it may be well with us. (1.) They now call God their God, for Jeremiah had encouraged them to call him so; (v. 4.) I will pray to the Lord your God. He is ours, and therefore we will obey his voice. Our relation to God strongly obliges us to obedience. (2.) They promise to obey his voice, because they sent the prophet to him to consult him. Note, We do not truly desire to know the mind of God if we do not fully resolve to comply with it when we do know it. (3.) It is an implicit, universal obedience that they here promise. They will do what God appoints them to do, whether it be good, or whether it be evil; Though it may seem evil to us, yet we will believe that if God commands it, it is certainly good, and we must not dispute it, but do it. Whatever God commands, whether it be easy or difficult, agreeable to our inclinations or contrary to them, whether it be cheap or costly, fashionable or un-fashonable, whether we get or lose by it in our worldly interests, if it be our duty, we will do it.” (4.) It is upon a very good consideration that they promise this, a reasonable and powerful one, that it may be well with us; which intimates a conviction that they could not expect it should be well with them upon any other terms.

7. And it came to pass, after ten days, that the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah. 3. Then called he Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces which were with him, and all the people, from the least even to the greatest, 9. And said unto them, Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, unto whom ye sent me to present your supplication before him; 10. If ye will still abide in this land, then will I build you, and not pull you down; and I will plant you, and not pluck you up; for I repent me of the evil that I have done unto you. 11. Be not afraid of the king of Babylon, of whom ye are afraid, be not afraid of him, saith the Lord; for I am with you to save you, and to deliver you from his hand. 12. And I will shew mercies unto you, that he may have mercy upon you, and cause you to return to your own land. 13. But if ye say, We will not dwell in this land, neither obey the voice of the Lord your God, 14. Saying, No; but we will go into the land of Egypt, where we shall see no war, nor hear the sound of a trumpet, nor have hunger of bread; and there will we dwell: 15. And now, therefore, hear the word of the Lord, ye remnant of Judah; Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, If ye wholly set your faces to enter into Egypt, and go to sojourn there; 16. Then it shall come to pass, that the sword, which ye feared, shall overtake you there in the land of Egypt, and the famine, whereof ye were afraid, shall follow close after you in Egypt; and there ye shall die. 17. So shall it be with all the men that set their faces to go into Egypt, to sojourn there; they shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: and none of them shall remain or escape from the evil that I will bring upon them. 18. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, As mine anger and my fury hath been poured forth upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem; so shall my fury be poured forth upon you, when ye shall enter into Egypt: and ye shall be an excavation, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach; and ye shall see this place no more. 19. The Lord hath said concerning you, O ye remnant of Judah, Go ye not into Egypt: know certainly that I have admonished you this day. 20. For ye dissembled in your hearts, when ye sent me unto the Lord your God, saying, Pray for us unto the Lord our God; and according unto all that the Lord our God shall say, so declare unto us, and we will do it. 21. And now I have this day declared it to you; but ye have not obeyed the voice of the Lord your God, nor any thing for the which he hath sent me unto you. 22. Now, therefore, know certainly that ye shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, in the place whither ye desire to go, and to sojourn.

We have here the answer which Jeremiah was sent to deliver to those who employed him to ask counsel of God.

1. It did not come immediately, not till ten days after, v. 7. They were thus long held in suspense, perhaps to punish them for their hypocrisy, or to show that Jeremiah did not speak of himself, nor what he would; for he could not speak when he would, but must wait for instructions. However, it teaches us to continue waiting upon God for direction in our way. The vision is for an appointed time, and at the end it shall speak.

2. When it did come, he delivered it publicly, before all the people, from the meanest to those in the highest station; he delivered it fully and faithfully as he received it, as he had promised that he would keep nothing back from them. If Jeremiah had been to direct them by his own prudence, perhaps he could not have told what to advise them to, the case was so difficult; but what he has to advise, is what the Lord the God of Israel saith, v. 10. Their brethren were forced out of it into captivity, and it was that which they thought was a mercy, that they might stay in it, and a duty to stay in it. Let those whose lot is in Canaan, never quit it while they can keep it. It had been enough to oblige them, if God had only said, "I charge you upon your allegiance, to abide still in the land," but he rather persuades them to it as a Friend than commands it as a Prince.

(1) He expresses a very tender concern for them in their present calamitous condition; It repenteth me of the evil that I have done unto you. Though they had shown small sign of their repenting of their sins, yet God, as one grieved for the misery of Israel, (Judg. x. 16.) begins to repent of the judgments he had brought upon them for their sins. Not that he changed his mind, but he was very ready to change his way, and to return in mercy to them. God's time to repent himself concerning his servants is when he sees that, as here, their strength is gone, and there is none shut up or left, Deut. xxxii. 36.

(2) He answers the argument they had against abiding in this land; they feared the king of Babylon, (ch. xlii. 18.) lest he should come, and avenge the death of Gedaliah upon them, though they were no way accessory to it, nay, had witnessed against it. The surmise was foreign and unreasonable; but if there had been any ground for it, enough is said to make it unnecessary. v. 11.) ye are not afraid of the king of Babylon, though he is a man of great might and little mercy, and a very arbitrary prince, whose will is a law, and therefore you are afraid he will, upon this pretence, though without colour of reason, take advantage against you; be not afraid of him, for that fear will bring a snare; fear not him, for I am with you; and if God be for you, who can be against you. v. 12.) The kingdom of God promises peace both in the state and silence even the causeless fears of his people, which discourage them in the way of their duty; there is enough in the promises to do it.

(3) He assured them that if they will still abide in this land, they shall not only be safe from the king of Babylon, but be made happy by the King of kings: "I will build you and plant you, if you shall take root again, and be the new foundation of another state; a phoenix-kingdom, rising out of the ashes of the last." It is added, (v. 12.) I will show mercies unto you. Note, In all our comforts we may read God's mercies. God will show them mercy in this, that not only the king of Babylon shall not destroy them, but he shall have mercy upon them, and help to settle them. Note, Whatever kindness men do us, we must attribute it to God's kindness. He makes those whom he pities to be pitied even by those that carried them captive, Ps. cvi. 46. "The king of Babylon, having now the disposal of the country, shall cause you to return to your own land," shall settle you again in your own habitations, and put you in possession of the lands that formerly belonged to you. Note, There has been a dispensation, by which is really our privilege, and our obedience will be its own recompense. "Abide in this land, and it shall be your own land again, and you shall continue in it." Do not quit it, now that you stand so fair for the enjoyment of it again. Be not so unwise as to forsake your own mercies for lying vanities." 2. That as they tender the favour of God and their own happiness, it is no means think of going into Egypt; not thither, of all places, that land out of which God had delivered their fathers, and which he had so often warned them not to make alliance with, nor to put confidence in. Observe here,

(1) The sin they are supposed to be guilty of; and to him that knew their hearts it was more than a supposition; "You begin to say, We will dwell in Canaan, (v. 13.) but by no means think that we can be safe in it, no, not though God himself undertake our protection; we will not continue in it, no, not in obedience to the voice of the Lord our God; he may say what he pleases, but we will do what we please; we will go into the land of Egypt, and there we will dwell, whether God give us leave, and go along with us, or no," v. 14. Is it supposed that their hearts were upon it? If ye wholly set your faces to enter into Egypt, are obstinately resolved that ye will go, and sojourn there, though God oppose you in it, both by his word and by his providence, then take what follows." Now the reason they give upon this in this resolution, is, that in Egypt we shall see no war, nor have hunger of bread, as we have had for a long time in this land, v. 14. Note, It is folly to quit our place, especially to quit the holy land, because we meet with trouble in it; but greater folly to think by changing our place to escape the judgments of God, and that evil which pursues sinners in every way of disobedience, and which there is no escaping but by returning to our allegiance.

(2.) The sentence passed upon them for this sin, if they will persist in it. It is pronounced in God's name; (v. 15.) "Hear the word of the Lord, ye remnant of Judah, who think that because you are a remnant, you must be spared of course, (v. 2.) and indulged in your own humour. [1.] Did the sword and famine frighten them? Those very judgments shall pursue them into Egypt, shall overtake them, and overcome them, there; (v. 16, 17.) "You think, because war and famine have long raging in this land, that they are entailed upon it; whereas, if you trust in God, he can make even this land a land of peace to you; you think they are confined to it, and if you can get clear of this land, you shall get out of the world's perils, but God will send them after you wherever you go." Note, The evils we think to escape by sin, we certainly and inevitably run ourselves upon. The men that go to Egypt, in contradiction to God's will, to escape the sword and famine, shall die in Egypt by sword and famine. We may apply it to the common calamities of human life; those that are impatient of them, and think to avoid them by changing their place, will find that they are pursued after, and that they do not at all mend themselves; the grievances common to men will meet them wherever they go; all our removes in this world are but from one wilderness to another; still we are where we were. [2.] Did the desolations of Jerusalem frighten them? "Were they willing to get as far as they could from them? They shall meet with the second part of them too in Egypt; (v. 18.) "Do my anger and fury have been poured out upon you in Jerusalem, so they shall be poured out upon you in Egypt. Note, Those that have by sin made God their Enemy, will find him a consuming Fire, wherever they go. And then ye shall be an execration and an astonishment. The Hebrews were of old an abomination to the Egyptians; (Gen xlvi. 5.) and now the Egyptians are the Hebrews. When God's professing people mingle themselves with infidels, and make their court to them, they lose their dignity, and make themselves a reproach.

3. That God knew their hypocrisy in their inquiries of him, and that when they asked what he would have them to do, they were resolved to take their own way; and therefore the sentence which was before pronounced conditionally is made absolute, but God makes it more sure by an evil. The blessing and the curse, in the close he makes application of what he had said. And here, (1.) He solemnly protests that he had faithfully delivered his message, v. 19. The conclusion of the whole matter is, "Go not down into Egypt, you disobey the command of God if you do, and what I have said, shall prove to the contrary; if you are not convinced, you have not only despised, but are under a strong conviction of our ignorance of the mind of God." (2.) He charges them with base dissimulation in the application they made to him for divine direction; (v. 20.) "You dispersed in your hearts, you professed one thing and intended another, you promised what you never meant to perform." You have used deceit against your souls; the margin reads it: for those that think to put a cheat upon God, will prove in the end to have put a damning cheat upon themselves. (3.) He is already aware that they are determined to go contrary to the command of God; probably, they discovered it in their conentenance and secret murtherings already, before he had finished his discourse. However, he spake from him who knew their hearts; "Ye have not obeyed the voice of the Lord your God, ye have not done that which he commanded you, nor the closeness of his farewell sermon, had told them, (Deut. xxxi. 27, 29.) I know thy rebellion and thy stiff neck—and that ye will corrupt yourselves. Admonish the patience of God, that he is pleased to speak to those who, he knows, will not regard him, and deal with those who, he knows, will deal treacherously, Isa. lxviii. 8. (4.) He therefore reads them their doom, ratifying what he had said before, Know certainly that ye shall die by the sword, v. 22. God's threatenings may be vilified, but cannot be nullified, by the unbelief of man. Famine and pestilence shall pursue these sinners; for there is no place privileged from divine arrests, nor can any inducements go out of God's jurisdiction. Ye shall die in the place whither ye desire to go. Note, We know not what is good for ourselves; and that often proves afflictive, and sometimes fatal, which we are most fond of, and have our hearts most set upon.

CHAP. XLIII.

Jeremiah had faithfully delivered his message from God, in the foregoing chapter, and the case was made so very plain by it, that one would have thought there needed no more words about it; but we find it quite otherwise. Here is, 1. The people's contempt of this message; they denied it to be the word of God, (v. 1., 3.) and then made no difficulty of going directly contrary to it. Into Egypt they went, and took Jeremiah himself along with them, v. 4. and now he sees God's pursuit of them with another message, foretelling the king of Babylon's pursuit of them into Egypt, v. 8. 13.

1. And it came to pass, that when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking unto all the people all the words of the Lord their God, for which the Lord their God had sent him to them, even all these words, 2. Then spake Azariah the son of Hoshaiah, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the proud men, saying unto Jeremiah, Thou speakest falsely: the Lord our God hath not sent thee to say, Go not into Egypt to sojourn there: 3. But Baruch the son of Neriah setteth thee on against us, for to deliver us into the hand of the Chaldeans, that they might put us to death, and carry us away captives into Babylon. 4. So Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, and all the people, obeyed not the voice of the Lord, to dwell in the land of Judah; 5. But Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, took all the remnant of Judah, that were returned from all nations whither they had been driven, to dwell in the land of Judah; 6. Even men, and women, and children, and the king's daughters, and every person that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had left with Gedaliah the son of Abikam, the son of Shaphan, and Jeremiah the prophet, and Baruch the son of Neriah.

7. So they came into the land of Egypt: for they obeyed not the voice of the Lord. Thus came they even to Tahpanhes.

What God said to the builders of Babel, may be truly said of this people that Jeremiah is now dealing with: "Now nothing will be restored from this going to Egypt; they have imagined to do, Gen. xlix. 6. They have a fancy for Egypt, and to Egypt they will go, whatever God himself saith to the contrary. Jeremiah made them hear all he had to say, though he saw them unready at it; it was what the Lord their God had sent him to speak to them, and they shall have it all. And now let us see what they have to say to it.

They say it to be a message from God; Jahavan, and all the proud men, said to Jeremiah, Thou speakest falsely, v. 2. See here, (1.) What was the cause of their disobedience, it was pride; only by that comes contentation both with God and man: they were proud men that gave the lie to the prophet. They could not bear the contradiction of their sentiments, and the control of their designs, not the domination of another will. Pharaoh said, Who is the Lord that I should obey him? Exod. v. 2. The proud, unhumbled heart of man is one of the most daring enemies God has on this side hell. (2.) What was the colour for their disobedience. They would not acknowledge it to be the word of God; The Lord hath not sent thee to do any thing, nor let them to conform themselves to scripture-rules, and so an obstinate insubility is made the sorry subterfuge of a willful disobedience. If God had spoken to them by an angel, or as he did from mount Sinai, they would have said that it was a delusion. Had they not consulted Jeremiah as a prophet? Had not they waited to receive instructions from God what to say to them? Had not what he said all the usual marks of prophecy upon it? Was not the prophet himself embarked in the same bottom with them? What interests could he have separate from theirs? Had he not always approved himself an Israelite indeed; And had not God proved him a prophet indeed? Had any of his words ever fallen to the ground? Why truly they had some good thoughts of Jeremiah, but they suggest, (v. 3.) Baruch seth thee an against us. A likely thing, that Baruch should be in a plot to deliver them into the hands of the Chaldeans; and what would he get by that? If Jeremiah and he had been so well affected to the Chaldeans as they would represent them, they would have gone away at first with Nebuzar-adan, when he counted them, to Babylon, and not have staid to take their lot with this despised, ungrateful remnant. When men will forsake their faith in sin, they represent those that would turn them from it as designing men for themselves, nay, as ill-designing men against their neighbours. It is well for persons who are thus misrepresented, that their witness is in heaven, and their record on high.

2. They determine to go to Egypt however. They resolve not to dwell in the land of Judah, as God had ordered them, (v. 4.) but to go themselves with one consent, and to take all that they had under their power along with them to Egypt. Those that came from all the nations whither they had been driven, to dwell in the land of Judah, out of a sincere affection to that land, they would not leave to their liberty, but forced them to go with them into Egypt, (v. 5.) men, women, and children, (v. 6.) a long journey into a strange country, an idolatrous country, a country that had never been kind or faithful to Israel; yet thither they would go, though they deserted their own land and threw themselves out of God's protection. It is the folly of men, that they know not when they are well off, and often ruin themselves by endeavouring to mend themselves; and it is the pride of great men to force these they have under their power to follow them, though ever so much against their duty and interest. These proud men compelled even Jeremiah the prophet and Baruch his scribe to go along with them to Egypt; they carried them away as prisoners, partly to punish them, (and a greater punishment they could not inflict upon them than to force them against their convictions, and to deal with them as they pleased; what men's souls, even to good men's souls, Even down, that we may go over,) partly to put some reputation upon themselves and their own way; though the prophets were under a force, they would make the world believe that they were voluntary in going along with them. Who could have blamed them for acting contrary to the word of the Lord, if the prophets themselves had acted so? They came to Tahpanhes, a famous city of Egypt, (so called from a queen of that name, 1 Kings xi. 19.) the same with Hanses; (Isa. xxx. 4.) it was now the metropolis, for Pharaoh's house was there, (v. 9.) no place could serve these proud men to settle in but the royal city, and near the court; so little mindful were they of Joseph's wisdom who had have his brethren settle in Goshen. If they had had the spirit of Israelites, they would have chosen rather to dwell in the wilderness of Judah than in the most pompous, populous cities of Egypt.

8. Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah in Tahpanhes, saying, 9. Take great stones in thy hand, and hide them in the clay in the brick-kiln, which is at the entry of Pharaoh's house in Tahpanhes, in the sight of the men of Judah; 10. And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will send and take Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylol my servant, and will set his throne upon these stones that I have hid; and he shall spread his royal pavilion over them. 11. And when he cometh, he shall smite the land of Egypt, and deliver such as are for death, to death; and such as are for captivity, to captivity; and such as are for the sword, to the sword. 12. And I will kindle a fire in the houses of the gods of Egypt; and he shall burn them, and carry them away captives; and he shall array himself with the land of Egypt, as a shepherd putteth on his garment, and he shall go forth from thence in peace. 13. He shall break also the images of Beth-she-mesh, that is in the land of Egypt; and the houses of the gods of the Egyptians shall he burn with fire.

We have here, as also in the next chapter, Jeremiah prophesying in Egypt. Jeremiah was now in Tahpanhes, for there his lords and masters were; he was there among his idolasters. Yet there were places; but there, 1. He received the word of the Lord; it came to him. God can find his people, with the visits of his grace, wherever they are; and when his ministers are bound, yet the word of the Lord is not bound. The spirit of prophecy was not confined to the land of Israel. When Jeremiah went into Egypt, not out of choice, but by constraint, God withdrew not his word, or his Spirit from them. 2. What he received of the Lord he delivered to the people. Wherever we are, we must endeavour to do good, for that is our business in this world.

Now we find two messages which Jeremiah was appointed and intrusted to deliver, when he was in Egypt. We may suppose that he rendered what services he could to his countrymen in Egypt, at least as far as they would be acceptable, in performing the ordinary duties of a prophet, praying for them, and instructing and comforting them; but only two messages of his, which he had received immediately from God, are recorded; one in this chapter, relating to Egypt itself, and foretelling its destruction; the other in the next chapter, relating to the Jews in Egypt.

God had told them before, that if they went into Egypt, the sword they feared should follow them; here he tells them further, that the sword of Nebuchadrezzar, which they were in a particular manner afraid of, should follow them.

1. This is foretold by a sign. Jeremiah must take great stones, such as are used for foundations, and lay them in the clay of the furnace, or brick-kiln, which is in the open way, or beside the way that leads to Pharaoh's house; (v. 3) some remarkable place in view of the royal palace. Egypt was famous for brick-kilns, witness the slavery of the Israelites there, whom they forced to make bricks, (Exod. v. 7.) which perhaps was now remembered against them. The foundation of Egypt's desolation was laid in those brick-kilns, in that clay. This he must do, not in the sight of the Egyptians, (they knew not Jeremiah's character,) but in the sight of the men among them; for he was sent, that neither he could prevent their going into Egypt, he might bring them to repent of their going.

2. It is foretold in express words, as express as can be.

1. That the king, the present king of Babylon, Nebuchadrezzar, the very same that had been employed in the destruction of Idumaeas, should come against the land of Egypt, should make himself master even of this royal city, that he should set his throne in that very place where these stones were laid, v. 10. This minute circumstance is particularly foretold, that, when it was accomplished, they might be put in mind of the prophecy, and confirmed in their belief of the extent and certainty of the divine prescience, to which such events are evident. God calls Nebuchadrezzar his servant, because herein he executed God's will, accomplished his purposes, and was instrumental to carry on his designs. Note, The world's princes are God's servants, and he makes what use he pleases of them, and even those that know him not, nor aim at his honour, are the tools which his providence makes use of.

2. That he should destroy many of the Egyptians, and have them all at his mercy; (v. 11.) He shall smite the land of Egypt; and thi: it has been always a warlike nation, yet none shall be able to make head against him, but whom he will he shall slay, and by what sort of death he will, whether pestilence, (for that is here meant by death, as ch. xxv. 2.) by shutting them up in places infected, or by the sword of war or justice, in cold blood or hot. And whom he will, he shall save alive, and carry them captive in Egypt, and make them captive with the rich spoil of Egypt; and he shall bring them to Babylon. He's wrath fastens upon them, and then he burns some of them, and carries others captive, Isa. xlvii. 1. Beth-shemesh, or the house of the sun, was so called from a temple there built to the sun, where at certain times there was a general meeting of the worshippers of the sun. The statues of standing images there he shall break in pieces, (v. 12.) and cast them into the brick-kilns and into the furnaces of the Egyptians. He intimates that he should lay all waste, when even the temple and the images should not escape the fury of the victorious army. The king of Babylon was himself a great idolater, and a patron of idolatry, he had his temples and images in honour of the sun, as well as the Egyptians, and yet he is employed to destroy the idols of Egypt. Thus God sometimes makes one wicked man, or wicked nation, a scourge and plague to another.

4. That he shall make himself master of the land of Egypt, and none shall be able to plead its cause, or avenge its quarrel; (v. 12.) He shall array himself with the rich spoil of the land of Egypt, both beautiful and fortify himself with them; he shall array himself with them as ornaments and as armour, and this, though it shall be a rich and heavy booty; being expert in war, and expeditions, he shall slip on with as much ease, and in as little time, in comparison, as a shepherd slips on his garment, when he goes to turn out his sheep in a morning. And, being loaded with the wealth of many other nations, the fruits of his conquests, he shall make no more of the spoils of the land of Egypt than of a shepherd's coat. And when he has taken what he pleases, (as Benhadad the king of Syria had done, 2 Kings xxi. 10.) he shall go forth in peace, without any molestation given him, or any precipitation for fear of it, so effectually reduced shall the land of Egypt be. This destruction of Egypt by the king of Babylon is foretold, Ezek. xxxix. 19, and xxx. 10. Babylon lay at a great distance from Egypt, and yet from thence the destruction of Egypt comes; for God can make those judgments strike home which are far-fetched.

CHAP. XLIV.

In this chapter we have, 1. An awakening sermon which Jeremiah preached to the Jews in Egypt, to prepare them for their destruction, notwithstanding any favours or blessings given them both by the word and the rod of God, and to threaten them with the judgments of God against them for it, v. 1. 14. The impotent and impious contempt which the people put upon this admonition, and their declared resolution to persist in their idolatries notwithstanding, in despite of God and Jeremiah, v. 15. 19. 21. The sentence passed upon them for their obstinacy, that they should all be cut off and perish in Egypt, except a very small number; and, as a sign or earnest of it, the king of Egypt should shortly fall into the hands of the king of Babylon, and be unable any longer to protect them, v. 20. 30.

1. THE word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the Jews which dwell in the land of Egypt, which dwell at Migdol, at Taanach, and at Noph, and in the country of Pathros, saying, 2. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Ye have seen all the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, and upon all the cities of Judah; and, behold, this day they are a desolation, and no man dwelleth therein; 3. Because of their wickedness which they have committed, to provoke me to anger, in that they went to burn incense, and to serve other gods, whom they knew not, neither they, you, nor your fathers. 4. Howbeit I sent unto you all my servants the prophets, rising early and sending them, saying, Oh, do not this abominable thing that I hate. 5. But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear to turn from their wickedness, to burn no incense unto other gods. 6. Wherefore my fury and mine anger was poured forth, and was kindled in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem; and they are wasted and desolate, as at this day. 7. Therefore now thus saith the Lord, the God of hosts, the God of Israel, Wherefore commit ye this great evil against your souls, to cut off from you man and woman, child and suckling, out of Judah, to leave you none to remain; 8. In that ye provoke me unto wrath with the works of your hands, burning incense unto other gods in the land of Egypt, whither ye be gone to dwell, that ye might cut yourselves off, and that ye might be a curse and a reproach among all the nations of the earth? 9. Have ye forgotten the wickedness of your fathers, and the wickedness of the kings of Judah, and the wickedness of their wives, and your own wickedness, and the wickedness of your wives, which they have committed in the land of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem? 10. They are not humbled even unto this day, neither have they feared, nor walked in my law, nor in my statutes, that I set before you, and before your fathers. 11. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will set my face against you for evil, and to cut off all Judah. 12. And I will take the remnant of Judah, that have set their faces to go into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, and they shall all be consumed, and fall in the land of Egypt; they shall even be consumed by the sword and by the famine: they shall die, from the least even unto the greatest, by the sword and by the famine; and they shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach. 13. For I will punish them that dwell in the land of Egypt, as I have punished Jerusalem, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: 14. So that none of the remnant of Judah, which are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall escape or remain, that they should return into the land of Judah, to the which they have a desire to return to dwell there; for none shall return but such as shall escape.

The Jews in Egypt are now dispersed into divers parts of the country, into Migdol and Noph, and other places, and Jeremiah is sent on an errand from God to them, which he delivered either when he had the most of them together, in Pathros, (v. 15.) or going about from place to place preaching to this purport. He delivered this message in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, and in it,

1. God puts them in mind of the desolations of Judah and Jerusalem, which, though the captives by the river of Babylon were daily mindful of them, (Ps. cxxxviii. 1.) the fugitives in the cities of Egypt seem to have forgotten, and needed to be put in mind of, though these desolations, one would have thought, had not been so long out of sight as to be out of mind; (v. 2.) Have ye seen what a desolator condition Judah and Jerusalem are come into; now will you consider whence those desolations came? From the wrath of God; it was his fury and his anger that kindled the fire which made Jerusalem and the cities of Judah waste and desolate; (v. 6.) whoever were the instruments of the destruction, they were but instruments: it was a destruction from the Almighty.

2. He puts them in mind of the sins that brought those desolations upon Judah and Jerusalem; it was for their wickedness, that was it that provoked God to anger, and especially their idolatry, their serving other gods, (v. 3.) and giving that honour to counterfeit deities, the creatures of their own fancy, and the work of their own hands, which should have been given to the true God only; they forsook the God who was known among them, and whose name was great, for gods that they knew not, upstart deities, whose original was obscure, and not worth taking notice of; "Neither they, nor you, nor your fathers, could give any rational account why the God of Israel was exchanged for such imposters." They knew not that they were gods, nay, they could not but know that they were not gods, but the work of their hands, which did not profit, and were soon wearied out.

3. He puts them in mind of the frequent fair warning he had given them by his word not to serve other gods, the contempt of which warnings was a great aggravation of their idolatry, v. 4. The prophets were sent with a great deal of care to call to them, saying, Oh, do not this abominable thing that I hate. It becomes us to speak of sin with the utmost dread and detestation as an abominable thing; it is certainly so, for it is that which God hates, and we are sure that his judgment is according to truth. Call it grievous, call it odious, that we may by all means possible put ourselves and others out of love with it. It becomes us to give warning of the danger of sin, and the fatal consequences of it, with all seriousness and earnestness; Oh, do not do it! If you love God not, for it is proved to you, do not love your own souls, do not, for it is destructive to them." Let conscience do this for us in an hour of temptation, when we are ready to yield. O take heed; do not this abominable thing which the Lord hates; for if God hates it, thou shouldest hate it. But did they regard what God said to them? No! They hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, (v. 5.) they still persisted in their idolatries; and you see what came of it, therefore God's anger was poured out upon them, as at this day. Now this was intended for warning to you, who have not only heard the judgments of God's mouth, as they did, but have likewise seen the judgments of his hand, by which you should be startled and awakened, for they were inflicted in terrorem—that others might hear and fear, and do no more as they did, lest they should fare as they fared.

4. He reproves them for, and upbraids them with, their continued idolatries, now that they were come into Egypt; (v. 8.) You burn incense to other gods in the land of Egypt; therefore God forbade them to go into Egypt, because he knew it would be a snare to them. Those whom God sent into the land of the Chaldeans, though that was an idolatrous country were there, by the power of God, were saved from idolatry; but those who went against God's mind into the land of the Egyptians, were there by the power of their own corruption, more wedded than ever to their idolatries; for when we thrust ourselves without cause or call into places of temptation, it is just with God to leave us to ourselves. In doing this, (1.) They did a great deal of injury to themselves and their families; "You commit this great evil against your souls, (v. 7.) you wrong them, you deceive them with that which is false, you destroy them, for it will be fatal to them." Note, In sinning against God, we sin against our own souls.

"It is the ready way to cut yourselves off from all comfort and hope, (v. 8.) to cut off your name and honour; so that you will, both by your sin and by your misery, become a curse and a reproach among all nations. They shall fared. They were to be cut off as a Jew. It is the ready way to cut off from you all your relations, all that you should have joy of, and have your families built up in man, and woman, child and suckling, so that Judah shall be a land lost for want of heirs." (2.) They filled up the measure of the iniquity of their fathers, and, as if that had been too little for them, added to it; (v. 9.) "Have ye forgotten the wickedness of those who are gone before you?" "And they are not humbled for it as you ought to be, and afraid of the consequences of it?" Have you forgotten the punishments of your fathers? So some read it. "Do you not know how dear their idolatry cost them? And yet dare you continue in that vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers, though you received the curse with it?" He reminds them of the sins and punishments of the kings of Judah, who, great as they were, escaped not the judgments of God for their idolatry; yea, and they should have taken warning by the wickedness of their wives, who had seduced them to idolatry. In the original it is, And of his wives, which, Dr. Lightfoot thinks, tacitly reflects upon Solomon's wives, particularly his Egyptian wives, to whom the idolatry of the kings of Judah owed its original. "Have you forgotten this, and what came of it, that you dare venture upon the same wicked courses?" (See Neh. xiii. 18, 26.) "Nay, to come to your own times, Have you forgotten your own wickedness and the wickedness of your wives, when you lived in prosperity in Jerusalem, and what ruin it brought upon you? But, alas! to what purpose do I speak to them?" (says God, to his prophet, v. 10.) "They have not heeded, unto this day all those alarming providences that they have been under. They have not feared nor walked in my law." Note, Those that walk not in the law of God, thereby show that they are destitute of the fear of God.

5. He threatens their utter ruin for their persisting in their idolatry, now that they were in Egypt. Judah is given against them, as before, (ch. xli. 22.) that they shall be as in Egypt, all their daughters deceased, and that shall be all gone forth, and shall not be called back; they set their faces to go into the land of Egypt, (v. 12.) were resolute in their purpose against God, and now God is resolute in his purpose against them; I will set my face to cut off all Judah, v. 11. They that think not only to afront but to contront God Almighty, will find themselves outfaced; for the face of the Lord is against them that do evil, Ps. xxxiv. 18. It is here threatened, concerning those idolatrous Jews in Egypt, (1.) That they shall all be consumed, without exception, no degree or order among them shall escape; "They shall fall, from the least to the greatest, (v. 12.) high and low, rich and poor. (2.) That they shall be consumed by the very same judgments which God made use of for the punishment of Jerusalem, the sword, famine, and pestilence, v. 12, 13. They shall not be wasted by natural death, as Israel in the wilderness, but by these sore judgments, which, by flying into Egypt, they thought to get out of the reach of. (3.) That none (except a very few that will narrowly escape) shall ever return to the land of Judah again, v. 14. They thought, being nearer, that they stood fairer for a return to their own land than those that were carried to Babylon; yet those shall return, and these shall not; for the way in which God has promised us any comfort is much surer than that in which we have projected it for ourselves. Observe, Those that are fretful and discontented will be uneasy, and fond of change, wherever they are. The Israelites, when they were in the land of Judah, desired to go into Egypt; (ch. xiii. 22.) but when they were in Egypt, they desired to return to the land of Judah again; they lifted up their soul to it, (so it is in the margin,) which denotes an earnest desire. But because they would not dwell there when God commanded it, they shall not dwell there when they desire it. If we walk contrary to God, he will walk contrary to us. How can those expect to be well off, who would not know when they were so, though God himself told them?

15. Then all the men which knew that their wives had burnt incense unto other gods, and all the women that stood by, a great multitude, even all the people that dwelt in the land of Egypt, in Pathros, answered Jeremiah, saying, 16. As for the word which thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee. 17. But we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth, to burn incense unto the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her, as we have done, we, and our fathers, our kings, and our princes, in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem: for they had us many of victuals, and were well, and saw no evil. 18. But since we left off to burn incense unto the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her, we have wasted all things, and have been consumed by the sword and by the famine. 19. And when we burnt incense unto the queen of heaven, and poured out drink-offerings unto her, did we make her cakes to worship her, and poured out drink-offerings unto her without our men? We have here the people's obstinate refusal to submit to the power of the word of God in the mouth of Jeremiah. We have scarcely such an instance of downrightness, daring contradiction to God himself as this, or such an avowed rebellion of the carnal mind. Observe,

1. The persons who thus set God and his judgment at defiance; it was not some one that was thus...
ominate, but the generality of the Jews; and they were such as knew either themselves or their wives to be guilty of the idolatry Jeremiah had reproved, v. 13. We find, 1. That the women had been more liable to idolatry and superstition than the men, not because the men stuck closer to the true God and the true religion than the women, but, I fear, because they were generally atheists, and were for no God and no religion at all, and therefore could easily allow their wives to be of a false religion, and to worship false gods. 2. That consciousness of guilt made them impatient of reproof; They knew that Jeremiah had reproved them, and they had comeuntenanted them in it and the women that stood by knew that they had joined with them in their idolatrous usages; so that what Jeremiah said touched them in a sore place, which made them kick against the pricks, as children of Belial, that will not bear the yoke.

II. The reply which these persons made to Jeremiah, and in him to God himself; it is in effect the same with theirs who had the impudence to say to the Almighty, Depart from us, we desire not the knowledge of thy ways.

1. They declare their resolution not to do as God commanded them, but what they themselves had a mind to do; that is, they would go on to worship the moon, here called the queen of heaven; yet some understand that which Jerusalem was here called the queen of heaven, in Egypt, (ch. xliii. 13.) and had been so at Jerusalem; (2 Kings xxiii. 11.) and they say, that the Hebrew word for the sun being feminine, it may not unfitness be called the queen of heaven. And others understand it of all the hosts of heaven, or the frame of heaven, the whole machine, ch. vii. 18. These daring sinners do not now go about to make excuses for their refusal to do, which was that Jerusalem spake from himself, and not from God, (as before, ch. xliii. 2.) but they own that he spake to them in the name of the Lord, and yet tell him flatly, in so many words, We will not hearken unto thee; we will do that which is forbidden, and run the venture of that which is threatened. Note, Those that live in disobedience to God commonly grow worse and worse, and the heart is more and more hardened by the hardening of the sin. Here is the language of the rebellious heart: We will certainly do whatsoever thing goes forth out of our own mouth, let God and his prophets say what they please to the contrary. What they said, many think, who yet have not arrived at such a degree of impudence as to speak it out. It is that which the young man would be at in the days of his youth; he would walk in the way of his heart, and the sight of his eyes, and would have and do every thing he has a mind to, Eccl. xi. 9.

2. They give some sort of reasons for their resolution; for the most absurdly and unreasonably wicked men will have something to say for themselves, till the day comes when every mouth shall be stopped.

[1.] They plead many of those things which the advocates for Rome make the marks of a true church, and not only justify but magnify themselves with; and these here have as much right to them as they have. [1.] They plead antiquity: We are resolved to burn incense to the queen of heaven, for our fathers did so; it is a practice that pleads precedent to this, and we pretend to be no worse than our fathers? [2.] They plead authority; they that had power practised it themselves, and prescribed it to others; Our kings and our princes did it, whom God set over us, and who were of the seed of David. [3.] They plead unity; it was not here and there one that did it, but we, we all with one consent, we that are a great multitude, (v. 15.) we did it. [4.] They plead universality; it was not done here and there, but in the cities of Judah. [5.] They plead visibility; it was not done in a corner, in dark and shady groves only, but in the streets, openly and publicly. [6.] They plead that it was the practice of the nations about the holy see; it was not now learned first in Egypt, but it had been done in Jerusalem. [7.] They plead prosperity; then had we plenty of bread, and of all good things, we were well, and saw no evil. All the former pleas, I fear, were too true in fact; God’s witnesses against their idolatry were few and hid; Elijah thought that he was left alone; and this law might perhaps be true as to some particular persons, but as to their nation, they were still under rebukes for their rebellions, and there was no peace to them that went out or came in, 2 Chron. xv. 5. But supposing all to be true, yet this does not at all excuse them from idolatry; it is the law of God that we must be ruled and judged by, not the practice of them.

[2.] They suggest that the judgments they had of late been under, were brought upon them for leaving off to burn incense to the queen of heaven, v. 18. So perversely did they misconstrue Providence, though God, by his prophets, had so often explained it to them, and the thing itself spoke the direct contrary! Since we forsake our idolatries, we have wanted all things, and have been consumed by the sword of the Lord, is a language which they still retain their idols in their heart, and an affection to their old sins; but they would have it thought that it was because they had forsaken the acts of sin. Thus the afflictions which should have been for their welfare, to part between them and their sins, being misinterpreted, did but confirm them in their sins. Thus, in the first ages of Christianity, when God chastised the nations by a deliberate calamities for opposing the Christians, and persecuting them, they put a contrary sense upon the calamities, as if they were sent to punish them for conniving at the Christians, and tolerating them, and, they, Christians ad librones—Throw the Christians to the lions. Yet, if it had been true, as they said here, that since they returned to the service of the true God, the God of Israel, they lay been in want of all, and therefore God had been displeased with them, they should revolt from him again? That was as much as to say that they served not him, but their own bellies. Those who know God, and put their trust in him, will serve him, though he starve them, though he slay them, though they never see a good day with him in this world, being well assured that they shall not lose by him in the end.

[3.] They plead that though the women were most forward and active in their idolatries, yet did they it with the consent and approbation of their husbands; the women were busy to make cakes for meat-offerings to the queen of heaven, and to prepare and pour out the drink-offerings, v. 19. We found, before, that it was their work, ch. vii. 18. But do you do it, and not your husbands? Perhaps it is unknown to them, so as to give them occasion to be jealous of us? Nor the fathers kindled the fire, while the women kneaded the dough; the men that were our heads, whom we were bound to learn of, and to be obedient to, taught us to do it by their example. Note, It is sad when those who are in the nearest relation to each other, who should quicken each other, and strengthen each other to do well, should thus be opposed to heaven, harden each other in sin, and so ripen one another for hell. Some understand this as spoken by the husbands, (v. 15.) who plead that they did not do it without their men, without their elders and rulers, their great men, and men in authority; but because the making of the cakes, and the pouring out of the drink-offerings, are expressly spoken of as the women’s work, (ch. vii. 18.) it seems rather to be understood as their plea: but it was a frivolous plea. What would it avail them to be able to say that it was according to their husbands' mind, when they knew that it was contrary to their God's mind?

20. Then Jeremiah said unto all the people, to the men, and to the women, and to all the people which had given him that answer, saying, 21. The incense that ye burnt in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, ye, and your fathers, your kings, and your princes, and the people of the land, did not the Lord remember them, and came it not into his mind? 22. So that the Lord could no longer bear, because of the evil of your doings, and because of the abominations which ye have committed; therefore is your land a desolation, and an astonishment, and a curse, without an inhabitant, as at this day. 23. Because you have burnt incense, and because ye have sinned against the Lord, and have not obeyed the voice of the Lord, nor walked in his law, nor in his statutes, nor in his testimonies; therefore this evil is happened unto you, as at this day. 24. Moreover, Jeremiah said unto all the people, and to all the women, Hear the word of the Lord, all Judah that are in the land of Egypt; 25. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, Ye and your wives have both spoken with your mouths, and fulfilled with your hand, saying, We will surely perform our vows that we have vowed, to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her: ye will surely accomplish your vows, and surely perform your vows. 26. Therefore hear ye the word of the Lord, all Judah that dwell in the land of Egypt; Behold, I have sworn by my great name, saith the Lord, that my name shall no more be named in the mouth of any man of Judah, in all the land of Egypt, saying, The Lord God liveth. 27. Behold, I will watch over them for evil, and not for good; and all the men of Judah that are in the land of Egypt shall be consumed by the sword and by the famine, until there be an end of them. 28. Yet a small number that escape the sword shall return out of the land of Egypt into the land of Judah; and all the remnant of Judah, that are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall know whose words shall stand, mine, or theirs. 29. And this shall be a sign unto you, saith the Lord, that I will punish you in this place, that ye may know that my words shall surely stand against you for evil: 30. Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will give Pharaoh-hophra king of Egypt into the hand of his enemies, and into the hand of them that seek his life, as I gave Zedekiah king of Judah into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon his enemy, and that sought his life.

Daring sinners may speak many a bold word, and many a big word, but, after all, God will have the last word; for he will be justified when he speaks; and all flesh, even the proudest, shall be silent before him. Prophets may be run down, but God cannot; for the prophet that fails not.

I. Jeremiah has something to say to them from himself, which he could say without a spirit of prophecy, and that was to rectify their mistake, (a wilful mistake it was,) concerning the calamities they had been under, and the true intent and meaning of them. They said that these miseries came upon them because they had now left off burning incense to the queen of heaven. "No," says he, "it was because you had formerly done it, not because you had now left it off." When they gave him that answer, he immediately replied, (v. 20.) that the incense which they and their fathers had burnt to other gods did indeed go unpunished a great while, for God was long-suffering toward them, and during the day of his patience it was, perhaps, as they said, well with them, and they saw no evil; but at length the day of their burning incense was come, and no longer bear, (v. 22.) but began a controversy with them, whereupon some of them did a little reform, their sins left them, for so it might be said, rather than that they left their sins. But their old guilt being still upon the score, and their corrupt inclinations still the same, God remembered against them the idolatries of their fathers, their kings, and their princes, in the streets of Jerusalem, which they, instead of being ashamed of, gloried in, as a justification of them in their idolatries; they all came into his mind, (v. 21.) all the abominations which they had committed, (v. 22.) and all their disobedience to the voice of the Lord, (v. 23.) all were brought to account; and therefore, to punish them for these is their land a desolation and a curse, as at this day; (v. 22.) therefore, not for their late reformation, but for their old insensate folly, is all this evil happened to them, as at this day, v. 23. Note, The right understanding of the cause of our troubles, one would think, should go far toward the cure of our sins. Whatever evil comes upon us, it is because we have sinned against the Lord, and should therefore stand in awe, and sin not.

II. Jeremiah has something to say to them, to the women particularly, from the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; they have given their answer, now let them hear God's reply, v. 24. Judah, that dwells in the land of Egypt, has God speaking to them, even there, that is their privilege; let them observe what he says, that is their duty, v. 26. Now God, in his reply, tells them plainly,

1. That since they were fully determined to persist in their idolatry, God was fully determined to proceed in a controversy with them; if they would go on to provoke him, he would go on to punish them, and see which would get the better at last. God repeats what they had said; (v. 25.) "You and your wives are agreed in this obstinacy, you have spoken with your mouths, and fulfilled with your hand, you have said it, and you stand to it, have said it, and go on to do accordingly. We will not, contrary to what we have vowed, to burn incense to the queen of heaven," as if, though it were a sin, yet their having vowed to do it, were sufficient to justify them in the doing of it; whereas no man can by his vow make that lawful to himself, much less duty, which God has already made sin. "Well," (says God,) *you will accomplish, you will perform, your wicked words; now hear what is my vow, what I have sworn by my great name," and if the Lord hath sworn, he will not repent, since they have sworn and will not repent; with the froward he will show himself froward. Ps. xviii. 25. He hath sworn, (1) That what little remains of religion there were among them, should be lost, v. 26. Though they joined with the Egyptians in their idolatries, yet they continued so long as God should permit them to bear the name of Jehovah, particularly in their solemn oaths; they said, Jehovah liveth, he is the living God, so they owned him to be, though they worshipped dead idols; they swear, The Lord liveth; (ch. v. 2.) but I fear they retained this form of swearing more in honour of their nation than of their God; but God declares that his name shall not be found by a man's lips, (Isa. lvi. 7.) in all the land of Egypt, that there shall be no Jews remaining to use this dialect of their country, or, if there be, they shall have forgotten it, and shall learn to swear, as the Egyptians do, by the life of Pharaoh, not of Jehovah. Note, Those are very miserable whom God has so far left to themselves, that they have quite forgotten their religion, and lost all the remams of their good name. Or, this nation of Jews and Egyptians would take it as an affront to him, and would resent it accordingly, if they did make mention of his name, and profess any relation to him. (2.) He hath sworn, that what little remnant of people there was there, shall all be consumed; (v. 27.) I will watch over them for evil; no opportunity shall be let slip to bring some judgment upon them, until there be an end of them, and they be quite rooted out. To make them there find impenitent sinners he will be found an implacable Judge. And when it comes to this, they shall know (v. 28.) whose word shall stand, mine, or theirs. They said that they should recover themselves, when they returned to worship the queen of heaven; God says that they should ruin themselves, and now the event will show which was in the right. The contest between God and sinners is, whose word shall stand, whose will shall be done, who shall get the better. Sinners say that they shall have peace, though they go on; God says they shall have no peace. But when God judges, he will overcome; God's word shall stand, and not the sinner's.

2. He tells them that a very few of them should escape the sword, and in process of time return into the land of Judah, a small number, (v. 28.) next to none, in comparison with the great numbers that should return out of the land of the Chaldeans. This seems designed to uphold those who boasted of their numbers that concurred in sin; there were none to speak of, that did not join in idolatry; "Well," says God, "and there shall be as few that shall escape the sword and famine."

3. He gives them a sign that all these threatenings shall be accomplished in their season, that they shall be consumed here in Egypt, and shall quite perish: Pharaoh-hophra, the present king of Egypt, shall be delivered into the hand of his enemies that seek his life; of his own rebellious subjects, (so some,) under Amasis, who usurped his throne; of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, (so others,) who invaded Egypt, and the Egyptians were subdued by Nebuchadnezzar, the latter by Josephus. It is likely that this Pharaoh had tempted the Jews to idolatry by promises of his favour; however they depended upon him for his protection, and it would be more than a presage of their ruin, it would be a step towards it, if he were gone. They expected more from him than from Zedekiah king of Judah, he was a more potent and politic prince; "But," says God, "I will give him into the hand of his enemies, as I gave Zedekiah." Note, Those creature-comforts and confidences that we promise ourselves most from, may fail us as soon as those that we promise our selves least from, for they are all what God makes them, not what we fancy them.

The sacred history records not the accomplishment of this prophecy, but its silence is sufficient; we hear no more of these Jews in Egypt, and therefore conclude them, according to this prediction, lost there; for no word of God shall fall to the ground.

CHAP. XLV.

The prophecy we have in this chapter concerns Baruch only, yet is intended for the support and encouragement of all the Lord's people that serve him faithfully, and keep close to him in difficult, trying times. It is placed here after the description of the destruction of Jerusalem, and the dispersion of the Jews, but was delivered long before, in the 4th year of Jehoiakim, as was the prophecy in the next chapter, and, probably, those that follow. We have here, the first Note, That Baruch was only Jeremiah's scribe, yet this scribe is taken of his fright, and this provision made for his comfort; for God desipises not any of his servants, but graciously concerns himself for the most weak and weakest, for Baruch the scribe as well as for Jeremiah the prophet.

1. The word that Jeremiah the prophet spake unto Baruch the son of Ne-riah, when he had written these words in a book at the mouth of Jeremiah, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying. 2. Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, unto thee, O Baruch; 3. Thou didst say, We are as new! for the Lord hath added grief to my sorrow; I fainted in my sighing, and I find no rest. 4. Thus shalt thou say unto him, The Lord saith thus; Behold, that which I have built will I break down, and that which I have planted I will pluck up, even this whole land. 5. And seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not: for, behold, I will bring evil upon all flesh, saith the Lord; but thy life will I give unto thee for a prey in all places whither thou goest.

How Baruch was employed in writing Jeremiah's prophecies, and reading them, we had an account, ch. xxxvi. and how he was threatened for it by the king, warrants being out for him, and he forced to abscond, and how narrowly he escaped under a divine protection, to which story this chapter should have been joined, but that by the reference of a private person, it is here thrown into the latter end of the book, as St. Paul's epistle to Philemon is put after his other epistles. Observe,

1. The consternation that poor Baruch was in when he was sought for by the king's messengers, and obliged to hide his head, and the notice which God took of it. He cried out, We is me now! v. 3. He was a young man when so cried out, but in the world, he was well-affectcd to the things of God, and was willing to serve God and his prophet; but when it came to suffering, he was desirous to be excused, being an ingenious man, and a scholar, he stood fair for preferment, and now to be driven into a corner, and in danger of a prison, or worse, was a great disappointment to him. When he read the roll publicly, he hoped to gain reputation by it, that it would have made him to be taken notice of and employed, but when he found that, instead of that, it exposed him to contemn, and brought him into disgrace, he cried out, "I am undone, I shall fall into the pursuers' hands, and be imprisoned, and put to death, or banished; the Lord has added grief to my sorrow, has loaded me with one trouble after another; after the end of my writing, and redacting the prophecies of my country's ruin, I have the sorrow of being treated as a criminal for so doing; and though another might make nothing of this, yet, for my part, I cannot bear it, it is a burden too heavy for me; I fainted in my sighing, or, I am faint with my sighing, it just kills me, and I find no rest, no satisfaction in my own mind, I cannot compose myself as I should and would do, nor have I rest; I have found no comfort. Baruch was a good man, but, we must say, this was his infirmity. Note, (1.) Young beginners in religion, like fresh-water sailors, are apt to be discouraged with the little difficulties which they commonly meet with at first in the service of God. They do but run with the fools, and it wearsies them; they faint upon the very dawning of the day of adversity, and it is an evidence that their strength is small, (Prov. xxiv. 10,) that their faith is weak, and that they are yet but babes, who cry for every hurt and every fright. (2.) Some of the best and dearest of God's saints and servants, when they have seen storms rising, have been in frights, and apt to make the worst of things, and to disquiet themselves with melancholy apprehensions, more or less according to their dispositions. God takes notice of the frets and discontent of his people, and is displeased with them. Baruch should have rejoiced that he was counted worthy to suffer in such a good cause, and with such good company, but, instead of that, he is vexed at it, and blames his lot, nae, and reflects upon his God, as if he had dealt hardly with him; what he said was spoken in a heat and passion, but God was offended, as he was with Moses, when he spake unadvisedly with his lips. Thou didst say so and so, and it was not well said; God keeps account of what we say, even when we speak in haste. 2. The reproof that God gave him for talking at this rate. Jeremiah was troubled to see him in such an agitation, and knew not well what to say to him; he was both his master and his friend; he desired him to serve it; was willing to comfort him, and yet knew not which way to go about it; but God tells him what he shall say to him, v. 4. Jeremiah could not be certain what was at the bottom of these complaints and fears, but God sees it; they came from his corruptions; that the hurt therefore might not be healed slightly, he searches the wound, and shows him that he had raised his expectations too high for this world, and had promised himself too much from it, and that made the distress and trouble he was in so very grievous to him, and so hard to be borne. Note, The frowns of the world would not disquiet us as they do, if we did not foolishly flatter ourselves with the hopes of its smiles, and court and covet them too much. It is our over-fondness for the good things of this world, that makes us think too much the other evil things. Now God shows him that it was his fault and folly, at this time of day especially, to desire, or to look for, an abundance of the wealth and honour of this world. For, (1.) The ship was sinking; ruin was coming upon the Jewish nation, an utter and universal ruin. "That which I have built, to be a house for myself, I am breaking down; and that which I have made to be my pillow for myself, I am fluttering up, even this whole land, the Jewish church and state; and dost thou now seek great things for thyself? Dost thou expect to be rich and honourable, and to make a figure now? No." (2.) "It is absurd for thee to be now printing thine own cabinet. Canst thou expect to be high, when all are brought low, to be full when all about thee are empty?" To seek ourselves more than the public welfare, especially to seek great things to ourselves, when the public is in danger, is very unbecoming Israelites. We may apply it to the world, and things that concern us in particular. In this providence, is breaking down and pulling up, every thing is uncertain and perishing, we cannot expect any continuing city here. What folly is it then to seek great things for ourselves here, where every thing is little, and nothing certain! 3. The encouragement that God gave him to hope that though he should not be great, yet he should be safe. "I will bring evil upon all flesh, all nations of men, all orders and degrees of men, but thy life will I give to thee for a prey," (thy soul, so the word is,) "in all places whither thou goest. Thou must expect to be hurried from place to place, and, wherever thou goest, to be in danger, but thou shalt escape, though often very narrowly, shall have thy life, but it shall be as a prey, which isget with much difficulty and danger; thou shalt be saved as by fire." Note, The preservation and continuance of life are very great mercies, and we are bound to account them such, as they are the prolonging of our opportunity to glorify God in this world, and to get ready for a better; and at some times, especially when the arrows of death fly thick about us, they are a signal favour, and what we ought to be thankful for, and, whilst we have them, not to complain, though we be disappointed of the great things we expected. Is not the life more than meat?

CHAP. XLVI. How judgment began at the house of God we have found in the foregoing prophecy and history; but now we shall find that it did not end there; in this and the following chapters, we shall see the disasters which befell the Babylonians and their neighbours, and observe how the dispersed Jews were affected, when they were cast away by Nebuchadrezzar. 1. A prophecy of the destruction of Babylon, v. 1-6. "The word of the Lord which came to Jeremiah the prophet against Babylon, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, he, 1 rent, 11. A prophecy of the descent which Nebuchadrezzar should make upon the land of Egypt, and his successes in it, which was accomplished some years after the destruction of Jerusalem, v. 13. 26. III. A word of comfort to the Israel of God in the midst of these calamities, v. 27, 28.

1. This prophecy is to be understood as expressing the distress which Nebuchadrezzar would put to the Jews, when he came to Babylon, 1. Against the captivity itself, v. 1-5. 2. Against the Babylonians, v. 6.
17. The text is the title of that part of this book which relates to the neighboring nations, and follows here. It is the word of the Lord which came to Jeremiah against the Gentiles; for God is King and Judge of nations, and will call them to account, who know him not, nor take any notice of him. Both Isaiah and Ezekiel prophesied against these nations that Jeremiah here has a several saying to, and with reference to the same events. In the Old Testament we have the word of the Lord against the Gentiles, in the New Testament we have the word of the Lord for the Gentiles, that they who were afar off are made nigh.

2. He begins with Egypt, because they were of old Israel's oppressors, and of late their deceivers, when they would have come to the river Euphrates, before the overthrow of the army of Pharaoh-necho, by Nebuchadnezzar, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, which was so complete a victory to the king of Babylon, that thereby he recovered from the river of Egypt to the river Euphrates, all that pertained to the king of Egypt, and so weakened him that he came not again any more out of his land, (as we find, 2 Kings, xxiv. 7.) and so made him pay dear for his expedition against the king of Assyria four years before, in which he slew Josiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 29. This is the event that is here foretold in lofty expressions of triumph over Egypt thus foiled; which Jeremiah would speak of with a particular pleasure, because the death of Josiah, which he had lamented, was now avenged on Pharaoh-necho. Now here, the Egyptians are upbraided with the mighty preparations they made for this expedition, in which the prophet calls them to do their utmost, for so they would; “Come then, order the buckler, let the weapons of war be got ready,” v. 3. Egypt was famous for horses, let them be harnessed, and the cavalry well mounted; Get up, ye horsemen, and stand forth, &c. v. 4. See what preparations the children of men make, with abundance of care and trouble, and at a vast expense, to kill one another, as if they did not die fast enough of themselves! He compares their marching out upon this expedition to the rising of their river Nile; (v. 7, 8.) Egypt now riseth up like a flood, scorning to keep within its own banks, and threatening to overflow all the neighbouring lands; it is a very formidable army that the Egyptians bring into the field upon this occasion; the prophet summons them, (v. 9.) Come up, ye horses; rage, ye chariots! he challenges them to bring all their confederate troops together, the Ethiopians and the Libyans, that handle the shield, and the Lydians, that handle and bend the bow. 10. For this is the day of the Lord Gon of hosts, a day of vengeance, that he may avenge him of his adversaries: and the sword shall devour, and it shall be satiate and made drunk with their blood; for the Lord Gon of hosts hath a sacrifice in the north country by the river Euphrates. 11. Go up into Gilead and take balance, O virgin, the daughter of Egypt: in vain shalt thou use many medicines; for thou shalt not be cured. 12. The nations have heard of thy shame, and thy cry hath filled the land: for the mighty man hath stumbled against the mighty, and they are fallen both together.
4. They are upbraided with their utter inability ever to recover this blow, which should be fatal to their nation, v. 11, 12. The damsel, the daughter of Egypt, that lived in great pomp and state, is sorely wounded by this defeat. Let her now seek for balm in Gilead, and physicians there; let her use all the medicines her wise men can prescribe for the healing of this hurt, and the repairing of the loss sustained by this defeat; but all in vain, no cure shall be to them; they shall never be able to bring such a powerful army as this into the field again. "The nations that rang of thy glory and strength, have now heard of thy shame, how shamefully thou wast routed, and how thou art weakened by it." It needs not be spread by the triumphs of the conquerors, the shrinks and outcries of the conquer will proclaim it; thy cry hath filled the country about. For when they fled several ways, one mighty man stumbled upon another, and dashed against another, such confusion were they in, so that both together became prey to the pursuers, an easy prey. A thousand such dreadful accidents there should be, which should fill the country with the cry of them that were overcome. Let not the mighty man therefore glory in his might, for the time may come when it will stand him in no stead.

13. The word that the Lord spake to Jeremiah the prophet, how Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon should come and smite the land of Egypt. 14. Declare ye in Egypt, and publish in Migdal, and publish in Noph, and in Taanach: say ye, Stand fast, and prepare thee; for the sword shall devour round about thee. 15. Why are thy valiant men swept away? they stood not, because the Lord did drive them. 16. He made many to fall, yea, one fell upon another; and they said, Arise, and let us go again to our own people, and to the land of our nativity, from the oppressing sword. 17. They did cry there, Pharaoh king of Egypt is but a noise; he hath passed the time appointed. 18. As I live, saith the King, whose name is the Lord of hosts, Surely as Tabor is among the mountains, and as Carmel by the sea, so shall he come. 19. O thou daughter dwelling in Egypt, furnish thyself to go into captivity: for Noph shall be waste and desolate without an inhabitant. 20. Egypt is like a very fair heifer, but destruction cometh; it cometh out of the north. 21. Also her hired men are in the midst of her like fatted bullocks; for they also are turned back, and are fled away together: they did not stand, because the day of their calamity was come upon them, and the time of their visitation. 22. The voice thereof shall go like a serpent; for they shall march with an army, and come against her with axes, as hewers of wood. 23. They shall cut down her forest, saith the Lord, though it cannot be searched; because they are more than the grasshoppers, and are innumerable. 24. The daughter of Egypt shall be confounded; she shall be delivered into the hand of the people of the north. 25. The Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saith, Behold, I will punish the multitude of No, and Pharaoh, and Egypt, with their gods, and their kings; even Pharaoh, and all them that trust in him: 26. And I will deliver them into the hand of those that seek their lives, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of his servants: and afterwards it shall be inhabited, as in the days of old, saith the Lord. 27. But fear not thou, O my servant Jacob, and be not dismayed, O Israel: for, behold, I will save thee from afar off, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and be in rest and at ease, and none shall make him afraid. 28. Fear thou not, O Jacob my servant, saith the Lord; for I am with thee: for I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee; but I will not make a full end of thee, but correct thee in measure; yet will I not leave thee wholly unpunished.

In these verses, we have
1. Confusion and terror spoken to Egypt. The accomplishment of the prediction in the former part of the chapter disabled the Egyptians to make any attempts upon other nations; for what could they do when their army was routed? But still they remained strong at home, and none of their neighbours durst make any attempts upon them. Though the kings of Egypt came no more out of their land, (2 Kings xxiv. 7.) yet they kept safe and easy in their land; and what would they desire more, than peaceably to enjoy their own? One would think all men should be content to do this, and not covet to invade their neighbours. But the measure of Egypt's iniquity is full, and now they shall not long enjoy their own; they that encroached on others shall now be themselves encroached on. The scope of the prophecy here is to show how the king of Babylon should exercise the power of Egypt, and bring the war into their own bosoms, which they had formerly carried into his borders, v. 13. This was fulfilled by the same hand with the former, even Nebuchadrezzar's, but many years after, twenty at least, and, probably, the prediction of it was long after the former prediction, and perhaps much about the same time with that other prediction of the same event which we had, ch. xlv. 10. 1. Here is the alarm of war sounded in Egypt, to their great amazement, (v. 14.) notice given to the country that the enemy is approaching, the sword is devouring round about in the neighbouring countries, and therefore it is time for the Egyptians to put themselves in a posture of defence, to prepare for war, that they may give the enemy a warm reception, which cannot be proclaimed in all parts of Egypt, particularly in Migdal, Noph, and Taanach, because in these places especially the Jewish refugees, or fugitives rather, had planted themselves, in contempt of God's command; (ch. xlv. 1.) and let them hear what a sorry shelter Egypt is likely to be to them. 2. The retreat, hereupon, of the forces of other nations which the Egyptians had in their pay, is here foretold. Some considerable number of those troops, it is probable, were posted upon the frontiers will be done in a little time. Egypt is very populous, full of towns and cities, like a forest, the trees of which cannot be searched or numbered, and very rich, full of hid treasures, many of which will escape the searching eye of the Chaldean soldiers; but they will make a great slaughter in the country, for they are more than the locusts, that have eaten up and overrun a country, devouring every green thing; (Joel i. 6, 7.) so shall the Chaldeans do, for they are innumerable. Note, The Lord of hosts hath numberless hosts at his command.

4. The desolation of Egypt hereby is foretold, and the waste that should be made of that rich country. Egypt is like a very fair heifer, or calf, (v. 28.) and shining, and fair, and delicate, and out of the hand of (ch. xxxv. 8.) many nations; every man's sword shall be against his fellow. Her hired men, the troops Egypt has in her service, are indeed in the midst of her like fattened bullocks, lusty men, able-bodied, and high-spirited, who were likely for action, and to have made their part good against the enemy; but they are turned back, their hearts failed them, and, instead of fighting, they are fled away together. How could they withstand their fate, when the day of their calamity was come, the day in which God will visit them in wrath? Some think they are compared to fattened bullocks for their luxury; they had wantoned in pleasures, so that they were very unfit for hardships, and therefore turned back, and could not stand. In this conjunction, (1.) They all made homeward to their father's house, (v. 25.) and said, Arise, and let us go again to our own people, where we may be safe from the oppressing sword of the Chaldeans, that bears down all before it. In times of exigence little confidence is to be put in mercenary troops, that fight purely for pay, and have no interest in themselves who fight for. (2.) They exclaimed vehemently against Pharaoh, to whose cowardice or ill counsel, it is probable, their defeat was owing. When he posted them there upon the borders of his country, it is probable that he told them, he would within such a time come himself with a gallant army of his own subjects to support them; but he failed them, and when the enemy advanced, they found they had none to back them, so that they were perfectly abandoned to the fury of the invaders; it is possible, then that they quitted their post, and deserted the baggage; and so the Egyptians say, Egypt is but a noise, (v. 17.) he can hector, and talk big of the mighty things he would do, but that is all: he brings nothing to pass, all his promises to those in alliance with him, or that are employed for him, vanish into smoke; he brings not the succours he engaged to bring, or not till it is too late: He has passed the time appointed, he did not keep his word, nor keep his day, and therefore they bid him farewell, they will never serve under him any more. Note, Those that make most noise in any business, are frequently but a noise. Great talkers are little doers.

3. The formidable power of the Chaldean army is here described as bearing down all before it. The King of kings, whose name is the Lord of hosts, and whose throne is over all the earth, (v. 14.) and even the heaviest kings, and all the gods to us, are but as grasshoppers, he hath said it, he hath sworn it, As I live, saith this King, as Tabor overtops the mountains, and Carmel over-looks the sea, so shall the king of Babylon overpower all the force of Egypt; such a command shall he have, such a sway shall he bear! v. 18. He and his army, (v. 17.) come against Egypt with axes, as hewers of wood, (v. 22.) and the Egyptians shall be no more able to resist them than the tree is to resist the man that comes with an ax to cut it down: so that Egypt shall be felled as a forest is by the hewers of wood, (which if they be many of them, and those well provided with instruments for the purpose) word it shall be inhabited, shall be peopled again, whereas by this destruction it was almost dispeopled. Ezekiel foretells that this should be at the end of 40 years, Ezek. xxix. 13. See what changes the nations of the earth are subject to, how they are emptied and increased again; and let not nations that prosper be secure, nor those that for the present are in thraldom despair.

II. Comfort and peace are here spoken to the Israel of God, ver. 27, 28. Some understand it of those whom the king of Egypt had carried into captivity with Jehoahaz, but we read not of any that were carried away captives with him; it may therefore rather refer to the captives of Babylon, whom God had mercy in store for, or, more generally to all the people of God, designed for their encouragement in the most difficult times, when the judgments of God are abroad among the nations. We had these words of comfort before, ch. xxx. 10, 11. 1. Let the wicked of the earth tremble, they have cause for it; but fear not thou, O my servant Jacob, and be not dismayed, O Israel; and again, Fear thou not, O Jacob. God would not have his people to be a timorous people. 2. The wicked of the earth shall be put away like dross, not to be looked after any more; but God's people, in order to their being saved, shall be found out and gathered, though they be near off, shall be redeemed, though they be held fast in captivity, and shall return. 3. The wicked is like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, they flee when none pursues; but Jacob, being at home in God, shall be at rest, and at ease, and none shall make him afraid; for what time he is afraid, he has a God to trust to. 4. The wicked of God before. This is another verse, though, whereon that art, O Jacob, I am with thee, a very present Help. 5. A full end shall be made of the nations that oppressed God's Israel, as Egypt and Babylon; but mercy shall be kept in store for the Israel of God; they shall be corrected, but not cast off, the correction shall be in measure, in respect of degree and continuance. Nations have their periods, the Jewish nation itself is come to an end, as a nation; but the gospel-church, God's spiritual Israel, still continues, and will to the end of time; in that this promise is to have its full accomplishment, that though God correct it, he will never make a full end of it.

CHAP. XLVII.

This chapter reads the Philistines their doom, as the former read the Egyptians theirs; and by the same hand, that of Nebuchadrezzar. It is short, but terrible; and Tyre and Zidon, though they lay at some distance from them, come in sharers with them, in the destruction being threatened. 1. It is foretold that the forces of the northern nations should come upon them, to their great terror, v. 1-5. II. That the war should continue long, and their endeavours to put an end to it should be in vain, v. 6-7.

1. THE word of the Lord that came to Jeremiah the prophet against the Philistines, before that Pharaoh smote Gaza. 2. Thus saith the Lord, Behold, waters rise up out of the north, and shall overflow the land, and all that is therein; the city, and them that dwell therein; then the men shall cry, and all the inhabitants of the land shall howl. 3. At the noise of the stamping of the hoofs of his strong horses, at the rushing of his chariots, and at the rumbling of his wheels, the fathers shall not look back to their children for feebleness of hands; 4. Because of the day that cometh to spoil all the Philistines, and to cut off from Tyrus and Zidon every helper that remaineth; for the Lord will spoil the Philistines, the remnant of the country of Caphtor. 5. Baldness is come upon Gaza; Ashkelon is cut off with the remnant of their valley: how long wilt thou cut thyself? 6. O thou sword of the Lord, how long will it be ere thou be quiet? Put up thyself into thy sheabbard, rest, and be still. 7. How can it be quiet, seeing the Lord hath given it a charge against Ashkelon, and against the sea-shore? there hath he appointed it.

As the Egyptians had often proved false friends, so the Philistines had always been sworn enemies, to the Israel of God, and the more dangerous and vocations for their being such near neighbours to them. They were considerably humbled in David's time, but, it seems, they had got head again, and were a considerable people till Nebuchadrezzar cut them off with their neighbours, which is the event here foretold. The date of this prophecy is observable by the words, before Pharaoh smote Gaza; when this blow was given to Gaza by the king of Egypt is not certain, whether in his expedition against Carchemish, or in his return thence, after he had slain Jojachin, or when he afterward came with design to relieve Jerusalem; but this is mentioned here, to show that this word of the Lord came to Jeremiah against the Philistines, when they were in their full strength and lustre, themselves and their cities in full beauty and splendour, not from any adversary or evil occurrence, when no disturbance of their repose was foreseen by any human probabilities; then Jeremiah foretold their ruin, which Pharaoh's smiting Gaza soon after would be but an earnest of, and, as it were, the beginnings of sorrow to that country. It is here foretold,

1. That a foreign enemy and a very formidable one shall be brought upon them. Waters rise up out of the north, v. 2. Waters sometimes signify multitudes of people and nations, (Rev. xvii. 15.) sometimes great and threatening calamities, (Ps. lxix. 1.) these here signify both. They rise out of the north, whence fair weather, and the wind that drives away rain, are said to come; but now a terrible storm comes out of that cold climate. The Chaldean army shall overflow the land like a tempest. Probably, this happened before the destruction of Jerusalem, for it should seem that in Gedaliah's time, which was just after, the army of the Chaldeans was quite withdrawn out of those parts. The country of the Philistines was but of small extent, so that it would soon be overwhelmed by so vast an army.

2. That they shall all be in a consternation upon it; for, though they shall have no heart to fight, but shall sit down and cry like children, all the inhabitants of the land shall howl, so that nothing but lamentation shall be heard in all places. The occasion of the fright is elegantly described, v. 3. Before it comes to killing and slaying, the very stamping of the horses and rattling of the chariots, when the enemy makes his approach upon them, shall strike a terror to that degree, that parents in their fright shall seem void of natural affection, for they shall not look back to their children, to provide for their safety, or so much as to see what becomes of them. Their hands shall be so feeble, that they shall despair of carrying them off with them, and therefore they shall not care for seeing them, but leave them to take their lot; or they shall be in such a consternation, that they shall quite forget even those pieces of themselves. Let none be over-fond of their children, nor dote upon them, since such distress may come, that they may either wish they had none, or forget that they have, and have no heart to look upon them.

VI. The vessels of the Philistines shall be spoiled and laid waste, and the other countries adjoining to them and in alliance with them. It is a day to spoil the Philistines, for the Lord will spoil them, v. 4. Note, Those whom God will spoil must needs be spoiled; for, if God be against them, who can be for them? Tyre and Zidon were strong and wealthy cities, and they used to help the Philistines in their straits; they shall now be involved in the common ruin, and God will cut off from them every helper that remains. Note, Those that trust to help from creatures, will find it cut off when they most need it, and will thereby be put into the utmost confusion. Who the remnant of the country of Caphtor was, is uncertain, but we find that the Caphtorim were near akin to the Philistines, (Gen. x. 14.) and, probably, when their own country was destroyed, such as remained came and settled with their kinsmen the Philistines, and were now spoiled with them. Some particular places are here named, Gaza and Ashkelon; (v. 5.) baldness is come upon them, the invaders have stripped them of all their ornaments, or, they have made themselves bald in token of extreme grief, and they have cut off, or stripped them of their chief ornaments, the plains or valley about them. The products of their fruitful valleys shall be spoiled, and made a prey of by the conquerors.

4. That these calamities should continue long, The prophet, in the foresight of this, with his usual tenderness, asks them, first, (v. 5.) How long will ye cut yourselves, as men in extreme sorrow and anguish do? Oh how tedious will the war be, not only cutting, but long cutting; but he turns from the effect to the cause: They cut themselves, for the sword of the Lord cuts them. And therefore, (1.) He bespeaks that to be still; (v. 6.) O thou sword of the Lord, how long will ye cut yourselves, as men in extreme sorrow and anguish do? How long will ye cause your own people to be cut off, while they are cut off? for they have been cut off, and there was none to save them. They have been cut off, corrupted, and spoiled. This expresses the prophet's earnest desire to see an end of it. He makes war a burden of sin, and longs to see war, looking with compassion, as he became a man, even upon the Philistines themselves, when their country was made desolate by the sword. Note, War is the sword of the Lord, with it he punishes the crimes of his enemies, and pleads the cause of his own people. When war is once begun, it often lasts long; the sword, once drawn, does not quickly find the way into the scabbard again; nay, some, when they draw the sword, will throw away the scabbard, for they delight in war. So deplorable are the desolations of war, that the blessings of peace cannot but be very desirable. O that swords might be broken into ploughshares! (2.) Yet he gives a satisfactory account of the continuance of the war, and stops the mouth of his own complaint; (v. 7.) How can it be quiet, seeing the Lord hath grieved Israel? and yet, notwithstanding, the Lord has given them those places particularly specified in his commission? There hath he appointed it. Note, [1.] The sword of war has its charge from the Lord of hosts; every bullet has its charge; you call them blind bullets, but they are directed by an all-seeing God; the war itself has its charge; he saith to it; Go, and it goeth; Come, and it cometh; Do this, and it doeth; for he is Commander in chief. [2.] When the sword is drawn, we may not expect it should be sheathed till it has fulfilled its charge. As the word of God, so his rod and his sword shall accomplish that for which he sends them.

Moab is next set to the bar before Jeremiah the prophet, whom God had constituted judge over nations and kingdoms, from his mouth to receive its doom. Isaiah's predictions concerning Moab had had their accomplishment, (we had the predictions, iii. xvi., and the like. Jer. ii. 1.) and they were fulfilled when the Arameans, under Salmanasar, invaded and disturbed Moab. But this is a prophecy of the desolations of Moab by the Chaldeans; they were accomplished under Nebuchadnezzar, about five years after the destruction of Jerusalem. Here is, 1. The destruction foretold, that it should be great and general, should extend itself to all parts of the country, (v. 1., 6., 8.) and again, v. 21., 22., 23., 34. That spoilers should come, even from the Chalmean and foreign sea to fleece, (v. 9.) should carry many into captivity; (v. 12., 46.) that the enemy should come shortly, (v. 16.) come swiftly, and surprise them; (v. 40., 41.) that he should make thorough work, (v. 46.) and lay the country waste, though it was very strong; (v. 14., 15.) that there should be no escaping, (v. 42., 43.) that this should force them to quit their idols, (v. 13., 35.) and put an end to all their joy, (v. 38., 39.) that their neighbours shall lament them, (v. 17., 19.) and the prophet himself does, v. 31., 36., k. c. ii. The causes of this destruction assigned, it was sin that brought this ruin upon them, their pride, and security, and carnal confidence, (v. 7., 11., 14., 29.) and their contempt of, and enmity to, God and his people, v. 26., 27., 30. III. A promise of the restoration of Moab, v. 47.

1. AGAINST Moab thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Wo unto Nebo! for it is spoiled; Kirathaim is confounded and taken; Misgab is confounded and dismayed. 2. There shall be no more praise of Moab: in Heshbon they have devised evil against it; come, and let us cut it off from being a nation: also thou shalt be cut down, O Madmen; the sword shall pursue thee. 3. A voice of crying shall be from Horonaim, spoiling and great destruction. 4. Moab is destroyed; her little ones have caused a cry to be heard. 5. For in the going up of Luhith continual weeping shall go up; for in the going down of Horonaim the enemies have heard a cry of destruction. 6. Flee, save your lives, and be like the heath in the wilderness. 7. For because thou hast trusted in thy works, and in thy treasures, thou shalt also be taken; and Chemosh shall go forth into captivity, with his priests and his princes together. 8. And the spoiler shall come upon every city, and no city shall escape; the valley also shall perish, and the plain shall be destroyed, as the Lord hath spoken. 9. Give wings unto Moab, that it may flee and get away; for the cities thereof shall be desolate, without any to dwell therein. 10. Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully, and cursed be he that keepeth back his sword from blood. 11. Moab hath been at ease from his youth, and he hath settled on his lees, and hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, neither hath he been gone into captivity: therefore his taste remained in him, and his scent is not changed. 12. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the
13. And Moab shall be ashamed of Chemosh, as the house of Israel was ashamed of Beth-ell their confidence.

We may observe, in these verses,
1. The Author of Moab’s destruction; it is the Lord of hosts, that has armies, all armies, at his command, and the God of Israel, (v. 1.) who will herein plead the cause of his Israel against a people that have always been vexatious to them, and will punish them now for the injuries done to Israel and the house of David, who were also his, and will destroy them; (Deut. ii. 9.) therefore the destruction of Moab is called the work of the Lord, (v. 10.) for it is he that pleads for Israel; and his work will exactly agree with his word, v. 8.

2. The instruments of it; Spoilers shall come, (v. 8.) shall come with a sword, a sword that shall pursue them, v. 2. I will send unto him wanderers, such as came from afar, as if they were vagrants, or had missed their way, but they shall cause him to wander; they seem as wanderers themselves, but they shall make the Moabites to be really wanderers, some to flee, and others to be carried into captivity. These destroyers stir up themselves to do execution; they have devised evil against Heshbon, one of the principal cities of Moab, and they aim at no less than the ruin of the kingdom of Moab, and let us cut it off from being a nation; (v. 2.) nothing less will serve the turn of the invaders, they come not to plunder it, but to ruin it. The prophet, in God’s name, engages them to make thorough work of it; (v. 16.) Curved be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully, this bloody work, this destroying work; though it goes against the grain with men of compassion, yet it is the work of the Lord, and must not be done by the halves. The Chaldeans have it in charge, by a secret instinct, (says Mr. Gateker,) to destroy the Moabites, and therefore they must not spare, must not, out of foolish pity, keep back their sword from blood, they would thereby bring a sword, and a curse with it, upon themselves, as Saul did by sparing the Amalekites; and Ahab by letting Benhadad go; Thy life shall go for thy life, in the destroying of thy posterity; though that general rule given to all that are employed in any service for God. Curved be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully or negligently, that pretends to do it, but does it not to purpose, makes a show of serving God’s glory, but is really serving his own ends, and carries on the work of the Lord no further than will suit his own purposes; or that is slothful in business for God, and takes neither care nor pains to do it as it should be done, Mal. i. 14. Let not such deceive themselves, for God will not thus be mocked.

3. The woful instances and effects of this destruction. The cities shall be laid in ruins, they shall be spoiled, (v. 1.) and cut down, (v. 2.) they shall be desolate, (v. 9.) without any to dwell therein; there shall be no houses to dwell in, or no people to dwell in them, or no safety and ease to those that would dwell in them. Every city shall be spoiled, and no city shall escape. The strongest city shall not be able to secure itself against the enemies’ power, nor shall the finest city be able to recommend itself to the enemies’ pity and favour. The country also shall be wasted, the valley shall be desolate, and the flocks, which used to cover the plains, and make the valley rejoice, shall all be destroyed, eaten up, trodden down, or carried off. The most sacred persons shall not escape, the priests and princes shall go together into captivity. Nay, Chemosh, the god they worship, who, they hope, will protect them, shall share with them in the ruin, his temples shall be laid in ashes, and his image carried away with the rest of the spoil. Now the consequence of this is, the destruction of the country shall be greater; it will be in great shame and confusion; Kirjathaim is confounded, and all Moab is so. They shall be ashamed of the mighty boasts they have sometimes made of their cities. There shall be no more vaunting in Moab concerning Heshbon; (so it might be read, v. 2.) they shall no more boast of the strength of that city, when the evil which is designed against it is brought upon it. They shall bless the gods of their gods; (v. 13.) they shall be ashamed of Chemosh. The prayers they made to, and all the confidence they put in, that dunghill deity: as Israel was ashamed of Beth-el, of the golden calf they had at Beth-el, which they confided in as their protector, but were deceived in, for it was not able to save them from the Assyrians; nor shall Chemosh be able to save the Moabites from the Chaldeans.

(4.) There shall be no more great shouting, no more prayers, no more oblations. Alas! alas! Moab is destroyed, v. 4. The great ones having quitted the cities to shift for their own safety, even the little ones have caused a cry to be heard, the meaner sort of people, or the little children, the innocent, harmless ones, whose cries at such a time are the most piteous. Go up to the hills, go down to the valley, and you meet with continual weeping, weeping, with weeping all are in tears, you meet none with dry eyes. Even the enemies have heard the cry, from whom it had been policy to conceal it, for they will be animated and encouraged by it; but it is so great, that it cannot be hid. (5.) There will be great hurry; they will cry to one another, “Away, away, flee, save your lives, (v. 6.) shift for your own safety with all imaginable speed, though you escape as bare and naked as the heath, or griz, or dry branches, as those who are unclothed there, and do not save any thing you have, for it may cost you your life to attempt it, Matth. xxiv. 16.—18. Take shelter, though it be in a barren wilderness, that you may have your lives for a prey. The danger will come suddenly and swiftly; and therefore give wings unto Moab, (v. 9.) that would be the greatest kindness you could do them, that is it that they will call for, “O that we had wings like a dove!” for unless they have wings, and can fly, there will be no escape.”

4. The sins for which God will now reckon with Moab, and which justify God in these severe proceedings against them.

(L.) It is because they have been secure, and have trusted in their wealth and strength, in their works, and in their treasures, v. 7. They had taken a great deal of care and trouble about them, and made large works about them, and to fill their exchanger and private coffers; so that they thought themselves in as good a posture for war as any people could be, and that none durst invade them, and therefore set danger at defiance; they trusted in the abundance of their riches, and strengthened themselves in their wickedness, Ps. lii. 7. Now, for this reason, that they may have a sensible conviction of the least weakness and folly of their carnal confidences, God will send an enemy that shall master their works, and rise... their treasures. Note, We forfeit the comfort of that creature, which we repose that confidence in that should be repose in God only. The reed will break that is leaned upon.

(2.) It is because they have not made a right improvement of the days of their peace and prosperity, v. 11. 1. 2. They had been long undisturbed; Moab hath been at ease from his youth. It was an ancient kingdom before Israel was, and had enjoyed great tranquillity, though a small country, and reigned with potent neighbours. God's Israel were afflicted from their youth, (Ps. cxxix. 1, 2.) but Moab hath been at ease from his youth. He has not been em fortified from vessel to vessel, has not known any troublesome, weakening changes, but is as wine kept on the lees, and not racked or drawn off, by which it retains its strength and body. He has not been unsettled, nor any way made uneasy; he has not gone into captivity, as Israel have often done, and yet Moab is a wicked, idolatrous nation, and one of the confederates against God's hidden ones, Ps. lxxxiii. 6. Note, There are many that persist in unrepented iniquity, and yet enjoy uninterrupted prosperity.

2. They had been as long corrupt and unreformed; He has set on his lees, he has been secure all these years in his prosperity, has rested in it, and fetched all the strength and life of the soul from it, as the wine from the lees; his taste remained in him, and his scent is not changed; he is still the same, as bad as ever he was. Note, While bad people are as happy as they used to be in the world, it is no marvel if they are as bad as they used to be. They have no changes of their peace and prosperity, therefore they fear not God, their hearts and lives are unchanged, Ps. iv. 19.

14. How say ye, We are mighty and strong men for the war? 15. Moab is spoiled, and gone up out of her cities, and his chosen young men are gone down to the slaughter, saith the King, whose name is The Lord of hosts. 16. The calamity of Moab is near to come, and his affliction hasteth fast. 17. All ye that are about him, bemoan him; and all ye that know his name, say, How is the strong staff broken, and the beautiful rod! 18. Thou daughter that dost inhabit Dibon, come down from thy glory, and sit in thirst; for the spoiler of Moab shall come upon thee, and he shall destroy thy strong holds. 19. O inhabitant of Aroer, stand by the way, and espy; ask him that fleeth, and her that escapeth, and say, What is done! 20. Moab is confounded; for it is broken down: howl and cry; tell ye it in Arnon, that Moab is spoiled, 21. And judgment is come upon the plain country; upon Holon, and upon Jahazah, and upon Me phaath. 22. And upon Dibon, and upon Nebo, and upon Beth-diblathaim, 23. And upon Kiriataim, and upon Beth-gamul, and upon Beth-meon. 24. And upon Kerioth, and upon Bozrah, and upon all the cities of the land of Moab, far or near. 25. The horn of Moab is cut off, and his arm is broken, saith the Lord. 26. Make ye him drunken; for he magnified himself against the Lord: Moab also shall wallow in his vomit, and he also shall be in derision. 27. For was not Israel a derision unto thee? was he found among thieves? for since thou spakest of him, thou skippedst for joy. 28. O ye that dwell in Moab, leave the cities, and dwell in the rock, and be like the dove that maketh her nest in the sides of the hole's mouth. 29. We have heard the pride of Moab, (he is exceeding proud,) his loftiness, and his arrogancy, and his pride, and the haughtiness of his heart. 30. I know his wrath, saith the Lord; but it shall not be so; his lies shall not so effect it. 31. Therefore will I howl for Moab, and I will cry out for all Moab;

27. The fear and the pit, and the snare, shall
The destruction is here further prophesied of very largely, and with a great copiousness and variety of expression, and very pathetically, and in moving language, designed not only to awaken them by a national repentance and reformation to prevent the trouble, or by a personal repentance and reformation to prepare for it, but to affect us with the calamitous state of human life, which is liable to such lamentable occurrences; and with the anger of God, and the terror of his judgments, when he comes forth to contend with a provoking people. In reading this long roll of threatenings, and meditating the terror of them, it will be of more use to us to keep this in our eye, and to get our hearts thereby possessed with a holy awe of God and of his wrath, than to inquire critically into all the lively figures and metaphors here used.

I. It is a surprising destruction, and very sudden, that is here threatened. They were very secure, thought themselves strong for war, and able to deal with the most powerful enemy; (v. 14.) and yet the calamity is near, and he is not able to keep it off, nor so much as to keep the enemy long in parley, for the affliction hastens fast, (v. 15.) and will soon come to a crisis. The enemy shall fly as an eagle, so swiftly, as he shall be gone, (v. 40.) as an eagle flies upon his prey, and he shall spread his wings, the wings of his army, over Moab; he shall surround it, that none may escape. The strong holds of Moab are taken by surprise, (v. 41.) so that all their strength stood them in no stead; and this made the hearts even of their mighty men to fail, for they had not time to recollect the considerations that might have animated them. It requires a more than ordinary degree of courage not to be afraid of sudden fear.

II. It is an utter destruction, and such as lays Moab all in ruins. Moab is spoiled, (v. 15.) quite spoiled, is confounded and broken down; (v. 20.) their cities are laid in ashes, or seized by the enemy, so that they are forced to quit them, v. 15. Divers cities are here named, upon which judgment is more and more pronounced, and the last concludes with an exclamation: What occasion was there for him to mention more particulars, when it comes upon all the cities of Moab in general, far and near? v. 21.—24. Note, When iniquity is universal, we have reason to expect that calamity should be so too. The kingdom is deprived of its dignity and authority: The horn of Moab is cut off, the horn of its strength shall be cut off, both offensive and defensive: his arm is broken, that he can neither give a blow, nor save a blow, v. 25. Is the youth of the kingdom the strength and beauty of it?
the matter of their joy. Take away these, destroy their gardens and vineyards, and you make all their mirth to cease, Hos. ii. 11, 12. There is great weeping when their plants are transplanted, are gone over the sea, (v. 32.) are carried into other countries, to be planted there. The sower is fallen uprooted: yet they shall reap again, v. 34. and that is that makes the ery of Heshbon to reach even to Elealeh, v. 34. Take joy and gladness from the plentiful field, and you take it from the land of Moab, v. 35. If the wine fail from the wine-presses, that used to be trodden with acclamations of joy, all their gladness is cut off. Take away that shouting, and there shall be no shouting. Note, They who make the delights of the earth the chief of their joy and pleasure, these are they, these things they are easily deprived of in a little time, subject themselves to the tyranny of the greatest grief; whereas they who rejoice in God may do that even when the fig-tree doth not blossom, and there is no fruit in the vine. These Moabites lost not only their wine, but their water too, even the waters of Nimrim shall be desolate, (v. 34.) and therefore their grief grew extremely, not being able to reduce these, and their lamentations were heard in all places like the howling of a heifer of three years old. The expressions here are borrowed from Isa. xv. 5, 6.

3. All their neighbours are called to mourn with them, and to condole with them on their ruin; (v. 17.) All ye that are about him, bemoan him. Let him be put to a mirthless wish, that he may be pitied by the adjoining countries. Nay, let those at a distance, who do but know his name, and have heard of his reputation, take notice of his fall, and say, How is the strong staff broken, whose strength was the terror of its enemies, and the beautiful rod, whose beauty was the pride of its friends! Let the nations take notice of this, and receive instruction. Let none be put to a wish, only for their fall, put confidence in their strength or beauty, for neither will be a security against the judgments of God.

IV. It is a shameful destruction, and such as shall expose them to contempt; Moab is made drunk, (v. 26.) and he that is made drunk, is made vile, he shall wallow in his vomit, and become an odious spectacle, and shall justly be in derision. Let the Moabites be put to a wish, let them be lifted up, till they stagger and fall, and be brought to their wits' end, and make themselves ridiculous by the wildness not only of their passions but of their counsels. And again, (v. 39.) Moab shall be a derision and a damming to all about him; they shall laugh at the fall of the pomp and power he was so proud of. Note, They that are haughty are preparing reproach and ignominy for themselves.

V. It is the destruction of that which is dear to them; not only of their summer-fruits, and their vintage, but of their wealth; (v. 36.) The riches that he has gotten are perished; though he thought he had laid them up very safe, and promised himself a long enjoyment of them, yet they are gone. Note, The money that is hoarded in the chest, is as liable to roaring as the summer-fruits that lie exposed in the open fields. Riches are shedding things, and, like dust as they are, slip through our fingers then when we are in most care to hold them fast, and grip them hard. Yet this is not the worst; even these whose religion was false and foolish were fond of it above any thing, and, such as it was, would not part with it; and therefore, though it was really a promise, yet it was a threaten, (v. 35.) that God will cause to cease him that offers in the high places, for the high places shall be destroyed, and the fields of offerings shall be laid waste, and the priests themselves, who burnt incense to their gods, shall be slain, or carried into captivity, v. 7.

Note, It is only the true religion, and the worship and service of the true God, that will stand us in stead in a day of trouble.

VI. It is a just and righteous destruction, and that which they have deserved, and brought upon themselves, by sin.

This to which they had been most notoriously guilty of, and for which God now reckoned with them, was pride. It is mentioned six times, v. 29. We have all heard of the pride of Moab; his neighbours took notice of it, it has testified to his face, as Israel's did, he is exceeding proud, and grows worse and worse. Observe his lowness, his arrogancy, his pride, his haughtiness; the multiplying of words of contempt, of which the same purport, intimates in how many instances he was exposed, and that it was both to God and man. It was charged upon them, Isa. xvi. 6; but here it is expressed more largely than there. Since then, they had been under humbling providences, and yet were unhumbled; nay, they grew more arrogant and haughty, which plainly marked them for that utter destruction of which pride is the forerunner. Two instances are here given of the pride of Moab: (1.) He had conducted himself insolently toward God. He must be brought down with shame, (v. 26.) for he has magnified himself against the Lord; and again, (v. 42.) he shall be destroyed from being a people, for this very reason; the Moabites preferred Chemosh before Jehovah, and thought themselves the match for the God of Israel, whom they set at defiance. (2.) He had conducted himself haughtily toward Israel, particularly in their late troubles; therefore Moab shall fall into the same troubles, into the same hands, and be a derision, for Israel was a derision to him, v. 26. 27. The generality of the Moabites, when they heard of the calamities and desolation of their neighbours the Jews, instead of lamenting them, rejoiced in them as if they had been thieves taken in the act of stealing; as often as they spake of them, they skilfully for joy. Many, in such a case, entertained in their minds a secret pleasure at the fall of these they had a dislike to, who yet have so much discretion as to conceal it, it is so invidious a thing; but the Moabites industriously proclaimed their joy, and avowed the calamity they had to Israel, triumphing over every Israelite that met with them, as if they were triumphing at him; which was as inhuman as it was impious, and an impudent affront both to man, whose nature they were of, and to God, whose name they were called by. Note, These that deride others in distress will justly and certainly, sooner or later, come into distress themselves, and be had in derision. The pride that are glad at calamities, especially the calamities of God's church, shall not long go unpunished.

2. Beside this, they had been guilty of malice against God's people, and treachery in their dealings with them, v. 30. They made a jest of the desolations of Judah and Jerusalem, and pretended, when they laughed at them, that it was but in sport, and to make themselves merry; but, says God, "I know his wrath, I know it comes from the old enmity he has to the seed of Abraham, and the worshippers of the true God. I know he thinks these calamities of the Jewish nation will end in their utter extirpation. He now tells the Chaldeans what bad people the Jews are, and irritates them against them; but it shall not be so as he expects; his lies shall not so effect it. The nation, whose fall they triumph in, shall recover itself." Some read it, I know his rage. Is it not so? (Is he not very furious against the people of God?) And his lies I know also, Do they not do so? Do they not believe them? Note, All the fury and all the falsehood of the church's enemies are perfectly known to God, whatever the pretences are with which they think to escape, ch. xxxvii. 28.

VII. It is a complicated destruction, and by one instance after another will at length be completed; for those that make their escape from one judgment, shall perish by another; Fear, and the fit, and the snare, shall be upon them, v. 43. There shall be fear to drive them into the pit, and a snare to hold them fast in it; when they are in it; so that they shall neither escape from the destruction, nor escape out of it. What was said of sinners in general, (Isa. xxvi. 17, 18.) that they who flee from the fear shall fall into the pit, and they who come up out of the pit, shall be taken in the snare, is here particularly foretold concerning the sinners of Moab, (v. 44.) for it is the year of their visitation, when God comes to reckon with them, and will be known by the judgments which he executeth, for he is the King, whose name is the Lord of hosts; (v. 15.) he is not only the King, who has authority to give judgment, but he is the Lord of hosts, who is able to do what he has determined. The figurative expressions used, v. 44. are explained in one instance; (v. 43.) Those that fled out of the villages for fear of the enemy's forces, put themselves upon the walls of Heshbon, stoned them, and supposed they stood safe, as now armies sometimes retire under the cannon of a fortified city, and it is their protection; but here they shall be disappointed, for when they flee out of the pit they fall into the snare; Heshbon, which they thought would have sheltered them, devours them, as Moses had foretold long since; (Num. xxv. 38.) A fire is gone out of the abode, and a flame from the city of Sihon, and devours those that come from all the corners of Moab, and fastens upon the crown of the head of the tumultuous noisy ones, or of the revelers, or children of noise; not meant of the rude, clamorous multitude, but of the great men, who bluster, and hector, and make a noise; the judgments of God shall light on them. Shall we hear the conclusion of this whole matter? We have it; (v. 46.) We be to thee, O Moab! thou art undone; the people that worship Chemosh perish, and are gone; farewell Moab. The sons and daughters, the hopes of the next generation, are gone into captivity after the Jews, whose calamities they rejoiced in.

VIII. Yet it is not a perpetual destruction. The chapter concludes with a short promise of their return out of captivity in the latter days. God, in pity to the people, shall raise up one to bring again their captivity, v. 47. Thus tenderly does God deal with Moabites, much more with his own people! Even with Moabites he will not contend for ever, nor be always wroth. When Israel returned Moab did; and perhaps the prophecy was intended chiefly for the encouragement of God's people, to hope for that salvation which even Moabites shall share in. Yet when the Ammonites shall be taken, the Moabites shall be left; and the spirit of prophecy himself refers it to the days of the Messiah; then the captivity of the Gentiles, under the yoke of sin and Satan, shall be brought back by divine grace, which shall make them free, free indeed. This prophecy concerning Moab is long, but here it ends, it ends comfortably, Thus far is the judgment of Moab.

CHAP. XLIX.

The cup of trembling still goes round, and the nations must all drink of it, according to the instructions given to Jeremiah, ch. xxv. 15. This chapter puts it into the hands of the Ammonites, of Edomites, of the Kenites, of the Hettites, of the Sidonians, of the Egyptians, of Philistia, of the Canaanites, of the Chaldeans, of the Babylonians, of the Assyrians, and of the Medes, as if it were their business to take it away from the cup, which should pass upon the world, and should make them drunk.

1. CONCERNING the Ammonites, thus saith the Lord, Hath Israel no sons? hath he no heir? why then doth their king inherit Gad, and his people dwell in his cities? 2. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will cause an alarm of war to be heard in Rabbah of the Ammonites; and it shall be a desolate heap, and her daughters shall be burnt with fire: then shall Israel be heir unto them that were his heirs, saith the Lord. 3. Howl, O Heshbon; for Ai is spoiled: cry, ye daughters of Rabbah, gird ye with sackcloth; lament, and run to and fro by the hedges: for their king shall go into captivity, and his priests and his princes together. 4. Wherefore gloriest thou in the valleys, thy flowing valley, O backsliding daughter? that trusted in her treasures, saying, Who shall come unto me? 5. Behold, I will bring a fear upon thee, saith the Lord God of hosts, from all those that be about thee; and ye shall be driven out every man right forth; and none shall gather up him that wandereth. 6. And afterward I will bring again the captivity of the children of Ammon, saith the Lord.

The Ammonites were next, both in kindred and neighbourhood, to the Moabites, and therefore are next set to the bar. Their country joined to that of the two tribes and a half, on the other side Jordan, and was but a bad neighbour; however, being a neighbour, they shall have a share in these circular predictions.

1. An action is here brought, in God's name, against the Ammonites, for an illegal encroachment on the rightful possessions of the tribe of Gad, that lay next them, v. 1. A writ of inquiry is brought to discover what title they had to those territories, which, upon the carrying away of the Gileadites by the king of Assyria, (2 Kings xv. 29. 1 Chron. v. 26.) were left almost desolate, at least unguarded, and an easy prey to the next invader. What! Does it eschew of defectum sanguinis —for want of an heir? Hath Israel no sons? Hath he no heir? Are there no Gadites left, to whom the right of inheritance belongs? Or, if there were not, are there no Israelites, none left of Judah, that are nearer akin to them than you are? Why then does their king, as if he were entitled to the forfeited estates, or Milcom, their idol, as if he had the right to espouse it? And Saul, whose memorial is written upon his people dwell in the cities which fell by lot to that tribe of God's people. Nay, they were sons and heirs of their own body, en vente de sa mere—in their mother's womb, and the Ammonites, to prevent their claim, most barbarously murdered them; (Amos i. 13.) They ript up the women with child, of Gilead, that they might enlarge their border; that, having seized it, none might rise up thereafter to recover it. Thus they magnified themselves against their border, and boasted it was their own, Zeph. ii. 8. Note, Though among men might often prevails against right, yet that might shall be controlled by the Almighty, who sits in the throne, judging aright; and those will find themselves mistaken, who think every thing their own which they can lay their hands on, or which none yet appears to lay claim to. As there is justice owing to owners, so also to their heirs, when they are dead, whom it is a great sin to defraud, though they either know not their right, or know not how to come at it. This shall be reckoned for particularly, when injuries of this kind are done to God's people.

2. Judgment is here given against them for this violence.

(1.) Terr. shall come upon them; God will cause an alarm among them, even in Rabbah, their capital city, and a very strong one, v. 2. The Lord God of hosts, who has all armies at his command, will bring a far upon them from all that be about them, v. 5. Note, God has many ways to terrify those who have been a terror to his people.

(2.) Their cities shall be laid in ruins; Rabbah, the mother-city, shall be desolate, and her daughters, the other cities that have a dependence upon her, and receive law from her as daughters, shall be burnt with fire; so that the inhabitants shall be forced to quit them, and they shall cry, and gird themselves with sackcloth, as having lost all they have, and not knowing whither to betake themselves.

(3.) Their country, which they were so proud of, shall be wasted, v. 4. Wherefore gloried thou in the valleys, and trusted in thy treasures, O backsliding daughter? They are charged with backsliding or turning away from God and from his worship, for they were the posterity of righteous Lot. It is true, they had never been so in covetous with God as Israel was; yet all idolaters may be called backsliders, for the worship of the true God was yest to that of false gods. They were unworthy and refractory; so some read it: and when they had forsaken their God, they gloried in their valleys, particularly one that was called the flowing valley, because it flowed with all good things. These they had violently taken away from Israel, and gloried in it when they had done so. They gloried in the strength of their valleys, so surrounded with mountains, that they were inaccessible; gloried in the products of them, gloried in the treasures they got together out of them, saying, Who shall come unto me? While they bathed themselves in the pleasures of their country, they flattered themselves with a conceit that they should never be disturbed in the enjoyment of them; To-morrow shall be as this day; therefore they set God and his judgments at defiance; they are proud, valorous, and secure; but wherfore dost thou do so? Note, Those who backslide and turn away from God have little reason either to take complacency, or to put confidence, in any worldly enjoyments whatsoever, Hes. ix. 1.

(4.) Their people, from the least to the greatest, shall be forced out of the country; some shall flee to seek for shelter, others shall be carried into captivity, so that their land shall be quite evacuated: Their king and his princes, nay, and Milcom, their god, and his priests, shall go into captivity, v. 5. and every man shall be driven out right forth, shall take the next way, and make the best of it in his flight, v. 5. forgetting the valleys, the flowing valleys, which now fall them. And, to complete the situation, Kedar or Dedan, shall be king, all shall open their doors to them, as Joel to Sisera, to entertain them; and those that flee shall be so much in care to secure themselves, that they shall not take notice of others, no, not of those that are nearest to them, that wander, and are at a loss which way to go, as ch. xlvii. 3.

(5.) Then the country of the Ammonites shall fall in the hands of the remaining Israelites; v. 2. Then shall Israel be heir to them that were his heirs, shall possess himself of their land, who had possessed themselves of his, by way of reprisal.

Note, The equity of Divine Providence is to be acknowledged, when the losses of the injured are recompensed out of the unjust gains of the injurious. Though the enemies of God's Israel may make a prey of them for awhile, the tables will shortly be turned.

3. Yet there is a prospect given them of mercy hereafter, v. 6.) as before to Moab. The day will come, when the captivity of the children of Ammon will be brought again for so it is in human affairs, the wheel goes round.

7. Concerning Edom, thus saith the Lord of hosts, is wisdom no more in Teman? is counsel perished from the prudent? is their wisdom vanished? 8. Flee ye, turn back, dwell deep, O inhabitants of Dedan; for I will bring the calamity of Esau upon him, the time that I will visit him. 9. If grape-gatherers come to thee, would they not leave some gleanings? if thieves by night, they will destroy till they have enough. 10. But I have made Esau bare, I have uncovered his secret places, and he shall not be able to hide himself: his seed is spoiled, and his brethren, and his neighbours, and he is not. 11. Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive; and let thy widows trust in me. 12. For thus saith the Lord, Behold, they whose judgment was not to drink of the cup have assuredly drunken; and art thou that shalt altogether go unpunished? thou shalt not go unpunished, but thou shalt surely drink of it. 13. For I have sworn by myself, saith the Lord, that Bozrah shall become a desolation, a reproach, a waste, and a curse; and all the cities thereof shall be perpetual wastes. 14. I have heard a rumour from the Lord, and an ambassador is sent unto the heathen, saying, Gather ye together, and come against her, and rise up to the battle. 15. For, lo, I will make thee small among the heathen, and despised among men. 16. Thy terribleness hath deceived thee, and the pride of thy heart, O thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock, that holdest the height of the hill: though thou shouldest make thy nest as high as the eagle, I will bring thee down from thence, saith the Lord. 17. Also Edom shall be a desolation; every one that goeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss at all the plagues thereof. 18. As in the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrath, and the neighbour cities thereof, saith the Lord, no man shall abide there, neither shall a son of man dwell in it. 19. Behold, he shall come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan against the habitation of the strong: but I will suddenly make him run away from her; and who is a chosen man, that I may appoint over her?
for who is like me? and who will appoint me the time? who is that shepherd that will stand before me? 20. Therefore hear the counsel of the Lord, that he hath taken against Edom; and his purposes, that he hath purposed against the inhabitants of Teman: Surely the least of the flock shall draw them out; surely he shall make their habitations desolate with them. 21. The earth is moved at the noise of their fall; at the cry, the noise thereof was heard in the Red Sea. 22. Behold, he shall come up and fly as the eagle, and spread his wings over Bozrah: and at that day shall the heart of the mighty of Edom be as the heart of a woman in her pangs.

The Edomites come next to receive their doom from God, by the mouth of Jeremiah; they also were old enemies to the Israel of God; but their day will come to be reckoned with, and it is now at hand, and is foretold, not only for warning to them, but for comfort to all God's people whose afflictions were very much aggravated by their triumphs over them, and joy in their calamity, Ps. cxxxvii. 7. Many of the expressions used in this prophecy concerning Edom, are borrowed from the prophecy of Obadiah, which is concerning Edom; for all the prophets being inspired by one and the same Spirit, there must needs be a wonderful harmony and agreement in their predictions.

Now here it is foretold,

1. That the country of Edom should be all wasted, and made desolate; that the calamity of Esau should be brought upon him, the calamity he has deserved, and God has long designed him, for his old sins; v. 8. The time is at hand when God will visit him, and call him to an account, and then they shall flee from the sword, turn back from the battle, and dwell deep in some close caverns, where they shall hide themselves. All they have shall be carried off by the conqueror; whereas grape-gatherers will leave some gleanings, and even thieves know when they have enough, and will destroy no further, they that destroy them shall never be satiated, (v. 9, 10.) they shall make Esau quite bare, shall strip the Edomites of all they have, shall find out ways and means to make at their most hidden treasure, shall discover even the secret places, where they thought to secure their wealth, and rife them, so that they shall none of them save their wealth, no, nor save themselves or their children, that might be concealed in a little room; He shall not be able to hide himself, and his seed too is spoilt. His brethren the Moabites, and his neighbours the Philistines, whom he might have made a prey of, shall take their last shelter with, are spoiled as well as he, and disabled to do him any service. And he is not, or, there is not he, there is none to him, none left him, that may say what follows, (v. 11.) Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive. When they are flying, or dying, there shall be none left, no relation, no friend, no, not so much as any parish-officer among them can say; and the flock shall leave behind. Edom is not, he is cut off and gone; nor is there any to say, Leave me thine orphans. If the master of a family be cut off, or forced away, it is some comfort if he have a friend to leave his family with, whom he can confide in; but they shall have none such, for they shall all be involved in the same calamity. The Chaldee makes these to be the words of God to his people, distinguishing them from the Edomites in this calamity; and they read it, "But you, O house of Israel, you shall not leave your orphans, I will secure them, and let your widows rest on my word. Whatever becomes of the widows and fatherless of the Edomites, I will take care of yours." Note, It is an unspeakable comfort to the children of God, when they are dying, that they may leave their surviving relations with God, may, in faith, commit them to him, and encourage them to trust in him; and through them, the name and glory of God is spread abroad in the world, for them, yet may they hope that he will preserve them alive, always provided that they trust in him. Let the Edomites, for their part, count upon no other than to be made a desolation, and a reproach, for the decree is gone forth, God hath sworn it by himself, (v. 13.) that their cities shall be wasted, nay, they shall be perpetual wastes, they shall be made mean and despised; they shall be made a mighty figure, but God will make them small among the heathen; and they that despised God's people shall themselves be despised among men; (v. 15. Obad. 2.) nay, they shall be made monstrosities, and even a predigy; (v. 17.) Edom shall be such a desolation, that every one who goes by shall be astonished; nay, worse yet, they shall be made a terror, Edom shall be made like Sodom and Gomorrha, which was consumed with fire and brimstone near the ruins of it, no man shall abide there, (v. 18.) such a frightful place shall it be made!

2. That the instruments of this destruction should be very resolute and formidable. They have their commission from God, he summons them into this service; (v. 14.) I have heard a rumour, or report, from the Lord, heard it by the prophets of Obadiah, has it by a whisper to myself, that an ambassador, or herald, or messenger, is sent to the Gentiles, who are to lay Edom waste, saying, Gather ye together, muster all the forces ye can, and come against her; for (v. 20.) this is the counsel that he hath taken against Edom; the matter is settled, the decree is gone forth, and there is no resisting it; God has determined that Edom shall be laid waste, and then he that is to be employed in it shall come swiftly and strongly. Nebuchadrezzar is he, of whom it is here foretold, (1.) That he shall come up like a lion, with fierceness and fury, like a lion enraged by the swelling of Jordan overflowing his banks, which forces him out of his covert by the water-side, into the higher grounds, v. 19. He shall come roaring, come to devour all that come in his way. He shall come against the habitations of strangers, and shall destroy the cities of Edom, and I would have him to come suddenly into the land, (so the next words might well be read,) so as to find them unprovided with necessaries for a defence; for I will look out a chosen man to affright her, to do this execution, a man fit for the purpose, one chosen out of the people: for when God has work to do, he will find out the fittest instruments to be employed in it; "He will foreordain, and the thoughts of his heart will be done, and spirit them for the work? And, who will affright me the time? Who will challenge me, and fix a time and place to meet me? Who will join issue with me in battle? And when I send a lion into the flock, Who is that shepherd, that can, or dare, stand before me, or against me, to oppose that lion, and think to rescue any of the flock?" Note, Even when God has work to do, he will find his instruments or agents; he will find those that are able to engage in it; and all the world cannot find those that are able to engage against it. Nay, if God will have Edom destroyed, and their people dislodged, there needs not a lion, a fierce lion, to do it; even the least of the flock shall draw them out; (v. 20.) the meanest servant in Nebuchadrezzar's retinue, the weakest of all that follow his camp, shall draw them out for the slaughter, shall force them to flee, or to surrender, and make their habitations devote with them. God can bring to pass the greatest works by instruments least likely.

When the Chaldean army comes against the Edomites, all hands shall be massed, and the piercing soldier in it shall have a pluck at them. (2.) Nebuchadrezzar shall come, not only like a lion, the king of beasts, but like an eagle, the king of birds, v. 22. He shall fly as the eagle upon his prey, so swiftly, so strongly; shall clasp his wings upon Bozrah, to secure it for himself, (as before, ch. xlvii. 40.) and immediately the hearts of the mighty men shall fail; and they shall see he is an enemy that it is in vain to struggle with.

3. That the Edomites' confidences should all fail in the day of their distress. (1.) They trusted to their wisdom, but that shall stand them in no stead; this is the first thing fastened upon in this prophecy against Edom, v. 7. That nation used to be famous for wisdom, and their statesmen were thought to excel in politics; and yet now they shall take such wrong measures in all their counsels, and be so baffled in all their designs, that people shall ask, with wonder, What is the matter with the Edomites? Is wisdom no more in Teman? Are the wise men of the east country (1 Kings iv. 30.) become fools? Are those at their wits' end, that were thought to have the monopoly of prudence? Is counsel served for understanding men? It is so, when God is designing the ruin of a people; for whom he will destroy he infatuates. See Job xii. 29. Is their wisdom vanished? Is it tired? So some; Is it worn out? So others; Is it become useless? So others. Yes, it will do them no service when God comes forth to contend with them. (2.) They trusted to their strength, but neither shall that avail them; v. 16. They had been a terror to all their neighbours, every body feared them, and trucked to them, and this made them proud and conceited of themselves, and their own strength, and very secure; because no neighbouring nation durst meddle with them, they thought no nation in the world durst. Their country was much of it mountaneous, having many passes which they thought themselves able to make good against any invader; but this terribleness of theirs deceived them, and so did their imaginary inaccessibleness; they did not prove so strong as they were formidable, nor so safe as they were secure. High as they are, God will bring them down; for as there is no wisdom, so there is no might, against the Lord. See these expressions, Obad. 3, 4, 8.

In their destruction should be inevitable, and very remarkable. (1.) God hath determined it; (v. 12.) he hath said it; nay, (v. 13.) he hath sworn it, that the Edomites shall not go unpunished, but they shall drink the cup of trembling, which is put into the hands of all their neighbours; even they, whose judgement, or doom, was not to drink of the cup, who had not so well deserved it as they had; but we shall see that they were not so secure against the vengeance of God; for they drank of the cup, and were brought to drink to Israel as they had been; or, Israel itself, that was God's peculiar people, and among whom there were many, very many, who kept his ordinances, upon which account they might have expected an exemption, and yet they had been made to drink of the bitter cup; and shall the Edomites think to pass it? No; they shall surely drink of it. Note, We must have a sense of the greatness of our sins; the more guilty to promise themselves impunity; and when judgment begins at God's house, it will reach the strangers. (2.) All the world shall take notice of it; (v. 21.) The earth is moved, and all the nations put in a concern, at the noise of their fall; the news of it shall make them tremble. The noise of the outcry is heard at the Red sea, which flowed upon the coasts of Edom. So loud shall be the shouts of the conquerors, and the shrieks of the conquered, and such a mighty noise shall the news of this destruction of Idumea make in the nation, that it shall be heard among the ships that lie in the Red sea to this very day. (2 Kings xiv. 26.) and then they shall carry the news of it to the remotest shore. Note, The fall of those who have affected to make a noise with their pomp and power, will make so much the greater noise.

23. Concerning Damascus. Hamath is confounded, and Arpad; for they have heard evil tidings; they are faint-hearted: there is sorrow on the sea; it cannot be quiet. 24. Damascus is waxed feeble, and turneth herself to flee, and fear hath seized on her; anguish and sorrows have taken her, as a woman in travail. 25. How is the city of praise not left, the city of my joy! 26. Therefore her young men shall fall in her streets, and all the men of war shall be cut off in that day, saith the Lord of hosts. 27. And I will kindle a fire in the wall of Damascus, and it shall consume the palaces of Ben-hadad.

The kingdom of Syria lay north of Canaan, as that of Edom lay south, and thither we must now remove, and take a view of the approaching fate of that kingdom, which had been often vexatious to the Israel of God. Damascus was the metropolis of that kingdom, and the ruin of the whole is supposed in the ruin of that; yet Hamath and Arpad, two other considerable cities, are named, (v. 23.) and the palaces of Ben-hadad, which he built, are particularly marked for ruin; (v. 27.) see also Amos i. 4. Some think Ben-hadad (the son of Hadad, either their idol, or one of their ancient kings, whence the rest descended,) was a common name of the kings of Syria, as Pharaoh of the kings of Egypt. Now observe concerning the judgments of Damascus,

1. It begins with a terrible fright and faint-heartedness. They hear evil tidings, that the king of Babylon, with all his force, is coming against them, and they are confounded, they know not what measures to take for their own safety, their souls are melted, they are faint-hearted, they have no spirit left them, they are like the troubled sea, that cannot be quiet, (Isa. lvii. 20.) or like men in a storm at sea; (Ps. cvi. 26.) or, the sorrow that begins in the city shall go to the sea-coast, v. 23. See how easily God can dispirit those nations that have been most celebrated for valour! Damascus now waxed feeble; (v. 24.) a city that thought she could have looked the most formidable enemy in the face, now turns herself to fly; and men says it to no more purpose to think of contending with her fate, than for a woman in labour to contend with her pains, which she cannot escape, but must yield to. It was a city of praise, (v. 25.) not praise to God, but to herself; a city much commended and admired by all strangers that visited it. It was a city of joy, where there was an affluence and confidence of all the delights of the system. God in his wisdom interfered to keep the enjoyment of them. We read it, (though there is no necessity for it,) the city of my joy, which the prophet himself had sometimes visited with pleasure. Or, it may be the speech of the king lamenting the ruin of the city of his joy. But now it is all overwhelmed with fear and grief. Note, Those deceitfulsmokes who place their happiness in carnal joys; for God in his providence can soon cast a damp upon them, and put an end to them. He can soon make a city of praise to be a reproach, and a city of joy to be a terror to itself.

2. It ends with a terrible fall and fire. (1.) The inhabitants are slain; (v. 26.) The young men, who should fight the enemy, and defend the city, shall fall by the sword in her streets; and all the men of war, mighty men of valour, and the princes of the country, shall be cut off. (2.) The city is laid in ashes; (v. 27.) The fire is kindled by the besiegers in the wall, but it shall devour all before it, the palaces of Ben-hadad particularly, where so much mischief had formerly been hatched against God's Israel, for which it is now thus visited.

23. Concerning Kedar, and concerning the kingdoms of Hazor, which Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon shall smite, thus saith the Lord; Arise ye, go up to Kedar, and spoil the men of the east. 29. Their tents and their flocks shall they take away: they shall take to themselves their curtains, and all their vessels, and their camels; and they shall cry unto them, Fear is on every side. 30. Flee, get you far off, dwell deep, O ye inhabitants of Hazor, saith the Lord; for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath taken counsel against you, and hath conceived a purpose against you. 31. Arise, get you up unto the wealthy nation, that dwelleth without care, saith the Lord, which have neither gates nor bars, which dwell alone. 32. And their camels shall be a booty, and the multitude of their cattle a spoil; and I will scatter into all winds them that are in the utmost corners; and I will bring their calamity from all sides thereof, saith the Lord. 33. And Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever: there shall no man abide there, nor any son of man dwell in it.

These verses foretell the desolation that Nebuchadrezzar and his forces should make among the people of Kedar, (who descended from Kedar the son of Ishmael, and inhabited a part of Arabia the Stony,) and of the kingdoms, the petty principalities of Hazor, that joined to them, who, perhaps, were originally Canaanites, of the kingdom of Hazor, in the north of Canaan, which had Jabin for its king, but, being driven thence, settled in the deserts of Arabia, and associated themselves with the Kedarines. Concerning this people, we may here observe,

1. What was their present state and posture. They dwelt in tents, and had no walls, but curtailns, (v. 29.) no fortified cities; they had gates none, (v. 31.) no towers, no treasures, but stock upon land, no money, but flocks and camels. They had no soldiers among them, for they were in no fear of invaders; no merchants, for they dwelt alone, v. 31. Those of other nations neither came among them, nor traded with them; but they lived within themselves, content with the produce and pleasures of their own country. This was their manner of living, very different from that of the nations that were round about them. And, (1.) They were very rich; though they had no trade, no treasures, yet they are here said to be a wealthy nation, (v. 51.) because they had a sufficiency to answer all the occasions of human life, and they were content with it. Note, Those are truly rich who have enough to supply their necessities, and know when they have enough. We need not go to the treasures of kings and provinces, or to the cash of merchants, to look for wealthy people; they may be found among the poorest inhabitants, who have taken counsel against you, and has conceived a purpose against you, v. 50. That proud man resolves it shall never be said, that he, who had conquered so many strong cities, will leave those unconquered that dwell in tents. It was strange that that eagle would stoop to catch these fies; that so great a prince should play at such small game; but all is fish that comes to the ambitious, covetous man's net. Note, It will not need the counsel of the enemy to make a man fain to erring wrong, to be able to say that they have done no wrong; not to have given offence will not be a defence against such men as Nebuchadrezzar. Yet, how unrighteous soever he was in doing it, God was righteous in directing it. These people had lived inoffensively among their neighbours, as many do, who yet, like them, are guilty before God; and it was two punishes them for what was not in their power that God said, (v. 28.) Arise, go up to Kedar, and spoil the men of the east. They will do it to gratify their own covetousness and ambition, but God orders it for the correcting of an unthankful people, and for warning to a careless world, to expect trouble when they seem to be most safe. God says to the Chaldeans, (v. 31.) Arise, get up to the wealthy nation that dwelleth without care, and proclaim fear upon them, that none may imagine their mountain stands so strong, that it cannot be removed.

3. The great amazement that this put them into, and the great desolation hereby made among them; They shall cry unto them, those on the borders shall send the alarm into all parts of the country, which shall be put into the utmost confusion by it; they shall cry, against them is an every side, we are surrounded by the enemy; the very terror of which shall drive them all to their feet, and they shall none of them have any heart to make resistance. The enemy shall proclaim fear upon them, or against them, on every side; they need not strike a stroke, they shall shout them out of their tents, v. 29. Upon the first alarm, they shall flee, get far off; and dwell deep, (v. 30.) as the Edomites, v. 8. And it will be found that this fear on every side is not groundless, for their calamity shall be brought from all sides thereof, v. 32. No marvel there are fears on every side, when there are foes on every side. The issue will be, (1.) What they have will be a prey to the Chaldeans; they shall take to themselves their curtains and vessels; though they are but plain and coarse, and as they have been their own, yet they should take them for spoil, and spoil for spoiling sake. They shall carry away their tents and their flocks, v. 29. Their camels shall be a bounty to those that came for nothing else, v. 32. (2.) It is not said that any of them shall be slain, for they attempt not to make any resistance, and their tents and flocks are accepted as a ransom for their lives; but they shall be dislodged and dispersed those that dwell in the utmost corners, cut of the way, and therefore they think out of the reach, of danger, (by this character those people were distinguished, ch. ix. 26.—xxv. 23.) yet they shall from thence be scattered into all winds, into all parts of the world. Note, Privacy and obscurity are not always a protection and security. Many that affect to be strangers to the world, may yet by unthought-of providences be forced into it; and those that live most retired, may have the same lot with those that thrust themselves forth, and lie most exposed. (C) Their country shall be uninhabited; for, lying remote, and out of all high roads, and having neither cities nor lands inviting to strangers, none shall care to succeed them, so that Hazor shall be a desolation for ever, v. 33. If busy men be displaced, many strive to get into their places, because they lived great; but here are easy, quiet men displaced, and no man cares to advise where they did, because they lived mean.

34. The word of the Lord that came to Jeremiah the prophet against Elam, in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, saying, 35. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will break the bow of Elam, the chief of their might. 36. And upon Elam will I bring the four winds from the four quarters of heaven, and will scatter them toward all those winds; and there shall be no nation whither the outcasts of Elam shall not come. 37. For I will cause Elam to be dismayed before their enemies, and before that they seek their life; and I will bring evil upon them, even my fierce anger, saith the Lord; and I will send them after them, till I have consumed them: 38. And I will set my throne in Elam, and will destroy from thence the king and the princes, saith the Lord. 39. But it shall come to pass in the latter days, that I will bring again the captivity of Elam, saith the Lord. This prophecy is dated in the beginning of Zedekiah's reign; it is probable that the other prophecies against the Gentiles, going before, were at the same time. The Persians descended from Elam the son of Shem, (Gen. x. 22.) yet some think it was only that part of Persia which lay nearest to the Jews, which was called Elamite, and joined to Meda-Elam, which, say they, had acted against God's Israel, bare the guiver in an expedition against them, (Isa. xxxiv. 6.) and therefore must be reckoned with among the rest. It is here foretold, in general, that God will bring evil upon them, even his fierce anger, and that is evil enough, it has all evil in it, v. 37. In particular,

1. Their forces shall be disabled, and rendered incapable of doing them any service. The Elamites were famous archers, but, Behold, I will break the bow of Elam, (v. 35.) will ruin their artillery, and the sling-shot which goes far, and orders it so, that that which we must trust to first fails us; and that which was the chief of our might proves the least of our help.

2. Their people shall be dispersed. There shall come enemies against them from all parts of the world, and they shall all carry some of them away captive into their respective countries; while others shall flee, some new way, and shall hide themselves for themselves, so that there shall be no nation whither the outcasts of Elam shall not come, v. 36. The four winds shall he brought upon them; the storm shall come sometimes from one point, and sometimes from another, to toss and hurry them several ways; and we know not from what point the wind of trouble may blow; but if God compass us with his favour, we are safe, and may be easy, which way soever the storm comes. Four shall drive them into other countries; they shall be dismayed before their enemies; but, as if that were not enough, I will send the sword after them, v. 37. Note, God can make his judgments follow those that think by flight to escape them, and to get out of the reach of them. Evil pursues sinners.

3. Their princes shall be destroyed, and the government quite changed; (v. 38.) I will set my throne in Elam. The throne of Nebuchadrezzar shall be set there, or the throne of Cyrus, who began his conquests with Elamites. Or, it may be in reference to the Medes, who sit for judges against Elam, (v. 25.) he will make them know that he reigns, that he judges in the earth, and that kings and princes are accountable to him, and that high as they are he is above them. The king of Elam was famous of old, Gen. xiv. 1. Chedorlaomer was king of Elam, and a mighty man he was in his day; the nations about him served him; his successes, we may suppose, made a great figure; but the king of Elam is no more to God than another man. Wherefore he sets his throne in Elam, he will destroy from thence the king and the princes that are, and set up whom he pleases.

4. Yet the destruction of Elam shall not be perpetual; (v. 39.) In the latter days I will bring again the captivity of Elam. When Cyrus had destroyed Babylon, brought the captive nations into the hands of the Persians, the Elamites, no doubt, returned in triumph out of all the countries whither they were scattered, and settled again in their own country. But this promise was to have its full and principal accomplishment in the days of the Messiah, when we find Elamites particularly among those, who, when the Holy Ghost was given, heard spoken in their own tongue, (Acts ii. 9.) and that is the most desirable return of the captivity. If the Son makes you free, then you shall be free indeed.

CHAP. L.

In this chapter, and that which follows, we have the judgment of Babylon, which is put last of Jeremiah's prophecies against the Gentiles, because it was not fulfilled, and when the cup of God's fury went round, (ch. xxvii. 17.) the king of Sheshach, Babylon, drunk last. Babylon was employed as the rod in God's hand for the chastising of his people, because no other nation so fitted as that to be the rod, that shall be thrown into the fire. The destruction of Babylon by Cyrus was foretold, long before it came to its height, by Isaiah, and now again, when it is come to its height, and was written in the book of Daniel, Nebuchadnezzar, seeing the kingdom of Babylon flourish like a green bay-tree, yet at the same time he foresaw it withered and cut down. And as Isaiah's prophecies of the destruction of Babylon, and the deliverance of Israel out of it, seem designed to typify the evangelical triumphs of all believers over the powers of darkness, and the great salvation brought out by our Lord Jesus Christ; so Jeremiah's prophecies of the same event in a more particular manner, at apocalyptic triumphs of the gospel-church in the latter days over the New Testament Babylonian, many passages in the Revelation being borrowed from hence. The kingdom of Babylon being much larger and stronger than any other of the kingdoms here prophesied against, its fall was the more considerable in it; and it having been more oppressive to the people of God than any of the others, the prophet is very large upon this subject, for the comfort of the captives and all that were displaced, and his sayings before, (ch. xxvii. 12. and xxi. 7.) is here more particularly described, and with a great deal of prophetic heat as well as light. The terrible judgments God had in store for Babylon, is mentioned in the general, he being in store for his people that were captives there, are intermixed and counterchanged in the prophecy of this chapter; for Babylon, was destroyed to make way for the turning again of the captivity of God's people. Here I. The ruin of Babylon, (v. 1—3.) and again, (v. 9—16.) and again, (v. 21—32.) and again, v. 35. 46. 11. The
1. THE word that the Lord spake against Babylon, and against the land of the Chaldeans, by Jeremiah the prophet.

2. Declare ye among the nations, and publish, and set up a standard; publish, and conceal not: say, Babylon is taken, Bel is confounded, Merodach is broken in pieces; her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces.

3. For out of the north there cometh up a nation against her, which shall make her land desolate, and none shall dwell therein; they shall remove, they shall depart, both man and beast.

4. In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping: they shall go, and seek the Lord their God.

5. They shall ask the way to Zion, with their faces thitherward, saying, Come, and let us join ourselves to the Lord in a perpetual covenant that shall not be forgotten.

6. My people hath been lost sheep; their shepherds have caused them to go astray, they have turned them away out of the mountains: they have gone from mountain to hill, they have forgotten their resting-place.

7. All that found them have devoured them; and their adversaries said, We offend not, because they have sinned against the Lord, the habitation of justice; even the Lord, the hope of their fathers.

8. Remove out of the midst of Babylon, and go forth out of the land of the Chaldeans, and be as the he-goats before the flocks.

Here is,

1. A word spoken against Babylon, by him whose works all agree with his word, and none of whose words fall to the ground. The king of Babylon had been very kind to Jeremiah, and yet he must forecast the ruin of that kingdom; for God's prophets must not be governed by favour or affection. Whoever are our friends, if, notwithstanding, they are God's enemies, we dare not speak peace to them.

2. The destruction of Babylon is here spoken of as a thing done. To be published to the nation as a piece of news, true news, and great news, and news they are all concerned in; let them hang out the flag, as is usual on days of triumph, to give notice of it; let all the world take notice of it, Babylon is taken; let God have the honour of it, let his people have the comfort of it, and therefore do not conceal it. Take care that it be known, that the Lord may be known by those judgments which he executes, Ps. ix. 16.

3. It is spoken of as a thing done thoroughly. For, (1.) The very idols of Babylon, which the people would protect with all possible care, and from which they expected protection, shall be destroyed. Bel and Merodach were their two principal deities, they shall be confounded, and the images of them broken to pieces. (2.) The country shall be the possession of the Medes, from Media, which lay north of Babylon, and from Persia, through which Cyrus made his descent upon Babylon; from hence the nation shall come, that shall make her land desolate. Their land was north of the countries that they destroyed, who were therefore threatened with evil from the north; (Omne malum ab acqualione—Every evil comes from the north;) but God will find out nations yet further north to punish them. The pomp and power of old Rome were brought down by northern nations, the Goths and Vandals.

II. Here is a word spoken for the people of God, and for their comfort, both the children of Israel and of Judah; for many there were of the ten tribes, that associated with those of the two tribes in their return out of Babylon. Now here,

It is promised that they shall return to their God first, and then to their own land; and the promise of their conversion and reformation is that which makes way for all the other promises, v. 4, 5. (1.) They shall lament after the Lord; (as the whole house of Israel did in Samuel's time, 1 Sam. vii. 2.) they shall go weeping.

Two tears flew not from the sorrow of the world, as these when they went into captivity, but from godly sorrow; there are tears for repentance, which are melted by the goodness of God, in the dawning of the day of their deliverance, which, for aught that appears, does more toward the bringing of them to mourning for sin, than all the calamities of their captivity; that prevails to lead them to repentance, when the other did not prevail to drive them to it. Note, It is a good sign that God is coming toward a people in ways of mercy, when they begin to be tenderly affected under his hand. (2.) They shall inquire after the Lord; they shall not sink under their sorrows, but bestir themselves to find out comfort wherever it is to be had; They shall go weeping to seek the Lord their God; These that seek the Lord must seek him sorrowing, as Christ's parents sought him, Luke ii. 48. And those that sorrow must seek the Lord, and then their sorrow shall soon be turned into joy. More tears shall be shed for joy, than can be for sorrow; They shall seek the Lord as their God, and shall now have no more to do with idols. When they shall hear that the idols of Babylon are confounded and broken, it will be seasonable for them to inquire after their own God, and to return to Him who lives for ever. Therefore men are deceived in false gods, that they may depend on the true God only. (3.) They shall think of returning to their own country again; they shall think of it not only as a mercy, but as a duty, because there only is the holy hill of Zion, on which once stood the house of the Lord their God, v. 5. They shall ask the way to Zion, with their faces thitherward. Zion was the city of their solemnities, they often thought of it in the depth of their captivity; (Ps. cxxxvii.) but now that the ruin of Babylon gave them the hope of a release of a redemption, they talk of nothing else but of going back to Zion. Their hearts were upon it before, and now they set their faces thitherward; they long to be there, they set cut for Zion, and resolve not to take up short. The journey is long, they know not the road, but they shall ask the way, for they will press forward till they come to Zion; and as they are determined not to turn back, so they are in constant inquiry. This represents the return of poor souls to God: heaven is the Zion they aim at as their end, on this they have set their hearts, toward this they have set their faces, and therefore they ask the way thither. They do not ask the way to heaven, and set their faces toward the world; nor set their faces toward heaven, and go on at a venture without asking the way. But in all true converts there are both a sincere desire to attain the end, and a constant care to keep in the way; and a blessed sight it is, to see people thus asking the way to heaven with their faces thitherward. It is a dream that they now mean to walk with God closer for the future; Come, and let us join ourselves to the Lord in a perpetual covenant. They had broken covenant with God, had in effect separated themselves from him, but now they resolve to join themselves to him again, by engaging themselves anew to be his. Thus, when backsliders return, they must do their first work, must confess that first covenant; and if they shall enter into another, it must be a perpetual covenant, that must never be broken; and, in order to that, must never be forgotten; for a due remembrance of it will be the means of a due observance of it.

2. Their present case is lamented as very sad, and as having been long so; “My people” (for he owns them as his, now that they are returning to him) “have been lost shee[p].” (v. 68) they have gone from mountain to hill, have been hurry’d from place to place, and could find no pasture, they have forgotten their resting-place in their own country, and cannot find their way to it.” And that which aggravated their misery, was, (1.) That they were led astray by their own shepherds, their own princes and priests; they turned them from their duty, and provoked God to turn them out of the way of salvation. It is Los that their leaders cause them to err, when those that should direct and reform them seduce and debauch them; and when those that should secure and advance their interests are the betrayers of them. (2.) That in their wanderings they lay exposed to the beasts of prey, who thought they were enticed to them, as wilds and strays that have no owner; (v. 7.) it is with them as with wandering sheep, all that found them have devoured them, and made a prey of them; and when they did them the greatest injuries, they laughed at them, telling them it was what their own prophets had many a time told them they deserved: that was far from justifying those who did them wrong, yet they bidden them with this excuse, We offend not, because they have sinned against the Lord; but they could not be answer’d, they had sinned against them. And see what notion they had of the Lord they had sinned against, not as the only true and living God, but only as the Habitation of justice, and the Hope of their fathers; they had put a contempt upon the temple, and upon the tradition of their ancestors, and therefore deserved to suffer these hard things. And yet it was indeed an aggravation of their sin, and justified God, though it did not justify their adversaries in what was done to them, that they had forsaken the Habitation of justice, and him that was the Hope of their fathers.

3. They are called upon to hasten away, as soon as ever the door of liberty was opened to them; (v. 8.) “Remove, not only out of the borders, but out of the midst of Babylon; though you be ever so well settled there, think not to settle there, but hasten to Zion, and be as the he-goats before the flock, strive which shall be foremost, which shall lead in so good a work;” a he-goat is comely in going, (Prov. xxx. 31.) because he goes first. It is a graceful thing to be forward in a good work, and to set others a good example.

9. For, lo, I will raise, and cause to come up against Babylon, an assembly of great nations from the north country: and they shall set themselves in array against her; from thence she shall be taken: their arrows shall be as of a mighty expert man; none shall return in vain. 10. And Chaldea shall be a spoil: all that spoil her shall be satisfied, saith the Lord. 11. Because ye were glad, because ye rejoiced, O ye destroyers of my heritage; because ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass, and bellow as bulls; 12. Your mother shall be sore confounded; she that bare you shall be ashamed: behold, the hindermost of the nations shall be a wilderness, a dry land, and a desert. 13. Because of the wrath of the Lord it shall not be inhabited, but it shall be wholly desolate: every one that goeth by Babylon shall be astonished, and hiss at all her plagues. 14. Put yourselves in array against Babylon round about: all ye that bend the bow shoot at her, spare no arrows; for she hath sinned against the Lord. 15. Shout against her round about; she hath given her hand: her foundations are fallen, her walls are thrown down; for it is the vengeance of the Lord: take vengeance upon her; as she hath done, do unto her. 16. Cut off the sower from Babylon, and him that handleth the sickle in the time of harvest: for fear of the oppressing sword they shall turn every one to his people, and they shall flee every one to his own land. 17. Israel is a scattered sheep, the lions have driven him away: first the king of Assyria hath devoured him, and last this Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon hath broken his bones. 18. Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will punish the king of Babylon and his land, as I have punished the king of Assyria. 19. And I will bring Israel again to his habitation, and he shall feed on Carmel and Bashan, and his soul shall be satisfied upon mount Ephraim and Gilead. 20. In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found: for I will pardon them whom I reserve.

God is here, by his prophet, as afterward in his providence, proceeding in his controversy with Babylon. Observe, 1. The commission and charge given to the instruments that were to be employed in destroying Babylon. The army that is to do it, is called an assemblage of great nations, (v. 9.) the Medes and Persians, and all their allies and auxiliaries; it is called an assembly, because regularly formed by the divine will and counsel to do this execution. God will raise them up to do it, will incline them to, and fit them for, this service, and then he will cause them to come up, for all their motions are under his conduct and direction: he shall give the word of command, shall order them to put themselves in array against Babylon, (v. 14.) and then they shall put themselves in array, (v. 9.) for what God appoints to be done shall be done; and from thence she shall b quickly taken; from their first sitting down beofore they, they shall be still gaining ground against it till be taken. God shall bid them shoot at her,
and spare no arrows, (v. 14.) and then their arrows shall be as of a mighty expert man, that has both skill and strength, a good eye, and a good hand;
(v. 9.) none shall return in vain. When God gives commission, he gives grace to do it. Now this bidding them shoot at her, (v. 14.) but to shoot against her, (v. 15.) with a triumphant shout, as that are already sure of victory. Those whom God directs to shoot, may do it with shouting;
for they are sure not to miss the mark.

2. The desolation and destruction itself that shall be brought upon Babylon. This is set forth here in a great variety of expressions: (1.) The wealth of Babylon, which is said to be like the prey of querors; (v. 10.) Chaldea shall be a spoil to all her enemies, who shall enrich themselves by plundering her, and, which is strange, all that spoil she shall be satisfied; they shall have so much, that even they themselves shall say that they have enough.
(2.) The country of Babylon shall be dispeopled, and lie uninhabited; It shall be wholly devoid, v. 9. Thus the first ages of Christians most poorly were confounded, and it is hard to see how unlike them the latter ages are, and how wretchedly they have degenerated; and no sin brings a surer and surer ruin upon persons, or people, than apostacy. (4.)
The great admirers of Babylon shall see it rendered very despicable; the last of kingdoms, the very tail of the nations, shall it be, a wilderness, a dry land, a desert, v. 12. The country that was populous, shall be despopulated. that was enriched with a fertile soil, shall become barren. (5.) The great city, the head of it, shall be quite ruined, her foundations are fallen, and therefore her walls are thrown down;
for how can the walls stand, when divine vengeance is at the door, and shakes the very foundations? It is the vengeance of the Lord, which nothing can contend with either in law or battle. (6.) There shall not be left in Babylon so much as a dog that they be the land, for vine-dressers and husbandmen, as there was in Israel; (v. 16.) The sower shall be cut off from Babylon, and he that handles the sickle;
the country shall be so emptied of people, that there shall be none to till the ground, and gather in the fruits of it. Harvest shall come, and there shall be no reapers; seediness shall come, and there shall be no sower; God will do his part, but there shall be no men to do theirs. (7.) All their auxiliary forces, which they have hired into their service, shall dessert them, as mercenary men often do upon the approach of danger; (v. 16.) for fear of the oppressing sword they shall turn every one to his profite.
This was threatened before, concerning Egypt, ch.
xlv. 16.

3. The procuring, provoking cause of this destruction. It comes from God's displeasure; it is because of the wrath of the Lord, that Babylon shall be wholly desolate; (v. 13.) and his wrath is righteous, for, (v. 14.) she hath sinned against the Lord, therefore spare no arrows. Note, It is sin that makes men a mark for the arrows of God's judg ments. An abundance of idolatry and immorality, (v. 7.) which were a thorn in his side, yet those are not mentioned as the reason of God's displeasure against them, but the injuries they had done to the people of God, from a principle of enmity to them as his people. They have been the destroyers of God's heritage; (v. 11.) herein indeed God made use of them for the necessary correction of his people;
and yet it is laid to their charge as a lewd crime,
because they designed nothing but their utter destruction. (1.) What they did against Jerusalem they did with pleasure; (v. 11.) Ye were glad, ye rejoiced. God does not afflict his people willingly, therefore God will be just when he afflicts them;
employs, afflict them willingly. When Titus Vespas-ian destroyed Jerusalem, he wept over it, but these Chaldeans triumphed over it. (2.) The spoils of Jerusalem they made use of to feed their own luxury; * Ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass, and belown as bulks: your having conquered Jerusalem has made you very wanton and proud, and therefore God will make you to pay for it by your destruction, because you therefore must be a spoil." They that have thus swallowed down riches, must vomit them up again. Therefore they have given their hand; (v. 13.)
they have surrendered themselves to the conqueror, have tamely yielded, so that now you may take vengeance on her, now you may make reprimsals, and do unto her as she hath done. (3.) The persecution of God's enemies, and those that have beaten them, will be the means whereby their Israel; Israel is a scattered sheep, as before, (v. 6.)
that is not only barked at and worried by dogs, but even lions, the most potent adversaries, have roared upon him, and driven him away, v. 17. One King of Assyria carried the ten tribes quite away, and devoured them; another invaded Judah, and plundered and impoverished it, tore the fleece and flesh of its poor sheep; and now at last this Nebuchadnezzer, that is the terror and plague of all his neighbours, has taken advantage of the low condition to which he is reduced, and he has fallen upon him, and broken his bones, has quite ruined him, and therefore the king of Babylon must be punished as the king of Assyria was, v. 18. Note, Those who pursue and prosecute the sins of their predecessors, must expect to be pursued and pros ecuted by their progeny, if they do as they did, let them fare as they fared.

4. The mercy promised to the Israel of God, which shall not only accompany, but accrue from,
the destruction of Babylon. (1.) God will return their captivity, they shall be released out of their bondage, and brought again to their own habitation, as sheep that were scattered, to their own fold, v. 19. They will retain a title to the land of Canaan, it is their habitation still, the discontinuance of their possession was not the destruction of their right, but now they shall recover the enjoyment of it again. (2.) He will restore their prosperity; they shall not only live, but live comfortably, in their own land again; they shall feed upon Carmel and Bashan, the richest and most fruitful parts of the country. These sheep shall be gathered from the deserts to which they were dispersed, and put again into good pasture, which their souls shall be satisfied with; though they shall come hungry to it, having been so long stinted, and straitened, and kept short, yet they shall find enough to satiate them, and shall have hearts to be satisfied with it. They inquired the way to Zion, (v. 5.)
where they were wont to work, but God will then show it them plainly, and it shall be said to them, that way it they chiefly aimed at in their return; but God will not only bring them thither, but bring them also to Carmel and Bashan, where they shall abundantly feed themselves. Note, They that return to God and their duty, shall find true satsation of soul in so doing; and they that seek first the kingdom of God and the righteousness thereof;
that aim at their own ease, shall have other things added to them, even all the comforts of Ephraim and Gilead, the fruitful hills. (3.) God will pardon their iniquity; this is the root of all the rest; (v. 20.) In those days the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none. Not only the punishments of their iniquity shall be taken off, but the offence which it gave to God shall be forgotten, and he will be reconciled to them. Their sin shall be before him as if it had never been, it shall be blotted out as a cloud, crossed out as a debt, shall be cast behind his back; may, it shall be cast into the depth of the sea, shall be no longer sealed up among God’s treasures, nor in any danger of appearing again, or rising up against them. This denotes how fully God forgives sin; he remembers it no more. Note, Deliverances out of trouble are then comforts indeed, when they are the fruits of the forgiveness of sin, Isa. xlix. 8. 17. Judah and Israel were so fully forgiven when they were brought back out of Babylon, that they are said to have received of the Lord’s hand double for all their sins, Isa. xl. 2. This may include also a thorough reformation of their hearts and lives, as well as a full remission of their sins. If any seek for idols or any idolatrous customs among them, after their return, there shall be none, they shall not find them; their dress shall be purely purged away, and by that it shall appear that their guilt is so; for I will pardon them whom I reserve; I will be pitiful to them; (so the word is;) and that must be through him who is the Great Propitiation. Note, Those whose sins God pardons, he reserves for something very great; for whom he justifies, them he glorifies.

21. Go up against the land of Merathaim, even against it, and against the inhabitants of Pekod: waste and utterly destroy after them, saith the Lord, and do according to all that I have commanded thee. 22. A sound of battle is in the land, and of great destruction. 23. How is the hammer of the whole earth cut asunder and broken! how is Babylon become a desolation among the nations! 24. I have laid a snare for thee, and thou art also taken, O Babylon, and thou wast not aware: thou art found, and also caught, because thou hast striven against the Lord. 25. The Lord hath opened his armoury, and hath brought forth the weapons of his indignation: for this is the work of the Lord God of hosts in the land of the Chaldeans. 26. Come against her from the utmost border, open her storerooms; cast her up as heaps, and destroy her utterly: let nothing of her be left. 27. Slay all her bullocks; let them go down to the slaughter; wo unto them! for their day is come, the time of their visitation. 28. The voice of them that flee and escape out of the land of Babylon, to declare in Zion the vengeance of the Lord our God, the vengeance of his temple. 29. Call together the archers against Babylon: all ye that bend the bow, camp against it round about: let none thereof escape: recompense her according to her work; according to all that she hath done unto her: for she hath been proud against the Lord, against the Holy One of Israel. 30. Therefore shall her young men fall in the streets, and all her men of war shall be cut off in that day, saith the Lord. 31. Behold, I am against thee, O thou most proud, saith the Lord God of hosts: for thy day is come, the time that I will visit thee. 32. And the most proud shall stumble and fall, and none shall raise him up: and I will kindle a fire in his cities, and it shall devour all round about him.

Here, 1. The forces are mustered and commissioned to destroy Babylon, which are got ready for a descent upon the potent kingdom. Go up against that land by Merathaim, the country of the Mardi, that lay part in Assyria, and part in Armenia; and go among the inhabitants of Pekod, another country, (mentioned Ezek. xxiii. 23.) which Cyrus took in his way to Babylon. The forces of Cyrus are called to go up against Babylon, (v. 31.) to come against her from the utmost border. Let all come together, for there will be both work and pay enough for them all, v. 26. Distance of place must not be their hindrance from engaging in this work; the archers particularly must be called together against Babylon, v. 29. Thus the Lord hath opened his armoury, (v. 28.) his treasury, (so the word is,) and hath brought forth the weapons of his indignation; as great princes fetch out of the greatest magazines and stores all necessary provisions for their armies, when they undertake any great expedition. Media and Persia are now God’s armoury, thence he fetches the weapons of his wrath, Cyrus, and his great officers and armies, whom he will make use of for the destruction of Babylon. Note, Great men are but instruments which the great God makes use of to serve his own purposes. He has a variety of instruments, has them at command, has armories ready to be opened according as the occasion is. This is the work of the Lord God of hosts. Note, When God has work to do, he will make it appear that he is God of hosts, and will not want instruments to do it with.

2. Instructions are given them what to do. In general, Do according to all that I have commanded thee, v. 1. It was said of Cyrus, (Isa. xlv. 1.) He shall precedent; all my pleasure, in his expedition against Babylon. They must waste and utterly destroy after them; when they have destroyed once, they must go over them again; or destroy their posterity that should come after them. They must often her storerooms, (v. 26.) rifle her treasures, and turn her artillery against herself; they must call her up as heaps; let all the wealth and pomp of Babylon be shovelled up in a heap of ruins and rubbish. Tread her down as heaps, (so the margin reads it,) and destroy her utterly. See how little account the great God makes of those things which men so much value, and value themselves upon! Their princes and great men, who are fat and bulky, shall fall by the sword, not as men of war in the field of battle, which we call a bed of honour, but as beasts by the hand of butchers’ men, (v. 27.) Slay all her bullocks, all her mighty men; let them go down sottishly and insensibly, as an ox to the slaughter. Wo unto them! their case is the more sad for the little sense they have of it; their day is come to fall, the time when they must be reckoned with, and they are not aware of it.

3. Assurances are given them of success. Let them do what God commands, and they shall accomplish what he threatens. A great destruction shall be made, v. 22. Babylon shall become a desolation; (v. 23.) her young women, and all her men of war, shall be cut off in that day, that should have been her defence; (v. 30.) God is against her,
(v. 31.) He has laid a snare for her; (v. 24.) he hath formed this enterprise against her, that she should be surprised as a bird taken in a snare. One shall, no doubt, prevail, for he fights under God; God will kindle a fire in the cities of Babylon; (v. 32.) and who can stand before him when he is angry, or quench the fire that he has kindled? 4. Reasons are given for these severe dealings with Babylon. They that are employed in this war, may, if they please, know the grounds of it, and be satisfied in the justice of it, which it is fit all should be, who are disposed to such work. (1.) Babylon has been very troublesome, vexatious, and injurious, to all its neighbours; it has been the hammer of the whole earth, (v. 23.) beating, beating down, and beating to pieces, all the nations far and near. It has done so long enough; it is time now that it be cut asunder and broken. Note, He that is the God of nations will, sooner or later, assert the injured right of and then deliver against those that unjustly and violently invade them. The God of the whole earth will break the hammer of the whole earth. (2.) Babylon has bid defiance to God himself; Thou hast striven against the Lord, (v. 24.) hast joined issue with him, (so the word signifies,) as in law or battle, hast openly opposed him, set up rivals with him, raised rebellion against him; therefore thou art now found, and caught, as in a snare. Note, The cause of their strivings against the Lord will soon find themselves over-matched. (3.) Babylon ruined Jerusalem, the holy city, and the holy house there, and must now be called to an account for that. This is the manifesto published in Zion, in the day of Babylon's visitation: it is the vengeance of the Lord our God, the vengeance of his people, v. 28. The burning of the temple, and the carrying away of its vessels, were articles in the charge against Babylon, on which greater stress was laid than upon its being the hammer of the whole earth; for Zion was the joy and glory of the whole earth. Note, Whatever wrong is done to God's church, (his temple in the world,) it will certainly be reckoned for; and no vengeance will be sorer and heavier than the vengeance of the temple. (4.) Babylon had been very haughty and insolent, and therefore must have a fall. For it is the glory of God to look upon those that are proud, and to abase them, Job xli. 12. I am against thee, O thou most proud, v. 31. Thou pride; (so the word is;) and again, v. 32. as proud as pride itself. Note, The pride of men's hearts sets God against them, and ripens them apace for ruin; for God resists the proud, and will bring them down. The most proud shall stumble and fall; they shall fall not so much by others thrusting them down, as by their own stumbling; for they hold their heads so high, that they never look under their feet, to choose their way, and avoid stumbling-blocks, but walk at all adventures. Babylon's pride must unavoidably be her ruin; for she has been proud against the Lord, against the Holy One of Israel, (v. 29.) has insulted him in insulting over his people; she has defied him her Enemy; and now, when she is fallen, none shall raise her up, v. 32. Who can help those up whom God will throw down? 33. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, The children of Israel and the children of Judah were oppressed together; and all that took them captives held them fast; they refused to let them go. 34. Their Redeemer is strong; The Lord of hosts is his name; he shall thoroughly plead their cause, that he may give rest to the land, and disquiet the inhabitants of Babylon. 35. A sword is upon the Chaldeans, saith the Lord, and upon the inhabitants of Babylon, and upon her princes, and upon her wise men. 36. A sword is upon the liars; and they shall dote: a sword is upon her mighty men; and they shall be dismayed. 37. A sword is upon their horses, and upon their chariots, and upon all the mingled people that are in the midst of her; and they shall become as women: a sword is upon her treasures; and they shall be robbed. 38. A drought is upon her waters, and they shall be dried up: for it is the land of graven images, and they are mad upon their idols. 39. Therefore the wild beasts of the desert, with the wild beasts of the islands, shall dwell there, and the owls shall dwell therein: and it shall be no more inhabited for ever; neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation. 40. As God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and the neighbour cities thereof, saith the Lord; so shall no man abide there, neither shall any son of man dwell therein. 41. Behold, a people shall come from the north, and a great nation, and many kings shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth. 42. They shall hold the bow and the lance; they are cruel, and will not shew mercy: their voice shall roar like the sea, and they shall ride upon horses, every one put in array, like a man to the battle, against thee, O daughter of Babylon. 43. The king of Babylon hath heard the report of them, and his hands waxed feeble; anguish took hold of him, and pangs as of a woman in travail. 44. Behold, he shall come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan unto the habitation of the strong; but I will make them suddenly run away from her: and who is a chosen man, that I may appoint over her? for who is like me? and who will appoint me the time? and who is that shepherd that will stand before me? 45. Therefore hear ye the counsel of the Lord that he hath taken against Babylon, and his purposes that he hath purposed against the land of the Chaldeans; Surely the least of the flock shall draw them out; surely he shall make their habitation desolate with them. 46. At the noise of taking of Babylon the earth is moved, and the cry is heard among the nations. We have, in these verses, 1. Israel's sufferings, and their deliverance out of those sufferings. God takes notice of the bondage of his people in Babylon, as he did of their bondage in Egypt; he hath surely seen it, and has heard their cry. Israel and Judah were oppressed together, v. 33. Those that remained of the captives of the ten tribes, upon the uniting of the kingdoms of Assyria and Chaldea, seemed to have come and mingled themselves with those of the two tribes, and to have mingled tears with them, so that they were oppressed together. They were humble suppliants for their liberty, and that was all; they could not attempt any thing towards it, for all that took them captives held them fast, and were too hard for them. But this is their comfort in distress, that, though they are weak, their Redeemer is strong; who will be their shield, and all the help of his sanctuary; that has a right to them, and will claim his right, and make good his claim; he is stronger than their enemies that hold them fast; he can overpower all the force that is against them, and put strength into his own people though they are very weak. The Lord of hosts is his name, and he will answer to his name, and make it to appear that he is what his people call him, and will be to them, for which they depend upon him. Note, It is the unspeakable comfort of the people of God, that, though they have hosts against them, they have the Lord of hosts for them; and he shall plentifully plead their cause; pleading he shall plead it, plead it with jealousy, plead it effectually, plead it, and carry it, that he may give rest to the land, to his people's land, rest from all their enemies round about. This is the rejoicing of all believers, who complain of the domination of sin and corruption, and of their own weakness and manifold infirmities; let them know that their Redeemer is strong, he is able to keep what they commit to him, and he will plead their cause, sin shall not have dominion over them; he will make them free, and they shall be free indeed; he will give them rest, that rest which remains for the people of God.

II. Babylon's sin, and their punishment for that sin.

1. The sins they are here charged with are, idolatry and persecution. (1.) They oppressed the people of God, they held them fast, and would not let them go; they opened not the house of his prisoners, Isa. xiv. 17. This was God's quarrel with them, as of old with Pharaoh; it cost him dear, and yet they would not take warning. The inhabitants of Babylon must be disquieted, (v. 24.) because they have disquieted God's people, whose honour and comfort he is jealous for, and therefore will recompence tribulation to those that trouble them, as well as rest to them that are troubled, 2 Thess. i. 6, 7. (2.) They wronged God himself, and robbed him, giving that glory to others, which is due to him alone. (v. 23.) It is the land of graves' images; all parts of the country abounded with idols, and they were mad upon them, were in love with them, and doted on them, cared not what cost and pains they were at in the worship of them, were unwearied in paying their respects to them, and in all this they were wretchedly infatuated, and acted like men out of their wits; they were carried on in their idolatry without regard or discretion, like upon a passion, for terror upon fools and children. Their idols were scarecrows, yet they doted on them. Babylon was the mother of harlots, (Rev. xvii. 5.) the source of idolatry without regard or discretion, like upon a passion, to make a god of any creature; and those who are proud against the Lord, the true God, are justly given up to strong delusions, to be made upon idols that cannot profit. But this madness is wickedness, for which sinners will be certainly and severely reckoned with.

2. The judgments of God upon them for these sins are such as will quite lay them waste, and ruin them.

(1.) All that should be their defence and support shall be cut off by the sword. The Chaldeans had long been God's sword, as he had done execution upon the sinful nations round about; but now, they being as bad as any of them, or worse, a sword is brought upon them, even upon the inhabitants of Babylon, (v. 35.) a sword of war; and, as it is in God's hand, sent and directed by him, it is a sword of justice. It shall be, [1.] Upon their princes; this sword makes its way by it, and their dignity, wealth, and power, shall not secure them. It may be, if they be wise men, their philosophers, their statesmen and privy-councillors; their learning and policy shall neither secure themselves, nor stand the public in any stead. [3.] Upon their soothsayers and astrologers, here called the liars, (v. 36.) for they cheated with their prognostications of peace and prosperity: the sword shall make them make detre, so that they shall talk of it no more; and, as a sublimate, shall have lost all their wits. Note, God has a sword that can reach the soul and affect the mind, and bring men under spiritual plagues. [4.] Upon their mighty men; a sword shall be upon their spirits; if they are not slain, yet they shall be dismayed, and shall be no longer mighty men; for what stead will their hands stand them in when their hearts fail them?

[38.] Upon their exchequer; the sword shall be upon her treasures, which are the sinews of war, and they shall be robbed, and made use of by the enemy against them. See what universal destruction the sword makes when it comes with commission!

(2.) The country shall be made desolate; (v. 38.) The waters shall be dried up, the water that secures the city. Cyrus drew the river Euphrates into so many channels as made it passable for his army, so that they got with ease to the walls of Babylon, which were thought, having such a river before them, to be inaccessible. The water likewise, that made the country fruitful, shall be dried up, so that it shall be turned into barrenness, and shall be no more inhabited by the children of men, but by the wild beasts of the desert, v. 39. This was foretold concerning Babylon, Isa. xiii. 19—22. The same was foretold concerning Edom, ch. xlix. 18. As the Chaldeans had laid Edom waste, so they shall themselves be laid waste.

(3.) The king and kingdom shall be put into the utmost confusion and consternation by the enemies' invading of them, v. 41—43. All the expressions here used, bespeaking the formidable power of the invaders, the terror which they can cut out such shall be as a sword for terror and destruction to those that are for terror and destruction to others. And those who have dealt cruelly, and have showed no mercy, may expect to be cruelly dealt with, and to find no mercy. Only there is one difference between these passages; there it is said, We have heard the fame thereof, and our hands wax feeble; here it is said, The king of Babylon has heard the report, and his heart waxed feeble; which intimates that that proud and daring prince shall, in the day of his distress, be as Jeremiah, Chapter LI.

The prophet, in this chapter, goes on with the prediction of Babylon's fall, to which other prophets also bare witness. He is very large and lively in describing the foresight God had given him of it, for the accomplishment of the prophet's captives, whose deliverance depended upon it, and was to be the result of it. Here is, 1. The record of Babylon's doom, with the particulars of it, intermixed with the grounds of God's controversy with her, many aggravations of her fall, and great encouragements given from thence to the Israel of God, that suffered such hard things by her, v. 1-58. 11. The representation and ratiocination of this, by the throwing of a copy of this prophecy into the river Euphrates, v. 59-64.

1. Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will raise up against Babylon, and against them that dwell in the midst of them that rise up against me, a destroying wind; 2. And will send unto Babylon fanners, that shall fan her, and shall empty her land: for in the day of trouble they shall be against her round about. 3. Against him that bendeth let the archer bend his bow, and against him that lifteth himself up in his brigandine: and spare ye not her young men; destroy ye utterly all her host. 4. Thus the slain shall fall in the land of the Chaldeans, and they that are thrust through in her streets. 5. For Israel hath not been forsaken, nor Judah of his God, of the Lord of hosts; though their land was filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel. 6. Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver every man his soul; be not cut off in her iniquity: for this is the time of the Lord's vengeance; he will render unto her a recompense. 7. Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord's hand, that made all the earth drunken: the nations have drunken of her wine; therefore the nations are mad. 8. Babylon is suddenly fallen and destroyed: howl for her; take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed. 9. We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed: forsake her, and let us go every one into his own country; for her judgment reacheth unto heaven, and is lifted up even to the skies. 10. The Lord hath brought forth our righteousness; come, and let us declare in Zion the work of the Lord our God. 11. Make bright the arrows, gather the shields: the Lord hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes; for his device is against Babylon, to destroy it; because it is the vengeance of the Lord, the vengeance of his temple. 12. Set up the standard upon the walls of Babylon, make the watch strong; set up the watchmen, prepare the ambushes: for the Lord hath both devised and done that which he spake against the inhabitants of Babylon. 13. O thou that dwellest upon many waters, abundant in treasures, thin end is come, and the measure of thy covetousness. 14. The Lord of hosts hath sworn by himself, saying, Surely I will fill thee with men as with caterpillars; and they shall lift up a shout against thee. 15. He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heaven by his understanding. 16. When he uttereth his voice there is a multitude of waters in the heavens; and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth: he maketh lightnings with rain, and bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures. 17. Every man is brutish by his knowledge; every founder is confounded by the graven image: for his molten image is falsehood; and there is no breath in them. 18. They are vanity, the work of errors: in the time of their visitation they shall perish. 19. The Portion of Jacob is not like them; for he is the Former of all things, and Israel is the rod of his inheritance; The Lord of hosts is his name. 20. Thou art my battle-axe and weapons of war: for with thee will I break in pieces the nations; and with thee will I destroy kingdoms; 21. And with thee will I break in pieces the horse and his rider; and with thee will I break in pieces the chariot and his rider; 22. With thee also will I break in pieces man and woman; and with thee will I break in pieces old and young; and with thee will I break in pieces the young man and the maid; 23. I will also break in pieces with thee the shepherd and his flock; and with thee will I break in pieces the husbandman and his yoke of oxen; and with thee will I break in pieces captains and rulers. 24. And I will render unto Babylon, and to all the inhabitants of Chaldea, all their evil that they have done in Zion in your sight, saith the Lord. 25. Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the Lord, which destroyest all the earth; and I will stretch out my hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt moun-
26. And they shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations; but thou shalt be desolate for ever, saith the LOR D. 27. Set ye up a standard in the land, blow the trumpet among the nations, prepare the nations against her, call together against her the kingdoms of Ararat, Minni, and Ashchenaz; appoint a captain against her; cause her horses to come up as the rough caterpillars. 28. Prepare against her the nations, with the kings of the Medes, the captains thereof, and all the rulers thereof, and all the land of his dominion. 29. And the land shall tremble and sorrow: for every purpose of the LOR D shall be performed against Babylon, to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant. 30. The mighty men of Babylon have forborne to fight, they have remained in their holds: their might hath failed; they became as women: they have burnt their dwelling-places; her bars are broken. 31. One post shall run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, to show the king of Babylon that his city is taken at one end. 32. And that the passages are stopped, and the reeds they have burnt with fire, and the men of war are affrighted. 33. For thus saith the LOR D of hosts, the God of Israel, The daughter of Babylon is like a threshing-floor, it is time to thresh her: yet a little while, and the time of her harvest shall come. 34. Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon hath devoured me, he hath crushed me, he hath made me an empty vessel, he hath swallowed me up like a dragon, he hath filled his belly with my delicacies, he hath cast me out. 35. The violence done to me and to my flesh be upon Babylon, shall the inhabitant of Zion say; and, My blood upon the inhabitants of Chaldea, shall Jerusalem say. 36. Therefore thus saith the LOR D, Behold, I will plead thy cause, and take vengeance for thee; and I will dry up her sea, and make her springs dry. 37. And Babylon shall become heaps, a dwelling-place for dragons, an astonishment, and a hissing without an inhabitant. 38. They shall roar together like lions: they shall yell as lions' whelps. 39. In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the LOR D. 40. I will bring them down like lambs to the slaughter, like rams with he-goats. 41. How is Sheshach taken! and how is the praise of the whole earth surprised! how is Babylon become an astonishment among the nations! 42. The sea is come up upon Babylon: she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof. 43. Her cities are a desolation, a dry land, and a wilderness, a land wherein no man dwell-eth, neither doth any son of man pass thereby. 44. And I will punish Bel in Babylon; and I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up: and the nations shall not flow together any more unto him; yea, the wall of Babylon shall fall. 45. My people, go ye out of the midst of her, and deliver ye every man his soul from the fierce anger of the LOR D. 46. And lest your heart faint, and ye fear for the rumour that shall be heard in the land: a rumour shall both come one year, and after that in another year shall come a rumour, and violence in the land, ruler against ruler. 47. Therefore, behold, the days come, that I will do judgment upon the graven images of Babylon: and her whole land shall be confounded, and all her slain shall fall in the midst of her. 48. Then the heaven and the earth, and all that is therein, shall sing for Babylon: for the spoilers shall come unto her from the north, saith the LOR D. 49. As Babylon hath caused the slain of Israel to fall, so at Babylon shall fall the slain of all the earth. 50. Ye that have escaped the sword, go away, stand not still: remember the LOR D afar off, and let Jerusalem come into your mind. 51. We are confounded, because we have heard reproach: shame hath covered our faces; for strangers are come into the sanctuaries of the LOR D's house. 52. Wherefore, behold, the days come, saith the LOR D, that I will do judgment upon her graven images; and through all her land the wounded shall groan. 53. Though Babylon should mount up to heaven, and though she should fortify the height of her strength, yet from me shall spoilers come unto her, saith the LOR D. 54. A sound of a cry cometh from Babylon, and great destruction from the land of the Chaldeans: 55. Because the LOR D hath spoiled Babylon, and destroyed out of her the great voice; when her waves do roar like great waters, a noise of their voice is uttered. 56. Because the spoiler is come upon her, even upon Babylon, and her mighty men are taken; every one of their bows is broken: for the LOR D of recompenses shall surely requite. 57. And I will make drunk her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men: and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the King, whose name is The LOR D of hosts. 58. Thus saith the LOR D of hosts, The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken, and her high gates shall be burnt with fire; and the people shall labour.
in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary.

The particulars of this copious prophecy are dispersed and interwoven, and the same things left and returned to so often, that it could not well be divided into parts, but we must endeavour to collect them under their proper heads.

Let us then observe here,

1. An acknowledgment of the great pomp and power that Babylon had been in, and the use that God in his providence had made of it; (v. 7.) Babylon hath been a golden cup, a rich and glorious empire, a golden city (Isa. xiv. 4.) a head of gold, (Dan. ii. 38.) filled with all good things, as a cup with wine; nay, she had been a golden cup in the Lord’s hand, he had in a particular manner filled and favoured her with blessings, he had made the earth drunk with this cup of drunkenness, and therefore with her pleasures, and debauched by her; others intoxicated with her tortures, and destroyed by her. In both senses, the New Testament Babylon is said to have made the kings of the earth drunk, Rev. xvi. 4. —viii. 3. Babylon had also been God’s battle-az; it was so at this time, when Jeremiah prophesied, and was likely to be yet more so, v. 20. The forces of Babylon were God’s sweeps of war, tools in his hand, ships of war, instruments of destruction, kingdoms, nations and kingdoms, horses and chariots, which are so much the strength of kingdoms; (v. 21.) men and women, young and old, with which kingdoms are replenished; (v. 22.) the shepherd and his flock, the husbandman and his oxen, with which kingdoms are maintained and supplied, v. 23. Such havoc as this that the Chaldeans had made, when God employed them as instruments of his wrath for the destruction of his people, and of Babylon herself must fall. Note, Those that have carried all before them a great while, will yet at length meet with their match, and their day also will come to fall, the rod will itself be thrown into the fire at last; nor can any think it will exempt them from God’s judgments, that they have been instrumental in executing his judgments on others.

2. A just complaint made of Babylon, and a charge of the same kind against her by the Israel of God; (v. 1.) They are complained of for their incorrigible wickedness; (v. 9.) We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed. The people of God that were captives among them, endeavoured, according to the instructions given them, (Jer. x. 11.) to convince them of the folly of their idolatry, but they could not do it; still the Babylonians doted as much as ever upon their graven images, and the Israelites resolve to quit them, and go to their own country. Yet some understand this as spoken by the forces they had hired for their assistance, declaring that they had done their best to save her from ruin, but that it was all to no purpose, and therefore they had as good go home to their respective countries; for her judgment reaches unto heaven, and it cannot but befall her that she shall make the Israelites resolve to quit them, and go to their own country. Yet some understand this as spoken by the forces they had hired for their assistance, declaring that they had done their best to save her from ruin, but that it was all to no purpose, and therefore they had as good go home to their respective countries; for her judgment reaches unto heaven, and it cannot but befall her that she shall make the Israelites resolve to quit them, and go to their own country.

(2.) They are complained of for their inveterate enmity against Israel; other nations had been hardly used by the Chaldeans, but Israel only complains to God of it, and with confidence appeals to him, (v. 34, 35.) The king of Babylon has disarmed me, and crushed me, and never thought he could do enough to ruin me; he has emptied me of all that I had to make me a powerful brake in the way: he has nailed me to the stake, and has cast me away as a vessel, in which there is no pleasure; and now let them be accountable for all this. Zion and Jerusalem shall say, Let the violence done to me and my children, that are my own, flesh, and pieces of myself, and all the blood of my people, which they have shed like water, be upon them; let the guilt of it lie upon them, and let it be required at their hand.” Note, Ruin is not far off from those that lie under the guilt of wrong done to God’s people.

3. Judgment given upon this appeal by the righteous Judge of heaven and earth, on behalf of Israel against Babylon. He sits in the throne judging right, is ready to receive complaints, and answers, both with severity and mercy; (v. 35.) “When I saw that they were deep to come down to judgment, I will in due time plead it effectually, and take vengeance for thee; and every drop of Jerusalem’s blood shall be accounted for with interest.” Israel and Judah seem to have been neglected and forgotten, but God has an eye to them, v. 5. It is true, their land was filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel, they were a provoking people, and their sins were a great offence to God, as a holy God, and as their God, their Holy One; and therefore he justly delivered them up into the hands of their enemies, and might justly have abandoned them, and left them to perish in their hands; but God deals better with them than they deserve, and, notwithstanding their iniquities and his severities, Israel is not forsaken, is not cast off, though he be cast out, but is owned and looked after by his God, by the hand of his anointed one, who represents him as the Lord of hosts, a God of power. Note, Though God’s people may have broken his laws, and fallen under his rebukes, yet it does not therefore follow that they are thrown out of covenant; but God’s care of them and love to them will flourish again, Ps. lxxxix. 30, 33. The Chaldeans thought they should never be called to an account for what they had done against God’s Israel; but there is a time coming, when it shall be seen, and it should come sooner than the time fixed, but then it will come; he will render unto Babylon a recompence, for the avenging of Israel is the vengeance of the Lord, who espouses their cause; it is the vengeance of his temple, (v. 11.) as before, ch. l. 28. The Lord of recompenses, the God to whom vengeance belongs, will surely requite, (v. 56.) will pay them home; he will render unto Babylon all the evil they have done in Zion, (v. 24.) he will return in it the sight of his people; they shall have the satisfaction to see their cause pleaded with jealousy; they shall not only live to see those judgments brought upon Babylon, but they shall plainly see them to be the punishment of the wrong they have done to Zion; and man may see it, and say, Verily there is a God that judges in the earth: for just as Babylon has judged the ten tribes of Israel to fall, has not only slain those that were found in arms, but all without distinction; even all the land, (almost all were put to the sword,) so at Babylon shall fall, the slain not only of the city, but of all the country, v. 49. Cyrus shall measure to the Chaldeans the same that they measured to the Jews, so that every observer may discern that God is recompensing them for the judgment they have done to his people; but Zion’s children shall in a particular manner triumph in it; (v. 10.) “The Lord has brought forth our righteousness, he has appeared in our behalf against those that dealt unjustly with us, and has righted us; he has also made it to appear that he is reconciled to us, and that we are yet in his eyes a righteous nation. Let it therefore be spoken of to his praise, Lord of hosts, and of Zion, the Lord our God, that others may be invited to join with us in praising him.”

4. A declaration of the greatness and sovereignty of that God who espouses Zion’s cause, and undertakes to reckon with this proud and potent enemy; (v. 14.) It is the Lord of hosts that had said it, that has sworn it, has sworn it by himself, for he could...
swear by no greater, that he will fill Babylon with vast and incredible numbers of the enemy's forces, will fill it with men as with caterpillars, that shall overpower it with multitudes, and need only to lift up a shout against it, for that shall be so terrible as to dispirit all the rest of God's Israel in the faith and readiness of this numerous army. But who, and where, is he that can break so powerful a kingdom as Babylon? The prophet gives an account of him from the description he had formerly given of him, and of his sovereignty and victory over all pretenders, (Jer. x. 12-16.) which was there intended for the conviction of the Babylonian idolaters, and the confirmation of God's Israel in the faith and readiness of the God of Israel; and it is here repeated, to show that God will convince those by his judgments, who would not be convinced by his word, that he is God over all. Let not any doubt but that he who has determined to destroy Babylon, is able to make his words good, for, (1.) He is the God that made the world, (v. 15.) and therefore nothing is too hard for him to do; it is in his name that our help stands, and on him our hope is built. (2.) He has the command of all the creatures that he has made; (v. 16.) his providence is a continued creation; he has wind and rain at his disposal; if he speak the word, there is a multitude of waters in the heavens; and it is a wonder how they hang there, fed by vapours out of the earth; and it is a wonder how they ascend thence. Lightnings and rain seem to be things of which they could not make a great noise together; and the wind, which seems arbitrary in its motions, and we know not whence it comes, is yet, we are sure, brought out of his treasures. (3.) The idols that oppose the accomplishment of his word, are a mere sham, and their worshipers brutish people, v. 17, 18. The idols are falsehood, they are vanity, they are the work of error; what they can do, they can do to one purpose, to make the mind and inquired into, they perish, their reputation sinks, and they appear to be nothing; and those that make them are like unto them. But between the God of Israel and these gods of the heathen there is no comparison; (v. 19.) The portion of Jacob is not like them; the God who speaks this, and will do it, is the former of all things, and the Lord of all hearts; if they comply with the pollutions of the earth, they that are about them, and to whom he gives his word, and there is a near relation between him and his people, for he is their Portion, and they are his; they put a confidence in him as their Portion, and he is pleased to take a complacency in them, and a particular care of them, as the lot of his inheritance; and therefore he will do what is best for them. The repetition of these things here, which were said before, intimates both the certainty and the importance of them, and obliges us to take special notice of them; God hath spoken once; yea, twice have we heard this, that power belongs to God; power to destroy the most formidable enemies of his church; and if God thus speak once, yea, twice, we are excusable if we do not perceive it, and attend to it. 5. A description of the instruments that are to be employed in this service. Babylon are called the spirits of the kings of the Medes, (v. 11.) Darius and Cyrus, who come against Babylon by a divine instinct; for God's device is against Babylon to destroy it; they do it, but God devised it, he designed it; they are but accomplishing his purpose, and acting as he directed. Note, God's counsel shall stand, and according to it all hearts shall move. These winds are trumpets of God, and the sound of it would be electrifying; (v. 1.) to a destroying wind, which either by its coldness blasts the fruits of the earth, or by its fierceness blows down all before it; this wind is brought out of God's treasures, (v. 16.) and it is here said to be raised up against them that dwell in the midst of the Chaldeans, those of other nations that inhabit among them, and are incorporated with them. The Chaldeans rise up against God by falling down before idols, and against them God will raise up destroyers, for he will be too hard for them that contest with him. These chiroprators are ascribed to the effect of that Chaldeans, (v. 3.) and not to their own power; it is driven away, as chaff is driven away by the wind. The Chaldeans had been fanners to winnow God's people, (ch. xv. 7.) and to empty them, and now they shall themselves be in like manner despooled and dispersed. 6. An ample commission given them to destroy, and lay all waste. Let them bend their bow against the archers of that Chaldeans, (v. 3.) and not against her young men, but utterly destroy them, for the Lord has both devised and done what he spoke against Babylon, v. 12. This may animate the instruments he employs, by assuring them of success; the methods they take are such as God has devised, and therefore they shall surely prosper; what he has spoken shall be done, for he himself will do it; and therefore let all necessary preparations be made; this they are called to, v. 27, 28. Let a standard be set up, under which to enlist soldiers for this expedition: let a trumpet be blown to call men together to it, and animate them in it; let the nations, out of which Cyrius's army is to be raised, prepare their recruits; let the kingdoms of Ararat and Mimi, and Ashkenaz, of Armenia, both the higher and the lower, and the lords of the sea, gather their bands and armies, in their quota of men for this service; let general officers be appointed, and the cavalry advance; let the horses come up in great numbers, as the caterpillars, and come, like them, leaping and pawing in the valley; let them lay the country waste, as caterpillars do, (Isa. 1. 4.) especially rough caterpillars; let the kings and captains prepare nations against Babylon, for the service is great, and there is occasion for many hands to be employed in it. 7. The weakness of the Chaldeans, and their inability to make head against this threatening, destroying force. When God employed them against other nations, they had spirit and strength in actoffensively, and went on with admirable resolution, conquering and to conquer; but now that it comes to be reckoned with, all their might and courage are gone, their hearts fail them, and none of all their men of might and mettle have found their hands to act so much as defensively. They are called upon here to prepare for action, but it is ironically, and in an upbraiding way; (v. 11.) Make bright the arrows, which are grown rusty through disuse; gather the shields, which in a long time of peace and security have been scattered, and the path out of the way; (v. 12.) Set up the standard upon the walls of Babylon, upon the towers on those walls, to summon all that owed suit and service to that mother-city, now to come in to her assistance. Let them make the watch as strong as they can, and appoint the sentinels to their respective posts, and prepare ambushes for the reception of the enemy. The Chaldean army was said to be so strong, that it would be found very secure and remiss, and would need to be thus quickened; (and they were so to that degree, that they were in the midst of their revels when the city was taken;) but that all their preparations should be to no purpose; who will may call them to it, but they shall have no heart to come at the call, v. 29. The whole land shall tremble and be dismayed, v. 28. They shall select them, for they shall see both the irresistible arm, and the irresistible counsel and decree, of God against them; they shall see that God is making Babylon a desolation, and therein is performing what he has purposed; and then the mighty men of Babylon have forborne to fight, v. 30. God having taken away their strength.
and spirit, so that they have remained in their holds, not daring so much as to peep forth, the might both of their hearts and of their hands fail, they become as timorous as women, so that the enemy has, without any resistance, burnt her dwelling-places, and broken her bars. It is to the same purport with v. 50—53. When the spoiler comes upon Babylon, her mighty men, who should make head against him, are immediately taken, their works of fortification fall, and her bondage is broken, and stands them in no stead; their policies fail them, they call councils of war, but their princes and captains, who sit in council to concert measures for the common safety, are made drunk, they are as men intoxicated through stupidity or despair, they can form no right notions of things, they stagger, and are unsteady in their counsels and resolves, and dash one against the other, and likewise their minds fall among themselves; at length they sleep a perpetual sleep, and never awake from their wine, the wine of God's wrath, for it is to them an opiate that lays them into a fatal lethargy. The walls of their city fall them, v. 58. When the enemy had found ways to ford Euphrates, which was thought impassable, yet surely, they think, the walls are impregnable, they are the back of these walls and pools, as firm as the mountains, as the walls of broad Babylon; the compass of the city, within the walls, was 385 furlongs, some say 480, that is, about sixty miles; the walls were 200 cubits high, and 50 cubits broad, so that two chariots might easily pass by one another upon them. Some say that there was a threefold wall about the inner city, and the like upon the outer; and that the stones of the wall, being laid by pillars instead of mortars, (Gen. xl. 3.) were scarcely separable; and yet these shall be utterly broken, and the high gates and towers shall be burnt, and the people that are employed in the defence of the city shall labour in vain, in the fire, they shall quite tire themselves, but shall do no good. 3. The destruction that shall be made of Babylon by these invaders. (1.) It is a certain destruction, the doom is past, and it cannot be reversed; a divine power is engaged against it, which cannot be resisted; (v. 8.) Babylon is fallen and destroyed, is as sure to fall, to fall into destruction, as if it were fallen and destroyed already; though, when Jeremiah prophesied this, and many a year after, it was in the height of its power and greatness. God declares, God appears against Babylon; (v. 25.) Both the heavens and the earth shall be moved for her; and long whom God is against; he will stretch out his hand upon it, a hand which no creature can bear the weight of, or withstand the force of. It is his purpose which shall be performed, that Babylon must be a desolation, v. 29. (2.) It is a righteous destruction; Babylon has made herself meet for it, and therefore cannot fail to meet with it. For, (v. 25.) Babylon has been a desolate moth of sin, very vile; left Babylon a mountain, and destroying all the earth, as the stones that are tumbled from high mountains spoil the grounds about them; but now it shall itself be rolled down from its rocks, which were as the foundations on which it stood; it shall be levelled, its pomp and power broken. It is now a burning mountain, like Αέτα and the other volcans that the Jews have been a devouring moth of sin, very vile; but it shall be a burnt mountain, it shall at length have consumed itself, and shall remain a heap of ashes—so will this world be at the end of time. Again, (v. 33.) Babylon is like a threshing-floor, in which the people of God have been long threshed, as sheaves in the floor; but now the time is come that she shall herself be threshed, and her sheaves in her hand, her princes and great men, and all her inhabitants, shall be beaten in their own land, as in the threshing-floor. The threshing-floor is prepared, Babylon is by sin made meet to be a seat of war, and her people, like corn in harvest, are ripe for destruction, Rev. xiv. 15. Mic. iv. 12. (3.) It is an unavoidable destruction. Babylon seems to be well fenced and fortified against it; she dwells upon many waters; (v. 13.) The situation of her country is such, that it seems inaccessible, it is so surrounded, and the march of an enemy into it so embarrassed, by rivers. In allusion to this, the speaker, in the Book of Testaments, says, Babylon is in danger, the destruction of Babylon, said to its proud waves, Hitherto shall ye come, and no further. Note, If men will not set a measure to their covetousness by wisdom and grace, God will set a measure to it by his judgments. Babylon, thinking herself very safe and very great, was very proud; but she will be deceived, v. 53. Though Babylon should mount her high walls and pikes, and stand as the mightest, (because what is high is apt to totter) she should take care to fortify the height of her strength, yet all will not do, God will send spoilers against her, that shall break through her strength, and bring down her height. (4.) It is a gradual destruction, which, if they had pleased, they might have foreseen, and had warning of; for, (v. 46.) A rumour will come one year, that Cyrus is making vast preparations for war; and after that, in another year, shall come a rumour, that his design is upon Babylon, and he is steering his course that way; so that when he was a great way off, they might have sent, and desired conditions of peace; but they were too proud, too secure, to do that, and their hearts were hardned to their destruction. (5.) Yet, when it comes, it is a surprising destruction; Babylon is suddenly fallen; (v. 8.) the destruction comes upon them when they did not think of it, and is perfected in a little time, as that of the New Testament Babylon in one hour, Rev. xviii. 17. The king of Babylon, who should have been observing the approaches of the enemy, was himself at such a distance from the place where the attack was made, that it was a great while ere he had notice that the city was taken; so that they say, they were surprised, and the messenger or courier, one courier, after another, with advice of it, v. 31. The foot-posts shall meet at the court from several quarters with this intelligence to the king of Babylon, that his city is taken at one end, and there is nothing to obstruct the progress of the conquerors, but they will be at the other end quickly. They are to tell him that the enemy has seized the passes, (v. 32.) the forts or blockades beside the river; and that having got over the river, they set fire to the reeds on the river-side to alarm and terrify the city, so that all the men of war are affrighted, and have thrown down their arms, and surrendered at discretion. The messengers come, like Job's, one upon the heels of another, with these tidings, which are immediately confirmed by a passage, by by-bys, by by-bys on the other side, and slaying the king himself, Dan. v. 30. That profane feast which they were celebrating at the very time when their city was taken, which was both an evidence of their strange security, and a great advantage to the enemy, seems here to be referred to; (v. 38, 39.) They shall roar together like lions, as men in their revels do, when the wine is got into their heads; they call it singing, but in scripture language, and in the language of sober men, it is called yelling like lions' whelps. It is probable that they were drinking confusion to Cyrus and his army with loud huzzas; Well, says God, in their heat, when they are inflamed, (Isa. v. 11.) and their heads are hot with drinking; I will make their feet fast to that night, give them their potion; they have passed their cup round, now the cup of the Lord's right hand shall be turned unto them, (Hab. ii. 13, 16.) a cup of fury, which shall make them drink, that they may rejoice, or rather that they may revel it, and sleep a perpetual sleep; let them be as merry as they can with that bitter cup, but it shall lay them to sleep, never to wake more; (as 48:7.) on that night, amidst of the jollity, was Bel-shazzar slain. (6.) It is to be a universal destruction, God will make thorough work of it; for, as he will perform what he has purposed, so he will perfect what he has begun. The slain shall fall in great abundance throughout the land of the Chaldeans, multitudes shall be thrust through in her streets, v. 4. They are brought down like lambs to the slaughter, (v. 40.) in such great numbers, so easily; and the enemies make no more of killing them than the butcher does of killing-rams. The strength of the enemy, and their invading of them, are here compared to an irruption and inundation of waters; (v. 42.) The sea is come up upon Babylon, which, when it has once broken through its bounds, there is no fence against, so that she is covered with the most shocking misery, and every living creature of her army; her cities then become a desolation, an uninhabited, uncultivated desert, v. 43. (7.) It is a destruction that shall reach the gods of Babylon, the idols and images, and fall with a particular weight upon them. In token that the whole land shall be confounded, and all her slain shall fall, and that throughout all the country the wounded shall groan, I will shew thee, saith the Lord, the beginning and the end, v. 52. All must needs perish, if their gods perish, from whom they expect protection. Though the invaders are themselves idolaters, yet they shall destroy the images and temples of the gods of Babylon, as an earnest of the abolishing of all counterfeit deities. Bel was the principal idol that the Babylonians worshipped, and therefore that is by name here marked for at-ition; (v. 44.) I will punish Bel, that great devouer, that image to which such abundance of sacrifices are offered, and such rich spoils dedicated, and to whose temple there is such a vast resort; he shall disgorge what he has so greedily regaled himself with; God will bring forth out of his temple all the wealth laid up there, Job xx. 15. His altars shall be forsaken, none shall regard him any more, and so that idol which was thought to be a wall to Babylon, shall fall, and fall them. (8.) It shall be a final destruction; you may take balm for her pain, but in vain; she that would not be healed by the word of God, shall not be healed by his providence, v. 8. Babylon shall become heasts, (v. 37.) and to complete its impu-ny, no use shall be made even of the ruins of Babylon, so execrable shall they be, and Babylon has become ashes, v. 26. There shall not take of thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations. People shall not care for having anything to do with Babylon, or whatever belonged to it. Or it denotes that there shall be nothing left in Babylon, on which to ground any hopes or attempts of raising it into a kingdom again; for, as it follows here, it shall be des-olated for ever, v. 17. The city was destroyed, and the ruins of Babylon's wall were to be seen, yet the ground enclosed by them was a forest of wild beasts. 9. Here is a call to God's people to go out of Babylon. It is their wisdom, when ruin is approaching, to quit the city, and retire into the country; (v. 6.) "Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and get into some remote corner, that you may save your lives, and may not be cut off in her iniquity." When God's judgments are abroad, it is good to get as far as we can from those against whom they are levelled, as Israel from the tents of Korah. This agrees with the New Testament, and the destroying of Jerusalem, a type of the destruction of the temple, and a reference to the destruction of Jerusalem; Let them which be in Judea, flee to the mountains, Matth. xxiv. 16. It is their wisdom to get out of the midst of Babylon, lest they be involved, if not in her ruins, yet in her fears; (v. 45, 46.) Lest your heart faint, and ye fear for the rumour that shall be heard in the land. Though God has told them that Cyrus would be their deliverer, and Babylon's destruction their deliverance; yet they had been told also, that in the peace thereof they should have peace, and therefore the alarms given to Babylon would put them into a fright, and perhaps they might not have faith and consideration enough to suppress these fears; for which reason they are here advised to get out of the hearing of the alarms. Note, Those who have not grace enough to keep their temper in temptation, should have wisdom enough to keep out of the way of temptation. But this is not all; it is not only their wisdom to quit the city when the ruin is approaching, but it is their duty to quit the country too, when the ruin is accomplished, and they are set at liberty by the pulling down of the prison over their heads. This they are told, v. 50, 51. "Ye Israelites, who have escaped the sword of the Chal- deceans, and are come to desolate a land, and are now her ministers of destruction, now that the year of release is come, go away, stand not still, hasten to your own country again, however you may be comfortably settled in Babylon, for this is not your rest, but Canaan is." (1.) He puts them in mind of the inducements they had to return; "Remember the Lord afar off, his presence with you now, though you are here afar off from your native soil, but as near him as those were formerly in the temple, though you are now afar off from the ruins of it." Note, Wherever we are, in the greatest depths, at the greatest distances, we may and must remember the Lord our God; and in the time of the greatest fears and hopes it is seasonable to remember the Lord. "And let Jerusalem come into your mind; though it be now in ruins, yet favour its dust," (Ps. cix. 14.) though few of you ever saw Jerusalem, you believe the remembrance concerning it, from those that went when they remembered Zion; and think of Jerusalem until you come up to a resolution to make the best of your way thither." Note, When the city of our solemnities is out of sight, yet it must not be out of mind: and it will be of great use to us, in our journey through this world, to let the heavenly Jerusalem come often into our mind. (2.) He takes notice of the discouragement which the returning captives labour under; (v. 51.) being reminded of Jerusalem, they cry out, "We are confounded, we cannot bear the thought of it, shame covers our faces at the mention of it, for we have heard of the reproach of the sanctuary, that it is profaned and ruined by strangers; how can I show the face of my God in Babylon?" which he answers, (v. 52.) that the God of Israel will never triumph over the gods of Babylon, and so that reproach will be for ever rolled away. Note, The believing prospect of Jerusalem's recovery will keep us from being ashamed of Jerusalem's ruins. 10. Here is the diversified feeling excited by Babylon's fall, and it is the same that we have with respect to the destruction of Sodom, Gen. xix. 16. (v. 9, 19.) (1.) Some shall lament the destruction of Babylon. There is the sound of a cry, a great outcry coming from Babylon, (v. 54.) lamenting this great destruction, the voice of mourning, because the Lord has destroyed the voice of the multitude, that great voice of mirth, which used to be heard in Babylon, v. 55. We are told what they shall say in their lamentations; (v. 41.) How is Shebah taken, and how are we mistaken concerning her! How is that city surprised, and become an astonishment among the nations, that was the praise, and glory, and admiration, of the whole earth? See how that may fall into a general contempt, which has been universally cried up! (2.) Yet some shall rejoice in Babylon’s fall, not as it is the misery of their fellow-creatures, but as it is the manifestation of the righteous judgment of God, and as it opens the way for the release of God’s captives; upon these accounts the heaven and the earth, and all that is in both, shall sing for Babylon; (v. 48.) the church in heaven and the church on earth shall give to God the glory of his righteousness, and take notice of it with thankfulness to his praise. Babylon’s ruin is Zion’s praise.

59. The word which Jeremiah the prophet commanded Seraiah the son of Ne- riah, the son of Maaseiah, when he went with Zedekiah the king of Judah into Babyl- on, in the fourth year of his reign. And this Seraiah was a quiet prince. 60. So Jer- emiah wrote in a book all the evil that should come upon Babylon, even all these words that are written against Babylon. 61. And Jeremiah said to Seraiah, When thou comest to Babylon, and shalt see, and shalt read all these words, 62. Then shalt thou say, O Lord, thou hast spoken against this place, to cut it off, that none shall remain in it, neither man nor beast, but that it shall be desolate for ever. 63. And it shall be, when thou hast made an end of reading this book, that thou shalt bind a stone to it, and cast it into the midst of Euphrates: 64. And thou shalt say, Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not rise from the evil that I will bring upon her, and they shall be weary. Thus far are the words of Jeremiah.

We have been long attending the judgment of Babyl- on, in this and the foregoing chapter; now here we have the conclusion of that whole matter.

1. A copy is taken of this prophecy, it should seem, by Jeremiah himself, for Baruch his scribe is not mentioned here; (v. 60.) Jeremiah wrote in a book all these words that are here written against Babylon. He received this notice, that he might give it to all whom it might concern. It is of great advantage both to the propagating, and to the perpetuating, of the word of God, to have it written, and to have copies taken of the law, prophets, and epistles.

2. It is sent to Babylon, to the captives there, by the hand of Seraiah, who went there attendant on, or accompanying, the king, in the fourth year of his reign, v. 59. He went with Zedekiah, or, as the margin reads it, on the behalf of Zedekiah, into Babylon. The character given of him is observ- able. That this Seraiah was a quiet prince, a prince of rest; he was in honour and power, but not, as most of the princes then were, hot and heady, making parties, and heading factions, and driving things furiously; he was of a calm temper, studied the things that made for peace, endeavoured to pre- serve a good understanding between the king his master and the king of Babylon, and to keep his master from rebelling; he was no persecutor of God’s prophets, but a moderate man. Zedekiah was happy in the choice of such a man to be his envoy to the king of Babylon, and Jeremiah might safely intrust such a man with his errand too. Note, It is the real honour of great men to be quiet men, and it is the wisdom of princes to put such into places of trust.

3. Seraiah is desired to read it to his countrymen that were already gone into captivity. ‘When thou shalt come to Babylon, and shalt see what a magnifi- cent place it is, how large a city, how strong, how rich, and how well fortified, and shall therefore be tempted to think, Surely it will stand for ever;’ (as the disciples did, when they were about the foundations of the temple, concluded that nothing would throw them down but the end of the world, Matth. xxiv. 13.) ‘then thou shalt read all these words to thyself, and thy particular friends, for their encourage- ment in their captivity: let them with an eye of faith see to the end of these threatening powers, and comfort themselves and one another hereafter.

He is directed to make a solemn protestation of the divine authority and unquestionable certainty of that which he had read; (v. 62.) Then thou shalt look up to God, and say, O Lord, thou hast spoken against this place, to cut it off. This is like the an- gel’s protestation concerning the destruction of the New Testament Babylon; These are the true say- ings of God. These words are true and faithful, Rev. xix. 9.—xxi. 5. Though Seraiah sees Babylon flourishing, and darling, and that which he had foreseen may not yet foresee Babylon falling; and by virtue of it, must curse its habitation, though it be taking root; (Job v. 3.) ‘O Lord, thou hast spoken against this place, and I believe what thou hast said, that, as thou knowest every thing, so thou canst do every thing. Then hast passed sentence upon Babylon, and it shall be executed. Thou hast spoken against this place, and it is cut off, and it shall not be builded again, neither shall that region go forth any more, neither shall any more be seen by the eye;’ and from hence to the last verse of this chapter the prophecies are of Babylon’s downfall, and the destruction of her greatness and glory, as she was before, and is now. These are the words of the Lord, that shall never envy its pomp, nor fear its power. When we consider this world’s glory, how glittering its shows are, and how flattering its proposals, let us read in the book of the Lord that its fashion passes away, and it shall shortly be cut off, and be desolate for ever, and we shall learn to look upon it with a holy contempt. Observe here, When we have been reading the word of God, it becomes us to direct to him whose word we have been considering, and to acknowledge its truth, equity, and goodness, of what we have read.

5. He must then tie a stone to the book, and throw it into the midst of the river Euphrates, as a con- firming sign of the things contained in it, saying, ‘Thus shall Babylon sink, and not rise; for they shall be weary, they shall perfectly succumb, as men tired with a burden, under the load of the evil that I will bring upon them, which they shall never shake off, or get from under, v. 63, 64. In the sign, it was the stone that sunk the book, which other- wise would have swam, but in the thing signified, it was rather the book that sunk the stone; it was the divine sentence passed upon Babylon in this pro- phecy, that sunk that city, which seemed as firm as a stone. The full of the New Testament Babylon was represented by something like this, but much more magnificent, Rev. xix. 21. A mighty angel cast a great millstone into the sea, saying, Thus shall Babylon fall. Those that sink under the weight of God’s wrath and curse, sink irrecoverably. The last words of the chapter seal up the vision and pro- phecy of this book; Thus far are the words of Jer- emiah. Not that this prophecy against Babylon was the last of his prophecies, for it was dated in the fourth year of Zedekiah, (v. 59.) long before he finished his testimony; but this is recorded last of his prophecies, because it was to be last accomplished of all his prophecies against the Gentiles, ch. xlv. 1. And the chapter which remains is purely his- torical, and, as some think, was added by some other hand.
CHAP. LII.

History is the best expositor of prophecy; and therefore, for the better understanding the prophecies of this book, which relate to the destruction of Jerusalem and the kingdom of Judah, we are here furnished with an account of that sad event. It is the same with the history we had before in that book, but the matter is here repeated, and put together, to give light to the book of the Lamentations, which follows next, and to serve as a key to it. That article in the close, concerning the advancement of Jehoiachin in his captivity, which happened after Jeremiah's time, gives colour to their conjecture, who suppose all this chapter was not written by Jeremiah himself, but by some man divinely inspired among those in captivity, for a constant memorandum to those who in Babylon preferred Jerusalem above their chief joy. In this chapter there was the bad reign of Zedekiah, very

Zekeah was one and twenty years old when he began to reign; and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem; and his mother's name was Hamatal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah. 2. And he did that which was evil in the eyes of the Lord, according to all that Jehoiakim had done. 3. For through the anger of the Lord it came to pass in Jerusalem and Judah, till he had cast them out from his presence, that Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon. 4. And it came to pass, in the ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came, he and all his army, against Jerusalem, and pitched against it, and built forts against it round about. 5. So the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah. 6. And in the fourth month, in the ninth day of the month, the famine was sore in the city, so that there was no bread for the people of the land. 7. Then the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the gate between the two walls, which was by the king's garden; (now the Chaldeans were by the city round about:) and they went by the way of the plain. 8. But the army of the Chaldeans pursed after the king, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho; and all his army was scattered from him. 9. Then they took the king, and carried him up unto the king of Babylon to Riblah, in the land of Hamath; where he gave judgment upon him. 10. And the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes: he slew also all the princes of

JEREMIAH, LII.

That much 8.

This narrative begins no higher than the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah, though there were two captivities before, one in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, the other in the first of Jeconiah; but, probably, it was drawn up by some of those that were carried away with Zedekiah, as a reproach to themselves for imagining that they should not go into captivity after their brethren, with which hopes they had long flattered themselves. We have here,

1. God's just displeasure against Judah and Jerusalem for their sin, v. 3. His anger was against them to that degree, that he determined to cast them out from his presence, his favourable, gracious presence; as a father, when he is extremely angry with an unthankful son, bids him get out of his presence. He expelled them from that good land that had such tokens of his presence in providential bounty, and that holy city and temple that had such tokens of his presence in covenant-grace and love. Note, Those that are banished from God's ordinances have reason to complain that they are in some degree cast out of his presence; yet none are so cast out as those that are cast from God's grace and favor. Zedekiah was allowed to live, that by sin have first thrown themselves out of it. This fruit of sin we should therefore deprecate above any thing, as David, (Ps. li. 11.) Cast me not away from thy presence.

2. Zedekiah's bad conduct and management, to which God left him, in displeasure against the people, and for which God punished him, in displeasure against him. Zedekiah was appointed a king by God, and was confirmed in his office by God; but he neglected his duties as a king, and measured his conduct and management to God's displeasure, and so brought ruin upon his people, not only meritoriously, but efficiently. God was greatly displeased with him for his pernicious dealing with the king of Babylon; (as we find, Ezek. xvii. 13, &c.) and because he was angry at Judah and Jerusalem, he put him into the hand of his own counsellors, to do that foolish thing which proved fatal to him and his kingdom.

3. The possession which the Chaldeans at length gained of Jerusalem, after eighteen months' siege. They sat down before it, and blocked it up, in the ninth year of Zedekiah's reign, in the tenth month, (v. 4.) and made themselves masters of it in the eleventh year of the fourth month, v. 6. In remembrance of these two steps towards their ruin, while they were in captivity, they kept a fast in the fourth month and a fast in the tenth; (Zech. viii. 19.) that in the fifth month was in remembrance of the burning of the temple, and that in the seventh of the murder of Gedaliah. We may easily imagine, or rather cannot imagine, what a sad time it was with Jerusalem, during this year and half that it was besieged, when all provisions were cut off from coming to them, and they were ever and anon alarmed by the attacks of the enemy, and being obstinately resolved to hold out to the last extremity, nothing remained but a certain fearful looking for of judgment. That which disabled them to hold out, and yet could not prevail with them to capitulate, was, the famine in the city; (v. 6.) there was no bread for the people of the land, so that the soldiers could not make good their posts, but were rendered wholly unserviceable; and then no wonder that the city was broken up, v. 7. Walls, in such a case, will not hold out long without men, any more than men without walls; nor will both together stand, people in any stead without God and his protection.

4. The inglorious retreat of the king and his mighty men. They got out of the city by night, (v. 7.) and made the best of their way, I know not whither, nor perhaps they themselves; but the king was overtaken by the pursuers in the plains of Jericho, and his guards dispersed, and all his army scattered from him, v. 8. His fright was not caused, for where there is guilt there will be fear in time of danger. But his flight was fruitless, for there is no escaping of the judgments of God; they will come upon the sinner, and will overtake him, let him flee where he will; (Deut. xxviii. 15.) and these judgments particularly that are here executed, were there threatened, v. 52, 53, &c.

5. The sad doom past upon Zedekiah by the king of Babylon, and immediately put in execution. He treated him as a rebel, gave judgment upon him, v. 9. One cannot think of it without the utmost vexation and regret, that a king, a king of Judah, a king of the house of David, should be arraigned as a criminal at the bar of this heathen king. But he humbled not himself before Jeremiah the prophet; therefore God thus humbled him. Pursuant to the sentence passed upon him by the heathen king, his sons were slain before his eyes, and all the princes of Judah; (v. 10.) then his eyes were put out, and he was bound in chains, carried in triumph to Babylon; perhaps they made sport with him as they did with Samson when his eyes were put out; however, he was condemned to perpetual imprisonment, wearing out the remainder of his life (I cannot say his days, for he saw day no more) in darkness and misery; he was kept in prison till the day of his death, but had some honour done him at his funeral, ch. xxxiv. 5. Jeremiah had often told him what it would come to, but he would not take warning when he might have prevented it.

12. Now in the fifth month, in the tenth day of the month, (which was the nineteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon,) came Nebuzar-adan captain of the guard, which served the king of Babylon, into Jerusalem, 13. And burnt the house of the Lord, and the king’s house; and all the houses of Jerusalem, and all the houses of the great men, burnt he with fire. 14. And all the army of the Chaldeans, that were with the captain of the guard, brake down all the walls of Jerusalem round about. 15. Then Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive certain of the poor of the people, and the residue of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to the king of Babylon, and the rest of the multitude. 16. But Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard left certain of the poor of the land, for vine-dressers and for husbandmen. 17. Also the pillars of brass that were in the house of the Lord, and the bases, and the brazen sea that was in the house of the Lord, the Chaldeans brake, and carried all the brass of them to Babylon.

18. The caldrons also, and the shovels, and the snuffers, and the bowls, and the spoons, and all the vessels of brass, where-with they ministered, took they away. 19. And the basins, and the fire-pans, and the bowls, and the caldrons, and the candlesticks, and the spoons, and the cups; that which was of gold in gold, and that which was of silver in silver, took the captain of the guard away. 20. The two pillars, one sea, and twelve brazen bulls that were under the bases, which king Solomon had made in the house of the Lord: the brass of all these vessels was without weight. 21. And concerning the pillars, the height of one pillar was eighteen cubits, and a fillet of twelve cubits did compass it; and the thickness thereof was four fingers: it was hollow. 22. And a chapter of brass was upon it; and the height of one chapter was five cubits, with net-work and pomegranates upon the chapters round about, all of brass: the second pillar also and the pomegranates were like unto these. 23. And there were ninety and six pomegranates on a side; and all the pomegranates upon the net-work were a hundred round about.

We have here an account of the woful havoc that was made by the Chaldean army, a month after the city was taken, under the command of Nebuzar-adan, who was captain of the guard, or general of the army, in this action. In the margin he is called the chief of the slaughter-men, or executioners; for soldiers are but slaughter-men, and God employs them as executioners of his sentence against a sinful people. Nebuzar-adan was chief of those soldiers, but in the execution he did, we have reason to fear he had no eye to God, but he followed the king of Babylon and his own pleasures, now that he came into Jerusalem, into the very bowels of it, as captain of the slaughter-men there. And, 1. He laid the temple in ashes, having first plundered it of every thing that was valuable; he burnt the house of the Lord, that holy and beautiful house, where their fathers praised him, Isa. lxiv. 11. 2. He burnt the royal palace, probably that which Solomon built, after he had built the temple, which was ever since, the king’s house. 3. He burnt all the houses of Jerusalem, that is, all the houses of the great men, or those particularly; if any escaped, it was only some sorry cottages for the poor of the land. 4. He broke down all the walls of Jerusalem, to be revenged upon them for standing in the way of his army so long. Thus, of a defended city, it was made a ruin. Isa. xxi. 2. 5. He carried away many into captivity, (v. 15.) he took away certain of the poor of the people, of the people in the city, for the poor of the land, the poor of the country, he left for vine-dressers and husbandmen. He also carried off the residue of the people that remained in the city, that had escaped the sword and famine: and the despisers, such as he thought fit, or rather such as God thought fit; for he had already determined houses for the penitent, some for the sword, some for famine, and some for captivity, ch. xv. 2. But nothing is more particularly and largely related here than the carrying away of the appurtenances of the temple. All that were of great value were carried away before, the vessels of silver and gold, yet some of that sort remained, which were now carried away, v. 19. But most of the temple-pret with that was now seized, was of brass; which, being of less value, was carried off last. When the gold was gone, the brass soon went after, because the people repented not, according to Jeremiah's prediction, ch. xxvii. 19, &c. When the walls of the city were demolished, the pillars of the temple were pulled down too; but it is an token that God, who was the Strength and Stay both of their civil and their ecclesiastical government, was departed from them. No walls can protect nor pillars sustain those, from whom God withdraws. These pillars of the temple were not for support, (for there was nothing built upon them,) but for ornament and significance. They were called Jachin, He will establish; and Boaz, In him is strength; so that the breaking of these signified that God would no longer establish his house, nor be the Strength of it. These pillars are here very particularly described, (v. 21.—23. from 1 Kings vii. 13.) that the extraordinary beauty and stateliness of them may affect us the more with the demolishing of them. All the vessels that belonged to the brazen altar were carried away; for the majesty of Jerusalem, like that of Eli's house, was not to be purged by sacrifice or offering, 1 Sam. iii. 14. It is said, (v. 26.) The brass of all these vessels was without weight; so it was in the making of them, (1 Kings vii. 47.) the weight of the brass was not then found out, (2 Chron. iv. 18,) and so it was in the destroying of them. Those that made great spoil of them did not stand to weigh them, as purchasers do, for whatever they weighed it was all their own.

24. And the captain of the guard took Serahiah the chief priest, and Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the door: 25. He took also out of the city a eunuch which had the charge of the men of war; and seven men of them that were near the king's person, which were found in the city; and the principal scribe of the host, who mustered the people of the land; and threescore men of the people of the land, that were found in the midst of the city. 26. So Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard took them, and brought them to the king of Babylon to Riblah. 27. And the king of Babylon smote them, and put them to death in Riblah, in the land of Hamath. Thus Judah was carried away captive out of his own land. 28. This is the people whom Nebuchadrezzar carried away captive: In the seventh year, three thousand Jews and three and twenty: 29. In the eighteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar he carried away captive from Jerusalem eight hundred thirty and two persons: 30. In the three and twentieth year of Nabuchadrezzar, Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive of the Jews seven hundred forty and five persons: all the persons were four thousand and six hundred.

We have here a very melancholy account, 1. Of the slaughter of some great men, in cold blood, at Riblah, seventy-two in number, (according to the number of the elders of Israel, Numb. xxvi. 27, 27,) so they are computed, 2 Kings xxv. 18, 19. We read there of five out of the temple, five of the city, five out of the court, and sixty out of the country. The account here agrees with that, except in one article; there, it is said that there were five, here, there were seven, of those that were near the kings; which Dr. Lightfoot reconciles thus, that he took away seven of those that were near the king, but two of them were Jeremiah himself and Ebed-melech, we have read before, so that there were only five of them put to death, and so the number was reduced to seventy-two; some of all ranks, for they had all corrupted their way; and it is probable that such were made examples of, as had been most forward to excite and promote the rebellion against the king of Babylon. Seraih the chief priest is put first, whose sacred character could not exempt him from this stroke; how should it, when he himself had profaned it by sin? Seraih the prince was a quiet prince, (ch. lxi. 39,) but perhaps Seraih the priest was not so, but quiet and turbulent, by which he had made himself obnoxious to the king of Babylon. The leaders of this people had caused them to err, and now they are in a particular manner made monuments of their fall. 2. Of the captivity of the rest. Come, and see how Judah was carried away captive out of his own land, (v. 27,) and how it spued out the Canaanites that went before them, which God had told them it would certainly do, if they trod in their steps, and copied out their abominations, Lev. xviii. 28. Now here is an account, (v. 30.) Of two captivities which we had an account of before, one in the seventh year of Nebuchadrezzar, the same with that which is said to be in his eighth year, (2 Kings xxiv. 12,) another in his eighteenth year, the same with that which is said (v. 12,) to be in his nineteenth year. But the sums here are very small, in comparison with what we find expressed concerning the former, (2 Kings xxiv. 14, 16,) when there was 18,000 carried captive, whereas here they are said to be 3023; small too in comparison with what we may reasonably suppose concerning the latter; for when all the residue of the people were carried away, (v. 15,) one would think there should be more than 832 souls; therefore Dr. Lightfoot conjectures that these accounts being joined to the story of the putting to death of great men at Riblah, all that are here said to be carried away out of the city, may be a mistake. (1.) Of a third captivity, not mentioned before, which was in the twenty-third year of Nebuchadrezzar, four years after the destruction of Jerusalem; (v. 30,) then Nebuzar-adan came, and carried away 745 Jews; it is probable that this was done in revenge of the murder of Gedaliah, which was another rebellion against the king of Babylon, and that those who were now called, were the actual abettors of Ishmael in that murder, and were not only carried away, but put to death, for it; yet this is uncertain. If this be the sum total of the captives, (All the persons were 4600, v. 30,) we may see how strangely they were reduced from what they had been, and may wonder as much how they came to be so numerous again, as afterward we find them; for it should have been, as at first, and after this, when in Babylon, the Lord made them fruitful in the land of their affliction, and the more they were oppressed the more they multiplied. And the truth is, this people were often miracles both of judgment and mercy.

31. And it came to pass, in the seventh and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin, king of Judah, in the twelfth month, in the five and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach king of Babylon, in the first year of his reign, lifted up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah, and brought him forth out of prison, 32. And spake kindly unto him, and set his throne above the throne of the kings that were with him in Babylon, 33. And changed his prison-garments; and he did continually eat bread before him all the days of his life. 34. And for his diet, there was a continual diet given him of the king of Babylon, every day a portion, until the day of his death, all the days of his life.

This passage of story concerning the reviving which king Jehoiachin had in his bondage, we had likewise before, 2 Kings xxv. 27.—30. Only there it is said to be done on the twenty-seventh day of the twelfth month, here on the twenty-fifth; but in a thing of this nature, two days make a very slight difference in the account. It is probable that the orders were given for his release on the twenty-fifth day, but that he was not presented to the king till the twenty-seventh. We may observe in this story,

1. That new lords make new laws. Nebuchadrezzar had long kept this unhappy prince in prison; and his son, though well-affecting to the prisoner, could not procure him any favour, not one smile, from his father; any more than Jonathan could for David from his father; but when the old peevish man was dead, his son countenanced Jehoiachin, and made him a favourite. It is common for children to unde what their fathers have done; it were well if it were always as much for the better as this here.

2. That the world we live in is a changing world. Jehoiachin, in his beginning, fell from a throne into a prison, but here he is advanced again to a throne of state, (v. 32.) though not to a throne of power. As, before, the robes were changed into prison-garments, so, now, they were converted into robes again. Such chequer-work is this world; prosperity and adversity are set the one over against the other, that we may learn to rejoice as though we rejoiced not, and weep as though we wept not.

3. That though the night of affliction be very long, yet we must not despair but that the day may dawn at last. Jehoiachin was thirty-seven years a prisoner; in confinement, in contempt, ever since he was eighteen years old, in which time we may suppose him so incarcerated to captivity, that he had forgotten the sweets of liberty; or rather, that after so long an imprisonment it would be doubly welcome to him. Let those whose afflictions have been lengthened out, encourage themselves with this instance; the vision will at the end speak comfortably, and therefore wait for it. Dixit spatio—While there is life, there is hope. Non si male nunc, et olig sic erit.—Though now we suffer, we shall not always suffer.

4. That God can make his people to find favour in the eyes of those that are their oppressors, and unaccountably turn their hearts to pity them, according to that word, (Ps. cxvi. 46.) He made them to be fitted of all those that carried them captives. He can bring those that have spoken roughly to speak kindly, and those to feed his people that have fed upon them. Those therefore that are under oppression will find that it is not in vain to hope, and quietly to wait for the salvation of the Lord. Therefore our times are in God's hand, because the hearts of all we deal with are so.

And now, upon the whole matter, comparing the prophecy and the history of this book together, we may learn, in general, (1.) That it is no new thing for churches and persons highly dignified to degenerate, and become very corrupt. (2.) That iniquity tends to the ruin of those that harbour it; and if it be not repented of and forsaken, will certainly end in their ruin. (3.) That external professions and privileges will not only not amount to an excuse for sin, and an exemption from ruin, but will be a very great aggravation of both. (4.) That no word of God shall fall to the ground, but the event will fully answer the prediction; and the unbelief of man shall not make God's threatenings, any more than his promises, of no effect. The justice and truth of God are here written in bloody characters, for the conviction or the confusion of all those that make a jest of his threatenings. Let them not be deceived; God is not mocked.

E X P O S I T I O N,

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE

LAMENTATIONS OF JEREMIAH.

Since what Solomon says, though contrary to the common opinion of the world, is certainly true, that Sorrow is better than laughter, and, It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting, we should come to the reading and consideration of the melancholy chapters of this book, not only willingly, but with an expectation to edify ourselves by them; which that we may do, we must compose ourselves to a holy sadness, and resolve to weep with the weeping prophet. Let us consider,

I. The title of this book; in the Hebrew it has none, but is called, (as the books of Moses are,) from the first word, Ecah—How; but the Jewish commentators call it, as the Greeks do, and we from them, Kinoth—Lamentations. As we have sacred odes or songs of joy, so have we sacred elegies or songs of lamentation; such variety of methods has Infinite Wisdom taken to work upon us, and move our affections, and so soften our hearts, and make them susceptible of the impressions of divine truths, as the wax of the seal. We have not only fitted unto you, but have mourned likewise, Matth. xi. 17.

II. The penman of this book; it was Jeremiah the prophet, who is here Jeremiah the poet, and notes signifies both; therefore this book is fitly adjointed to the book of his prophecy, and is as an appendix to it. We had there at large the predictions of the desolations of Judah and Jerusalem, and then the history of them, to show how punctually the predictions were accomplished, for the confirming of our faith: now here we have the expressions of his sorrow upon occasion of them, to show that he was very sincere in the protestations he had often made, that he did not desire the woful day, but that, on the contrary, the prospect of it filled him with bitterness. When he saw these calamities at a distance, he wished his head waters, and his eyes fountains of tears; and when they came, he made it to appear that he did not dissemble in that wish, and that he was far from being disaffected to his country, which was the crime his enemies charged him with. Though his country had been very unkind to him, and though the ruin of it was both a proof that he was a true prophet, and a punishment of them for persecuting him as a false prophet, which would have tempted him to rejoice in it, yet he sadly lamented it, and herein showed a better temper than that which Jonah was of with respect to Nineveh.

III. The occasion of these Lamentations was the destruction of Judah and Jerusalem by the Chaldean army, and the dissolution of the Jewish state both civil and ecclesiastical thereby. Some of the Rabbins will have these to be the Lamentations which Jeremiah penned upon occasion of the death of Josiah, which are mentioned, 2 Chron. xxxv. 25. But though it is true that that opened the door to all the following calamities, yet these Lamentations seem to be penned in the sight, not in the foresight, of those calamities; when they were already come, not when they were at a distance; and there is nothing of Josiah in them, and his praise, as was, no question, in the Lamentations for him. No, it is Jerusalem’s funeral that this is an elegy upon. Others of them will have these Lamentations to be contained in the roll which Baruch wrote from Jeremiah’s mouth, and which Jehoiakim burnt, and they suggest, that at first there were in it only the 1st, 2d, and 4th chapters, but that the 3d and 5th were the many like words that were afterward added; but this is a groundless fancy; that roll is expressly said to be a repetition and summary of the prophet’s sermons, Jer. xxxvi. 2.

IV. The composition of it: it is not only poetical, but alphabetical, all except the 5th chapter, as some of David’s psalms are; each verse begins with a several letter in the order of the Hebrew alphabet, the 1st aleph, the 2nd beth, &c. but the third chapter is a triple alphabet, the three first beginning with aleph, the next three with beth, &c. which was a help to memory, (it being designed that these mournful ditties should be got by heart,) and was an elegance in writing them valued, and therefore not now to be despised. They observe, that in the 2d, 3d, and 4th chapters, the letter pe is put before ayn, which in all the Hebrew alphabets follows it; for a reason of which Dr. Lightfoot offers this conjecture, That the letter ayin, which is the numeral letter for LXX., was thus, by being displaced, made remarkable, to put them in mind of the seventy years, at the end of which God would turn again their captivity.

V. The use of it: of great use, no doubt, it was to the pious Jews in their sufferings, furnishing them with spiritual language to express their natural grief by; helping to preserve the lively remembrance of Zion among them, and their children that never saw it, when they were in Babylon; directing their tears into the right channel; for they are here taught to mourn for sin, and mourn to God; and withal encouraging their hopes, that God would yet return, and have mercy upon them; and it is of use to us, to affect us with godly sorrow for the calamities of the church of God, as becomes those that are living members of it, and are resolved to take our lot with it.
LAMENTATIONS, I.

CHAP. I.

We have here the first alphabet of this lamentation, twenty-two stanzas, in which the miseries of Jerusalem are bitterly bewailed, and her present deplorable condition aggravated by comparing it with her former prosperous state; and, all along, sin is acknowledged and complained of as the procuring cause of all these miseries; and God is appealed to for justice against their enemies, and applied to for compassion toward them. The chapter is all of a piece, and the several remonstrances are interwoven; but here is, I. A complaint made to God of their calamities, and his compassionate consideration desired, v. 1-2. II. The same complaint made to their friends, and their compassionate consideration desired, v. 12-17. III. An appeal to God and his righteousness concerning it, (v. 18-22,) in which he is justified in their affliction, and is humbly solicited to justify himself in their deliverance.

1. How doth the city sit solitary that was full of people! how is she become as a widow! she that was great among the nations, and princess among the provinces, how is she become tributary! 2. She weepeth sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks; among all her lovers she hath none to comfort her: all her friends have dealt treacherously with her; they are become her enemies. 3. Judah is gone into captivity, because of affliction, and because of great servitude; she dwelleth among the heathen, she findeth no rest: all her persecutors overtook her between the straits. 4. The ways of Zion do mourn, because none come to the solemn feasts: all her gates are desolate; her priests sigh, her virgins are afflicted, and she is in bitterness. 5. Her adversaries are the chief, her enemies prosper; for the Lord hath afflicted her for the multitude of her transgressions: her children are gone into captivity before the enemy. 6. And from the daughter of Zion all her beauty is departed: her princes are become like harts that find no pasture; and they are gone without strength before the pursuer. 7. Jerusalem remembered in the days of her affliction, and of her miseries, all her pleasant things that she had in the days of old, when her people fell into the hand of the enemy, and none did help her: the adversaries saw her, and did mock at her sabbaths. 8. Jerusalem hath grievously sinned; therefore she is removed: all that honoured her despise her, because they have seen her nakedness: yea, she sigheth, and turneth backward. 9. Her filthiness is in her skirts; she remembereth not her last end; therefore she came down wonderfully: she had no comforter. O Lord, behold my affliction, for the enemy hath magnified himself. 10. The adversary hath spread out his hand upon all her pleasant things: for she hath seen that the heathen entered into her sanctuary, whom thou didst command that they should not enter into thy congregation. 11. All her people sigh, they seek bread; they have given their pleasant things for meat to relieve the soul: see, O Lord, and consider; for I am become vile.

Those that have any disposition toweep with them that weep, one would think, should scarcely be able to refrain from tears at the reading these verses, so very pathetic are the lamentations here. 1. The miseries of Jerusalem are here complained of as very pressing, and by many circumstances very much aggravated. Let us take a view of these miseries. 2. As to their civil state. (1.) A city that was populous, is now depopulated, v. 1. It is spoken of by way of wonder; Who would have thought that ever it should come to this! Or by way of inquiry; What is it that has brought it to this? Or by way of lamentation; Alas, alas, (as Rev. xviii. 16, 19,) how doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people! She was full of her own people that replenished her, and full of the people of other nations that resorted to her, with whom she had both profitable commerce and pleasant converse; but now her own people are carried into captivity, and strangers make no court to her; she sits solitary. The chief places of the city are now, as they used to be, places of concourse, where Wisdom cried; (Prov. i. 20, 21,) and justly are they left unfrequented, because Wisdom's cry is not heard. Note, Those that are ever so much increased, God can soon diminish. How is she become as a widow! Her king that was, or should have been, as a husband to her, is cut off, and gone; her God is departed from her, and has given her a bill of divorce; she is emptied of her children, is solitary and sorrowful as a widow. Let no family, no state, not Jerusalem, no, not Babylon herself, be secure, and say, I sit as a queen, and shall never sit as a widow. {v. 1.} Note, Those that are ever so much increased, God can soon diminish. How is she become as a widow! Her king that was, or should have been, as a husband to her, is cut off, and gone; her God is departed from her, and has given her a bill of divorce; she is emptied of her children, is solitary and sorrowful as a widow. Let no family, no state, not Jerusalem, no, not Babylon herself, be secure, and say, I sit as a queen, and shall never sit as a widow. (2.) A city that had dominion, is now in subjection. She had been great among the nations, greatly loved by some, and greatly feared by others, and greatly observed and obeyed by both; some made her presents, and others paid her taxes; so that she was really princess among the provinces, and every sheaf bowed to hers, even the princes of the people; and if her favour now the tables are turned, she has not only lost her friends, and sits solitary, but has lost her freedom too, and sits tributary; she paid tribute to Egypt first, and then to Babylon. Note, Sin brings a people not only into solitude but into slavery. (3.) A city that used to be full of mirth, is now become melancholy, and upon all accounts full of grief. Jerusalem had been a joyous city, whither the tribes went up on purpose to rejoice before the Lord; she was the joy of the whole earth, but now she weeps sore, her laughter is turned into mourning, her solemn feasts are all gone; she weeps in the night, as true mourners do who weep in secret, in silence and solitude; in the night, when others compose themselves to rest, her thoughts are most intent upon her troubles, and grief then plays the tyrant. Went the prophet's Lord was for her, when she regarded it not, now her head is— as waters, and her eyes fountains of tears, so that she weeps day and night, (Jer. ix. 1.) her tears are continually on her cheeks. Though nothing dries away sooner than a tear, yet fresh griefs extort fresh tears, so that her cheeks are never free from them. Note, There is nothing more commonly seen under the sun, than the tears of those whom the clouds return after the rain, Eccl. iv. 1. (4.) Those that were separated from the heathen, now dwell among the heathen; those that were a peculiar people, are now a mingled people; (v. 2.) Judah is gone into captivity, out of her own land.
into the land of her enemies, and there she abides, and is like to abide, among those that are aliens to God and the covenants of promise, with whom she findeth no rest, no satisfaction of mind, nor any settlement of abode, but is continually hurried from place to place at the will of the victorious, imperious tyrants. And again, (v. 5.) Her children were captives before, and were made captives, as if they were to have been the seed of the next generation, are carried off; so that the land that is now desolate, is likely to be still desolate and lost for want of heirs. Those that dwell among their own people, and that are free people, and in their own land, would be more thankful for the mercies they thereby enjoy, if they would but consider the miseries of those that are foreign and distant from their country.

(3.) Those that used in their wars to conquer, are now conquered and triumphed over; All her persecutors overtook her between the straits; (v. 3.) They gained all possible advantages against her, so that her people unavoidably fell into the hand of the enemy, for there was no way to escape, (v. 7.) they were hemmed in on every side, and which way soever they attempted to flee, they found themselves encompassed; and when they made the best of their way, they could make nothing of it, but were over-taken and overcome; so that every where her adversaries are the chief, and her enemies fierce; (v. 5.) which way soever their sword turns, they get the better. Such straits do men bring themselves into by sin! If we allow that which is our greatest adversary and enemy to have dominion over us, and to be chief in us, justly will all other enemies be suffered to have dominion over us.

(5.) Those that had been not only a distinguished but a dignified people, on whom God had put honour, and to whom all their neighbours had paid respect, are now brought into contempt; (v. 8.) All that honoured her before, despise her; those that courted an alliance with her, now value it not; those that cared her when she was in pomp and prosperity, slight her now that she is in distress, because they have seen her nakedness. By the prevalency of the enemies against her they perceive her weakness, and that she is not so strong a people as they thought she had been; and by the prevalency of God's judgments against her they perceive her wickedness, which now comes to light, and is everywhere taken notice of; now it appears how they have been the judges of themselves by their sins; the enemies magnify themselves against them, (v. 9.) they trample upon them, and insult over them, and in their eyes they are become vile, the tail of the nations, though once they were the head. Note, Sin is the reproach of all people.

(7.) Those that lived in a fruitful land were re-lyily perish, and many of them did perish, for want of necessary food; (v. 11.) All her priests sigh in despondency and despair, they are ready to faint away, their spirits fail, and therefore they sigh, for they seek bread, and seek it in vain. They were brought at last to that extremity, that there was no bread for the people of the land, (Jer. iii. 6.) and in their captivity they had much ado to get bread, ch. v. 5. Yet have they given their pleasant things, their jewels and pictures, and all the furniture of their closets and cabinets, which they used to please themselves with looking upon, they have sold these, to buy bread for themselves and their families, have parted with them for meat to relieve the soul, or, as the margin is, to make the soul come again, when they were ready to faint away. They desired no other comforts than what God had given them to give for life, and for bread which is the staff of life. Let those that abound in pleasant things, not be proud of them, or fond of them, for the time may come when they may be glad to let them go for necessary things. And let those that have competent food to relieve their soul, be content with it, and thankful for it, though they have not pleasant things.

2. We have here an account of their miseries in their ecclesiastical state, the ruin of their sacred interest, which was much more to be lamented than that of their temporal estate.

(1.) Their religious feasts were no more observed, no more frequented; (v. 4.) The ways of Zion do mourn, they look melancholy, overgrown with grass and weeds. It used to be a pleasant diversion to see people continually passing and repassing in the high way that led to the temple, but now you may stand there long enough, and see nobody stir, for the gates of Zion are the first place to which they are confined, by the destruction of that which was the city of our solemnities, Isa. xxxiii. 20. The solemn feasts had been neglected and profaned, (Isa. i. 11, 12.) and therefore justly is an end now put to them. But when thus the ways of Zion are made to mourn, all the sons of Zion cannot but mourn with them. It is very grievous to good men to see religious assemblies broken up and scattered, and those restrained from them, that would gladly attend them. And as the ways of Zion mourned, so the gates of Zion, in which the faithful worshippers used to meet, are desolate, for there is none to meet in them. Time was when the Lord loved the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob, but now he has forsaken them, and is provoked to withdraw from them, and therefore it cannot but grieve with them as it did with the temple when Christ quitted it, Behold, your house is left unto you desolate, Matth. xxiii. 38.

(2.) Their religious persons were quite disabled to perform their wonted services, were quite dispersed; Her priests sigh for the desolations of the temple, their songs are turned into sighs; they sigh, for they have nothing to do, and therefore there is nothing to be had; they sigh, as the people, (v. 11.) for want of bread, because the offerings of the Lord, which were their livelihood, failed. It is time to sigh when the priests, the Lord's ministers, sigh. Her virgins also, that used, with their music and dancing, to grace the solemnities of their feasts, are afflicted and in heaviness. Notice is taken of their service in the day of Zion's prosperity, (Ps. lxviii.) A psalm of David. Among the strings was the damsels playing with timbrels, and therefore notice is taken of the failing of it now. Her virgins are afflicted, and therefore she is in bitterness; all the inhabitants of Zion are so, whose character it is, that they are sorrowful for the solemn assembly, and that to them the reproof of it is a burden, Zeph. iii. 18.

(3.) Their religious places were profaned; (v 15.) The heathen entered into her sanctuary, into the temple itself, into which no Israelite was permitted to enter, though ever so reverently and decently, but the priests only. The stranger that comes nigh, even to worship there, shall be put to death. Thither the heathen now crowd rudely in, not to worship, but to plunder. God had commanded that the heathen should not so much as enter into the way of the temple, and be polluted with the people of the Jews; (Deut. xxxii. 3.) yet now they enter into the sanctuary without control. Note, Nothing is more grievous to those who have a true concern for the glory of God, nor is more lamented, than the violation of God's laws, and the contempt they see put upon sacred things. What the enemy did wickedly in the sanctuary, was complained of, xxxiv. 12.

(4.) Their religious utensils, and all the rich things with which the temple was adorned and beautified, and which were made use of in the worship of God, were made a prey to the enemy;
LAMENTATIONS, I.

The adversary has spread out his hand upon all her pleasant things, has grasped them all, seized them all, for himself. What these pleasant things are, we may learn from Isa. lxiv. 11, where, to the complaint of the burning of the temple, it is added, All our pleasant things are laid waste; the ark and the altar, and all the other tokens of God's presence with them, these were their pleasant things above any other things, and these were now broken to pieces, and carried away. Thus from the daughter of Zion all her beauty is departed, ver. 6. The beauty of holiness was the beauty of the daughter of Zion; when the temple, that holy and beautiful house, was destroyed, her beauty was gone; that was the breaking of the staff of beauty, the taking away of the pledges and seals of the covenant, Zech. xi. 10.

(5.) Their religious days were made a jest of; (v. 7.) The adversaries saw her, and did mock at her sabbaths. They laughed at them for their observing of one day in seven, as a day of rest from worldly business. Juvenile, a heathen poet, ridicules the Jews in his time for losing a seventh part of their time;

O vesteqins quareq fallux
Iguarey vedit se non attigit alam—
They keep their sabbaths to their cost,
For thus one day in seven is lost;

whereas sabbaths, if they be sanctified as they ought to be, will turn to a better account than all the days of the week besides. And whereas the Jews professed that they did it in obedience to their God, and to his honour, their adversaries asked them, "What do you get by it now? What have you in keeping the ordinances of your God, who now descents you in your distress?" Note, It is a very great trouble to all that love God, to hear his ordinances mocked at, and particularly his sabbaths. Zion calls them her sabbaths, for the sabbath was made for men; they are his institutions, but they are her privileges; and the contempt put upon sabbaths all the sons of Zion take to themselves, and lay to heart accordingly; nor will they look upon sabbaths, or any other divine ordinances, as less honourable, nor value them less for their being mocked at.

(6.) That which greatly aggravated all these grievances was, that her present state was just the reverse of what it had been once; (v. 7.) Now, in the days of affliction and misery, when every thing was black and dismal, she remembered all her father's house, that she had in the days of old, and now knows how to value them better than formerly, when she had the full enjoyment of them. God often makes us know the worth of mercies by the want of them: and adversity is most hardy borne by those that are fallen into it from the height of prosperity. This cut David to the heart, when he was banished from God's ordinances, that he could remember them with delight, and the multitude to the house of God, Ps. xlii. 4.

II. The sins of Jerusalem are here complained of as the procuring, provoking cause of all these calamities. Whoever are the instruments, God is the Author, of all these troubles; it is the Lord that has afflicted her, (v. 5,) and he has done it as a righteous Judge, for she has sinned.

1. Her sins are for number numberless. Are her troubles not so? Her sins are many more. It is for the multitude of her transgressions that the Lord has afflicted her. See Jer. xxxix. 14. When the transgressions of a people are multiplied, we cannot say, as Job does, in his own case, that wounds are multiplied without cause, Job ix. 17.

2. They are for nature exceeding heinous; (v. 8.) Jerusalem has grievously sinned; has sinned sin, so the word is; sinned willfully, deliberately; has sinned that sin, which of all others is the abominable thing that the Lord hates, the sin of idolatry. The sins of Jerusalem, that makes such a profession, and enjoys such privileges, are of all others the most grievous sins. She has sinned grievously, (v. 8.) and therefore (v. 9.) she came down wonderfully. Note, Grievous sins bring wondrous ruin; there are some workers of iniquity, to whom there is a strange punishment, Job xxxi. 3.

3. There are such sins as may plainly be read in the punishment. (1.) They have been very oppressive, and therefore are justly oppressed; (v. 5.) Judah is gone into captivity, and it is because of afflication and great servitude, because the rich among them afflicted the poor, and made them serve with rigour, and particularly (as the Chaldee paraphrases it,) because they had oppressed their Hebrew servants, which is charged upon them, Jer. xxxvi. 11. Oppression was one of their sins, (Jer. vi. 7, 17.) and it is a sin that cries loud. (2.) They have made themselves vile, and therefore are justly vilified. They all despise her, (v. 8.) for her filthiness is in her skirts; it appears upon her garments, that she has rolled them in the mire of sin. None can stain our glory, if we did not stain ourselves. (3.) They have been very secure, and therefore are justly surfeited. Yet they are now in want; (v. 9.) She remembers not her last end; she did not take the warning that was given her, to consider her latter end, to consider what would be the end of such wicked courses as she took, and therefore she came down wonderfully, in an astonishing manner, that she might be made to feel what she would not fear; therefore God shall make their plagues wonderful. Note, There is a way to make a sin unendurable, to be so surfeited with it as to feel it as a plague. (v. 8.) They have all dealt treacherously with her, (v. 2.) so that, in effect, they are become her enemies. Her deceivers have created as much vexation as her destroyers. The staff that breaks under us, may do us as great a mischief as the staff that beats us, Ezek. xxi. 10. Her princes, that should have protected her, have not courage enough to make head against the enemy for their own preservation; they are like harts, that, upon the first alarm, betake themselves to flight, and make no resistance; nay, they are like harts that are famished for want of pasture, and therefore are gone without strength before the pursuer, and, having no strength for flight, are soon run down, and made a prey of. Her neighbours are unneighborly, for. 1. There is none that helps her. (v. 9.) Of course, no one would; nor, 2. She has no comforter, none to sympathize with her, or suggest any thing to alleviate her griefs; (v. 7, 9.) like Job's friends, they saw it was to no purpose, her grief was so great; and miserable comforters were they all in such a case.

IV. Jerusalem's God is here complained of, concerning all these things, and all is referred to his compassion and consideration; (v. 9.) "O Lord, behold my affliction, and take cognizance of it;" and, (v. 11.) "See, O Lord, and consider, take order about it." Note, The only way to make ourselves easy under our burthens, is, to cast them upon God first, and leave it to him to do with us as seemeth him good.

12. Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by beheld; and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger. From above hath he sent fire into my bones, and it prevails against them: he hath spread a net for my feet; he hath turned me back; he hath made me desolate and faint all the day.

14. The yoke of my transgressions is bound by his hand; they are wreathed, and come up upon my neck; he hath made my strength to fall; the Lord hath delivered me into their hands, from whom I am not able to rise up. 15. The Lord hath trodden under foot all my mighty men in the midst of me; he hath called an assembly against me to crush my young men: the Lord hath trodden the virgin, the daughter of Judah, as in a wine-press.

16. For these things I weep: mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water, because the comforter that should relieve my soul is far from me; my children are desolate, because the enemy prevailed. 17. Zion spreadeth forth her hands, and there is none to comfort her: the Lord hath commanded concerning Jacob, that his adversaries should be round about him: Jerusalem is as a menstruous woman among them.

18. The Lord is righteous; for I have rebelled against his commandment: hear, I pray you, all people, and behold my sorrow; my virgins and my young men are gone into captivity. 19. I called for my lovers, but they deceived me; my priests and mine elders gave up the ghost in the city, while they sought their meat, to relieve their souls. 20. Behold, O Lord, for I am in distress; my bowels are troubled: my heart is turned within me; for I have grievously rebelled: abroad the sword bereaveth, at home there is as death. 21. They have heard that I sigh; there is none to comfort me: all mine enemies have heard of my trouble; they are glad that thou hast done it: thou wilt bring the day that thou hast called, and they shall be like unto me. 22. Let all their wickedness come before thee; and do unto them as thou hast done unto me for all my transgressions: for my sighs are many, and my heart is faint.

The complaints here are, for substance, the same with those in the foregoing part of the chapter; but, in these verses, the prophet, in the name of the lamenting church, does more particularly acknowledge the hand of God in these calamities, and the righteousness of his hand.

1. The church in distress here magnifies her affliction; and yet no more than there was cause for; her graining was not heavier than her stripes. She appeals to all spectatot's; see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, v. 12. This might, perhaps, be truly said of Jerusalem's griefs; but we are not to suppose it too sensibly to ourselves when we are in trouble, and more than there is cause for. Because we feel most from our own burthen, and cannot he persuaded to reconcile ourselves to it, we are ready to cry out, Surely, never was sorrow like unto our sorrow; whereas, if our troubles were to be thrown into a common stock with those of others, and then an equal dividend made, share and share alike rather than stand to that, we should each of us say, "Pray, give me my own again."
LAMENTATIONS, I.

"Hear, I pray you, all people, and behold my sorrow: hear my complaints, and see what cause I have for them." This is a request like that of Job, ch. 38. v. 17. "Hast thou any wise reflections upon me, my friends?" It helps to make a burthen sit lighter, if our friends sympathise with us, and mingle their tears with ours, for this is an evidence that, though we are in affliction, we are not in contempt, which is commonly as much dreaded in an affliction as anything else.

4. She justifies her own grief, though it was very extreme, in these calamities. (v. 16.) "For these things, weep, I weep in the night; (v. 2.) they see none meets, mine eye, mine eye runs down with water." Note, This world is a vale of tears to the people of God. Zion's sons are often Zion's mourners. Zion spreads forth her hands, (v. 17.) which is here an expression rather of despair than of desire; she flings out her hands as giving up all for gone. Let us see how she accounts for this passionate grief. (1.) Her God is withdrawn from her; and Micah, that had but gods of gold, when they were stolen from him, cried out, What have I more? and what is this that ye say unto me? What allev thee? The church here grieves excessively, For, says she, the comforter that should relieve my soul, is far from me. God is the Comforter; he used to be so to her, he only can administer effectual comforts, it is his word that speaks them, it is his Spirit that speaks them to us. His are strong consolations, able to relieve the soul, to bring it back when it is gone, and we cannot of ourselves fetch it again; but now he is departed in displeasure, he is far from me, and holds me afar off. Note, It is no marvel that the souls of the saints faint away, when God, who is the only Comforter that can relieve them, keeps at a distance. (2.) Her children are removed from her, and, as Lu. x. 20. says, God's children shall be gathered in their kingdom, that she weeps, as Rachel for her, because they were not, and therefore she refuses to be comforted. Her children were desolate, because the enemy prevailed against them, there is none of all her sons to take her by the hand; (Isa. li. 18.) they cannot help themselves, and how should they help her? Both the damsel and the youths, that were bare of their father, (v. 18.) shall be gathered into the temple of the Lord. It is said of the Chaldeans, that they had no compassion upon young men or maidens, not on the fair sex, not on the blooming age, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17. (3.) Her friends failed her; some would not, and others could not, give her any relief. She spreads forth her hands, as begging relief, but there is none to comfort her, (v. 17.) none that can do it, none that cares to do it; she called for her lovers, and, to encourage them to help her, called them her lovers, but they deceived her, (v. 19.) they proved like the brooks in summer to the thirsty traveller, Job vi. 15. Note, Those creatures that we set our hearts upon and raise our expectations from, we are commonly deceived and disappointed in. Her idols were her lovers, Egypt and Assyria were her confidants; but they deceived her. And can comforter that she had in her prosperity, were shy of her and strange to her in her adversity. Happy they that have made God their Friend, and keep themselves in his love, for he will not deceive them! (4.) Those whose office it was to guide her, were disabled to do her any service. The priests and the elders, that should have appeared at the head of affairs, die for hunger. (v. 18.) They have turned their face away, they will not come near me, they do not regard me, they have forsaken me. The priests and elders should have been her comforters; but how should they comfort others when they themselves were comfortless? "They have heard that I sigh, which should have summoned them to mine assistance; but there is none to comfort me. Lover and friend hast thou put far from me; (v. 5.) Her enemies were too hard for her, and then insulted over her; they have forsaken me. Abroad the sword bereaves, and slays all that comes in its way, and at home all provisions are cut off by the besiegers, so that there is no death, famine, which is as bad as the pestilence, or worse—the sword without, and terror within, Deut. xxxii. 23. And as the enemies, that were the instruments of the calamity, were very barbarous, so were they then the instruments by, the Edomites and Ammonites, that bore ill-will to Israel; They have heard of my trouble, and are glad that thou hast done it, (v. 21.) they rejoice in the trouble itself, they rejoice that it is God's doing, it pleases them to find that God and his Israel are fallen out, and they act accordingly with a great deal of strangeness towards them: Jerusalem is as a menstruous woman among them, that they are afraid of touching, and are shy of, v. 17. Upon all these accounts, it cannot be wondered at, nor can she be blamed, that her sighs are many, in grieving for what is, and that her heart is faint, (v. 22.) in fear of what is yet further likely to be.

5. She justifies God in all that is brought upon her, acknowledging that her sins had deserved these severe calamities. The viole that lies so heavy, and binds so hard, is the yoke of her transgressions. v. 14. The feters we are held in are of our own making, and it is with our own red that we are beaten. When the church had spoken here, as if she thought the Lord severe, she does well to correct herself, at least to explain herself, by acknowledging, (v. 18.) The Lord is righteous. He does us no wrong in dealing thus with us, nor can we charge him with injustice, as she could not have done to her sovereign; nor are we sure that the Lord is righteous, and manifests his justice, though they contradict all the laws of theirs. Note, Whatever our troubles are which God is pleased to afflict us with, we must own that therein he is righteous; we understand neither him nor ourselves if we do not own it, 2 Chron. xii. 8. She owns the equity of God's dealings with her, and her own sinfulness, and the unrighteousness of her sovereign; she is sure that the Lord is righteous, and manifests his justice, though they contradict all the laws of theirs.

6. She appeals both to the mercy and to the justice of God, in her present case. (1.) She appeals to the mercy of God concerning her own sorrows. She appeals to his compassion; (v. 20.) "Behold, O Lord, for I am in distress; take cognizance of my case, and take such order for my relief as thou pleasest." Note, It is matter of comfort to us, that the troubles which oppress our spirits are open before God's eye. (2.) She appeals to the justice of God concerning the injuries that her enemies did her; (v. 21.) "Hath my soul been put to the sword? have they that would destroy me taken advantage of the day that is fixed in the councils of God, and published in the prophecies, when mine enemies, that now persecute me, shall be like unto me, when the cup of trembling, now put into my hands, shall be put into theirs." It may be read as a prayer, "Let the days appointed come," and so it goes on, "Let their wickedness come before thee, let it come to be-remembered, let it come to be reckoned for; take vengeance on them, for all the wrong they have done to me; (Ps. cix. 14, 15.) hasten the time when thou wilt do to them for their transgression as thou hast done to me for mine.” This prayer amounts to a protestation against all thoughts of coalition with them, and to a prediction of their ruin, subscribing to that which God had in his word spoken of it. Note, Our prayers may and must agree with God’s word; and what day God has there called we are to call sin the and no other. And though we are bound in charity to forgive our enemies, and to pray for them, yet we may in faith pray for the accomplishment of that which God has spoken against his and his church’s enemies, that will not repent to give him glory.

CHAP. II.
The second alphabetical elegy is set to the same mournful tune with the former, and the substance of it is much the same; it begins with Ecbah, as that did, “How sad is our case! Alas! for us.” I. Here is the anger of Zion’s God taken notice of, as the cause of her calamities, v. 1, 8. II. Here is the sorrow of Zion’s children taken notice of, as the effect of her calamities, v. 10, 19, 111. The complaint is made to God, and the matter referred to his compassionate consideration, v. 20, 22. The hand that wounded must make whole.

1. HOW hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger, and cast down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger? 2. The Lord hath swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob, and hath not pitied: he hath thrown down in his wrath the strong holds of the daughter of Judah; he hath brought them down to the ground: he hath polluted the kingdom and the princes thereof. 3. He hath cut off in his fierce anger all the horn of Israel: he hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemy, and he burned against Jacob like a flaming fire, which devoureth round about. 4. He hath bent his bow like an enemy: he stood with his right hand as an adversary, and slew all that were pleasant to the eye in the tabernacle of the daughter of Zion: he poured out his fury like fire. 5. The Lord was as an enemy; he hath swallowed up Israel, he hath swallowed up all her palaces; he hath destroyed his strong holds, and hath increased in the daughter of Judah mourning and lamentation. 6. And he hath violently taken away his tabernacle, as if it were of a garden; he hath destroyed his places of the assembly: the Lord hath caused the solemn feasts and sabbaths to be forgotten in Zion, and hath despised, in the indignation of his anger, the king and the priest. 7. The Lord hath cast off his altar, he hath abhorred his sanctuary, he hath given up into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces; they have made a noise in the house of the Lord, as in the day of a solemn feast. 8. The Lord hath purposed to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion; he hath stretched out a line, he hath not withdrawn his hand from destroying: therefore he made the rampart and the wall to lament; they languished together. 9. Her gates are sunk into the ground; he hath destroyed and broken her bars; her king and her princes are among the Gentiles; the law is no more; her prophets also find no vision from the Lord.

It is a very sad representation which is here made of the state of God’s church, of Jacob and Israel, of Zion and Jerusalem; but the emphasis in these verses seems to be laid all along upon the hand of God in the calamities which they were groaning under. The grief is great, that such and such things are done, as that God has done them, that he appears angry with them: it is he that chastens them, and chastens them in wrath and in his hot displeasure; he is become their Enemy, and fights against them; and this, this is the wormwood and the gall in the affliction and the misery.

I. Time was, when God’s delight was in his church, and he appeared to her, and for her, as a Friend; but now comes his dishabille, he is angry with her, he is angry with her, and appears and acts against her as an Enemy. This is frequently repeated here, and sadly lamented. What he has done he has done in his anger; this makes the present day a melancholy day indeed with us, that it is the day of his anger, (v. 1.) and again, (v. 2.) it is in his wrath, and (v. 3.) it is in his fierce anger, that he has thrown down and cut off (v. 4.) in the indignation of his anger. Note, To those who know how to value God’s favour, nothing appears more dreadful than his anger; corrections in love are easily borne, but rebukes in wrath wound deep. It is God’s wrath that burns against Jacob like a flaming fire, (v. 3.) and it is a consuming fire, it devours round about, devours all her honours, all her comforts. This is the fiery cloud that poured out like fire, (v. 4.) like the fire and brimstone which were rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah: but it was their sin that kindled this fire. God is such a tender Father to his children, that we may be sure he is never angry with them but when they provoke him, and give him cause to be angry; nor is he ever angry more than there is cause for: God’s covenant with them was, that if they would prove unfaithful he would burn with a vengeance to their enemies, (Exod. xxiii. 22.) and he had been so, as long as they kept close to him; but now he is an Enemy to them; at least he is as an Enemy, v. 5. He has bent his bow like an Enemy, v. 4. He stood with his right hand stretched out against them, and a sword drawn in it as an Adversary. God is not really an Enemy to his people, no, not when he is angry with them, and corrects them in anger. We may be sorely displeased against our dearest friends and relations, whom yet we are far from having an emnity to. But sometimes he is as an Enemy to them, when all his provisions concerning them seem in outward appearance to have a tendency to their ruin; when every thing makes against them, and nothing for them. But, blessed be God, Christ our Peace, our Peace, our Peace, who has slain the emnity, and in him we may agree with our Adversary, which it is our wisdom to do, since it is in vain to contend with him, and he offers us advantageous conditions of peace.

II. Time was when God’s church appeared very bright and illustrious, and considerable among the nations; but now the Lord has covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud, (v. 1.) a dark cloud, which is very terrible to herself, and through which she cannot see his face; a thick cloud, (so the word signi-
LAMENTATIONS, II.

--a black cloud, which eclipses all her glory, and conceals her excellency; not such a cloud as that under which God conducted them through the wilderness, or that in which God took possession of the temple, and filled it with his glory: no, that side of the cloud is now turned toward them, which was turned toward the Egyptians in the Red sea. The beauty of Israel is now cast down from heaven to the earth; their princes, (2 Sam. i. 19.) their reliques, their beauty, and glory, which recommended them into the affection and esteem of their neighbours, and rendered them amiable, which had lifted them up to heaven, was now withered and gone; because God had covered it with a cloud. He has cut off all the horn of Israel, (v. 3.) all her beauty and majesty, (Ps. cxxxii. 17.) all her plenteous fulness, and all her power and authority. They had, in their pride, lifted up their horn against God, and therefore justly will God cut off their horn; he disabled them to resist and oppose their enemies, he turned back their right hand, so that they were not able to follow the blow which they gave, nor to ward off the blow which was given them. What can their right hand do against the enemy, when God draws it back, and withereth it, as he did Jeroboam's? Thus was the beauty of Israel cast down, when a people fairly and justly could not stand their ground, or make good their post.

III. Time was, when Jerusalem and the cities of Judah were strong and well fortified, were trusted to by the inhabitants, and let alone by the enemy as impregnable; but now the Lord has in anger swallowed them up, they are quite gone, the forts and barriers are taken away, and the inhabitants with no opposition; the stately structures, which were their strength and beauty, are pulled down and laid waste. 1. The Lord has in anger swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob, (v. 2.) both the cities and the country-houses; they are burnt, or otherwise destroyed, so totally ruined, that they seem to have been swallowed up, and no remains left of them. He has swallowed up, and has not fitted; one would have thought it pity that such sumptuous houses, so well built, so well furnished, should be quite destroyed; and that some pity should have been had for the poor inhabitants that were thus dislodged and driven to wander; but God's wonted compassions seemed to fail; He has swallowed up Israel, as a lion swallows up his prey, v. 5. 2. He has swallowed up not only her common habitations, but her palaces, all her palaces, (v. 5.) and priests' palaces, (v. 3.) those were most stately, and strong, and rich, and well guarded. God's judgments, when they come with commission, level palaces with cottages, and as easily swallow them up. If palaces be polluted with sin, as theirs were, let them expect to be visited with a curse, which shall consume them, with the timber thereof, and the stones thereof, Zech. vi. 9. He has destroyed their stately buildings, their palaces and great wells, their houses and abodes, as if they were no more than huts, and hovels. He has swallowed up their strongholds, their castles, citadels, and places of defence; these he has thrown down in his wrath, and brought them to the ground; for shall they stand in the way of his judgments, and give a check to the progress of them? No, let them drop like leaves in autumn, let them be razed to the foundations, and made to touch the ground, v. 2. And again, (v. 5.) and has swallowed them up, for what strength, what could they have against God? And thus has he increased in the day of Judah mourning and lamentation, for they could not but be in a dreadful consternation when they saw all their defence departed from them. This is again insisted on, v. 7.—9. In order to the swallowing up of her palaces, he has given up into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces, which were their security, and when they are broken down the palaces themselves are soon broken into. The walls of palaces cannot protect them, unless God himself be a Wall of fire round about them. This God did in his anger, and yet he has done it deliberately; it is the result of a previous purpose, and is done by a wise and steady providence; for the Lord has purposed to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion, he brought the Chaldean army in, on purpose to do this execrable thing, which he knew was to be the utmost dishonour to his church, they are all according to his counsels; he performs the thing that is appointed for us, even that which makes most against us. But when it is done, he has stretched out a line, a measuring-line, to do it exactly and by measure: hitherto the destruction shall go, and no further; no more shall be cut off than what is marked to be so. Or, it is meant of the line of compact, (v. 3.) which he made, for the purpose of his work, he has not withdrawn his hand from destroying, that right hand which he stretched out against his people as an adversary; (v. 4.) as far as the purpose went the performance shall go, and his hand shall accomplish his counsel to the utmost, and not be withdrawn. Therefore he made the rampart and the wall which the people had rejected in, and upon which, perhaps, they had trusted, and which he had disgraced together; the walls and the ramparts, or bulwarks upon them, fell together, and were left to condole with one another on their fall. Her gates are gone in an instant, so that one would think they were sunk into the ground with their own weight, and he has destroyed and broken her bars, those bars of Jerusalem's gates which formerly he had strengthened, Ps. cxii. 7. Gates and walls do no stand, no stead when God has withdrawn his protection.

IV. Time was, when their government flourished, their princes made a figure, and their kingdom was great among the nations, and the balance of power was on their side; but now it is quite otherwise; He has polluted the kingdom and the princes thereof, v. 2. They had first polluted themselves with their idolatries, and then God dealt with them as with polluted things, he threw them to the dunghill, the fittest place for them. He has given up their glory, which was looked upon as sacred, (that is a character we give to majesty,) to be trampld upon and profaned; and no marvel that the King and the priest, whose characters were always deemed venerable and inviolable, are despised by every body, when God has, in the indignation of his angry displeasure, dealt with the king and the princes, v. 6. He has abandoned them; he looks upon them as no longer worthy of the honours conveyed to them by the covenants of royalty and priesthood, but as having forfeited both; and then Zedekiah the king was used despitefully, and Seraiah the chief priest put to death as a malefactor. The crown is fallen from their heads, for her king and her princesses are among the Gentiles; prisoners among them, insulted over by them, (v. 9.) and treated not only as common persons, but as the basest, without any regard had to their character. Note, It is just with God to degrade those by his judgments, who have by sin debased themselves.

V. Time was, when the ordinances of God were administered among them in their power and purity, and they had those tokens of God's presence among them; but now the Chaldean army, that part of the beauty of Israel was gone, which was indeed their greatest beauty. 1. The ark was God's footstool, under the mercy-seat, between the cherubims; this was of all others the most sacred symbol of God's presence; it is called his footstool, 1 Chron. xxviii. 2. Ps. xcvii. 5.—xxxvii. 7.) there the Shechinah rested, and with an eye to this, Israel was often protected and saved; but now he remembered not his footstool, the ark itself was suffered, as it should seem, to fall into the... hands of the Chaldeans. God, being angry, threw that away, for it shall be no longer his footstool, the earth shall be so, as it had been before the ark was, Isa. lxvi. 1. Of what little value are the tokens of his presence, when his presence is gone! Nor was this the first time that God gave his ark into captivity, as xxvi. 31. God and his kingdom can stand without that footstool.

2. They that ministered in holy things had been pleasant to the eye in the tabernacle of the daughter of Zion, (v. 4.) they had been purer than snow, whiter than milk, (ch. iv. 7.) none more pleasant in the eyes of all good people than those that did the service of the tabernacle; but now these are slain, and their blood mingled with their sacrifices: thus is the sanctuary of the Lord, which was, none of all things above it, taken away, (v. 6.) he has plucked up the stakes of it, and cut the cords, it shall be no more a tabernacle, much less his; he has taken it away, as the keeper of a garden takes away his havel or shade, when he has done with it, and has no more occasion for it; he takes it down as easily, as speedily, and with as little regret and reluctance, as if it were but a hovel, and not an ambulatory; and as he did not hesitate to pull down the tabernacle, (Isa. i. 8.) but a booth which the keeper makes, Job xxvii. 18. When men profane God's tabernacle, it is just with him to take it from them. God had justly refused to smell in their solemn assemblies; (Amos v. 21.) they had provoked him to withdraw from them, and then no marvel that he has destroyed his places of the assembly; what should they do with the places when the services were become an abomination? He has now abhorred his sanctuary; (v. 7.) it has been defiled with sin, that only thing which he hates, and for the sake of that he abhors even his sanctuary, which he had delighted in, and called his rest for ever, Ps. cxxxii. 14. Thus he had done to Shiloh. Now the enemies have made as great a noise of revelling and blasphemy in the tabernacle, and the whole temple has been made with the temple-songs and music in the day of a solemn feast, Ps. lxxiv. 4. Some, by the fitnes of the assembly, (v. 6.) understand not only the temple, but the synagogues, and the schools of the prophets, which the enemy had burnt up, Ps. lxxxiv. 8.

4. The solemn feasts and the sabbaths had been carefully remembered, and the people constantly put in mind of them; but now the Lord has caused those to be forgotten, not only in the country, among those that lived at a distance, but even in Zion itself; for there were none left to remember them, nor were the places left where they used to be observed. Now that Zion was in ruins, no difference was made between sabbath-times and other times; every day was a day of mourning, so that all the solemn feasts were forgotten. Note, It is just with God to deprive those of the benefit and comfort of sabbaths and solemn feasts, who have not duly valued them, nor conscientiously observed them, but have profaned them, which was one of the sins that the Jews were often charged with. They that have seen the days of the Son of man, and slighted them, may desire to see one of those days, and not have them, Luke xxi. 22.

5. The altar that had sanctified their gifts is now cast off, for God will no more accept their gifts nor be honoured by their sacrifices, v. 7. The altar was the table of the Lord, but God will no longer keep house among them, he will neither feast them, nor feast with them.

6. They had been blest with prophets, and teachers of the law; but now the law is no more, (v. 9.) it is no more read by the people, no more expounded by the scribes, the tables of the law are gone with the ark, the book of the law is taken from them, and the people are forbidden to have it. What should they do with Bibles, who had made no better improvement of them when they had them? Her prophets also find no vision from the Lord; God answers them no more by prophets and dreams, which was the melancholy case of Saul, 1 Sam. xxviii. 18. They had persecuted God's prophets, and despised the visions they had from the Lord, and therefore it is just with God to say that they shall have no more prophets, no more visions. Let them go to the prophets that had flattered and deceived them with visions of their own hearts, for they shall have none from God to comfort them, or tell them how long. They that misuse God's prophets justly lose them.

10. The elders of the daughter of Zion sit upon the ground, and keep silence: they have cast up dust upon their heads; they have girded themselves with sackcloth; the virgins of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground. 11. Mine eyes do fail with tears, my bowels are troubled, my liver is poured upon the earth, for the destruction of the daughter of my people; because the children and the sucking swoon in the streets of the city. 12. They say to their mothers, Where is corn and wine? when they swooned as the wounded in the streets of the city, when their soul was poured out into their mothers' bosom. 13. What thing shall I take to witness for thee? what thing shall I liken to thee, O daughter of Jerusalem? what shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? for thy breach is great like the sea; who can heal thee? 14. Thy prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee; and they have not discovered thine iniquity, to turn away thy captivity; but have seen for thee false burdens, and causes of banishment. 15. All that pass by clap their hands at thee; they hiss and wag their head at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, Is this the city that men call The perfection of beauty, The joy of the whole earth? 16. All thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee: they hiss and gnash the teeth: they say, We have swallowed her up: certainly this is the day that we looked for; we have found, we have seen it. 17. The Lord hath done that which he had devised; he hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old: he hath thrown down, and hath not pitied: and he hath caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee; he hath set up the horn of thine adversaries. 18. Their heart cried unto the Lord, O wall of the daughter of
LAMENTATIONS, II.

Of the daughter of his people, as sensibly as if he himself had been the greatest sufferer in that common calamity. Note, The judgments of God upon the land and nation are to be bewailed by us, though we, for our parts, may escape pretty well.

II. Calls to lamentation are here given; The heart of the people cried unto the Lord, v. 18. Some fear it was a cry, not of true repentance, but of bitter complaint; their heart was as full of grief as it could hold, and they gave vent to it in doleful shrieks and outcries, in which they made use of God's name; their grief will be taken notice of by him, and he will comfort them in their grief; and they see not with their senses, but with the eye of faith, to which, in sincerity cry unto God for mercy in their distress, and the prophet bids them go on to do so; O wall of the daughter of Zion, either ye that stand upon the wall, ye watchmen on the walls, (Isa. xxiii. 6.) when ye see the enemies encamped about the walls, and making their approaches towards them, or because of the wall, (that is the subject of the lamentation,) because of the breaking down of the wall, which was not done till a month after the city was taken, because of this further calamity, let the daughter of Zion lament still. This was a thing which Nechemiah lamented long after, Neh. i. 3, 4. Let tears run down like a river day and night, weep without intermission, give thyself no rest from weeping, let not the apple of thine eye cease. This intimates, 1. That the calamities which come upon a people, when they are under the government of God, are very particularly and pathetically described. 1. Multitudes perish by famine; a very sore judgment, and piteous is the case of those that fall under it. God had corrected them by scarcity of provisions through want of rain some time before, (Jer. xiv. 1.) and they were not brought to repentance by that lower degree of this judgment, and therefore he was provoked by the state of affairs to deal with them upon them in extremity; for, (1.) The children died for hunger in their mothers' arms; The children and sucklings, whose innocent and helpless state entitles them to relief as soon as any, swoon in the streets, (v. 11.) as the wounded, (v. 12.) there being no food to be had for them; they that are starved die as surely as they that are stabbed; they lie a great while crying in their poor mothers for corn to feed them, and wine to refresh them, for they are such as had been bred up to the use of wine, and wanted it now; but there is none for them, so that at length their soul is poured out into their mothers' bosom, and there they breathe their last. This is mentioned again, (v. 19.) They faint for hunger in the top of every street. Yet this is not the worst, (2.) There were some little children that were slain by the sword of the enemy, (v. 20.) Such is the scarcity of provision, that the women ate the fruit of their own bodies, even their children, when they were but of a span long, according to the threatening, Deut. xxviii. 53. The like was done in the siege of Samaria, 2 Kings vi. 29. Such extremities, nay, such barbarities, were brought to by the famine. Let us, in our abundance, thank God that we have, and take heed of grief would frequently recur, and fresh occasion would be given them every day and every night to bemoan themselves.

2. Multitudes fall by the sword, which devours one as well as another, especially when it is in the hand of such cruel enemies as the Chaldians were.

(1.) They spared no character, no, not the most distinguished; even the priest and the prophet, who of... all men, one would think, might expect protection from heaven, and protection on earth, are slain, not about them, the field of battle, where they are out of their place, as Hophni and Phinehas, but in the sanctuary of the Lord, the place of their business, and which they hoped would have been a refuge to them. (2.) They spared no age, no, not those who, by reason of their tender or decrepit age, were exempted from taking up the sword; for even they perished by the sword; the young and the old, who had had their discharge, lie on the ground, slain in the streets, till some kind hand is found that will bury them. (3.) They spared no sex; My virgins and my young men are fallen by the sword. In the most barbarous military executions that ever we read of, the virgins were spared, and made part of the spoil; (Numb. xxxi. 16; Judges v. 30.) but these, by the cruelty of this cruel war, were as well destroyed as the young men. (4.) This was the Lord's doing, he suffered the sword of the Chaldeans to devour thus without distinction; Thou hast slain them in the day of thine anger, for it is God that kills and makes alive, and saves as he pleases. But that which follows is very harsh, Thou hast killed, and not fitted; for his soul is not grieved for the death of his enemies; Jerusalem was made a perfect spoil by this cruel sack, and of all the houses, which were thus burnt with fire, there to see those whom they have taken such care of, and pangs with, and whom they have been so tender of, thus inhumanly used, suddenly cut off, though not soon reared; Those that I have swaddled and brought up, has mine enemy consumed, as if they were brought forth for the murderer, like lambs for the butcher; (Hos. ix. 13; Zech. x, 16.) Zion, who was a mother to them all, lamented to see those who were brought up in her courts, and under the tuition of her oracles, thus made a prey.

3. Their false prophets cheated them, v. 14. This was a thing which Jeremiah had lamented long before, and had observed with a great concern; (Jer. xiv. 13.) Ah, Lord God, the prophets say unto them, Ye shall have peace; and here is a prophecy indulged among his lamentations: Thy prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee, they pretend to discover for thee, and then to discover to thee, the mind and will of God, to see the visions of the Almighty, and then to speak his words; but they are all vain and foolish things, their visions were all their own fancies, and if they thought they had any, it was only the product of a confused head, or the effects of some wild notions, as appeared by what they delivered, which was all idle and impertinent: nay, it is most likely that they themselves knew that the visions they pretended, were counterfeit, and all a sham, and made use of only to colour that they designedly imposed upon the people with, that they might make an interest in them for themselves; they are thy prophets, not God's prophets, he not so much troubled by these impostors after his heart, but the people set them up, told them what they should say, so that they were prophets after their hearts. (1.) Prophets should tell people of their faults, should show them their sins, that they may bring them to repentance, and so prevent their ruin; but these prophets knew that would lose them the people's affections and contributions, and knew they could not improve their hearts, but were preaching themselves at the same time, and therefore they have not discovered thine iniquity, they saw it not themselves, or, if they did, saw so little evil in it, or danger from it, that they would not tell them of it, though that might have been a means, by taking away their iniquity, to turn away their captivity. (2.) Prophets should warn people of the judgments of God coming upon them, but these saw for them false branches, the messages they pretended to deliver to them from God, they knew not, and had not. And God was the more sure to punish them, by soothing them up in carnal security, they caused that banishment which, by plain dealing, they might have prevented.

4. Their neighbours laughed at them; (v. 15.) All that pass by thee clap their hands at thee. Jerusalem had made a great figure, got a great name, and borne a great sway, among the nations; it was the Washington of the East, but after their sin, as it was feared that the city was thus reduced, they all (as men are apt to do in such a case) triumphed in its fall, they hissed, and wagged the head, pleading themselves to see how much it was fallen from its former pretensions; Is this the city (said they) that men called the perfection of beauty? Ps. I. 2. How is it now the perfection of deformity? Where is all its beauty? Is it not now thrown into confusion and confusion, and the joy of the whole earth? (Ps. lxxxviii. 2.) which rejoiced in the gifts of God's bounty and grace more than any other place, and which all the earth rejoiced in? Where is all its joy now, and all its glory? It is a great sin thus to make a jest of others miseries, and adds very much affliction to the afflicted.

5. Their enemies triumphed over them, v. 16. Those that wished ill to Jerusalem and her peace, vented their spoil and malice, which before they concealed; they now open their mouths, nay, they widen them, they hiss and gnash their teeth in scorn and indignation; they triumph in their own success against her, and the rich prey they have got in making themselves masters of Jerusalem: "We have swallowed her up, it is our doing, and it is our gain, it is all our own now; Jerusalem shall never be either courted or feared as she has been; certainly this is the day that we have long looked for, we have found it, we have seen it; Aha, so would we have it." Note, The enemies of the church are apt to take its shocks for its ruins, and to triumph in them accordingly; but they will find themselves deceived; for the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church.

The Lord, God, in all this, appeared against them, (v. 17.) The Lord has done that which he had devised. The destroyers of Jerusalem could have no power against her, unless it were given them from above; they are but the sword in God's hand, it is he that has thrown down, and has not fitted; "In this controversy of his with us, we have not had the usual instances of his compassion towards us. He has caused thine enemy to rejoice over thee, (see Job xxx. 11.) he has set up the horn of thine adversary, has given them power and matter for pride; this is indeed the highest aggravation of the trouble, that God is become their Enemy, and yet it is the strongest argument for patience under it; we are bound to submit to what God does, for, (1.) It is the performance of his purpose: The Lord has done which he had to do with counsel and deliberation, not rashly, or upon a sudden resolve; it is the evil that he has framed, (Jer. xviii. 11.) and we may be sure it is framed so as exactly to answer the intention; what God devises against his people is designed for them, and so it will be found in the issue. (2.) It is the accomplishment of his predictions; it is the fulfilling of the scripture; he has now put in execution his word that he had commanded in the days of old. When he gave them his law by Moses, he told them what judgments he
LAMENTATIONS, III.

The scope of this chapter is the same with that of the two foregoing chapters, but the composition is somewhat different; that was in long verse, this in short; another kind of metre; that was in single alphabets, this in a trible one. Here is, 1. A sad complaint of God's displeasure, and the fruits of it. v. 1-20. II. Words of comfort to God's people when they are in trouble and distress, v. 21-36. III. Duty prescribed in this afflicted state, v. 37-41. IV. The complaint renewed, v. 42-54. V. Encouragement to those that are taken into God, and continual praying for his salvation; with an appeal to his justice against the persecutors of the church, v. 55-66. Some make all this to be spoken by the prophet himself, when he was imprisoned and persecuted; but it seems rather to be spoken in the person of the church now in captivity, and in a manner desolate; and in the desolations of which the prophet did in a particular manner interest himself? But the complaints here are somewhat of a more general than those in the foregoing chapter, being accommodated to the case as well of particular persons as of the public; and intended for the use of the closet rather than of the solemn assembly. Some think Jeremiah makes these complaints, not only as an intercessor for Israel, but as a type of Christ, who was thought by some to be Jeremiah the weeping prophet, because he was much in tears (Matt. xvi. 14.) and to him many of the passages here may be applied.

CHAP. III.

1. AM the man that hath seen affliction by the rod of his wrath. 2. He hath led me, and brought me into darkness, but not into light. 3. Surely against me is he turned; he turneth his hand against me all the day. 4. My flesh and my skin hath he made old; he hath broken my bones. 5. He hath builded against me, and compassed me with gall and travail. 6. He hath set me in dark places, as they that be dead of old. 7. He hath hedged me about, that I cannot get out; he hath made my chain heavy. 8. Also when I cry and shout, he shutteth out my prayer. 9. He hath enclosed my ways with wewn stone; he hath made my paths crooked. 10. He was unto me as a bear lying in wait, and as a lion in secret places. 11. He hath turned aside my ways, and pulled me in pieces: he hath made me desolate. 12. He hath bent his bow, and set me as a mark for the arrow. 13. He hath caused the arrows of his quiver to enter into my reins. 14. I was a derision to all my people, and their song all the day. 15. He hath filled me with bitterness, he hath made me drunken with wormwood. 16. He hath also broken my teeth with gravel-stones, he hath covered me with ashes. 17. And thou hast removed my soul far off from peace: I forgot prosperity. 18. And I said, My strength and my hope is perished from the Lord: 19. Remembering mine affliction and my misery, the wormwood and the gall. 20. My soul hath them still in constant abrasure, and is humbled in me.

The title of the 102d Psalm might very fitly be prefixed to this chapter; The prayer of the afflicted, when he is overwhelmed, and pours out his complaint before the Lord; for it is very feelingly and
1. That the complaint is here poured out. Let us observe the particulars of it.

2. That lion eat, and put on continually the rod of his wrath. Note, God is sometimes angry with his own people, yet it is to be complained of, not as a spirit of unbelief, but as an inward sense of his displeasure. (Heb. 12:5) He showed them the rod of his wrath, a chastening which, though grievous for the present, will in the issue be advantageous. By this rod we must expect to see affliction, and if we be made to see more than ordinary affliction by that rod, we must not quarrel; for we are sure that the anger is just, and the affliction mild, and mixed with mercy.

3. That he is a loss, as altogether in the dark; darkness is put for great trouble and perplexity, the want both of comfort and of direction; this was the case of the complainant; (v. 2) "He has led me by his providence, and an accountable chain of events, into darkness, and not into light; the darkness I feared, and not into the light I hoped for." And, (v. 6) "He has set me in dark places, dark as the grave, like those that be dead of old, their place is not known any more, or what they were. Note, The Israel of God, though children of light, sometimes walk in darkness.

4. That God appears against him as an Enemy, as a professed Enemy. God had been for him, but now "Surely against me is he turned, (v. 3) as far as I can discern, for his hand is turned against me all the day, I am chastened every morning," Ps. lxxviii. 4. And when God's hand is continually turned against us, we are tempted to think that his heart is turned against us too; God had said once, (Hos. v. 14.) I will be as a lion to the house of Judah, and now he has made his word good; (v. 10.) "He was unto me as a bear lying in wait, surprising me with his judgments, and as a lion in secret places, so that which way soever I went, I was in continual fear of being set upon, and could never think myself safe." Do men shoot at those that they are enemies to? He has bent his bow, the bow that was ordained against the church's persecutors, that is bent against her sons, v. 12. He has set me as a mark for his arrows, which he aims at, and will be sure to hit, and then the arrows of his quiver enter into my reins, give me a mortal wound, an inward wound. When God's hand is continually upon me in my quiver, and they fly swift, and pierce deep. That he is as one sorely afflicted both in body and mind. The Jewish state may now be fitly compared to a man wrinkled with age, for which there is no remedy; (v. 4.) "My flesh and my skin has he made old, they are waxed and withered, and I look like one that is ready to drop into the grave; nay, he has broken my bones, and so disabled me to help myself, v. 15. He has filled me with bitterness, a bitter sense of these calamities." God has access to the spirit, and can so imbitter that, as thereby to imbitter all the enjoyments; as when the stomach is foul, whatever is eaten, sour in it. "He has made me drunken with wormwood," so intoxicated me with the sense of my afflictions, that I know not what to do. He has made my soul groan with inward pains; (v. 16.) and what I eat, is neither pleasant nor nourishing. He has covered me with ashes, as mourners are; or, as some read it, he has fed me with ashes; I have eaten ashes like bread," Ps. cix. 9.

5. That he is not able to discern any way of escape or deliverance; (v. 2.) He has builded a quiver against me, or a quiver and a besieged city; where there was a way open, it is now quite made up; he has compassed me on every side with gall and travel; I vex, and fret, and tire myself, to find a way of escape, but can find none, v. 7. He hath hedged me about, that I cannot get out." When Jerusalem was besieged, it was said to be compassed in on every side, Luke xix. 43. "I am chained, and as some notorious manufacturers are double-towered, and loaded with irons, so he has made my chain heavy. He has also (v. 9.) entwined my ways with heaven stone, not only hedged up my way, but strewn up it with great and heaping stones, to make an aspersion of them, or like a stone wall, which cannot be broken through, so that my paths are made crooked; I traverse to and fro, to the right hand, to the left, to try to get forward, but am still turned back." It is just with God to make these who walk in the crooked paths of sin, crossing God's laws, walk in the crooked paths of affliction, crossing their designs, and breaking their means, Ps. Lxxix. 12. And outside of my ways he has blasted all my counsels, ruined my projects, so that I am necessitated to yield to my own ruin; he has pulld me in pieces, he has torn, and is gone away, (Hos. v. 14.) and has made me desolate, has deprived me of all society, and all comfort in my own soul.

6. That God turns a deaf ear to his prayers; (v. 8.) When I cry and shout, and make music, (v. 14.) and when he has hands as continually turned against us, we are tempted to think that his heart is turned against us too; God had said once, (Hos. v. 14.) I will be as a lion to the house of Judah, and now he has made his word good; (v. 10.) "He was unto me as a bear lying in wait, surprising me with his judgments, and as a lion in secret places, so that which way soever I went, I was in continual fear of being set upon, and could never think myself safe." Do men shoot at those that they are enemies to? He has bent his bow, the bow that was ordained against the church's persecutors, that is bent against her sons, v. 12. He has set me as a mark for his arrows, which he aims at, and will be sure to hit, and then the arrows of his quiver enter into my reins, give me a mortal wound, an inward wound. When God's hand is continually upon me in my quiver, and they fly swift, and pierce deep. That he is as one sorely afflicted both in body and mind. The Jewish state may now be fitly compared to a man wrinkled with age, for which there is no remedy; (v. 4.) "My flesh and my skin has he made old, they are waxed and withered, and I look like one that is ready to drop into the grave; nay, he has broken my bones, and so disabled me to help myself, v. 15. He has filled me with bitterness, a bitter sense of these calamities." God has access to the spirit, and can so imbitter that, as thereby to imbitter all the enjoyments; as when the stomach is foul, whatever is eaten, sour in it. "He has made me drunken with wormwood," so intoxicated me with the sense of my afflictions, that I know not what to do. He has made my soul groan with inward pains; (v. 16.) and what I eat, is neither pleasant nor nourishing. He has covered me with ashes, as mourners are; or, as some read it, he has fed me with ashes; I have eaten ashes like bread," Ps. cix. 9.

7. That his neighbours made a laughing matter of his troubles; (v. 14.) I was a derision to all my people; to all the wicked among them, that made themselves and one another merry with the public judgments, and particularly the prophet Jeremiah's griefs. I am their song; their negrovah, or hand-instrument of music, their tabret, (Job xvii. 6.) that they play upon, as Nero on his harp, when Rome was on fire.

8. That he was ready to despair of relief and deliverance; (v. 17.) So that he has not only taken peace from me, but has removed my soul far off from peace, (v. 17.) so that it is not only not within reach, but not within view: I forget prosperity; it is so long since I had it. And so he has left me as when he covered it, that I have lost the idea of it; I have been so inured to sorrow and servitude, that I know not what joy and liberty mean. I have even given up all for gone, concluding, My strength and my hope are perished from the Lord, (v. 18.) I can no longer stay myself upon God as my Support, for I do not find that he gives me encouragement to do so; nor can I look for his appearing in my behalf, so as to put an end to my troubles, for the case seems remediless, and even my God inexcusable. Without doubt, it was his infinitry to say thus, (Ps. lxxvii. 10.) for with God there is everlasting strength, and he is his people's never-failing Hope, whatever they may think.

9. That grief returned, upon every remembrance of his troubles; his reflections were as melancholy as his prospects, v. 19, 20. Did he endanger, as Job did, to forget his complaint? (Job ix. 27.) Alas; it was to no purpose, he remembers upon all occasions, the affliction and the misery, the wormwood and the gall; thus emphatically does he speak of his affliction, for thus did he think of it, thus heavy did it lie when he reviewed it. It was the affliction of his soul, and the gall of bitterness, and my transgression; (so some read it;) my trouble, and my sin that brought it upon me; that was the wormwood and the gall in the affliction and the LAMENTATIONS, III.

21. This I recall to my mind, therefore have I hope. 22. It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not. 23. They are new every morning; great is thy faithfulness. 24. The Lord is my portion, saith my soul; therefore will I hope in him. 25. The Lord is good unto them that wait for him, to the soul that seeketh him. 26. It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord. 27. It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth. 28. He sitteth alone, and keepeth silence, because he hath borne it upon him. 29. He putteth his mouth in the dust, if so be there may be hope. 30. He giveth his cheek to him that smiteth him; he is filled full with reproach. 31. For the Lord will not cast off for ever: 32. But though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies. 33. For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. 34. To crush under his feet all the prisoners of the earth, 35. To turn aside the right of a man before the face of the Most High, 36. To subvert a man in his cause, the Lord approveth not.

Here the clouds begin to scatter, and the sky to clear up; the complaint was very melancholy in the former part of the chapter, and yet here the tone is altered, and the mourners in Zion begin to look a little pleasant. But for hope, the heart would break. To save the heart from being quite broken, here is something called to mind, which gives ground for hope, (v. 21.) which refers to what comes after, not to what goes before. I make to return to my heart; so the margin words it; what we have had in our hearts, and have laid to our hearts, is sometimes as if it were quite lost and forgotten, till God by his grace make it return to our hearts, that it may be ready to us when we have occasion to use it. "I recall it to mind; therefore have I hope, and am kept from downright despair."

Let us see what these things are, which he calls to mind.

1. That bad as things are, it is owing to the mercy of God that they are not worse. We are afflicted by the rod of his wrath, but, it is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, v. 22. When we are in distress, we should, for the encouragement of our faith and hope, observe what makes for us as well as what makes against us. Things are bad, but they might have been worse, and therefore this is hope that they may be better. Observe here, (1.) The streams of mercy acknowledged: We are not consumed. Note, The Church of God is like Moses's bush burning, yet not consumed; whatever hardships it has met with, or may meet with, it shall have a being in the world to the end of time. It is persecuted of men, but not forsaken of God, and therefore, though it is cast down, it is not destroyed, it is not consumed; refined in the furnace as silver, but not consumed as dross. (2.) These streams followed up to the fountain; It is of the Lord's mercies. Here are mercies in the plural number, denoting the abundance and variety of those mercies; God is an inexhaustible Fountain of mercy, the Father of mercies. Note, We all owe it to the sparing mercy of God, that we are not consumed; others have been consumed round about us, and we ourselves have been in the consuming, and yet we are not consumed; we are out of the grave, we are out of hell. Had we been dealt with according to our sins, we had been consumed long ago; but we have been dealt with according to God's mercies, and we are bound to acknowledge it to his praise.

2. That even in the depth of their affliction they see the excellency of God's goodness, the divine beauty, and the truth of the divine promise. They had several times complained that God had not pitied (ch. ii. 17, 21.) but here they corrected themselves, and own, (1.) That God's compassions fail not; they do not really fail, no, not then when in anger he seems to have shut up his tender mercies. These rivers of mercy run fully and constantly, but never run dry; no, they are new every morning; every morning fresh instead of the same old water, the same old compassion toward us; he visits us with them every morning, (Job vii. 18.) every morning does he bring his judgment to light, Zeph. iii. 5. When our comforts fail, yet God's compassions do not. (2.) That great is his faithfulness. Though the covenant seemed to be broken, they own that it still continues in full force; and though Jerusalem be in ruins, the truth of the Lord endures for ever. Note, Whatever hard things we suffer, we must yet entertain any hard thoughts of God, but must still be ready to own that he is both kind and faithful.

3. That God is, and ever will be, the all-sufficient happiness of his people, and they have chosen him, and depend upon him to be such; (v. 24.) The Lord is my Portion, saith my soul; that is, (1.) "When I have lost all I have in the world, liberty, and livelihood, and almost life itself, yet I have not lost my interest in God." Portions on earth are perishing things, but God is a Portion for ever. (2.) "While I have an interest in God, therein I have enough; I have that which is sufficient to balance all my troubles, and make up all my losses." Whatever we are robbed of, our Portion is safe. (3.) "That is that which I depend upon, and rest satisfied with; it is God's is mine, and I will stay myself upon him, and encourage myself in him, when all other supports and encouragements fail me." Note, It is our duty to make God the Portion of our souls, and then to make use of him as our Portion, and to take the comfort of it in the midst of our lamentations.

4. That those who deal with God will find it is not in vain to trust in him; for, (1.) He is good to them who do so, v. 25. He is good to all, his tender mercies are over all his works, all his creatures taste of his goodness; but he is in a particular manner good to them that wait for him, to the soul that seeks him. Note, While trouble is prolonged, and deliverance is deferred, we must patiently wait for God, and his gracious returns to us; while we wait for him by faith, we must seek him by prayer; our souls must seek him, else we do not seek so as to find; our seeking will help to keep up our waiting; and to those who thus wait and seek, God will be gracious, he will show them his marvellous loving-kindness. (2.) They that do so will find it good for them; (v. 5.) and he will be a perfect comfort and satisfaction, to hope and quietly to wait for the salvation of the Lord. To hope that it will come, though the difficulties that lie in the way of it seem insuperable; to wait till it doth come, though it be long delayed; and while we wait to be quiet and silent, not quarrelling with God, or making ourselves uneasy, but acquiescing in the design of God. Rather, the will be done, according to his wisdom, and we call this to mind, we may have hope that all will end well at last. 5. That afflictions are really good for us, and, if we bear them aright, will work very much for our good. It is not only good to hope and wait for the salvation of God, but it is good to be under the trouble in the mean time; (v. 27.) It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth. Many of the young men were cast into captivity; to make them easy in it, he tells them that it was good for them to bear the yoke of that captivity, and they would find it so, if they would but accommodate themselves to their condition, and labour to answer God's ends in laying that heavy yoke upon them. It is very applicable to the yoke of God's commands; it is good for young people to take that yoke and carry it, and not to put it on too soon to be religious; it will make our duty the more acceptable to God, and easy to ourselves, if we engage in it when we are young. But here it seems to be meant of the yoke of affliction; many have found it good to bear this in youth, it has made them humble and serious, and has weaned them from the world, who otherwise would have been pressed and moved, and they have turned their back upon the yoke. But when do we hear the yoke so that it is really good for us to bear it in our youth? He answers in the following verses, (1.) When we are sedate and quiet under our affliction; when we sit alone, and keep silence; do not run to and fro into all companies with our complaints, aggravating our calamities, and quarrelling with the dispositions of Providence concerning us, but retire into ourselves, and allow adversity, sit alone, that we may converse with God; and commune with our own hearts, silencing all discontented, distrustful thoughts, and laying our hand upon our mouth, as Aaron, who, under a very severe trial, held his peace. We must keep silence under the yoke, as those that have borne it upon us, not wilfully pulled it upon our necks, but patiently submitted to it when God laid it upon us. When those who are afflicted in their youth accommodate themselves to their afflictions, fit their necks to the yoke, and study to answer God's end in afflicting them, then they will find it good for them to bear it, for it yields the peacable fruit of righteousness to those who are thus exercised thereby. (2.) When those who are patient under their affliction; he gets good by the yoke, who puts his mouth in the dust, not only lays his hand upon his mouth, in token of submission to the will of God in the affliction, but puts it in the dust, in token of sorrow, and shame, and self-loathing, at the remembrance of sin, and as one perfectly reduced and reclaimed, and brought as those that are vanquished to lick the dust, Ps. civ. 9. And we must thus humble ourselves, if so be there may be hope, or, as it is in the original, here adventure there is hope. If there be any way to acquire and secure a good hope under our afflictions, it is this way, and yet we must be very modest in our expectations of it, must look for it with an it may be, as those who own ourselves utterly unworthy of it. Note, Those who are truly humble for sin will be glad to obtain a good hope, through grace, upon any terms, though they put their mouth in the dust for it; and those who would have hope, must do so, and sacrifice to free grace, God. Jesus has our yoke upon us, he gave his back to the smiters, Isa. I. 6. He who can bear contempt and reproach, and not render railing for railing, and bitterness for bitterness; who, when he is filled full with reproach, keeps it to himself, and does not return it, and empty it again, upon those who filled him with it, but pours it out before the Lord, (as these did, Ps. cxviii. 4. whose souls were exceedingly filled with the contempt of the proud,) he shall find that it is good to bear the yoke, and that it shall turn to his spiritual advantage. The sum is, If tribulation work patience, that patience will work experience, and that experience a hope that makes not ashamed. 6. That God will graciously return his people with reasonable comforts, according to the time that they have affrighted and scourged them. If a man is thus penitent, patient, and wise, God will be merciful to them, while sensible comforts are suspended, and desired. salvations deferred, yet we are not really cast off, because not cast off for ever; the controversy with us shall not be perpetual. (3.) That whatever sorrow we are in, it is what God has allotted us, and his hand is in it: it is he that causes grief, and therefore we may be assured it is ordered wisely and graciously; and it is he that is in the midst of our heaviness, I Pet. i. 6. (4.) That God has compassions and comforts in store even for those whom he has himself grieved; we must be far from thinking that, though God cause grief, the world will relieve and help us; no, the very same that caused the grief, must bring in the favour, or we are undone; Una eademque manus vulnera et tuit—The same hand inflicteth and healeth. He has torn, and he will heal us, Hos. vi. 1. (5.) That, when God returns to deal graciously with us, it will not be according to our merits, but according to his mercies, according to the multitude, the abundance, of his mercies. So unworthy we are, that nothing but an abundant mercy will relieve us; and from that what mercy we are not expected, we must not be discouraged to expect it, but be encouraged to raise our expectations to that height, which is above all those expectations. 7. That, when God does cause grief, it is for wise and holy ends, and he takes not delight in our calamities, v. 33. He does indeed afflict, and grieve the children of men, all their grievances and afflictions are from him, but he does not do it willingly, not from the heart; so the word is. (1.) He grieves us, if we use not our afflicts us, but when we give him cause to grieve us, he does not dispense his favours as he does his favours, ex mero motus—from his mere good pleasure; if he show us kindness, it is because so it seems good unto him; but if he write bitter things against us, it is because we both deserve it, and need it. (2.) He does not afflict with pleasure; he delights not in the death of sinners, or the disquiet of saints, but punishes with a kind of reluctance; he comes out of his place to punish, for his place is the mercy-seat; he delights not in the misery of any of his creatures, but, as it respects his own people, he is so far from it, that in all their afflictions he is afflicted, and his soul is grieved for the misery of Israel. (3.) He retains his kindness for his people even then, while he afflicts them; if he does not willingly grieve the children of men, much less his own children; however it be, yet God is good to them, (Ps. lxxiii. 1.) and they may by faith see love in his heart even then when they see frowns in his face, and a rod in his hand.

8. That, though he makes use of men as his hand, or rather instruments in his hand, for the correcting of his people, yet he is far from being pleased with the injustice of their proceedings, and the wrong they do them, v. 34.—36. Though God serves his own purposes by the violence of wicked and unreasonable men, yet it does not therefore follow that he countenances that violence, as his oppressed people are sometimes tempted to think; (Hab. i. 13.) Wherefore looked thou upon them that dealt treacherously? God is not he that crushes the little children of men, or the people of his hand, and the prophet here assures us that God does not approve of either of them. (1.) If men injure them by force of arms, God does not approve of that. He does not himself crush under his feet the transgressors of the earth, but he regards the cry of the prisoners; nor does he approve of men's doing it; nay, he is much displeased with it. It is barbarous to trample on them that are down, and to crush those that are bound, and cannot help themselves. (2.) If men injure them, under colour of law, and in the pretended administration of justice; if they turn aside the right of a man, that he cannot discover what his rights are, or cannot come at them, they are out of his reach; if they subvert a man in his cause, and bring in a wrong verdict, or give a false judgment, let them know, (11.) That God sees them. It is before the face of the Most High, (v. 35.) it is in his sight, under his eye, and is very displeasing to him; they cannot but know it is so, and therefore it is in defiance of him that they do it. He is the Most High, whose authority over them they contemn by abusing their authority over their subjects; not considering that he that is higher than the highest, regardeth, Escl. v. 8. [2.] That God is not he that crushes the children of men, or the people of his hand, and he has said, he will subvert the subverting of the just, are a great affront to God; and though he may make use of them for the correction of his people, yet he will, sooner or later, severely reckon with those that do thus. Note, However God may for a time suffer evildoers to prosper, and serve his own purposes by them, yet he does not therefore approve of their evil doings. For God, though he does not impute, or countenance those that do it.

37. Who is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, when the Lord commandeth it not? 38. Out of the mouth of the Most High proceedeth not evil and good? 39. Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins? 40. Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord. 41. Let us lift up our heart with our hands unto God in the heavens.

That we may be entitled to the comforts administered to the afflicted in the foregoing verses, and may taste the sweetness of them, we have here the duties of an afflicted state prescribed to us, in the performance of which we may expect those comforts.

We must see and acknowledge the hand of God in all the calamities that befal us at any time, whether personal or public, v. 37. 38. This is here laid down as a great truth, which will help to counteract our spirit of complaint, and to sanctify them to us, (1.) That, whenever calamities are, it is God that overrules them; Who is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, that designs a thing, and brings his designs to effect, if the Lord commandeth it not? Men can do nothing but according to the counsel of God, nor have any power or success but what is given them from above. A man's heart devises his way; he projects and purposes; he says that he will do so and so, (v. 13.) but God directeth his steps far otherwise than he designed them, and what he contrived and expected does not come to pass, unless it be what God's hand and his counsel had determined before to be done, Prov. xvi. 9. Jer. x. 23. The Chaldeans said that they would destroy Jerusalem, and it came to pass, not because they said it, but because God commanded it; and there is a mystery in that. Note, Men are but tools which the Most High makes use of, and manages as he pleases, in the government of this lower world; and they cannot accomplish any of their designs without him. (2.) That, whatever men's lot is, it is God that orders it; Out of the mouth of the Most High do not evil and good proceed? Yes, certainly they do; and it is more emphatically expressed in the original. Do not this evil, and this good, proceed out of our mouth? But the Most High? Is it not what he has ordained and appointed for us? Yes, certainly it is; and for the reconciling of us to our own afflictions, whatever they be, this general truth must thus be particularly applied. This comfort I receive from the hand of God, and shall not receive that evil also? so Job argues, ch. ii. 10. Are we healthful or sickly, rich or poor? Do we succeed in our designs, or are we crossed in them? It is all what God orders; every man's judgment proceedeth from him. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; he forms the light, and creates the darkness, as he did at first. Note, All the events of Divine Providence are the products of a divine counsel; whatever is done God has the directing of it, and the works of his hands agree with the words of his mouth; he speaks, and it is done; and so effectually, so effectually are all his purposes fulfilled!

2. We must not quarrel with God for any affliction that he lays upon us at any time; (v. 30.) Wherefore does a living man complain? The prophet here seems to check himself for the complaint he had made in the former part of the chapter, wherein he seemed to reflect upon God as unkind and severe; "Do I well to be angry? Why do I fret then?" Those who have hardest and chidden with God, must, in the reflection, chide themselves for it. From the doctrine of God's sovereign and universal providence, which he had asserted in the verses before, he draws this inference, Wherefore does a living man complain? What God does we must not open our mouths against, Ps. xxxix. 9. They that blame their lot, reproach the power allotted it to them. The hand in which the captivity must stand, to the will of God in all their sufferings. Note, Though we may pour out our complaints before God, we must never exhibit any complaints against God. What! Shall a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins? The reasons here urged are very cogent. (1.) We are men; let us herein show ourselves men. Shall a man complain? And again, a man! We are men, and not brutes, reasonable creatures, who should act with reason,
... who should look upward, and look forward, and both ways may fetch considerations enough, to silence our complaints. We are men, and not children that cry for every thing that hurts them; we are men, and not gods, subjects, not lords; we are not our own masters, not our own carvers, we are bound, and must obey, must submit; we are men, and not angels, and therefore cannot expect to be dealt with as if we were; we are not inhabitants of that world where there is no sorrow, but this where there is nothing but sorrow; we are men, and not devils, are not in that deplorable, helpless, hopeless state that they are in, but have something to comfort ourselves with, which they have not. (2.) We are living men; through the good hand of our God upon us we are alive yet, though dying daily; and shall a living man complain? No, he has more reason to complain of living men than of the burthens and calamities of life. Our lives are frail and forfeited, and yet we are alive; now the living, the living, they should praise, and not complain; (Isa. xxxviii. 19.) while there is life there is hope, and therefore, instead of complaining that things are bad, we should encourage ourselves with the hope that they will be better. (2.) We are staffed men, and the Messiah is the punishment of our sins; nay, it is far less than our iniquities have deserved; we have little reason to complain of our trouble, for it is our own doing, we may thank ourselves, our own wickedness corrects us; (Prov. xix. 3.) we have no reason to quarrel with God, for he is righteous in it, he is the Governor of the world, and it is necessary that he should maintain the honour of his government even by chastising the disobedient. Are we seeking for our sins? Then let us not complain, for we have other work to do; instead of repining, we must be repenting; and as an evidence that God is reconciled to us, we must be endeavouring to reconcile ourselves to his holy will. Are we punished for our sins? It is our wisdom then to submit, and to kiss the rod; for if we still walk contrary to God, he will punish us yet seven times more, for when he judges he will overcome; but if we accommodate ourselves to him, though we be chastened of the Lord, we shall not be condemned with the world.

3. We must set ourselves to answer God's intention in afflicting us, which is, to bring sin to our remembrance, and to bring us home to himself, v. 40. These are the two things which our afflictions should put us in mind of. Wherever we are, or whatever befall us, and a reflection upon our lives past; Let us search and try our ways, search what they have been, and then try whether they have been right and good or no; search as for a malefactor in disguise, that flies, and hides himself, and then try whether guilty or not guilty. Let conscience be employed both to search and to try, and let it have leave to deal faithfully, to accomplish a diligent search, and to make an impartial trial. Let us try our ways, that by them we may try ourselves, for we are to judge of our state not by our faint wishes, but by our steps; not by one particular step, but by our ways; the ends we aim at, the rules we go by, and the agreeableness of the tender of our minds and the tenour of our lives to those ends and those rules. We deal faithfully, to accomplish this, and be accountable to consider our ways, (Hag. 1. 5.) that what is amiss may be repented of, and amended for the future, and so we may answer the intention of the affliction. We are apt, in times of public calamity, to reflect upon other people's ways, and lay blame upon them, whereas our business is to search and try our own ways; we have work enough to do at home; we must look to us; “What have I done? What have I contributed to the public flames?” That we may each of us mend one, and then we should all be mended. (2.) A sincere conversion to God; “Let us turn again to the Lord, to him who is turned against us, and whom we have turned from; to him let us turn by repentance and reformation, as to our Owner and Ruler: we have been with him, and it has never been well with us since we forsake him, let us therefore now turn again to him.” This must accompany the former, and be the fruit of its there- fore we must search and try our ways, that we may turn from the evil of them to God; this was the method David took; (Ps. cxix. 59.) I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies. 4. We must offer ourselves to God, and our best affections and services, in the flames of devotion, v. 41. When we are in affliction, (1.) We must look up to God, as a God in the heavens, infinitely above us, and who has an incontestable claim on us; he is the author of the comfort of the afflicted, and therefore not to be quarrelled with, but submitted to. (2.) We must pray to him, with a believing expectation to receive mercy from him; for that is implied in our lifting up our hands to him, (a gesture commonly used in prayer,) and sometimes put forth, as, (Ps. xxii. 2.) Let the lifting up of my hands be acceptable in thy sight. It signifies our requesting an inquiring mercy, of which we desires to receive that mercy. (3.) Our hearts must go along with our prayers; we must lift up our hearts with our hands, as we must pour out our souls with our words. It is the heart that God looks at in that, and every other service; for what will a sacrifice without a heart avail? If inward impressions be not in some measure answerable to outward expressions, we do but mock God, and deceive ourselves. Praying is lifting up the soul to God, (Ps. xxxv. 1.) as to our Father in heaven; and the soul that hopes to be with God in heaven for ever, will thus, by frequent acts of devotion, be still learning the way thither, and pressing forward in that way.

42. We have transgressed, and have rebelled: thou hast not pardoned. 43. Thou hast covered with anger, and persecuted us; thou hast slain, thou hast not pitied. 44. Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud, that our prayer should not pass through. 45. Thou hast made us as the scoffing and refuse in the midst of the people. 46. All our enemies have opened their mouths against us. 47. Fear and a snare is come upon us, desolation and destruction. 48. Mine eye runneth down with rivers of water for the destruction of the daughter of my people. 49. Mine eye trickled down, and ceaseth not, without any intermission. 50. Till the Lord look down, and behold from heaven. 51. Mine eye affecteth my heart, because of all the daughters of my city. 52. Mine enemies chased me sore, like a bird, without cause. 53. They have cut off my life in the dungeon, and cast a stone upon me. 54. Waters flowed over my head; then I said, I am cut off.

It is easier to chide ourselves for complaining than to chide ourselves out of it: the prophet had owned that a living man should not complain, as if he checked himself for his complaints in the former part of the chapter; and yet here the clouds return, after the rain, and the wounds bleed afresh; for great
I. They confess the righteousness of God in afflicting them; (v. 42.) We have transgressed and have rebelled. Note, It becomes us, when we are in trouble, to justify God, by owning our sins, and laying the load upon ourselves for them. Call sin a transgression, call it a rebellion, and you do not miscall it. This is the result of their searching and their praying. They knew not what they inquired into in them, the worse they found them.

II. Yet they complain of the afflictions which are under, not without some reflections upon God, which we are not to imitate, but, under the sharpest trials, must always think and speak highly and kindly of him. 1. They complain of his frowns, and the tokens of displeasure against them. Their sins were repeated of, and yet, (v. 42.) Thou hast not pardoned. They had not the assurance and comfort of the pardon; the judgments brought upon them for their sins were not removed, and therefore they thought they could not say the sin was pardoned, which was a mistake, but a common mistake with the people of God when their souls are cast down, and disquieted within them. 'Their case was really pitiable,' says one; 'their condition was full of tears; but it was not a common case, but a pitiable condition.' v. 43. Their enemies persecuted and slew them, but that was not the worst of it, they were but the instruments in God's hands; 'Thou hast persecuted us, and thou hast slain us, though we expected thou shouldst have protected and delivered us.' They complain that there was a wall of partition between them and God, and, (1.) This Homer God's favours from coming down upon them: 'The rejected reprobate of . . . God's kindness to them, used to be the beauty of Israel; but now thou hast covered us with anger, so that our glory is concealed and gone; now God is angry with us, and we do not appear that illustrious people that we have formerly been thought to be.' Or, 'Thou hast covered us up as men that are buried or covered up and forgotten.' (2.) It hindered their prayers from coming up unto God; (v. 44.) 'Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud,' not like that bright cloud in which he took possession of the temple, which enabled the worshippers to draw near to him, but like that in which he came down upon mount Sinai, which obliged the people to stand at a distance. 'This cloud is so thick, that our prayers seem as if they were lost in it, they cannot pass through, we cannot obtain an audience.' The neatness of prayers is sometimes a temptation, even to good people, to question whether God be what they have always believed him to be, a prayer-hearing God.

2. They complain of the contempt of their neighbours, and the reproach and ignominy they were under; (v. 45.) Thou hast made us as the off-scouring, or scrapings of the first floor, which are thrown to the dunghill. This St. Paul refers to, in his account of the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 4:13. We are made as the filth of the world, and are the off-scouring of all things. 'We are the refuse, or dross, in the midst of the people, trodden upon by every body, and looked upon as the vilest of the nations, and good for nothing but to be cast out as salt which has lost its savour. Our enemies have offered their mouths against us, (v. 46.) have gaped upon us as a dunghill, to make sport of us; have mocked us; have taken liberty to say what they please of us.' These complaints we had before, ch. ii. 15, 16. Note, It is common for base and ill-natured men to run upon, and run down, those that are fallen into the depths of distress from the height of honour. But this they brought upon themselves by sin; if they had not made themselves vile, their enemies could not have made them so; but there-the sufferings of saints; our Lord Jesus was so; for when he came near, he beheld this same city, and wept over it, which the daughters of Jerusalem did not. (2.) She is overwhelmed with fears; not only grieves for what is, but fears worse, and gives up all for gone; (v. 54.) "Then I said, I am cut off, ruined, and see no hope of recovery; I am as one dead," Note, Those that are cast down, are commonly too ready to think themselves cast off, Ps. xxxiii. 22. Jon. ii. 4.

5. In the midst of these sad complaints here is one word of comfort, by which it appears that their case was not altogether so bad as they made it, v. 50. We continue thus weeping till the Lord look down and behold from heaven. This intimates, (1.) That they were satisfied that God's gracious regard to them in their miseries would be an effectual redress of all their grievances; "If God, who now covers himself with a cloud, as if he took no notice of our troubles, (Job xxxii. 13.) would but shine forth, all would be well; if he look upon us, we shall be saved," Ps. lxxx. 19. Dan. ix. 17. Bad as the case is, one favourable look from heaven will set all to rights. (2.) That they had hopes that he would at length look upon them, and take them out of their present distresses; they take it for granted that he will; "Though he contend long, he will not contend for ever, though we deserve that he should." (3.) That while they continued weeping they continued waiting; and neither did nor would expect relief and succour from any hand but his; nothing shall comfort them but his gracious returns, nor shall any thing wipe tears from their eyes till he look down. Their eye which now run down with water, shall still wait upon the Lord their God until that he have mercy upon them, Ps. xii. 2.

55. I called upon thy name, O Lord, out of the low dungeon. 56. Thou hast heard my voice; hide not thine ear at my breathing, at my cry. 57. Thou drewest near in the day that I called upon thee: thou saist, Fear not. 58. O Lord, thou hast pleaded the causes of my soul; thou hast redeemed my life. 59. O Lord, thou hast seen my wrong; judge thou my cause. 60. Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me. 61. Thou hast heard their reproach, O Lord, and all their imaginations against me; 62. The lips of those that rose up against me, and their device against me all the day. 63. Behold their sitting down, and their rising up; I am their music. 64. Render unto them a recompense, O Lord, according to the work of their hands. 65. Give them sorrow of heart, thy curse unto them. 66. Persecute and destroy them in anger from under the heavens of the Lord.

We may observe throughout this chapter a struggle in the prophet's breast between sense and faith, fear and hope; he complains and then comforts himself, yet drops his comforts, and returns again to his complaints, as Ps. xlii. But as there, so here, faith gets the last word, and comes off a conqueror; for in these verses he concludes with some comfort. And here are two things with which he comforts himself.

1. His experience of God's goodness even in his affliction. This may refer to the prophet's personal experience, with which he encourages himself in reference to the public troubles. He that has seasonably succoured particular saints, will not fail the church in general. Or, it may include the remnant of good people that were among the Jews, who had found it was not in vain to wait upon God. In three things the prophet and his pious friends had found God good to them. 1. He had heard their prayers; though they were afraid that the cloud of wrath was such as their prayers could not pass through, (v. 44.) yet, upon second thoughts, or at least upon further trial, they find it otherwise, and that God had not said unto them, Seek ye me in vain. When they were in the low dungeon, as free among the dead, they called upon God's name; (v. 53.) their weeping did not hinder praying. Note, Though we are cast into ever so low a dungeon, we may from thence find a way of access to God in the highest heavens; Out of the depths have I cried unto thee, (Ps. cxxxv. 1.) as Jonah out of the whale's belly. And could God hear them out of the low dungeon, and would he? Yes, he did; Thou hast heard my voice, and some read the following words as carrying on the same thankful acknowledgment; "Thou didst hear my cry; and the Lord will hear that reading. We read it as a petition for further audience; Hide not thine ear. God's having heard our voice when we cried to him, even out of the low dungeon, is an encouragement for us to hope that he will not at any time hide his ear. Observe how he calls prayer his breathing; for in prayer we breathe toward God. We break the air him; though we but 1 in prayer, cannot cry aloud, but only breathe in groanings that cannot be uttered, yet we shall not be neglected, if we be sincere. Prayer is the breath of the new man, sucking in the air of mercy in petitions, and returning it in praises; it is both the evidence and the maintenance of the spiritual life. Some read it, at my gasping; "When I lay gasping for life, and ready to expire, and that but 1 in breathing my last, thou tookest cognizance of my distressed case." 2. He had silenced their fears, and quieted their spirits; (v. 57.) "Thou drewest near in the day that I called upon thee; thou didst graciously assure me of thy presence with me, and give me to see thee nigh unto me, whereas I had thought thee to be at a distance from me." Note, When we draw nigh to God in a way of duty, sin, by approaching to him; it may be, though he is far, yet near us a way of mercy; but this was not all; Thou saidst, Fear not. This was the language of God's prophets preaching to them not to fear, (Isa. xii. 10, 13.) of his providence preventing these things which they were afraid of, and of his grace quieting their minds, and making them easy, by the witness of his Spirit with their spirits, that they were his people still, though in distress, and therefore ought not to fear. 3. He had already begun to appear for them; (v. 58.) "O Lord, thou hast pleaded the causes of my soul," (that is, as it follows,) "thou hast redeemed my life," hast rescued that out of the hands of those who would have taken it away, hast saved that when it was ready to be swallowed up, hast given me that for a prey." And this is an encouraging speech to those that believe it, how that they might yet appear for them; "Thou hast delivered my soul from death, and therefore wilt deliver my feet from falling; thou hast pleaded the causes of my life, and therefore wilt plead my other causes."
deal.” He that knows all things, knew, (1.) The malice they had against him; “Thou hast seen all their vengeance; how they desire to do me a mischief, as if it were by way of reprisal for some great injury I had done them.” Note, We should consider, to our terror and caution, that God knows all the revengeful thoughts we have in our minds against others, and therefore we should not allow of our thoughts, or harbour them: and that he knows all the revengeful thoughts others have causelessly in their minds against us, and therefore we should not be afraid of them, but leave it to him to protect us from them. (2.) The designs and projects they had laid to do him a mischief; “Thou hast seen all their imaginations against me,” (v. 60.) and again, (v. 61.) “Thou hast seen all their imaginations against me, both the desire and the device they have to ruin me; whether it show itself in word or deed, it is known to thee; nay, though the products of it are not to be seen or heard, yet their device against me all the day is perceived and understood by him to whom all things are naked and open.” Note, The most secret contrivances of the church’s enemies are perfectly known to the church, and therefore such as they have not the satisfaction of. (3.) The contempt and calumny wherewith they loaded him, all that they spoke slightly of him, and all that they spoke reproachfully; “Thou hast heard their reproach,” (v. 61.) all the bad characters they give him, laying to my charge things that I know not; all the methods they use to make me odious and contemptible, even the lips of those that rose up against me,” (v. 62.) the odious things they give they use when they speak of me; and that at their sitting down and rising up, when they lay down at night, and get up in the morning, when they sit down to their meat, and with their company, and when they rise from both, still I am their music, they make themselves; and one another merry with my miseries, as the Philistines made sport with Samson. Jerusalem was the tabret that was played upon; perhaps they had some tune or play, some opera or interlude, that was called the destruction of Jerusalem, which though in the nature of a tragedy, was very entertaining to those who wished ill to the holy city. Note, God will one day call sinners to account for all the hard speeches which they have spoken against him and his people, Jude 13.

He appeals to God’s judgment upon this fact, “Lord, thou hast seen my wrongdoing; there is no need of any evidence to prove it, or any prosecutor to enforce and aggravate it, thou seest it in its true colours; and now I leave it with thee, judge thou my cause,” v. 59. “Let them be dealt with,” (1.) “As they deserve;” (v. 64.) “Render to them a recompense according to the work of their hands. Let them be dealt with as they have dealt with us; let thy hand be against them as their hand has been against us. They have created us a great deal of vexation; now, Lord, give them sorrow of heart;” v. 65. perplexity of heart;” (so some read it;) “let them be surrounded with threatening mischiefs on all sides, and not be able to see their way out; give them despondency of heart;” (so others read it;) “let them be driven to despair, and give themselves up for guilty of the sins that God has brought upon us the dearest, and sink the heart that thinks itself stoutest.” (2.) “Let them be dealt with according to the threatenings; Thy curse unto them; let thy curse come upon them, all the evils that are pronounced in thy word against the enemies of thy people, v. 65. They have loaded us with curses; as they loved cursing, so let it come unto them, thy curse which will make them truly miserable. Theirs is causeless, and therefore fruitless, it shall not come; but thine is just, and shall take effect; those whom thou curseart are cursed indeed. Let the curse be executed, v. 66. Persecute and destroy them in anger, as they persecute and destroy us in their anger. Destroy them from under the heavens of the Lord, let them have no benefit of the light and influence of the heavens. Destroy them in such a manner, that all who see it may say, It is a destruction from the Almighty, who sits in the heavens and laughs at them, (Ps. ii. 4.) and may own that the heavens do rule,” Dan. iv. 26. What is said of the idols is here said of their worshippers, (who in this also shall be like unto them,) They shall perish from under these heavens, Jer. x. 11. They shall be not only excluded from the happiness of the invisible heavens, but cut off from the comfort even of these visible heavens, which are the heavens of the Lord, (Ps. cxv. 16.) and which they therefore are unworthy to be taken under the protection of, who rebel against him.

CHAP. IV.
This chapter is another single alphabet of Lamentations for the destruction of Jerusalem, like those in the two first chapters. 1. The prophet here laments the injuries and indignities done to those to whom respect used to be showed, v. 1, 2. He laments the direful effects of the famine to which they were reduced by the siege, v. 3-10. III. He laments the taking and sacking of Jerusalem, and its amazing desolations, v. 11, 12. IV. He acknowledges that the sins of their leaders were the cause of all these calamities, v. 13, 15. V. He gives up all to utter ruin, for their enemies were every way too hard for them, v. 17. 20. VI. He foretells the destruction of the Edomites who triumphed in Jerusalem’s fall, v. 21. The prophet like foretells the return of the captivity of Zion at last, v. 22.

1. HOW is the gold become dim! how is the most fine gold changed! the stones of the sanctuary are poured out in the top of every street. 2. The precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, how are they esteemed as earthen pitchers, the work of the hands of the potter! 3. Even the sea-monsters draw out the breast, they give suck to their young ones: the daughter of my people is become cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness. 4. The tongue of the sucking child cleaveth to the roof of his mouth for thirst; the young children ask bread, and no man breaketh it unto them. 5. They that did feed diligently are desolate in the streets; they that were brought up in scarlet embrace dunghills. 6. For the punishment of the iniquity of the daughter of my people is greater than the punishment of the sin of Sodom, that was overthrown as in a moment, and no hands stayed on her. 7. Her Nazarites were purer than snow, they were whiter than milk, they were more ruddy in body than rubies, their polishing was of sapphire: 8. Their visage is blacker than a coal; they are not known in the streets; their skin cleaveth to their bones it is withered, it is become like a stick. 9. They that be slain with the sword are better than they that be slain with hunger: for these pine away, stricken through for want of the fruits of the field. 10. The hands of the pitiful women have sodden their own chil children, they were their meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people. 11. The Lord hath accomplished his fury; he hath poured out his fierce anger, and hath kindled a fire in Zion, and it hath devoured the foundations thereof. 12. The kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of the world, would not have believed that the adversary and the enemy should have entered into the gates of Jerusalem.

The elegy in this chapter begins with a lamentation of the very sad and doleful change which the judgments of God had made in Jerusalem. The city that had been as gold, as the most fine gold, so rich and splendid, the perfection of beauty, and the joy of the whole earth, is become dim, and is changed, has lost its lustre, lost its value, is not what it was, it is become dress. Alas, what an alteration is here!

1. The temple is laid waste, which was the glory of Jerusalem and its protection; it is given up into the hands of the enemy. As some understand the gold spoken of, (v. 1.) to be the gold of the temple, the fine gold, is a figurative description of the Temple, as a glorious habitation of the Lord; (Ps. xxxvi. 22.) when the temple was burned, the gold of it was smoked and suffused, as if it had been of little value; it was thrown among the rubbish, it was changed, converted to common uses, and made nothing of.

The stones of the sanctuary, which were curiously wrought, were thrown down by the Chaldeans, when they demolished it, or were brought down by the force of the fire, and were proved out, and thrown about in the top of every street; they lay mingled without distinction among the common rubbish. When the God of the sanctuary was by sin provoked to withdraw, no wonder that the stones of the sanctuary were thus profaned.

2. The princes and priests who were in a special manner the sons of Zion, were trampled upon and abused, v. 2. Both the house of God and the house of David were in Zion; the sons of both those houses were upon this account precious, that they were heirs to the privileges of those two covenants of priesthood and royalty; they were comparable to fine gold; Israel was more rich in them than in treasures of gold and silver; but now they are esteemed as earthen pitchers; they are broken as earthen pitchers, and their beauty is lost to all posterity for ever; there is no favour. They are grown poor, and brought into captivity, and thereby are rendered mean and desppicable, and every one treads upon them, and insults over them. Note, The contempt put upon God's people ought to be matter of lamentation to us.

3. Little children were starved for want of bread and water, v. 3, 4. The nursing-mothers, having no more for themselves, had no milk for the halfe at their breast, so that though in disposition they were really compassionate, yet in fact they seemed to be cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness, that leave their eggs in the dust. (Job xxxix. 14, 15.) having no food for their children, they were forced to neglect them, and do what they could to forget them, wretchedly. It was a great pity to them when they had nothing for them; in this they were worse than the seals, or sea-monsters, or whales, (as some render it,) for they drew out the breast, and gave suck to their young, which the daughter of my people will not do. Children cannot shift for themselves as grown people can; and therefore it was the more painful to see the tongue of the sucking-child cleave to the roof of his mouth for thirst, because there was not a drop of water to moisten it; and to hear the young children, that could but just speak, ask bread of their parents, who had none to give them, no nor any friend that could supply them. As doleful as our thoughts be of this case, so thankful should our thoughts be of the great plenty we enjoy, and the food convenient we have for ourselves and for our children, and for those of our own house.

4. Persons of good rank were reduced to extreme poverty, v. 5. They who were well-born and well-dressed, and who had been accustomed to the best feasts and clothing, who had fed delicately, had every thing that was curious and nice, (they call it eating well, whereas those only eat well, who eat to the glory of God,) and fared sumptuously every day; they had not only been advanced to the scarlet, but from their beginning were brought up in scarlet, and were never acquainted with any thing mean and common; their flesh were brought up upon delicacy, (so the word is,) their foot-cloths and the carpets they walked on, were scarlet, yet these, being strict of all by the war, are desolate in the streets, have not a house to put their head in, nor a bed to lie on, nor clothes to cover them, nor fire to warm them. They embrace dunghills, on them they are glad to lie, to get a little rest; and perhaps raked in the dunghills for something to eat, as the prodigal son when he had starved in a swine's barn, (Lk. xiv.) to eat with the husks. Note, Those who live in the greatest pomp and plenty, know not what straits they may be reduced to before they die; as sometimes the needy are raised out of the dunghills, (Ps. cxiii. 7.) there are instances of the wealthy being brought to the dunghills. Those who were full, have hired out themselves for bread, (1 Sam. ii. 5.) It is therefore good for us to think with those who have abundance, not to use themselves too nicely, for then hardships, when they come, will be doubly hard, Deut. xxxiii. 56.

5. Persons who were eminent for dignity, may, perhaps for sanctity, shared with others in the common calamity, v. 7. 8. Her Nazarites are extremely changed. Some understand it only of her honourable ones, the young gentlemen, who were very clean, and neat, and well-dressed, washed and perfumed; but I see not why we may not understand it of those devout people among them, who separated themselves to the Lord by the Nazarites' vow, Numb. vii. 2. That there were such among them in the most degenerate times, appears, Amos ii. 11. I raised up of your young men for Nazarites. These Nazarites, though they were not to cut their hair, yet, by reason of their temperate diet, their frequent washings, and not engaging in that brutish kind of labor which is had in devoting themselves to God, and conversing with him, which made their faces to shine as Moses', were fairer than snow, and whiter than milk; drinking no wine nor strong drink, they had a more healthful complexion and cheerful countenance than those who regaled themselves daily with the blood of the grape, as Daniel and his fellows with jujube and water. Over this, there was given them an augmented veneration which all good people had for them; though perhaps to the eye they had no form or comeliness, yet, being separated to the Lord, they were valued as if they had been more ruddy than rubies, and their polishing had been as sapphire. But now their visage is marred, (as is said of Christ, John xii. 24.) it is blacker than a coal, they look miserable, pale, and wan; even they are not to be heard, they have no grief and perplexity; they are not known in the streets, they who respected them now take no notice of them, and they who had been intimately acquainted with them now scarcely knew them, their countenance was so altered by the miseries that attended the long siege. Their skin teares to their bones, their flesh was quite consumed and wasted away; it is withered, it is become like a stick, as dry and hard as a piece of wood. Note, It is a thing to be much lamented, that even those who are separated to God, are yet, when desolating judgments are poured out upon others, in common calamity.

6. Jerusalem comes down slowly, and dies a lingering death, for the famine contributes more to her destruction than any other judgment whatsoever. Upon this account, the destruction of Jerusalem was greater than that of Sodom, (v. 6.) for that was overthrown in a moment, and brought to nought, but she did not endure any long siege, as Jerusalem has done, she fell immediately into the hands of the Lord, who strikes home at a blow, and did not fall into the hands of man, who, being weak, is long in doing execution, Judg. vii. 21. Jerusalem is kept in many months upon the rack, in pain and misery, and dies by inches, dies so as to feel herself die. And when the iniquity of Jerusalem is more grovelling than that of Sodom, no wonder that the punishment of it is so. Sodom never had the means of grace that Jerusalem had, the oracles of God, and his prophets, and therefore the condemnation of Jerusalem will be more intolerable than that of Sodom, Math. xi. 23, 24.

The extremity of the famine is here set forth by two figures, of the sufferances of it: (1.) The terrible death, it was the cause of; (v. 9.) many were slain with hunger, were famished to death, their stores being spent, and the public stores so sorely spent, that they could not have any relief out of them; they were stricken through, for want of the fruits of the field; they who were starved were as sure to die as if they had been stabbed and stricken through; only their case was much more miserable; they who are slain with the sword, are soon rid of their pain, in a moment they go down to the grave; (Job xxi. 13.) they have not the terror of seeing death make its advances toward them, and scarcely feel it when the blow is given; it is but one sharp struggle, and the work is done. And if we be ready for another world, we need not be afraid of a short passage to it; the quicker the better. But they who die by famine pine away, hunger preys upon their spirits, and wastes them insensibly, and it frets their spirits, and fills them with vexation, and is as great a torture to the mind as to the body.

There are hands in their death, Ps. lxxiii.

4. (2.) The barbarous murders that it was the occasion of; (v. 10.) The hands of the pitiful women have first slain, and then sold, their own children. This was lamented before; (ch. ii. 20.) and it was a thing to be greatly lamented, that any should be so wicked as to do it, and that they should be brought to such extremities as to be tempted to it. But this horrid effect of long sieges had been threatened in general, (Lev. xxvi. 29. Deut. xxviii. 53.) and particularly against Jerusalem in the siege of the Chaldeans, Jer. xix. 9. Ezek. v. 10. The case was sad enough that they had not wherewithal to provide for their children, and yet much worse that they could find in their hearts to feed upon their children, and make meat of them. I know not whether to make it an instance of the power of necessity, or of the power of iniquity; but as the Gentile idolaters were justly given up to vile affections, (Rom. i. 26.) so these Jewish idolaters, and the women particularly, who had made cakes to the queen of heaven, and their children to do so too, were stript of natural affection, and that to their own children. Being thus left to dishonour their own nature, was a righteous judgment upon them for the dishonour they had done to God.

7. Jerusalem comes down utterly and wonderfully. (1.) The destruction of Jerusalem is a complete destruction; (v. 11.) The Lord has accomplished his fury, he has made thorough work of it. He has executed all that he purposed in wrath against Jerusalem, and has rejected no part of the sentence. He has poured out the full vials of his fierce anger, poured them out to the bottom, even the dregs of them. He has kindled a fire in Zion, which has not only consumed the houses, and levelled them with the ground, but, beyond what other fires do, has devoured the foundations thereof, as if they were to be no more built upon. (2.) It is an amazing destruction, v. 12. We are to think of the kings of the earth, who are acquainted with, and inquisitive about, the state of their neighbours; may, it was so to all the inhabitants of the world, who knew Jerusalem, or had ever heard or read of it; they could not have believed that the adversary and enemy should ever have entered into the gates of Jerusalem; for, [1.] They knew that Jerusalem was strongly fortified, not only by walls and bulwarks, but by the numbers and strength of its inhabitants; the strong hold of Zion was thought to be impregnable. [2.] They knew that it was the city of the great King, where the Lord of the whole earth had in a more peculiar manner his residence; it was the holy city, and therefore they thought that it was so much under the divine protection, that it would be in vain for any of its enemies to make an attack upon it. [3.] They knew that many an attempt made upon it had been baffled, witness that of Sennacherib. They were therefore amazed when they heard of the Chaldeans making themselves masters of it, and concluded that it was certainly by an immediate hand of God that Jerusalem was given up to them; it was by a commission from him that the enemy broke through, and entered the gates of Jerusalem.

13. For the sins of her prophets, and the iniquities of her priests, that have shed the blood of the just in the midst of her. 14. They have wandered as blind men in the streets, they have polluted themselves with blood, so that men could not touch their garments. 15. They cried unto them, Depart ye; it is unclean; depart, depart, touch not: when they fled away and wandered, they said among the heathen, They shall no more sojourn there. 16. The anger of the Lord hath divided them; he will no more regard than they respected not the persons of the priests, they favoured not the elders. 17. As for us, our eyes as yet failed for our vain help: in our watching we have watched for a nation that could not save us. 18. They hunt our steps, that we cannot go in our streets: our end is near, our days are fulfilled: for our end is come. 19. Our persecutors are swifter than the eagles of the heaven: they pursued us upon the mountains, they laid wait for us in the wilderness. 20. The breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord, was taken in their pits, of whom we said, Under his shadow we shall live among the heathen.

We have here,

1. The sins they are charged with, for which God brought this destruction upon them, and which serve to justify God in it; (v. 13, 14.) It is for the sins of her prophets, and the iniquities of her priests:
not that the people were innocent, no, they loved to have it so, (Jer. v. 31.) and it was to please them that the prophets and priests did as they did; but the fault is chiefly laid upon them who should have taught them better, should have reproved and admonished them, and told them what would be in the end of the deeds of those, whose watchmen did not give them warning, will their blood be required. Note, Nothing ripens a people more for ruin, nor fills the measure faster, than the sins of their priests and prophets. The particular sin charged upon them is, persecution; the false prophets and corrupt priests joined their power and interest to shed the blood of the just in the midst of her, and were the active and thoughtless adherents to them: they not only shed the blood of their innocent children, whom they sacrificed to Moloch, but the blood of the righteous men that were among them, whom they sacrificed to that more cruel idol of enmity to the truth and true religion. This was that sin which the Lord would not pardon, (2 Kings xxiv, 4.) and which brought the last destruction upon Jerusalem; (Jam. v. 6.) Ye have condemned and killed the just. And the priests and prophets were the ringleaders in persecution, as in Christ’s time the chief priests and scribes were the men that incensed the people against him, who otherwise would have persisted in their hollowness. Now these are they that wandered as blind men in the streets; (v. 14.) they would not turn to their own hearts, they did every thing that is good, but to do evil they were quick-sighted. God says of corrupt judges, They know not, neither do they understand, they walk in darkness; (Ps. lxxiii. 5.) and Christ says of the corrupt teachers, They are blind leaders of the blind, Matt. xx. 16. They have so polluted themselves with innocent blood, the blood of the saints, that men could not count their Just.; they had made themselves odious to all about them, so that good men were as shy of touching them as of touching a dead body, which contracted a ceremonial pollution; or of touching the bloody clothes of one slain, which tender spirits were not to do. There is nothing that will make prophets and priests to be abhorred so much as a spirit of persecution. 3dly. They sent their neighbours produced in evidence against them, both to convict them of sin, and to show the equity of God’s proceedings against them. Some that are grown very impudent in sin, boast that they care not what people say of them; but God, by the prophet, would have the Jews to take notice of what people said of them, and what was the opinion of the standers-by concerning them; (v. 15, 16.) what they said, nay, what they did to them, especially to the corrupt priests and prophets, among the heathen. (1.) They upbraved them with their pretended purity, while they lived in all manner of real iniquity. They cried to them, Defart ye, it is uncleane. You were so precise, you would not touch a Gentile, but cried, Defart, depart, stand by thyself, I am holier than thou, Isa. lviii. 7. and 59. 17. they did not deal with them, as Christ would have them do, go into the judgment-hall, lest they should be defiled. But can you now keep the Gentiles from touching you, when God has delivered you into their hands? When you fly away and wander, you will bid them stand off, and not touch you, because they are uncleane; but in vain, these serpents will not be charmed or enchanted thus, no, they will not rest till they have done worse to them than frames the elders; the most venerable persons will to them be despised. (2.) They upbraved them with their sins, and the anger of God against them for their sins, and the direful effects of that anger. They cried to them, Defart ye, it is uncleane; they all cried out shame on them, and could easily foresee that God would not long suffer so provoking a people to continue in so good a land. They knew their statutes and judgments were righteous, and expected they should be a wise and understanding people, Deut. iv. 6. But when they saw them quite otherwise, they cried, Defart, depart; they saw the destruction of the land was not by the Lord; they had done their predecessors, and when they saw the dispersed of Jacob fleeing and wandering, they told them of it. They said, Now the anger of the Lord has divided them, has dispersed them into all countries, because they respected not the persons of the priests, the proud priests that were among them, such as Zechariah the son of Jehoiada, Jeremiah, and others; they did openly and privately despise and despise them and their authority, when they went about to check them for their vicious courses; the very heathen foresaw this would ruin them. (3.) They triumph in their ruin as irrecoverable. They said, when they saw them expelled out of their own land, “Now they shall no more sojourn there, they have bidden it a final farewell, never more to return to it, for God will no more regard them; and how then can they help themselves?” Herein they were mistaken, God had not cast them off for all this; yet thus much is intimated, that all about them observed them to be so very provoking to their God, that there was no reason to expect any other than that they should be quite abandoned. 3. The despair which they themselves were almost brought to by the prophet, and the Holy Ghost; having heard what they said concerning them among the heathen, let us now hear what they say concerning themselves; (v. 17.) “As for us, we look upon our case to be in a manner helpless. Our end is near, (v. 18.) the end both of our church and of our state; we are just at the brink of the ruin of both; nay, our end is come, we are utterly undone, a fatal, final period is at hand; we have all our comforts, the days of our prosperity are fulfilled, they are numbered and finished.” Thus their fears concurred with the hopes of their enemies, that the Lord would no more regard them. For, (1.) The refuges they fled to were disappointed of them. They looked for help from this and the other powerful ally, but to no purpose, it proved vain help, the succours they expected did not come in, or at least were not attended to as they expected, and their eyes failed with looking, and that which never came; (v. 17.) they watched in watching, they watched long, and with a great deal of earnestness and impatience, for a nation that promised them assistance, but failed them, and frustrated their expectations, they could not save them, they were too weak to contend with the Chaldean army, and therefore they were retired. Help from creatures is vain help, (Ps. lx. 11.) and we may look for it till our eyes fail, till our hearts fail, and come short of it at last. (2.) The persecutors they fled from overtook them, and overcame them; (v. 18.) They hunt our steps, that we cannot go into our streets. When the Chaldeans besieged the city, they raised their batteries so high above the walls, that they could certainly have killed all the people as they went along the streets; they hunted them with their arrows from place to place. When the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled, their persecutors were swifter than the eagles of heaven when they fly upon their prey, (v. 19.) there was no escaping them; they pursued them upon the mountains, and when they thought they had got clear of them, they hunted them and those that laid wait for them in the wilderness, to cut off their retreat, and to pick up stragglers; nay, the king himself, though he may be supposed to have all the advantages the exigence of the case would admit to favour his flight, yet he cannot escape, for divine vengeance pursues him with them, and then (v., 20) The breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord, was taken in their fits. Some apply it to Josiah, who was killed in battle by the king of Egypt; but it is rather to be understood of Zedekiah, who was the last king of the house of David, and who was pursued by the Chaldeans, and taken in the plains of Jericho, Jer. xxxix. 5. He was the anointed of the Lord, heir of that family which God had appointed to the government; he was very much confided in by the Jewish state; they said, Under his shadow we shall live among the heathen; they promised themselves that the remnant which were left after Jeconiah's captivity, should, under the protection of his government, yet be done good. Though they were so greatly trusted as to confide that they could not think of reigning over the heathen, as they had done, yet they might make a shift to live among them, and not be insulted and pelted by pieces of them. Thus are sinking interests not only to catch at every twig, but to think it will recover them. Jerusalem died of a consumption, a flattering distemper; even when she was ready to expire she formed some hopeful symptoms to herself, and on them grounded a hope that she should recover; but what came of it? The shadow, under which they thought they should live, proved like that of Jonah's gourd, which withered in a night. He that was the anointed of the Lord, was taken in their fits, as if he had been but a beast of prey; so little account did they make of a kingdom destined, sacred, and not to be violated. Note, When we make any creature the breath of our nostrils, and promise ourselves that we shall live by it, it is just with God to stop that breath, and deprive us of the life we expected by it, for God will have the honour of being himself alone our Life, and the Length of our days.

21. Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom, that dwellest in the land of Uz: the cup also shall pass through unto thee: thou shalt be drunken, and shalt make thyself naked. 22. The punishment of thine iniquity is accomplished, O daughter of Zion; he will no more carry thee away into captivity: he will visit thine iniquity, O daughter of Edom; he will discover thy sins.

David's psalms of lamentation commonly conclude with some word of comfort, which is as life from the dead, and light shining out of darkness; so does this lamentation here in this chapter. The people of God are now in great distress, their aspects all dolorous, their prospects all frightful, and their ill-natured neighbours the Edomites insult over them, and do all they can to exasperate their destroyers against them; such was their violence against their brother Jacob, (Obad. 10.) such their spleen at Jerusalem, of which they cried, Raze it, raze it, Ps. cxxxvii. 7. Now it is here foretold, for the encouragement of God's people,

1. That an end shall be put to Zion's troubles; (v. 22.) The punishment of thine iniquity is accomplished, O daughter of Zion; not the fulness of that punishment which it deserves, but of that which God has designed and determined to inflict, and which was necessary to answer the end, the glorifying of God's justice, and the taking away of their sin. The captivity, which is the punishment of thine iniquity, is accomplished, (Isa. xl. 2.) and he will no longer carry thee into captivity, so that it may remain as a terror to them, as he will turn again thy captivity, and work a glorious release for thee. Note, The troubles of God's people shall be continued no longer than till they have done their work for which they were sent.

2. That an end shall be put to Edom's triumphs. It is spoken ironically; (v. 21.) "Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom, go on to insult over Zion in distress, till thou hast filled up the measure of thine iniquity; do so, rejoice thy own present exception from the common fate of thy neighbours. This is like Solomon's upbraiding the young man with his ungodly mirth, (Eccles. xi. 9.) "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; rejoice, if thou canst, when God comes to reckon with thee, and that he will do ere long; the cup of trembling, which it is now Jerusalem's turn to drink deep of, shall pass through unto thee, it shall go round till it comes to thy lot to pledge it." Note, This is a good reason why we should not insist upon any who are in misery, because we ourselves also are in the body, and we know not how soon their case may be ours. But those who please themselves in the calamities of God's church, must expect to have their doom, as riders and abettors, with them that are instrumental in those calamities. The destruction of the Edomites was foretold by this prophet; (Jer. xlix. 7, 8c.) and the people of God must encourage themselves against their present rudeness and insolence with the prospect of it. (1.) It will be a shantiful destruction; "The cup that shall pass unto thee shall intoxicate thee," (and that is shame enough to any man;) "thou shalt be drunken, quite infatuated, and at thy wits' end, shalt stagger in all thy counsels, and stumble in all thy enterprises, and destruction come of them, as Noah's flood was driven, (Heb. iv. 10.) make thyself naked, and expose thyself to contempt." Note, Those who ridicule God's people, will justly be left to themselves to do that, some time or other, by which they will be made ridiculous. (2.) It will be a righteous destruction; God will herein visit thine iniquity, and discover thy sins; he will punish them, and, to justify himself therein, he will discover them, and make it to appear that he has just cause thus to proceed against them. Nay, the punishment of the sin shall so exactly answer the sin, that it shall itself plainly discover it. Sometimes God does so visit the iniquity, that he that runs may read the sin in the punishment. But, sooner or later, sin will be visited and discovered, and all the hidden works of darkness brought to light.

CHAP. V.

This chapter, though it has the same number of verses with the 1st, 2nd, and 4th, is not alphabetical, as they were, but the scope of it is the same with that of all the foregoing elegies. We have in it, I. A representation of the present calamitous state of God's people in the captivity, v. 1. 16. II. A protestation of their concern for God's sanctuary, as that which lay nearest their heart than any secular interest of their own, v. 17, 18. III. A humble supplication to God, and expostulation with him, for the returns of mercy; (v. 19., 22.) for they that lament, and do not pray, sin in their lamentations. Some ancient versions call this chapter, The Prayer of Jeremiah.

1. R\underline{E}MENBER, O Lord, what is come upon us: consider, and behold our reproach. 2. Our inheritance is turned to strangers, our houses to aliens. 3. We are orphans and fatherless, our mothers are as widows. 4. We have drunken our water for money; our wood is sold unto us. 5. Our necks are unter persecution: we labour, and have no rest. 6. We have given the hand to the Egyptians, and to the Assyrians, to be satisfied with bread. 7. Our fathers have sinned, and are not: and we have borne their iniquities. Servants have ruled over us: there is none that doth deliver us out of their hand. 9. We eat our bread with the peril of our lives, because of the sword of the wilderness. 10. Our skin was black like an oven, because of the terrible famine. 11. They ransacked the women in Zion, and the maidens in the cities of Judah. 12. Princes are hanged up by their hand; the faces of elders were not honoured. 13. They took the young men to grind, and the children fell under the wood. 14. The elders have ceased from the gate, the young men from their music. 15. The joy of our heart is ceased; our dance is turned into mourning. 16. The crown is fallen from our head: wo unto us that we have sinned!

Is any afflicted? Let him pray; and let him in prayer pour out his complaint to God, and make known before him his trouble; the people of God do so here; being overwhelmed with grief, they give vent to their sorrows at the footstool of the throne of grace, and so give themselves ease; they complain not of evils feared, but of evils felt; "Remember what is come upon us; (v. 1.) what was of old threatened against us, and was long in coming, is now at length come upon us, and we are ready to sink into it." Rev. xxii. 8. God has considered, and beheld what is present, and let not all the trouble we are in seem little to thee, and not worth taking notice of." Neh. ix. 32. Note, As it is a great comfort to us, so it ought to be a sufficient one, in our troubles, that God sees, and considers, and remembers, all that is come upon us; and in our prayers we need only recommend our case to his gracious and compassionate bosom. The one word in which all their grievances are summed up, is, reproach; Consider, and behold our reproach. The troubles they were in, compared with their former dignity and plenty, were a greater reproach to them than they would have been to any other people, especially considering their relation to God, and dependence upon him, and his former appearances for their good. and therefore this is treated of in an especial manner, because, as it was a reproach, it reflected upon the name and honour of that God who had owned them for his people. And what wilt thou do unto thy great name?

1. They acknowledge the reproach of sin which they bear, the reproach of their youth, (which Ephraim bemoans himself for, Jer. xxxi. 19.) of the early days of their nation. This comes in, in the midst of their complaints, (v. 7.) but may well be put in the front of them; Our fathers have sinned, and are not, they are dead and gone, but we have borne their iniquities. This is not here a prevaricious complaint, or an imputation of unrighteousness to God, like that which we have, Jer. xxxi. 29. Ezek. xviii. 2. The fathers did eat grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge, and therefore the ways of the Lord are not equal: but it is a penitent confession of the sins of their ancestors, which they themselves also had persisted in, for which they now justly suffered; the judgments God brought upon them were so very great, that it appeared that God had in them an eye to the sins of their ancestors, (because they had so remarkably punished it in this world,) as well as to their own sins; and thus God was justified both in his conannice at their ancestors, (he laid up their iniquity for their children,) and in his severity with them, on whom he visited that iniquity, Matt. xxiii. 35, 36. Thus they do here, 1. Submit themselves to the divine justice; "Lord, thou art just in all that is brought upon us, for we are a seed of evil-doers, children of wrath, and heirs of the curse; we are sinful, and we have it by kind." Note, The sins which God looks back upon in punishing we must look back upon in repenting, and must take notice of all that which will help to justify God in correcting us. 2. They refer them selves to the doing of this; "Lord, our fathers have sinned, and we justly smart for their sins; but they are not, they were taken away from the evil to come, they lived not to see and share in these miseries that are come upon us, and we are left to bear their iniquities;" note, though herein God is righteous, yet it must be owned that our case is pitiable, and worthy of compassion. Note, If we be pervert about what we were, and consider the sins of our fathers, we may expect that he who punishes will pity, and will soon return in mercy to us. 2. They represent the reproach of trouble which they bear, in divers particulars, which tend much to their disgrace. 1. They are dispossessed of that good land which God gave them, and their enemies have got possession of it, v. 2. Canaan was their inheritance, it was theirs by promise, God gave it to them and their seed, and they held it by grant from his crown; (Ps. cxxxvi. 21, 22.) but now, "It is turned to strangers, they possess it, who have no right to it, who are strangers to the commonwealth of Israel, and aliens to the covenants of promise, they dwell in the house that we built, and this is our reproach." It is the heritage of the God of Israel, but the heavenly Canaan is an inheritance that they cannot be dispossessed of, that shall never be turned to strangers. 2. Their state and nation are brought into a condition like that of widows and orphans, (v. 3.) "We are fatherless, helpless, we have none to protect us, to provide for us, to take care of us;" and who is the father of the country, is cut off; now, God our Father seems to have forsaken us and cast us off; our mothers, our cities, that were as fruitful mothers in Israel, are now as widows, are as wives whose husbands are dead, destitute of comfort, and exposed to wrong and injury, and this is our reproach; for we who made a figure, are now locked on with contempt. They put it hard to it to provide necessaries for themselves and their families, whereas once they lived in abundance, and had plenty of every thing. Water used to be free and easily come by, but now, (v. 4.) We have drunk our water for money, and the saying is no longer true, Ussus communis aquarum—Water is free to all. So hardly did their oppressors use them, that they could not have a draught of fair water but they must purchase it either with money or with work! Formerly they had no need for the fetching; but now, "Our wood is sold to us, and we pay dear for every faggot." Now were they punished for employing their children to gather wood for fire, with which to bake cakes for the queen of heaven, Jer. vii. 18. They were punished for performing those actions which were forbidden the use both of fire and water, according to the ancient form, Interdico tibi aquam et ignem—I forbid thee the use of water and fire. But what must they do for bread? Truly that was as hard to come by as any thing, for, (1.) Some of them sold their liberty for it; (v. 6.) "We have given the hand to the Egyptians and to the Assyrians, have made the best use of all we could by them, in order to serve them that we might be satisfied with bread. We were glad to submit to the meanest employment, upon the hardest terms, to get a sorry livelihood; we have yielded ourselves to be their vassals, have parted with all to them, as the Egyptians did to Pharaoh in the years of famine, that we might have something tor ourselves and families to subsist on.” The neighbouring nations used to trade with Judah for wheat, (Ezek. xxvii. 17.) for it was a fruitful land; but now it eats up the inhabitants, and they are glad to make court to the Egyptians and Assyrians. The greatest of them have fled out of the city, to fetch in some supply, they were in danger of falling into the hands of the besiegers, and being put to the sword, the sword of the wilderness it is called, or of the plain, (for so the word signifies,) the besiegers lying dispersed everywhere in the plains, and at great distance, to leave no resi-

sion from hence to bless God for the plenty that we enjoy, that we get our bread so easily, scarcely with the sweat of our face, much less with the peril of our lives; and for the peace we enjoy, that we can go out, and enjoy not only the necessary productions, but the pleasures, of the country, without any fear of the sword of the wilderness.

4. They are brought into slavery who were free people, and not only the heads of masters, but masters of all about them, and this is as much as any thing their reproof; (v. 5.) Our necks are under the grievous and intolerable yoke of persecution; (the iron yoke which Jeremiah foretold should be laid upon them, Jer. xxviii. 24.) we are used like beasts at the yoke, that wholly serve their owners, and are it the command of their drivers. That which ag-

gravest of all, the burdens were incessant, like those of Israel in Egypt, who were daily tasked, nay, overtasked; We labour, and have no rest, neither leave nor leisure to rest. The yoke in the yoke are unyoked at night and have rest, so they have, by a particular provision of the law, on the sabbath-day; but the poor captives in Babylon, who were compelled to work for their living, laboured without rest, no night for rest, no sabbath-rest; they were quite tired out with continual toil. (2.) That their masters were insufferable; (v. 8.) Servants have ruled over us; and nothing is more vexations than a servant when he reigns, Prov. xxx. 22. They were not only the great men of the Chaldeans that commanded them, but even the meanest of their servants abused them at pleasure, and insulted over them; and they must be at their b'ry work, the burdens of their lives for to be:

dom of Judah; A servant of servants shall be he. They would not be ruled by their God, and by his servants the prophets, whose rule was gentle and gracious, and therefore justly are they ruled with rigour by their enemies and their servants. (3.) That they saw no probable way for the redress of their grievances; There is none that doth deliver us out of their hand, not only none to rescue us out of our captivity, but none to check and restrain the insolence of the servants that abuse us, and trample upon us;" which one would think their masters should have done, because it was an usurpation of their authority; but, it should seem, they connived at it, and encouraged it, and as if they were not worth of the correction of gentlemen, they are turned out of the footmen to be spurned by them. Well might they pray, Lord, consider, and behold our reproach.

5. They who used to be feasted, are now famished; (v. 10.) Our skin was black like an oven, dried and parched too, because of the terrible famine, the storms of famine; (so the word is;) for though famine comes gradually upon a people, yet it comes very acutely and being us like one before all before it, and there is no resisting it; and this they show, hence we read of the reproach of famine, which in captivity they received among the heathen, Ezek. xxxvi. 30.

6. All sorts of people, even they whose persons and characters were most inviolable, were abused and dishonoured. (1.) The women were ravished, even the women in Zion, that holy mountain, v. 11. The committing of such abominable wickedness there is very justly denounced. (2.) The great men were not only put to death, but just to ignominious deaths; Princes were hanged, as if they had been slaves, by the hands of the Chaldeans, (v. 12.) who took a pride in doing this barbarous execution with their own hands. Some think that the dead bodies of the princes, after they were slain with the sword, were hung up, as the bodies of Saul’s sons, in disgrace to them, and as it were to extol the Chaldeans. The body of Nebuchadnezzar is said to have showed to magistrates, and those in authority; The faces of elders; elders in office, were not honoured; this will particularly remembered against the Chaldeans another day; (Isa. xlvi. 6.) Upon the ancient hast thou very heavily laid thy yoke. (4.) The tenderness of youth was no more considered than the gravity of old age; (v. 13.) They took the young men to grind at the hand-mills, may perhaps all the men that were not capable of carrying the grist; so some; have carried the mill, or mill-stones, so others. They loaded them as if they had been beasts of burden, and so broke their backs when they were young, and made the rest of their lives the more miserable. Nay, they made the little children carry their wood home for fuel, and laid such burdens upon them, that they fell down under them. So very inhuman were these cruel taskmasters:

7. An end was put to all their gladness, and their joy was quite extinguished; (v. 14.) The young men, who used to be disposed to mirth, have ceased from their music, have hung their harps upon the willow-trees. It does indeed well become old men to cease from their music, it is time to lay it by with a gracious contempt, when all the daughters of music are brought low; but it speaks some great calamity upon a people, when their young men are made to cease from it. It was so with the body of the people; (v. 15.) The joy of their heart was ceased, they never knew what joy was since the enemy came in upon them like a flood, for ever since deep called unto deep, and one wave flowed in upon the other, another, so that they were quite over-spread; for they have been oppressed; they have been in despair of a hope; they have been in despair of a hope of a hope; they have been in despair of a hope of a hope.

8. An end was put to all their glory. (1.) The public administration of justice was their glory, but that was gone; The elder have ceased from the gate; (v. 14.) the course of justice, which used to run down like a river, is now stopped; the courts of justice, which used to be kept with so much solemnity, are put down; for the judges are slain, or carried captives. (2.) The royal dignity was their glory, that also was gone; The crown is fallen from our head, the king's times if fallen into disgrace, but the crown; he has no successor; the regalia are all lost. Note, Earthly crowns are fading, falling things; but, blessed be God, there is a crown of glory that fadeth not away, that never falls; a kingdom that cannot be moved. Upon this complaint, but with reference to all the foregoing complaints, they make that penitent acknowledgment, "He has done all this;" and for this, "Therefore be merciful to us! Our case is very deplorable, and it is all owing to ourselves; we are undone, and, which aggravates the matter, we are undone by our own hands; God is righteous, for we have sinned." Note, All our wars are owing to our own sin and folly. If the crown of our head be fallen, (for so the words run,) if we lose our excellency, and become mean, we may thank ourselves, we have by our own iniquity polluted our crown, and laid our honour in the dust. 17. For this our heart is faint; for these things our eyes are dim, 18. Because of the mountain of Zion, which is desolate, the foxes walk upon it. 19. Thou, O Lord, remainest for ever; thy throne from generation to generation. 20. Wherefore dost thou forget us for ever, and forsake us so long time? 21. Turn thou us unto thee, O Lord, and we shall be turned; renew our days as of old. 22. But thou hast utterly rejected us; thou art very wroth against us.

Here, 1. The people of God express the deep concern they had for the ruins of the temple, more than for any other of their calamities; the interests of God's house lay nearer their hearts than those of their own; (v. 17, 18.) For this our heart is faint, and sinks under the load of its own heaviness; for these things our eyes are dim, and our sight is gone, as is usual in a debility, or fainting fit; "It is because of the mountain of Zion, which is desolate, the holy mountain, and the temple built up thereon. For other desolations our hearts grieve, and our eyes weep; but for this our hearts faint, and our eyes are dim." Note, Nothing lies so heavy upon the spirits of good people as that which threatens the ruin of religion, or weakens its interests; and it is a comfort if we can appeal to God, that that afflicts us more than any temporal affliction. They had made the mountain of Zion with their sins, and therefore God has justly made it desolate, to that degree, that the foxes walk upon it, as freely and commonly as they do in the woods. It is sad indeed when the mountain of Zion is become a portion for foxes; (Ps. lxxiii. 10.) but sin had first made it so, Ezek. xiii. 4.

2. They comfort themselves with the doctrine of God's eternity, and the perpetuity of his government; (v. 19.) But thou, O Lord, remainest for ever. This they are taught to do by that Psalm which is entitled, A Prayer of the afflicted, Ps. cii. 27, 28. When all our creature-comforts are removed from us, and our hearts fail us, we may then encourage ourselves with the belief, (1.) Of God's eternity; Thou remainest for ever. What shakes the world gives no disturbance to him, who made heaven and earth. Nothing can wither his plans, and whatever revolutions there are on earth, there is no change in the Eternal Mind; God is still the same, and remains for ever infinitely wise and holy, just and good; with him there is no variableness nor shadow of turning. (2.) Of the never-falling continuance of his dominion; Thy throne is from generation to generation; the throne of glory, the throne of grace, and the throne of government, are all immovable: and this is matter of comfort to us when the crown is fallen from our head. When the thrones of princes, that should be our protectors, are brought to the dust, and buried in it, God's throne continues still; he still rules the world, and rules it for the good of his church. The Lord reigns, reigns for ever, even thy God, O Lord, remaineth. They firmly expostulate with God concerning the low condition they were now in, and the frowns of heaven they were now under; (v. 20.) Wherefore dost thou forget us for ever, as if we were quite cast out of mind? Wherefore dost thou forsake us so long time, as if we were quite deprived of the tokens of thy presence? Wherefore dost thou defer our deliverance, as if thou hadst utterly abandoned us? Thou art the same, and, though the throne of thy sanctuary is demolished, thy throne in heaven is unshaken. But wilt thou not be the same to us? Not as if they thought God had forgotten and forsaken them, much less feared his forgetting and forsaking them for ever, but thus they express the value they had for his favour and presence, which they thought it long that they were deprived of the evidence and comfort of. The last verse may be read as such an expostulation, and so the margin reads it: "For wilt thou utterly reject us? Will thou be perfectly wrath with us; not only not smile upon us, and remember us in mercy, as thou dost the foxes, and the birds of the air; but cast us out of thy presence, and forbid us to draw nigh unto thee? How will this be reconciled with thy goodness and faithfulness, and the stability of thy covenant?" We read it, "But thou hast rejected us; thou hast given us cause to fear that thou hast, Lord, how long shall we be in this temptation?" Note, Though we may not quarrel with God, yet we may plead with him; and though we may not conclude that he has cast us off, yet we may (with the prophet, Jer. xii. 1.) humbly reason with him concerning his judgments, especially the continuance of the desolations of his sanctuary.

4. They earnestly pray to God for mercy and grace; (v. 22.) "Lord, do not reject us for ever, but turn us to thee, and make us to dwell in thy courts. These words are not put last, yet the Rabbins, because they would not have the book to conclude with these melancholy words, (v. 22.) repeat this prayer again, that the sun may not set under a cloud, and so make these the last words, both in writing and reading this chapter. They here pray, (1.) For converting grace, to prepare and qualify them for mercy; "Turn thou us to thee, O Lord." The Jews had complained that God had forsaken and forgotten them, and then their prayer is not, Turn thou to us, but, Turn us to thee; which implies an acknowledgment that the cause of the distance was in themselves. God never leaves any till they first leave him, nor stands afar off any longer than while they stand afar off from him; if therefore he turn not to them, and they not turn to him, they have only themselves to blame. (2.) For particular mercy, that they may be quickly returned to them in a way of mercy. This agrees with that repeated prayer, (Ps. lxxx. 3, 7, 19.) Turn us again, and then cause thy face to shine. Turn us from our idols to thyself, by a sincere repentance and reformation, and then we shall be turned. This implies a further acknowledgment of their own weakness and inability to turn themselves. There is in our nature a bent to backslidings, from God, but no disposition to return to him till his grace works in us both to will and to do. So necessary is that grace, that we may truly say, Turn us, or we shall not be turned, but shall wander endlessly; and so powerful and effectual is that grace, that we may as truly say, Turn us, and we shall be turned; for it is a day of power, almighty power, in which God's people are made a violent people, Ps. cx. 3. (For restoring mercy; Turn us to thee, and then renew our days as of old, put us into the same happy state that our ancestors were in long ago, and that they continued long in; let it be with us as it was at the first, and at the beginning, Isa. 1. 26. Note, If God by his grace renew our hearts, he will bid us return to him, and duly give us the day, so that we shall renew our youth as the eagle, Ps. civ. 3. They that repent, and do their first works, shall rejoice, and recover their first comforts. God's mercies to his people have been ever of old; (Ps. xxxv. 6.) and therefore they may hope, even then when he seems to have forsaken and forgotten them, that the mercy which was from everlasting will be to everlasting.
AN

EXPOSITION,

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET

EZELIEL.

When we entered upon the writings of the Prophets, which speak of the things that should be hereafter, we seemed to have the same call that St. John had, (Rev. iv. 1.) Come up hither; but when we enter upon the prophecy of this book, it is as if the voice said, Come up higher, as we go forward in time; for Ezekiel prophesied in the captivity, as Jeremiah prophesied just before it; so we see upward in discoveries yet more sublime of the divine glory. These waters of the sanctuary still grow deeper; so far are they from being fathomable, that in some places they are scarcely fathomable; yet, deep as they are, out of them flow streams which make glad the city of our God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High. As to this prophecy now before us, we may inquire,

I. Concerning the penman of it—it was Ezekiel; his name signifies, The strength of God; or one girt or strengthened of God. He girded up the loins of his mind to the service, and God put strength into him. Whom God calls to any service he will himself enable for it; if he gives commission, he will give power to execute it. Ezekiel's name was answered when God said, (and no doubt did as he said,) I have made thy face strong against their faces. The learned Selden, in his book De Dis Syris, says that it was the opinion of some of the ancients, that the prophet Ezekiel was the same with that Nazarensus Assyrius, whom Pythagoras (as himself relates) had for his tutor for some time, and whose lectures he attended; and it is agreed that they lived much about the same time. We have reason to think that many of the Greek philosophers were acquainted with the sacred writings, and borrowed some of the best of their notions from them. If we may credit the tradition of the Jews, he was put to death by the captives in Babylon, for his faithfulness and boldness in reproving them; it is stated that they dragged him upon the stones till his brains were dashed out. An Arabic historian says that he was put to death, and was buried in the sepulchre of Shem the son of Noah. So Hottinger relates, Thesaur. Philol. lib. ii. cap. 1.

II. Concerning the date of it—the place whence it is dated, and the time when. The scene is laid in Babylon, when it was a house of bondage to the Israel of God; there the prophecies of this book were preached, there they were written, when the prophet himself, and the people to whom he prophesied, were captives there. Ezekiel and Daniel are the only writing prophets of the Old Testament who lived and prophesied anywhere but in the land of Israel, except we add Jonah, who was sent to Nineveh to prophesy. Ezekiel prophesied in the beginning of the captivity, Daniel in the latter end of it; it was an indication of God's good will to them, and his gracious designs concerning them in their affliction, that he raised up prophets among them, both to convince them, when, in the beginning of their troubles, they were secure and unhumbled, which was Ezekiel's business, and to comfort them, when, in the latter end of their troubles, they were dejected and discouraged. If the Lord had been pleased to kill them, he would not have used such apt and proper means to cure them.

III. Concerning the matter and scope of it: 1. There is much in it that is very mysterious, dark, and hard to be understood; especially in the beginning and the latter end of it; which therefore the Jewish rabbins forbade the reading of to their young men, till they came to be thirty years of age, lest by the difficulties they met with there they should be prejudiced against the scriptures; but if we read these difficult parts of scripture with humility and reverence, and search them diligently, though we may not be able to untie all the knots we meet with, no more than we can solve all the phenomena in the book of nature, yet we may from them, as from the book of nature, gather a great deal for the confirming of our faith, and the encouraging of our hope, in the God we worship. 2. Though the visions here be intricate, such as an elephant may swim in, yet the sermons are mostly plain, such as a lamb may wade in; and the chief design of them is to show God's people their transgressions, that in their captivity they might be repenting, and not repining. It should seem, he was constantly attended, for we read of their sitting before him as God's people sat to hear his words; (ch. xxxiii. 31.) and that he was occasionally consulted, for we read of the elders of Israel who came to inquire of the Lord by him, (ch. xiv. 1, 2.) And as it was of great use to the oppressed captives to themselves to have a prophet with them, so it was a testimony to their holy religion against their oppressors, who ridiculed it and them. 3. Though the reproofs and the threatenings here be very sharp and bold, yet toward the close of the book very comfortable assurances are given of great mercy God had in store for them; and there, at length, we shall meet with something that has reference to gospel-times, and which was to have its accomplishment in the kingdom of the Messiah, of whom indeed this prophet speaks less than almost any of the prophets. But by opening the terrors of the Lord he prepares Christ's way; by the law is the knowledge of sin, and so it becomes our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. The visions, which were the prophet's credentials, we have, ch. i.—iii. the reproofs and threatenings, ch. iv.—xxiv. and between the comforts we have in the latter part of the book we have messages sent to the nations that bordered upon the land of Israel, whose destruction is foretold, (ch. xxv.—xxxv.) to make way for the restoration of God's Israel, and the re-establishment of their city and temple, which are foretold, ch. xxxvi. to the end. Those who would apply the comforts to themselves, must apply the convictions to themselves.

The Book of the Prophet EZEKIEL.

CHAP. I.

In this chapter, we have, 1. The common circumstances of the prophecy now to be delivered, the time when it was delivered, (v. 1) the place where, (v. 2) and the person by whom, v. 3. 11. The uncommon introduction to it by a vision of the glory of God; 1. In his attendance and residence in the upper world, where his throne is surrounded with angels, here called living creatures, v. 4—14. 2. In his providences concerning the lower world, represented by the wheels and their motions, v. 15—26. 3. In the face of Jesus Christ sitting upon the throne, v. 26—28. And the more we are acquainted, and the more intimately we converse, with the glory of God in these three branches of it, the more commanding influence will divine revelation have upon us, and the more ready shall we be to submit to it, what is the thing to be done in preparing the way of this book with these visions. When such a God of glory speaks, it concerns us to hear with attention and reverence; it is at our peril if we do not.

1. NOW it came to pass in the thirtieth year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I was among the captives by the river of Chebar, that the heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God. 2. In the fifth day of the month, (which was the fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity,) 3. The word of the Lord came expressly unto Ezekiel the priest, the son of Buzi, in the land of the Chaldeans, by the river Chebar; and the hand of the Lord was there upon him.

The circumstances of the vision which Ezekiel saw, and in which he received his commission and instructions, are here described at large. It is not only, as I. 1. shows, a melancholy computation of his own country, observing, (v. 2) that it was the fifth year of Jehoiachin's captivity. But the Chaldee Paraphrase fixes upon another era, and says that this was the thirtieth year after Nebuchadnezzar found the book of the law in the house of the sanctuary, at midnight after the setting of the moon, in the days of Josiah the king. And it is true, that this was just thirty years from that time; and that was an event so remarkable, (as it put the Jewish state upon a new trial,) that it was proper enough to date from it; and perhaps therefore the prophet speaks indefinitely of thirty years, as having an eye both to that event, and to the Chaldean computation, which were coincident.

It was in the fourth month, answering to our June, and in the fifth day of the month, that Ezekiel had this vision, v. 2. It is probable that it was on the sabbath-day, because we read (ch. iii. 16.) that at the end of seven days, which we may well suppose to be the next sabbath, the word of the Lord came to him again. Thus John was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, when he saw the visions of the Almighty, Rev. i. 10. God would hereby put an honour upon his sabbaths, then when the enemies mocked at them, Lam. i. 7. And he would here thus encourage his people to keep up their attendance on the ministry of his prophets every sabbath-day, by the immediate manifestations of himself on some sabbath-days.

II. The melancholy circumstances he was in when God honoured him, and thereby favoured his people, with this vision. He was in the land of the Chaldeans, among the captives, by the river Chebar, and it was in the fifth year of king Jehoiachin's captivity.

Observe,

1. The present state of the church were now, some of them, captives in the land of the Chaldeans. The body of the Jewish nation yet remained in their own land, but these were the first-fruits of the captivity, and they were some of the best: for in Jeremiah's vision these were the good figs, whom God had sent into the land of the Chaldeans for their good; (Jer. xxiv. 5.) and that it might be for their good, God raised a prophet among them, to teach them out of the law, then when he chastened them, Ps. xxiv. 12. Note, It is a great mercy to have the word of God brought us, and a great duty to attend to it diligently when we are in affliction. The word of instruction and the rod of correction may be of great service to us, in concert and concurrence with each other; the word to explain the rod, and the rod to enforce the word; both together give wisdom. It is happy for a man, when he is sick and in pain, to have a messenger with him, an interpreter, one among a thousand, if he have but his ear open to discipline, Job. xxxiii. 23. One of the quarrels God laid with the Jews, when he sent them into captivity, was for mocking his messengers and misusing his prophets; and yet when they were suffering for this sin, he favoured them with this foretold mercy. It were ill with us if God did not sometimes graciously thrust upon us those means of grace and salvation which we have foolishly thrust from us. In their captivity they wanted ordinary helps for their souls, and therefore God raised them up these extraordinary ones; for God's children, if they be hindered in their education one way, shall have it made up another way. But observe, It was in the fifth year of their captivity that Ezekiel was raised up among them, and not before. So long God left them without any prophet, till they began to lament after the Lord, and to complain that they saw not their signs, and there was none to tell them how long; (Ps. cxiv. 9.) and then they would know how to value a prophet, and God's discoveries of himself to them by him would be the more acceptable and comfortable. The Jews went hard by, and invaded those that were gone into captivity had Ezekiel with them; for wherever the children of God are scattered abroad he will find out tutors for them.

2. The prophet was himself among the captives, those of them that were posted by the river Chebar; for it was by the rivers of Babylon that they sat and wept. The Jews went hard by, and invaded those that they hanged their harps, Ps. cxxxvii. 2. The planters in America keep along by the sides of the rivers, and perhaps those captives were employed by their masters in improving some parts of the country by the rivers' sides that were uncultivated, the natives being generally employed in war; or they employed them in manufactures, and therefore chose to fix them by the sides of rivers, that the Jews might the more easily be conveyed by water-carriage. Interpreters agree not what river this of Chebar was, but among the captives by that river Ezekiel was, and himself a captive.

Observe here, (1.) The best men, and those that are dearest to God, often share, not only in the common calamities of this life, but in the public and national judgments that are inflicted for sin; they feel the smart who contributed nothing to the guilt; by which it appears that the difference between good and bad arises not from the events that befell them, but from the temper and disposition of their spirits under them. And since not only righteous men, but prophets, share with the worst in present punishments, we may infer thence, with the greatest assurance, that there are rewards reserved for them in the future state. (2.) Words of conviction, counsel, and comfort, come best to those who are in affliction from their fellow-sufferers. The captives will be best instructed by one who is a captive among them, and experimentally knows their sorrows. (3.) The spirit of prophecy was not confined to the land of Israel, but some of the brightest of the prophets were revealed in the land of the Chaldeans, which was a happy presage of the carrying of the church, with that divine revelation upon which it is built, into the Gentile world; and as now, so afterward, when the gospel-kingdom was to be set up, the dispersion of the Jews contributed to the spreading of the knowledge of God. (4.) Wherewith we are, we may keep up our communion with God. Undique ad celos tansundem est visio. From the remotest regions there is a sight of God above heavenward. (5.) When God's ministers are bound, the word of the Lord is not bound, 2 Tim. ii. 9. When St. Paul was a prisoner, the gospel had a free course. When St. John was banished into the Isle of Patmos, Christ visited him there; nay, God's suffering servants have generally been treated as favorites, and their communications have much more abounded then when affliction has abounded, 2 Cor. i. 5.

III. The discovery which God was pleased to make of himself to the prophet, when he was in these circumstances, to be by him communicated to his people. He here tells us what he saw what he heard, and what he felt.

1. He saw visions of God, v. 1. No man can see God, and live; but many have seen visions of God, such displays of the divine glory as have both instructed and affected them; and commonly when God first revealed himself to any prophet, he did it by an extraordinary vision, as to Isaiah, (ch. 6.) to Jeremiah, (ch. 1.) to Abraham; (Acts vii. 2.) to settle a correspondence and a satisfactory way of intercourse, so that there needed not afterward a vision upon every revelation. Ezekiel was employ'd in turning the hearts of the people to the Lord their God, and therefore he must himself see the visions of God. Note, It concerns those to be well acquainted with God themselves, and much affected with what they know of him, whose business it is to bring others to the knowledge and love of him. That he might see the visions of God, the heavens were opened; the darkness and distance which hindered his visions were conquered, and he was let into the light of the glories of the upper world, as near and clear as if heaven had been opened to him.

2. He heard the voice of God; (v. 2.) The word of the Lord came expressly to him, and what he saw was designed to prepare him for what he was to hear. The expression is emphatical, Esseundo, fuit verbum Dei — The word of the Lord was really as it was to him; there was no mistake in it; it came to him in the fulness of its light and power, in the evidence and demonstration of the Spirit; it came close to him, nay, it came into him, took possession of him, and dwelt in him richly: it came expressly, or accurately, to him; he did himself clearly understand what he said, and was abundantly satisfied of the truth of it. The essential Word, (so we may take it,) the Word who is, who is what he is, came to Ezekiel, to send him on his work.

3. He felt the power of God opening his eyes to see the visions, opening his ear to hear the voice, and opening his heart to receive both; The hand of the Lord was there upon him. Note, The hand of the Lord goes along with the word of the Lord, and so it becomes effectual; those only understand and believe the report, to whom the arm of the Lord is revealed. The hand of God was upon him, as upon Moses to cover him, that he should not be overcome by the dazzling light and lustre of the visions he saw, Exod. xxxiii. 22. It was upon him, (as upon St. John, Rev. i. 17.) to revive and support him, that he might bear up, and not faint, under these discoveries. That he might neither be lifted up nor cast down with the abundance of the revelations, God's grace is sufficient for him, and, in token of that, his hand is upon him.

4. And I looked, and behold, a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire infolding itself, and a brightness was about it, and out of the midst thereof, as the colour of amber, out of the midst of the fire: 5. Also out of the midst thereof came the likeness of four living creatures, and this was their appearance; they had the likeness of a man. 6. And every one had four faces, and every one had four wings. 7. And their feet were straight feet, and the sole of their feet was like the sole of a calf's foot; and they sparkled like the colour of burnish'd brass. 8. And they had the hands of a man under their wings, on their four sides; and they four had their faces and their wings. 9. Their wings were joined one to another; they turned not when they went; they went every one straight forward. 10. As for the likeness of their faces, they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion on the right side; and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; they four also had the face of an eagle. 11. Thus were their faces: and their wings were stretched upward; two wings of every one were joined one to another, and two covered their bodies. 12. And they went every one straight forward: whither the spirit was to go, they went; and they turned not when they went. 13. As for the likeness of the living creatures, their appearance was like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps: it went up and down among the living creatures; and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning. 14. And the living creatures ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning.

The visions of God which Ezekiel here saw, were very glorious, and had more particulars than those which other prophets saw. It is the scope and intention of these visions, to unfold the prophet's mind with very great and high and honourable thoughts of that God by whom he was commissioned, and for whom he was employed. It is the likeness of the glory of the Lord that he sees, (v. 28.) and from hence he may infer that it is his honour to serve him, for he is one whom angels serve; he may serve him with safety, for he has power sufficient to bear him out in his work; it is at his peril to draw back from his service, for he has power to pursue him, as he did Jonah; so great a God as this must be served with reverence and godly fear; and with assurance may Ezekiel foretell what this God will do, for he is able to make his words good.

2. To strike a terror upon the sinners who remained in Zion, and those who were already come to Babylon, who were secure, and bid defiance to the threatenings of Jerusalem's ruin, as we have found in Jeremiah's prophecy, and shall find in this, many did; “Let those who said, We shall have peace, though we go on, know that our God is a consuming Fire, whom they cannot stand before.” That this vision had a reference to the destruction of Jerusalem, seems plain from ch. xlv. 3, where he says that it was the vision which he saw when he came to destroy the city, to prophesy the destruction of it.

3. To speak comfort to those that feared God, and trembled at his word, and humbled themselves under his mighty hand; “Let them know that though they are captives in Babylon, yet they have God nigh unto them; though they have not the temple and its services, yet they have the God of the sanctuary.” Dr. Lightfoot observes, “Now that the church is to be planted for a long time in another country, the Lord shows a glory in the midst of them, as he had done at their first constituting into a church in the wilderness, and out of a cloud and fire, as he had done there, he showed himself, and from between living creatures, as from between the cherubims, he gives his oracles.” This put an honour upon them, by which they might value themselves when the Chaldeans insulted over them; and this might encourage their hopes of deliverance in due time.

Now, to answer these ends, we have in these verses the first part of the vision, which represents God as attended and served by an innumerable company of angels, who are all his messengers, his ministers, doing his commandments, and heartening to the voice of his word; this denotes his grandeur; as it magnifies an earthly prince to have a splendid retinue, and numerous armies at his command; thus his allies are led to trust in him, and his enemies to fear him.

1. The introduction to this vision of the angels is very magnificent and awakening. v. 4. The prophet, observing the heavens to open, looked, looked up, (as it was time,) to see what discoveries God would make to him. Note, When the heavens are opened, it concerns us to have our eyes open. To clear the way before, a whirlwind came out of the north, which would drive away the interposing mists of this lower region; fair weather comes out of the north, and thence the wind comes that drives away rain. God can by a whirlwind clear the sky and air, and produce that serenity of mind which is necessary to our communion with Heaven. Yet this whirlwind was attended with a great cloud; when we think that the clouds which arise from this earth's moisture are dark and filthy, and we can see beyond them, yet still there is a cloud which heavenly things are wrapt in, a cloud from above, so that we cannot order our speech concerning them by reason of darkness. Christ here descended, as he ascended, in a cloud. Some by this whirlwind and cloud understand the Chaldean army coming out of the north against the land of Judah, bearing down all before them as a tempest; and so it agrees with that which was signified by one of the first of Jeremiah's visions, (Jer. i. 14.) Out of the north an evil shall break forth; but I take it here as an introduction rather to the vision than to the sermons. This whirlwind came to Ezekiel, as that to Elijah, (1 Kings xix. 11.) to prepare the way of the Lord, and to demand attention. He that has eyes, that has ears, let him see, let him hear.

II. The vision itself. A great cloud was the vehicle of this vision, in which it was conveyed to the prophet; for God's pavilion in which he rests, his chariot in which he rides, is darkness and thick clouds; (Ps. xviii. 11.—civ. 3.) thus he holds back the face of his throne, lest its dazzling light and lustre should overpower us, by spreading a cloud upon it. Now, 1. The cloud is accompanied with a fire, as upon mount Sinai, where God resided in a thick cloud; but the sight of his glory was like devouring fire, (Exod. xxiv. 16, 17.) and his first appearance to Moses was in a flame of fire in the bush; for our God is a consuming Fire. This was a fire infolding itself; glories and lights; the fire of God being his own Cause, his own Rule, and his own End, if he be as a fire, he is as a fire infolding itself, or as some read it, kindled by itself. The fire of God's glory shines forth, but it quickly infolds itself, for he lets us know but part of his ways; the fire of God's wrath breaks forth, but it also quickly infolds itself, for the divine patience suffers not all his wrath to boil over. Then where there is a fire thus infolding itself, O Lord, who shall stand?

2. The fire is surrounded with a glory; A brightness was about it, in which it infolded itself, yet it made some discovery of itself. Though we cannot see into the fire, cannot by searching find out God to perfection, yet we see the brightness that is round about it, the reflection of this fire from the thick cloud: Moses might see God's back parts but not his face; we have some light concerning the nature of God, from the brightness which en compasses it, though we have not an insight into it, by reason of the cloud spread upon it. Nothing is more easy than to determine that God is; nothing more difficult than to describe what he is. When God displays his wrath as fire, yet there is a brightness about it; for his holiness and justice appear very illustrious in the punishment of sin and sinners; even about the earth, the image of his glory. Secondly, worship (he in them was that had this colour of amber, and therefore I take it to be the whole frame of the following vision, which came into Ezekiel's view out of the midst of the fire and brightness; and the first thing he took notice of before he viewed the prophet, but for the sake of the colour of amber, or the eye of amber, it looked as amber does to the eye, of a bright flaming fiery colour, the colour of a burning coal; so some think it should be read. The living creatures which he saw coming out of the midst of the fire, were seraphims—burners, for he made them angels, spirits, his ministers a flaming fire.

What comes out of the fire, of a fiery amber colour, when it comes to be distinctly viewed, is the likeness of four living creatures; not the living creatures themselves, (angels are spirits, and cannot be seen,) but the likeness of them, such a hieroglyphic, or representation, as God saw fit to make use of for the leading of the prophet, and us with him, into some acquaintance with the world of angels, (a matter purely of divine revelation,) so far it is requisite to possess us with an awful sense of the greatness of that God who has angels for his attendants, and the goodness of that God who has appointed them to be attendants on his people; The likeness of these living creatures came out of the midst of the fire; for angels derive their being and power from God, they are in themselves, and to us, what he is pleased to make them; their glory is a ray of his. The prophet himself explains this vision, (ch. x. 20.) I know that the living creatures were the cherubim, which is one of the names by which the angels are known in scripture. To Daniel was made known their numbers, ten thousand times ten thousand, Dan. vii. 10. But though they are many, yet they are one, and that is made known to Ezekiel here; they are one in nature and operation, as angels, and in number, 1000, as are called a body of men. We have here an account of, (1.) Their nature; they are living creatures, they are the creatures of God, the work of his hands, their being is derived, they have not life in and of themselves, but receive it from him who is the Fountain of life. As much as the living creatures of this lower world excel the vegetables that are the ornaments of the earth, so much do the angels, the living creatures of the upper world, excel the sun, moon, and stars, the ornaments of the heavens. The sun, says some, is a flame of fire infolding itself, but it is not a living creature, as angels, those flames of fire, are. Angels are living creatures, living beings, emphatically so; men on earth are dying creatures, dying daily, (in the midst of life we are as grass, and our beauty is as the flower of the field,) for they live indeed, live to good purpose, and when saints come to be equal unto the angels, they shall not die any more, Luke xx. 36.

(2.) Their number; they are four, so they appear here, though they are innumerable; not as if these were four particular angels set up above the rest, as some have fondly imagined, Michael and Gabriel being the archangels, in whose presence the four faces they put on, and to intimate their being sent forth toward the four winds of heaven; (Matt. xxiv. 31.) Zechariah saw them as four chariots going forth, east, west, north, and south, Zech. vi. 1. God has messengers to send each way; for his kingdom is universal, and reaches to all parts of the world. (3.) Their qualifications, by which they are fitted for the service of their Maker and Master. These are set forth figuratively and by similitude, as is proper in visions, which are parables to the eye. Their description here is such, and so expressed, that, I think, we may fix on an exact idea of them in our fancies, or with the pencil, for that would be a temptation to worship them; but the several instances of their fitness for the work they are employed in, are intended in the several parts of this description. Note, It is the greatest honour of God's creatures to be in a capacity of answering the end of their creation; and the more our love to God, the nearer we approach to the dignity of angels.

These living creatures are described here, [1.] By their general appearance; They had the likeness of a man, they appeared, for the main, in a human shape. First, To signify that these living creatures are reasonable creatures, intelligent beings, who have that spirit of a man, which is the soul of the body. Secondly, To put an honour upon the nature of man, which, where we are not a little lower than the angels, in the very next rank of beings below them; when the invisible intelligences of the upper world would make themselves visible, it is in the likeness of man. Thirdly, To intimate that their delights are with the sons of men, as their Master's are, (Prov. viii. 31.) that they do service to men, and men may have spiritual communion with them by faith, hope, and holy love.

Fourthly, The angels of God appear in the likeness of man, because in the fulness of time the Son of God was not only to appear in that likeness, but to assume that nature; they therefore show this love to it. [2.] By their faces; every one had four faces, looking four several ways. In St. John's vision, which has a near affinity with this, each of the four living creatures has one of these faces here mentioned; (Rev. iv. 7.) here each of them has all four, to intimate that they have all the same qualifications for service; though, perhaps, among the angels of heaven, as among the angels of the churches, some excel in one gift, and others in another, but all for the common service. Let us contemplate their faces till we learn some lesson from them, that is, to have the same image, that we may do the will of God as the angels do it in heaven. They all four had the face of a man; (for in that likeness they appeared, v. 5.) but, beside that, they had the face of a lion, an ox, and an eagle, each masterly in his kind; the lion among wild beasts, the ox among tame ones, and the eagle among fowls. v. 10. Does God make use of them for the executing of judgments upon his enemies? They are fierce and strong as the lion and the eagle in tracing their prey. Does he make use of them for the good of his people? They are as oxen, strong for labour and inclined to serve. And in both they have the understanding of a man. The scattered perfections of the living creatures on earth meet in the angels in heaven. They have their likeness there in the same things in which man is excelled even by the inferior creatures, they are therefore compared to some of them; they have the understanding of a man, and such as far exceeds it; they also resemble man in tenderness and humanity; but, First, A lion excels man in strength and boldness, and is much more formidable; therefore they that will enable them, put on the face of a lion. Secondly, An ox excels man in diligence and patience, and painstaking, and an unwearied discharge of the work he has to do; therefore the angels, who are constantly employed in the service of God and the church, put on the face of an ox. Thirdly, An eagle excels man in quickness and pietness of sight, and it soaring high; and therefore the angels, who seek things above, and see far into divine mysteries, put on the face of a flying eagle.

[3.] By their wings: Every one had four wings, v. 6. In the vision Isaiah had of them, they appeared with six, now with four; for they appeared above the throne, and had occasion for two to cover their faces with. The angels are created with wings, to fly swiftly on God's business: whatever business God sends them upon, they lose no time. Faith and hope are the soul's wings, upon which it soars upward; pious and devout affections are its wings on which it is carried forward, with vigour and alacrity. The prophet observes here, concerning their wings, First, That they were joined one to another, (v. 9.) and again, v. 11. The first thing that makes use of their wings for飞行, is, when some birds do, there is no contest among the angels, God makes peace, perfect peace, in his high places; but their wings were joined in token of their perfect unity and unanimity, and the universal agreement there is among them. Secondly, That they were stretched upward, extended and ready for use, not folded up or flagging. Let an angel receive the least intimation, and he has wings to be using to seek, but is upon the wings immediately; while our poor, dull souls are like the ostrich, that with much difficulty lifts up herself on high. Thirdly, That two of their wings were made use of in covering their bodies, the spiritual bodies they assumed. The clothes that cover us, are our hinderance in work; angels need no other covering than their own wings. They cover their bodies from us, so forbidding us needless inquiries concerning them; ask not after them, for they are wonderful, Judg. xiii. 18. They cover them before God, so directing us, when we approach to God, to see to it that we be so clothed with Christ's righteousness, that the shame of our nakedness may not appear.

[4.] By their feet, including their legs and thighs; They were straight feet; (v. 7.) they stood straight, and firm, and steadily, no burthen of service could make their legs to bend under them. The spouse makes this part of the description of her beloved, that his legs were as pillars of marble set upon sockets of fine gold; (Cant. v. 13.) such are the angels, their feet being straight, as a calf's foot, which divides the hoof, and is therefore clean; as it were the sole of a round foot, (as the Chaldee words it,) they were ready for motion any way. Their feet were winged; (so the Seventy;) they went so swiftly, that it was as if they flew. And their very feet sparkled like the colour of burnished brass; not only their faces, but the very feet, of those are beautiful, whom God sends on his service; (Isa. lii. 7.) every step the angels take is glorious. In the vision John had of Christ, it is said, His feet were like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace, Rev. i. 15.

[5.] By their hands; (v. 8.) They had the hands of a man under their wings on their four sides; an arm and a hand under every wing. They had not only wings for motion, but hands for ends on his eye are quick, who are not active; they hurry about a great deal, but do nothing to purpose, bringing nothing to pass; they have wings, but no hands; whereas God's servants, the angels, not only go when he sends them, and come when he calls them, but do what he bids them. They are the hands of a man, which are wonderfully made, and fitted for service; which are guided by reason and understanding, for what angels do, they do intelligently and with judgment. They have calves' feet; this denotes the swiftness of their motion; (the cedars of Lebanon are said to skip like a calf, Ps. xxix. 6.) but they have a man's hand; this denotes the niceness and exactness of their performances; as the heavens are said to be the work of God's fingers. Their hands were under their wings, which concealed them as they did the rest of their bodies. Note, The agency of angels is a secret thing, and their work is carried on in an invisible way. In working for God, though we must not, with the sluggard, hide our hand in the bosom of our garments, v. 10. we must, as our left hand knew what our right hand doeth. We may observe, that where these wings were, their hands were under their wings; wherever their wings carried them, they carried hands along with them, to be still doing something suitable, something that the duty of the place requires.

(4.) Their motions. The living creatures are moving beings, they are not only active, but very active, not only their happiness to sit still, and do nothing, but to be always well employed, and we must reckon ourselves then best, when we are doing good; doing it as the angels do it, of whom it is here observed,

[1.] That whatever service they went about, they went every one straight forward, (v. 9, 12.) which intimates, First, That they sincerely aimed at the glory of God, and had a single eye to that in all they did; their going straight forward supposes that they looked straight forward, and never had any sinister intentions in what they did. And if thus our eye be single, our whole body will be full of light; the singleness of the eye is the sincerity of the heart. Secondly, That they were intent upon the service they were employed in, and did it with singleness of heart, and with all the vigour of their work; for what their hand found to do, they did it with all their might, and did not loiter in it. Thirdly, That they were unanimous in it; they went straight forward, every one about his own work, they did not thwart or justly one another, did not stand in one another's light, in one another's way. Fourthly. That they perfectly understood their business, and were thorough; they went of it, in so much, as they needed not to stand still to pause or hesitate, but they pursued their work with readiness, as those that knew what they had to do, and how to do it. Fifthly, They were steady and constant in their work; they did not fluctuate, did not tire, did not vary, but were of a piece with themselves; they moved in a direct line, and so went the nearer way. We have lost the useful art of going straight. When we go straight, we go forward, when we serve God with one heart, we rid ground, we ride work.

[2.] They turned not when they went, v. 9, 12. First, They made no blunders or mistakes, which would give them occasion to turn back to rectify them; their work needed no correction, and therefore needed not to be gone over again. Secondly, They minded no diversions; as they turned not back, so they turned not aside, to trifle away with anything that was foreign to their business.

[3. They went whither the Spirit was to go; (v. 12.) either, First, Whither their own spirit was disposed to go; thither they went, having no bodies, as we have, to clog or hinder them. It is our infirmity and need to turn aside, when the Spirit is calling; yet the flesh is weak, and cannot keep pace with it, so that the good which we would do, we do not; but angels and glorified saints labour under no such impotency, whatever they incline or intend to do, they do it, and never come short of it. Or, rather, Secondly, Whithersoever the Spirit of God would have them, go thither they went; though they had so much wisdom of their own, yet in all their motions and actions they subjected themselves to the conduct and government of the divine will; whithersoever the divine providence was to go, they went, to serve its purposes, and to execute its orders. The Spirit of God (says Mr. Greenhill) is the great Agent that sets angels to work, and it is their honour that they are led, they are easily led, by the Spirit. See how quietly the wheels followed the angel. Whatsoever the Spirit is to go, they go immediately, with all possible alacrity. Note, Those that walk after the Spirit, do the will of God as the angels do it.

[4.] They ran and returned like a flash of lightning, v. 14. This intimates, First, That they made haste; they were quick in their motions, as quick as lightning: such were their dispatch, that in whatever business they went about, they did dispatch it immediately, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. Happy they that have no bodies to retard their motion in holy exercises! And happy shall we be when we come to have spiritual bodies for spiritual work! Satan falls like lightning into his own mire, Luke x. 18. Angels fly like lightning in their Master's work; the angel Gabriel flew swiftly. Secondly, That they made haste back; they ran, and returned; ran to do their work, and execute their orders, and then returned to give an account of what they had done, and receive new instructions, that they might be always doing. They ran into the lower world, to do what was to be done there; but when they had done it, they returned like a flash of lightning to the upper world again, to the beatific vision of their God, which they could not have any fruition of longer than their service did require. Thus we should be in the affairs of this world as out of our element; though we run into them, we must not repose in them, but our souls must quickly return like lightning to God their Rest and Centre.

Lastly, We have an account of the light by which the prophet saw these living creatures; on the looking-glass in which he saw them. 13. [1.] He saw them by their own light, for their appearance was like burning coals of fire; they are seraphims—burners, denoting the ardour of their love to God, their fervent zeal in his service, their splendour and brightness, and their terror against God's enemies. When God employs them to fight his battles, they are as coals of fire, (Ps. xviii. 12.) to devour the adversaries as lightnings shot out to discomfit them.

[2.] He saw them by the light of some lamps, which went up and down among them, the shining whereof was very bright. Satan's works are works of darkness, he is the ruler of the darkness of this world; but the angels of light are in the light, and though they conceal their working, they show their work, for it will bear the light. But we see them and their works only by candle-light, by the dim light of lamps, which went up and down among them; when the day breaks, and the shadows flee away, we shall see them clearly. Some make the appearance of these burning coals, and of the lightning that issues out of the fire, to signify the wrath of God, and his judgments, that were now to be executed upon Judah and Jerusalem for their sins, in which angels were to be employed: and some think we find after this description of the city that we see it, which were fetched from between the cherubims, ch. x. 2. But by the appearance of the lamps then, we may understand the light of comfort which shines forth to the people of God in the darkness of this present trouble. If the ministry of the angels is as a consuming fire to God's enemies, it is as a rejoicing light to his own children. To us our light is as the light of a natural day, refreshing and refreshing: to the other, out of the fire comes fresh lightning to destroy them. Note, Good angels are our friends, or enemies, according as God is.

15. Now, as I beheld the living creatures, behold, one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures, with his four faces. 16. The appearance of the wheels and their work was like unto the colour of a beryl; and they four had one likeness: and their appearance and their work was as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel. 17. When they went, they went upon their four sides; and they turned not when they went. 18. As for their rings, they were so high, that they were dreadful; and their rings were full of eyes round about them four. 19. And when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them; and when the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up. 20. Whithersoe'er the spirit was to go, they went, thither was their spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels. 21. When those went, these went; and when those stood, these stood; and when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels. 22. And the likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creature was as the colour of the terrible crystal, stretched forth over their heads above. 23. And under the firmament were their wings straight, the one toward the other: every one had two, which covered on this side, and every one had two, which covered on that side, their bodies. 24. And when they went, I heard the noise of their wings, like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, as the noise of a host: when they stood, they let down their wings. 25. And there was a voice from the firmament that was over their heads, when they stood, and had let down their wings.
this vision which give us some light concerning the Divine Providence.

1. The dispensations of Providence are compared to wheels, either the wheels of a chariot, in which the conqueror rides in triumph, or, rather, the wheels of a clock or watch, which all contribute to the regular motion of the machine. (v. 14.) As read of the Revelation of the Son of Man, ch. ii. 6. Those who are here set before us as under the direction of the God of nature. Wheels, though they move not of themselves, as the living creatures do, are yet made moveable, and are almost continually kept in action. Providence, represented by these wheels, produces changes; sometimes one spoke of the wheel is uppermost, and sometimes another; but the motion of the wheel, which is the central tendency of the one above, is very regular and steady. The motion of the wheels is circular; by the revolutions of providence things are brought to the same posture and pass which they were in formerly; for the thing that is, is that which has been, and there is no new thing under the sun, Eccl. i. 9, 10.

2. The wheel is said to be by the living creatures, which tended it to direct its motion; for the angels are employed as the ministers of God's providence, and have a greater hand in directing the motions of second causes to serve the divine purpose than we think they have. Such a close connexion is there between the living creatures and the wheels, that they moved and rested together. Were angels busily employed? Men were busily employed, as instrument, contrary to their own and natural will; and though they themselves were not aware of it. Or, are men active to compass their designs? Angels at the same time are acting to control and overrule them. This is much insisted on here; (v. 19.) When the living creatures went, to bring about any business, the wheels went by them; when God had work to do by the ministry of angels, second causes are all found, or made, contrary to their own and natural will; and, though those stood, these stood; when the angels had done their work, the second causes had done theirs. If the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, were elevated to any service above the common course of nature, and out of the ordinary road, as supposed in the working of miracles, the dividing of the water, the standing still of the sun, the stopping of the sea, and raising of the dead, which is toward the earth, move in concert with them, and are lifted up over against them; this is thrice mentioned, v. 19.—21. Note, All inferior creatures are, and move, and act, as the Creator, by the ministration of angels, directs and influences them. Visible effects are managed and governed by invisible causes.

The reason given of this, is, because the spirit of the living creatures was in the wheels; the same wisdom, power, and holiness of God, the same will and counsel of his, that guides and governs the angels, and all their performances, does, by them, order and dispose of all the motions of the creatures in this lower world, and the events and issues of them. God is the Soul of the world, and animates the wheels, both that above, and that beneath, so that they move in perfect harmony, as the upper and lower parts of the natural body do; so that whithersoever the Spirit is to go, whatever God wills and purposes to be done and brought to pass, thither their spirit is to go; the angels, knowingly and designedly, set themselves to bring it about, and the spirit is in the wheels, which are therefore lifted up over against them; the powers of nature and the wills of men, are all made to serve the intention, which they infallibly and irresistibly effect, though perhaps they do not so, neither doth their heart think so, Isa. x. 7. Mic. iv. 11, 12.

Thus, though the will of God's precept be not done on earth, as it is done in heaven, yet the will of his purpose and counsel is, and shall be.

3. The wheel is said to have four faces, looking four several ways, (v. 15.) denoting that the providence of God extends itself in all parts of the world, east, west, north, and south, and extends itself to all times, past, present, and future. Thus, when we look will upon the wheel of Providence, and it has a face toward you, a beautiful one, which you may admire the features and complexion of; it looks upon you as ready to speak to you, if you be but ready to hear the voice of it; like a well-drawn picture, it has an eye upon all that have an eye upon it.

The wheel had so four faces, that it had in it four wheels, white, red, black, and yellow. (v. 17.) As first, Ezekiel saw it as one wheel, (v. 15.) one sphere; but afterward, he saw it was four, but they had one likeness; (v. 16.) not only they were like one another, but they were as if they had been one. This intimates, (1.) That one event of providence is like another; what happens to us is that which is common to men, and what we are not to think strange. (2.) That various events have a tendency to the same issue, and concur to answer the same intention.

4. Their appearance and their work are said to be like the colour of a beryl, (v. 16.) the colour of Turquoise, (so the word is,) that is, of the sea; the beryl is of that colour, sea-green; blue Neptune we call it. The nature of things in this world is like that of the sea; and to that colour and its wheels, there is a constant coherence and succession of its parts. There is a chain of events which is always drawing one way or other. The sea ebbs and flows, so does providence in its dispositions, but always in the stated, appointed times and measures. The sea looks blue, as the air does, because of the shortness and deadness of our sight, which can see but a little way of either; to that colour and its wheels, the appearance and work of Providence fitly compared, because we cannot find out that which God does from the beginning to the end, Eccl. iii. 11. We see but parts of his ways, (Job xxvi. 14.) and all beyond looks blue, which gives us to understand no more concerning it, but that in truth we know it not, it is far above out of our sight.

Their wheels are like unto wheels, and their appearance and their work are likewise said to be as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel. Observe here again, Their appearance to the prophet is designed to set forth what their work really is; men's appearance and their work often differ, but the appearance of God's providence and its work agree; if they seem to differ, it is through our ignorance and mistake. Now both were as a wheel in a wheel, a lesser wheel moved by a greater; we pretend not to give a mathematical description of it; the meaning is, that the disposals of Providence seems to us intricate, perplexed, and unaccountable, and yet that they will appear in the issue to have been all wisely ordered for the best; so that though what God does we know not now, yet we shall know hereafter, John xiii. 7.

The motion of these wheels, like that of the living creatures, was steady, regular, and constant; they returned not when they went, (v. 17.) because they never went amiss, nor otherwise than they should do. God, in his providence, takes his work before him, and he will have it forward; and it is going on even then when it seems to us to be going backward. They went as the Spirit directed them, and therefore returned not. We should not have occasion to return back as we have, and to undo that by repentance which we have done amiss, and to do it over again, if we were but led by the Spirit, and followed his conduct. The Spirit of life (so some-read it) was in the wheels, which carried them on with case and evenness, and then they returned not when they went.

7. The rings, or rims, of the wheels were so high, that they were dreadful, v. 18. They were of a vast circumference, so that when they were reared, and put in motion, the prophet was even afraid to look upon them. Note, The vast compass of God's thought, and the vast reach of his design, are really astonishing; when we go about to describe the circle of Providence, we are struck with amazement, and are even swallowed up. O the height and depth of God's counsels! The consideration of them should strike an awe upon us.

8. They were full of eyes round about. This circumstance, more than any other, is the foundation of all and yet most significant, plainly denoting that the motions of Providence are all directed by infinite wisdom. The issues of things are not determined by a blind fortune, but by those eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the earth, and are in every place, beholding the evil and the good. Note, It is a great satisfaction to us, and ought to be so, that though we cannot account for the springs and issues of events, yet they are all under the cognizance and conduct of an all-wise, all-seeing God.

If. The notice he took of the firmament above, over the heads of the living creatures. When he saw the living creatures moving, and the wheels by them, he looked up, as it is proper for us to do when we observe the various motions of providence in this lower world; looking up, he saw the firmament scribed forth over the heads of the living creatures, v. 22. What is done on earth is done under the heavens, (as the scripture often speaks,) under its inspection and influence.

Observe, 1. What he saw; The firmament was as the colour of the terrible crystal, truly glorious, but terribly so; the vastness and brightness of it put the prophet into an amazement, and struck him with an awful reverence. The terrible ice, or frost; (so it may be read;) the colour of snow congealed, or as mountains of ice in the northern seas, which are very frightful. Daring sinners ask, Can God judge through the dark cloud? Job xxvii. 13. But that which we take to be a dark cloud, is to him transparent as crystal, through which, from the place of his habitation, he looks upon all the inhabitants of the earth, Ps. xxxiii. 14. Under the firmament, we are to understand the image of the living creatures erect; (v. 23;) when they pleased, they used them either for flight or for covering, or two for flight, and two for covering. God is on high, above the firmament, the angels are under the firmament, which denotes their subjection to God's dominion, and their readiness to fly on his errands in the open firmament of heaven, and to serve him unanimously.

2. What he heard. (1.) The noise of the angels' wings, v. 24. Bees and other insects make a great noise with the vibration of their wings; here the angels do so, to awaken the attention of the prophet to that which God was about to say to him from the firmament, v. 25. Angels, by the providences they are employed in, sound God's alarms to the children of men, and stir them up to hear his voice; for that is that which he hath spoken, and is heard and understood by the men of wisdom. The noise of their wings was loud and terrible as the noise of great waters, like the roar or roaring of the sea; and as the noise of a host, the noise of war; but it was articulate and intelligible, and did not give an uncertain sound; for it was the voice of speech; nay it was the voice of the Almighty, for God, by his providences, speaks once, yea twice, if we could but perceive it; (Job xxxiii. 14.) the Lord's voice cries, Mic. vi. 9.

(2.) He heard a voice from the firmament, from him that sits upon the throne there, v. 25. When the angels moved, they made a noise with their wings; but when with that they had roused a careless world, they stood still, and let down their wings, that there might be a profound silence, and so God's voice might be the better heard. The voice of Providence is designed to open men's ears to the voice of the word, to direct the ears of the hearer, who with a loud voice charges silence while he speaks. That which passes sentence. He that has ears to hear, let him hear. Note, Noises on earth should awaken our attention to the voice from the firmament; for how shall we escape, if we turn away from him that speaks from heaven.

26. And above the firmament that was over their heads was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire-stone: and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it. 27. And I saw as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it; from the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downward, I saw it as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about. 28. As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord. And when I saw it, I fell upon my face, and I heard a voice of one that spake.

All the other parts of this vision were but a preface and introduction to this. God in them had made himself known as Lord of angels, and supreme Director of all his affairs of this lower world, whence it is easy to infer that whatever God by his prophets either promises or threatens to do, he is able to effect it; angels are his servants, men are his tools. But now that a divine revelation is to be given to a prophet, and by him to the church, we must look higher than the living creatures of the wheels, and must expect that from the eternal Word, of whom we have an account in these verses. Ezekiel, hearing a voice from the firmament, looked up, as John did, to see the voice that spake with him, and he saw one like unto the Son of man, Rev. i. 12, 13. The second Person sometimes tried the fashion of a man, occasionally, before he clothed himself with it for good and all; and the spirit of prophecy is called the Spirit of Christ, (1 Pet. i. 11.) and the Testimony of Jesus, Rev. xii. 10.

1. This glory of Christ that the prophet saw, was above the firmament that was over the heads of the living creatures, v. 26. Note, The heads of angels themselves are under the feet of the Lord Jesus; for the firmament that is over their heads, is under his feet; angels, principalities, and powers, are made subject to him, 1 Pet. iii. 22. This dignity and dominion of the Redeemer beczuse in his incarnation magnify his condensation in his incarnation, when he was made a little lower than the angels, Heb. ii. 9.

2. The first thing he observed, was a throne; for divine revelations come backed and supported with a royal authority; we must have an eye of faith to God and Christ as upon a throne. The first thing that John discovered in his visions was a throne set in heaven, (Rev. iv.) which commands reverence and subjection. It is a throne of glory, a throne of grace, a throne of triumph, a throne of government, a throne of judgment. The Lord has prepared his throne in the heavens, has prepared it for his Son, whom he has set King on his holy hill of Zion.

3. On the throne he saw the appearance of a man. This is good news to the children of men, that the throne above the firmament is filled with one that is not ashamed to appear, even there, in the likeness of man. Daniel, in vision, saw the kingdom and dominion given to one like the Son of man, (John v. 27.) so appearing in these visions.

4. The prophet sees him as a Prince and Judge upon this throne; though he appear in fashion as a man, yet he appears in more than human glory, v. 27. (1.) Is God a shining Light? So is he: when the prophet saw him, he saw as the colour of amber, that is, a brightness round about; for God dwells in light, and covers himself with light as with a garment. How low did the Redeemer stoop for us, when, to bring about our salvation, he suffered his glory to be eclipsed by the veil of his humanity! (2.) Is God a consuming Fire? So is he: from his loins, both upward and downward there was the appearance of fire. The fire above the loins was round about within the amber, it was inward and inward; that below, the loins was more outward and open, and yet that also had brightness round about. Some make the former to signify Christ's divine nature, the glory and virtue of which are hidden within the colour of amber: it is what no man has seen, or can see; the latter they suppose to be his human nature, the glory of which there were those who saw; the glory as of the Only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth, John i. 14. He had rain coming out of his hand, and yet there was the hiding of his power, Hab. iii. 4. The fire in which the Son of man appeared here, might be intended to signify the judgments that were ready to be executed upon Judah and Jerusalem, coming from that fierce indignation of the Almighty, which devours the adversaries. Nothing is more dreadful to the most daring sinners than the wrath of God; and this is strikingly typified vi. 16. The day is coming, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed in flaming fire, 2 Thess. i. 7, 8. It concerns us therefore to kiss the Son, lest he be angry.

5. The throne is surrounded with a rainbow; (v. 28.) it is so in St. John's vision; (Rev. iv. 3.) the brightness about it was of divers colours, as the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain; which, as it is a display of majesty, and looks very great, so it is a pledge of mercy, and looks very kind; for it is a confirmation of the gracious promise God has made, that he will not drown the world again; and he has said, I will look upon the bow, and remember the covenant, Gen. ix. 16. This intimates that he who sits upon the throne, is the Mediator of the covenant, and the surety of the new inheritance. It is from the throne of God; that he interposes between us and the judgments our sins have deserved; and that all the promises of God are in him yea and amen. Now that the fire of God's wrath was breaking out against Jerusalem, bounds should be set to it, and he would not make an utter destruction of it, for he would look upon the bow, and remember the covenant, as he promised Lev. xxvi. 48. Lamps, Lastly, We have the conclusion of this vision: (1.) What notion the prophet himself had of it; This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord. Here, as all along, he is careful to guard against all gross, corporeal thoughts of God, which might derogate from the transcendent purity of his nature. He does not say, This was the Lord,
We may take it, 1. As an humble, diminishing title; lest Ezekiel should be lifted up with the abundance of the revelations, he is put in mind of this, that still he is a son of man, a mean, weak, mortal creature. Among other things made known to him, it was necessary he should be made to know this, that he was a son of man, not God, the Spirit of God, the Son of God. 2. It was a manifestation of God, that he was pleased thus to manifest himself to him. Now he is among the living creatures, the angels; yet he must remember that he is himself a man, a dying creature. What is man, or the son of man, that he should be thus visited, thus dignified? Though God had here a splendid retinue of holy angels about his throne, who were ready to go on his errands, yet he passes them all by, and pitches at the present purpose, to be his messenger to the house of Israel, for we have this treasure in earthen vessels, and God's messages sent us by men like ourselves, whose terror shall not make us afraid, nor their hand be heavy upon us. Ezekiel was a priest, but the priesthood was brought low, and the honour of it laid in the dust: it therefore became him, and all of his order, to humble themselves, and to lie low, as some men, called in the church, were now employed as prophet, God's ambassador, and a ruler over the kingdoms, (Jer. i. 10.) a post of great honour, but he must remember that he is a son of man, and whatever good he did, it was not by any might of his own, for he was a son of man, but in the strength of divine grace, which must therefore have all the glory. Or, 2. We may take it as an honourable, dignifying title; for it is one of the titles of the Messiah in the Old Testament; (Dan. vii. 13.) I saw one like the Son of man come with the clouds of heaven, from whence Christ borrows the title he often calls himself by, The Son of man. The prophets were types of him, as they had near access to God, and great authority among men; and therefore as David the king is called the Lord's anointed, or Christ, so Ezekiel the prophet is called son of man.

I. Ezekiel is here set up, and made to stand, that he might receive his commission, v. 1, 2. He is set up,

1. By a divine command; Son of man, stand upon thy feet. His lying prostrate was a posture of great reverence, but his standing up would be a posture of greater readiness and fitness for business. Our adorings of God must not turn out religion, and quench the excitements of God. He fell on his face in a holy fear and awe of God, but he was quickly raised up again; for they that humble themselves shall be exalted. God delights not in the dejections of his servants, but the same that brings them low, will raise them up; the same that is a Spirit of bondage will be a Spirit of adoption. Stand, and I will speak to thee. Note, We may at any time expect to be spoken to, when we stand ready to do what he commands us.

2. By a divine power going along with that command, v. 2. God bid him stand up, but because he had not strength of his own to recover his feet, nor courage to face the vision, the Spirit entered into him and set him upon his feet. Note, God is graciously pleased to work that in us which he requires of us, not only in our hearts, but in our outward ways. We must stir up ourselves, and then God will put strength into us; we must work out our salvation, and then God will work in us. He observed that the Spirit entered into him then when Christ spake to him; for Christ conveys his Spirit by his word as the ordinary means, and makes the word effectual by the Spirit. The Spirit set the prophet upon his feet, to raise him up from his dejections, for he is the Comforter. Thus, in the like case, Daniel was strengthened by a divine touch, (Dan. x. 18.) and John was raised by the right hand of Christ laid upon him, Rev. i. 17. The Spirit set him upon his feet, made him willing and forward to do as he was bidden, and then he heard him that spoke to him. He heard the voice before, (ch. i. 28.) but now he heard it more distinctly and clearly, heard it, and submitted to it; and God measured out the gift to our feet, by inclining our will to our duty, and thereby disposes the understanding to receive the knowledge of it.

II. Ezekiel is here sent, and made to go, with a message to the children of Israel; (v. 3.) I send thee to the children of Israel. God had for many ages been sending to them his servants the prophets, rising up betimes, and sending them, but to little purpose for abusing God's messengers; and yet even there God sends this prophet among them, to try if their ears were open to discipline, now that they were held in the cords of affliction. As the supports of life, so the means of grace, are continued to us after they have been a thousand times forfeited. Now observe,

1. The rebellion of the people to whom this ambassador is sent; he is sent to reduce them to their allegiance, to bring back the children of Israel to the Lord their God; let the prophet know that there is occasion for his going on this errand, for they are a rebellious nation, (v. 3.) a rebellious house, v. 5. They are called children of Israel: they retain the name of their pious ancestors, but they are wretchedly degenerated, they are become the children of the Ethiopian, (Amos ix. 7.) for they are rebellious; and rebels at home are much more provoking to a prince than enemies abroad. Their idolatries and false worshipes were the sins which, more than any other, denominated them a rebellious nation; for thereby they set up another prince in opposition to their rightful Sovereign, and did homage and paid tribute to the usurper, which is the highest degree of rebellion that can be.

1. They had been all along a rebellious generation, and had persisted in their rebellion; They and their fathers have transgressed against me. Note, Those are not always in the right, that have antiquity and the fathers on their side; for there are errors and infirmities in religion and worship, that far from being an excuse for walking in a bad way, that our fathers walked in it, that it is really an aggravation, for it is justifying the sin of those that have gone before us. They have continued in their rebellion even unto this very day; notwithstanding the various means and methods that have been made use of to reclaim them, to this day, when they are under divine rebukes for their rebellion, they continue rebellious; many among them, like Alah, even in their distress, trespass yet more; they are not the better for all the changes that have befallen them, but still remain unchanged.

2. They were now hardened in their rebellion. They are impudent children, brazen-faced, and cannot blush; they are stiff-hearted, self-willed, and cannot bend, cannot stoop; neither use their reason, nor use their sin: they will not be wrought upon by the sense either of honour or duty. We are willing to hope this was not the character of all, but of many, and those perhaps the leading men. Observe, [1.] God knew this concerning them, how inflexible, how incorrigible, they were. Note, God is perfectly acquainted with every man's true character, whatever his pretensions and professions may be. [2.] He told the prophet this, that he might know better how to deal with them, and what handle to take them by. He must rebuke such men as those sharply, cuttingly; must deal plainly with them, though they call it dealing roughly. God tells him this, that it might be no surprise or stumbling-block to him, if he found that his preaching should make that impression upon them, which he had no reason to think it would.

2. The dominion of the Prince by whom this ambassador is sent. (1.) He has authority to command him whom he sends; I do send thee unto them, and therefore thou shalt say thus and thus unto them, v. 4. Note, It is the prerogative of Christ to send prophets and ministers to enforce them to repent, and to disorder the works of St. Paul thanked Christ Jesus who put him into the ministry; (1 Tim. i. 12.) for as he was sent of the Father, ministers are sent by him; and as he received the Spirit without measure, he gives the Spirit by measure, saying, Receive ye the Holy Ghost. They are impudent and rebellious, and yet I send thee unto them. Note, Christ gives the means of grace to many who he knows will not make a good use of these means; puts many a price into the hand of fools who have not only no heart to it, but have their hearts turned against it. Thus he will magnify his own grace, justify his own judgment, leave them inexusable, and make their condemnation more intolerable. (2.) He has authority by him to command those to whom he sends him; Thou shalt say unto them, Thou art sent from me, to thee I have sent him, to be sent; and the same that must be spoken in God's name, enforced by his authority, and delivered as from him. Christ delivered his doctrines as a Son; Verily, verily, I say unto you; the prophets, as servants. Thus saith the Lord God, our Master and yours. Note, The writings of the prophets are the word of God, and so are to be regarded by every one of us. (3.) He has authority to enjoin, and to require, that he sends his ambassadors. Whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, whether they will attend to the word, or turn their backs upon it, they shall know that there has been a prophet among them, shall know by experience. [1.] If they hear and obey, they will know by comfortable experience, that the word which did them good was brought them by one that had a commission from God, and a divine power going along with him in the execution of it. Thus they who were converted by St. Paul's preaching, are said to be seals of his apostleship, 1 Cor. ix. 2. When men's hearts are made to burn under the word, and their wills to bow to it, then they know and hear the witness in themselves, that it is not the word of men, but of God. [2.] If they forbear, if they turn a deaf ear to the word, (as it is to be feared they will, for they are a rebellious house,) yet they shall be made to know that he whom they slighted was indeed a prophet, by the reproaches of their own consciences, and the just judgments of God upon them for refusing him; they shall know it to their cost, know it to their confusion, know it by bad experience, what a persecutor of prophets, what a persecutor of God's messengers. They shall know by the accomplishment of the threatenings, that the prophet who denounced them was sent of God; thus the word will take hold of men, Zech. i. 6. Note, First, Those to whom the word of God is sent, are upon their trial, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, and accordingly their lot is decided. Secondly, whether they be heard by the word or no, it is certain that God will be glorified, and his word magnified and made honourable. Whether it be a savour of life unto life, or of death unto death, either way it will appear to be of divine original.

2. And thou, son of man, be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though briers and thorns be with thee, and thou dost dwell among scorpions: be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house. 7. And thou shalt speak my words unto them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear; for they are most rebellious. 8. But thou, son of man, hear what I say unto thee; Be not thou rebellious like that rebellious house: open thy mouth, and eat that I give thee. 9. And when I looked, behold, a hand was sent unto me; and, lo, a roll of a book was therein; 10. And he spread it before me: and it was written within and without; and there was written therein lamentations, and mourning, and wo.

The prophet, having received his commission, here receives a charge with it. It is a post of honour to which he is advanced, but withal it is a post of service and work, and it is here required of him, I. That he be bold. He must act in the discharge of this trust with an undaunted courage and resolution, and not be either driven off from his work, or made to drive on heavily, by the difficulties and oppositions that he would be likely to meet with in it; Son of man, be not afraid of them, v. 6. Note, Those that will do any thing to purpose in the service of God, must not be afraid of the face of man; for the fear of men will bring a snare, which will be very entangling to us in the work of God. 1. God tells the prophet what was the character of those to whom he was sent, and the care he must of the service thereof. They are briers and thorns, scratching, and tearing, and vexing a man, which way soever he turns. They are continually teasing God's prophets, and entangling them in their talk; (Matth. xxii. 15.) they are pricking briers and grieving thorns. The best of them is as a brier, and the most upright sharper than a thorn-hedge, Mic. vii. 4. Thorns and briers are the first of sin and sinners, and of all the wild beasts that stir abroad with the enmity between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent. Note, Wicked men, especially the persecutors of God's prophets and people, are as briers and thorns, which are hurtful to the ground, choke the good seed, hinder God's husbandry, are vexatious to his husbandmen; but they are nigh unto cursing, and their end is to be burned: yet God makes use of them sometimes for the correction and instruction of his people, as Gideon taught the men of Succoth with thorns and briers, Judg. viii. 16. Yet this is not the worst of their character, they are scorpions, venomous and malignant; the sting of a scorpion is a thousand times more hurtful than the scratch of a brier. Persecutors are a generation of vipers, are of the serpent's seed, and his works, and his end is to be burned. A generation of vipers are more subtle than any beast of the field. And, which makes the prophet's case the more grievous, he dwells among these scorpions; they are continually about him, so that he cannot be safe or quiet in his own house; these bad men are his bad neighbours, who thereby have many opportunities, and will let slip none to do him a mischief. God takes occasion of this to the prophet, as Christ of the angel of one of the churches; (Rev. ii. 13.) I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is. Ezekiel had been, in vision, conversing with angels, but when he comes down from this mount, he finds he dwelleth with scorpions. 2. He tells him what would be their conduct towards him, that they would do what they could to frighten him with their looks and their words; they would hector him and threaten him, would look scornfully and spitefully at him, and do their utmost to face him down, and put him out of countenance, that they might drive him off from being a prophet, or at least from fulfilling the office of theirs, and thereby impeach them with the judgments of God; or, if they could not prevail in this, that they might vex and perplex him, and disturb the repose of his mind. They were now themselves in subjection, dishonored of all power, so that they had no other way of persecuting the prophet than with their looks and their words; and so they did persecute him. Be- hold, thou hast spoken nothing but the words of the Lord, and he will proceed to punish them. If they had had more power they would have done more mischief. They were now in captivity, smarting for their rebellion, and particularly their misusing of God's prophets; and yet they are as bad as ever. Though thou bray a fool in a mortar, yet will not his foolishness depart from him; no providences will of themselves humble and reform men, unless the grace of God work with them. But, how malicious soever they were, Ezekiel must not be afraid of them, nor dismayed, he must not be deterred from his work, or any part of it, nor be disheartened or dispirited in it by all their menaces, but go on in it with resolution and cheerfulness, assuring himself of safety under the divine protection.

II. It is required that he be faithful, v. 7. 1. He must be faithful to Christ who sent him; Thou shalt speak my words unto them. Note, As it is the honour of prophets, that they are intrusted to speak God's words, so it is their duty to cleave closely to them, and to speak nothing but what is agreeable to the words of God; ministers must always speak according to that rule. 2. He must be faithful to the souls of those to whom he was sent; whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, he must deliver his message to them as he had received it. He must bring them to comply with the word, and not study to accommodate the word to their humour.

"It is true, they are most rebellious, they are rebellion itself; but, however, speak my words to them, whether they are pleasing or unpleasing." Note, The untractableness and unprofitableness of people under the word, are no good reasons why ministers should leave their message to them as they receive it. He must bring them to comply with the word, and not study to accommodate the word to their humour.

III. It is required that he be observant of his instructions.

1. Here is a general intimation what the instructions were, that were given him, in the contents of the book which was spread before him. His instructions were large, for the roll was written within and without, on the inside and on the outside of the roll; it was as a sheet of paper written on all the four sides. One side contained their sins, the other side contained the judgments of God coming upon them for these sins. Note, God has a great deal to say to his people when they are degenerate and become rebellious. (2) His instructions were melancholy; he was to carry an errand; the matter contained in the book was, lamentations, and mourning, and woe. The idea of his message is taken from the impression it would make upon the minds of those that carefully attended to it; it would set them a weeping and crying out, Woe, and, Ahaz! Both the discoveries of sin and the denunciations of wrath would be matter of lamentations. What could be more lamentable, more mournful, more pitiful, than to see a holy, happy people sunk into such a state of sin and misery, as it appears by the prophecy of this book the Jews were at this time? Ezekiel echoes to Jeremiah's lamentations. Note, Though God is rich in mercy, yet ineptinent sinners will find there are even among his words lamentations and woe.

2. Here is an express charge given the prophet to observe his instructions, both in receiving his message and delivering it. He is now to receive it, and is here commanded.

(1.) To attend diligently to it; Son of man, hear what I say unto thee, v. 8. Note, Those that speak from God to others, must be sure to hear from God themselves, and be obedient to his voice; Be not thou rebellious; do not refuse to go on this errand, or to deliver it; do not fly off, as Jonah did, for fear of misusing the commission he had with a rebellious hand, among them that livest; but be not thou like him, do not comply with them in any thing that is evil. If ministers, who are reprovers by office, concomitant at sin, and indulge sinners, either show them not their wickedness, or show them not the fatal consequences of it, for fear of despising them, and getting their ill-will, they hereby make themselves partakers of their guilt, and are rebellious like them. If people will not do their duty in reforming, yet let ministers do theirs in reproving, and they will have the comfort of it in the reflection, whatever the success be, as that prophet had; (Isa. i. 5.) The Lord God has opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious. Even the best men, when their lot is cast in bad times and places, have need to be cautioned against the worst crimes.

(2.) To open his own mouth by an experience of the favour and power of it; "Do not only hear what I say unto thee, but often thy mouth, and eat that I give thee. Prepare to eat it, and eat it willingly, and with an appetite." All God's children are content to be at their heavenly Father's finding, and to eat whatever he gives them. That which God's hand reached out to Ezekiel, was, a roll of a book, or the volume of a book, or scroll of paper or parchment full written, and rolled up. Divine revelation comes to us from the hand of Christ, he gave it the prophets, Rev. i. 1. When we look at the roll of the book, we must have an eye to the hand by which it is sent to us. He that brought it to the prophet, spread it before him, that he might not swallow it with an implicit faith, but might fully understand the contents of it, and so receive it, and make it his own. Be not rebellious, says Christ, but eat what I give thee. If we receive not what Christ in his ordinances and providences allots for us, if we submit not to his word and rod, and reconcile not ourselves to both, we shall be accounted rebellious.

CHAP. III.

In this chapter we have the further preparation of the prophet for the work to which God called him. 1. His calling of the roll that was presented to him in the close of the foregoing chapter, v. 1.-3. 2. Further instructions and encouragements given him to the same purpose with those in the foregoing chapter, v. 4.-11. 3. The mighty impulse and powerful means by which he was carried to those that were to be his hearers, v. 12.-15. 4. A further explication of his office and business as a prophet, under the similitude of a man carrying a burden, with which he was charged to be his own, v. 16. 5. The restraining of the prophet's liberty of speech, as God pleased, v. 22.-27.

1. Moreover, he said unto me, Son of man, eat that thou findest: eat this roll, and go speak unto the house of Israel. 2. So I opened my mouth, and he caused me to eat that roll. 3. And he said unto me, Son of man, cause thy belly to eat, and fill thy bowels with this roll that I give thee. Then did I eat it; and it was in my mouth as honey for sweetness.
he said unto me, Son of man, go, get thee unto the house of Israel, and speak with my words unto them. 5. For thou art not sent to a people of a strange speech, and of a hard language, but to the house of Israel. 6. Not to many people of a strange speech, and of a hard language, whose words thou canst not understand: surely, had I sent thee to them, they would have hearkened unto thee. 7. But the house of Israel will not hearken unto thee; for they will not hearken unto me: for all the house of Israel are impudent and hard-hearted. 8. Behold, I have made thy face strong against their faces, and thy forehead strong against their foreheads. 9. As an adamant, harder than flint, have I made thy forehead: fear them not, neither be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house. 10. Moreover, he said unto me, Son of man, all my words that I shall speak unto thee receive in thy heart, and hear with thine ears. 11. And go, get thee to them of the captivity, unto thy people, and speak with them, and tell them, Thus saith the Lord God, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear. 12. Then the spirit took me up, and I heard behind me a voice of a great rushing, saying, Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place. 13. I heard also the noise of the wings of the living creatures that touched one another, and the noise of the wheels over against them, and a noise of a great rushing. 14. So the spirit lifted me up, and took me away, and I went in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit; but the hand of the Lord was strong upon me. 15. Then I came to them of the captivity at Telcabib, that dwelt by the river of Chebar, and I sat where they sat, and remained there astonished among them seven days.

These verses are fully joined by some translators to the foregoing chapter, as being of a piece with it, and a continuation of the same vision. The prophets received the words from God, that they might deliver them to the people of God; furnished themselves, that they might furnish them, with the knowledge of the mind and will of God. Now here the prophet is taught:

1. How he must receive divine revelation himself. v. 1. Christ (whom he saw upon the throne, ch. i. 26.) said to him, "Son of man, eat this roll; admit this revelation into thine understanding, take it, take the meaning of it, understand it: admit it into thy heart, apply it, and be affected with it; imprint it in thy mind, ruminate and chew the cud upon it; take it as it is entire, make no difficulty of it, nay, take a pleasure in it as thou dost in thy meat, and let thy soul be nourished and strengthened by it; let it be meat and drink to thee, and as thy necessary food; be full of it, as thou art of the meat thou hast eaten." Thus ministers should in their studies and meditations take in that word of God, which they are to preach to others; Thy words were found, and I did eat them, Jer. xv. 16. Thy must be both well acquainted and much affected with the things of God, that they may speak of them both clearly and warmly, with a great deal of divine light and heat. Now observe,

1. How this command is inculcated upon the prophet. In the chapter before, Eat what I give thee; and here, v. 1. "Eat that thou findest, that which is presented to thee by the hand of Christ." Note, Whatever we find to be the word of God, whatever is brought to us by him who is the Word of God, we must receive without disputing. What we find set before us in the scripture, that we must eat. And again, (v. 3.) "Cause thy belly to eat, and fill thy bowels with this roll do not eat it and bring it up again, as that which is nauseous, but eat it, and retain it, as that which is most grateful to the stomach. Feast upon this vision till thou be full of matter, (as Elihu was, Job xxxii. 18.) Let the word have a place in thee, in the innermost place. We must take pains with our own hearts, that we may cause them a duty to receive and entertain the word of God, that every faculty may be employed in its cause, in order to the due digesting of the word of God. It may not only be sanguineus into blood and spirits. We must empty ourselves of worldly things, that we may fill our bowels with this roll.

2. How this command is explained; (v. 10.) All my words that I shall speak unto thee, to be spoken unto the people, thou must receive in thine heart, as well as hear with thine ears, receive them in the love of them. I have set thee to be a mouth piece into your ears, Luke ix. 44. Christ demands the prophet's attention not only to what he now says, but to all that he shall at any time hereafter speak; Receive it all in thine heart, meditate on these things, and give thyself wholly to them, 1 Tim. iv. 15.

3. How this command was obeyed in vision. He opened his mouth, and Christ caused him to eat the roll, v. 2. If we be truly willing to receive the word into our hearts, Christ will by his Spirit bring it into them, and cause it to dwell in us richly. If he that opens the roll, and by his Spirit, as a Spirit of revelation, spreads it before us, did not also open our understanding, and by his Spirit, as a Spirit of wisdom, give us the knowledge of it, and cause us to eat it, we should be for ever strangers to it. The prophet had been so fully to fear that the roll would be an unpleasant morsel and a sorry dish to make a meal of, but it proved to be in his mouth as honey for sweetness. Note, If we readily obey even the most difficult commands, we shall find that comfort in the reflection, which will make us abundant amends for all the hardships we met with in the way of our duty. Though the roll was filled with lamentations, and mourning, and woe; yet it was to the prophet as honey for sweetness. Note, Gracious souls can receive these truths of God with great delight, which speak most terrific to wicked people. We find St. John let into some part of the revelation by such a sign as this, Rev. x. 9, 10. He took the book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up, and it was, thus here, in his mouth sweet as honey; but it was bitter in his stomach and made him sick. It was so too, for (v. 14.) the prophet went in bitterness.

11. How he must deliver that divine revelation to others, which he himself had received; (v. 1.) Eat this roll, and then go, speak to the house of Israel. 1. He must not undertake to preach the things of God to others, till he did himself fully understand them; let him first examine the roll by bringing it by the hand of Christ, and then give it by the hand of Christ: 2. When he does himself fully understand them, he must be both busy and bold to preach them for the good of others. We must not conceal the words of the Holy One, (Job vi. 10.) for that is burying a talent which was given us to trade with. He must go, and speak to the house of Israel, for it is their privilege to have God's statutes and judgments made known to them; as the giving of the law, (the lively oracles,) so prophecy, (the living oracle,) pertaineth to them. He is not sent to the Chaldeans to represent them for their sin, but to the house of Israel because he recites them for theirs; for the father corrects his own child if he do amiss, not the child of a stranger.

The instructions given him in speaking to them are much the same with those in the foregoing chapter.

(1.) He must speak to them all that, and that only, which God spake to him. He had said before, (v. 1.) Thou shalt speak my words to them; here he says, (v. 4.) Thou shalt speak my words unto them; or, in my words. He must not only say that which for substance is the same that God had said to him, but as near as may be in the same language and expressions. Blessed Paul, though a man of a very happy invention, yet speaks of the things of God in the words which the Holy Ghost teaches, I Cor. ii. 6, and, (1 Cor. ii. 13.) he had been a Hindoo himself, nay, had been of a Hindoo's native dress, and how can we better speak God's mind than with his words?

(2.) He must remember that they are the house of Israel, whom he is sent to speak to; God's house, and his own; and therefore such as he ought to have a particular concern for, and to deal faithfully and tenderly with; they were such as he had converse with, not only their countryman, but their companion in tribulation; they and he were fellow-sufferers, and had lately been fellow-travellers, in very melancholy circumstances, from Judea to Babylon, and had often mingled their tears, which could not but knit their affections to each other. It was well for the people that they had a prophet who knew experimentally how to sympathize with them, and could not but be touched with the feeling of their infirmities; it was well for the prophet that he had to do with those of his own nation, not with a people of strange speech and a hard language; deep of lip, so that thou canst not fathom their meaning, and heavy of tongue, whom it is intolerable and impossible to converse with. Every strange language seems to us to be deep and heavy. Thou art sent to many such people, whom thou shouldest neither speak to nor hear from, neither understand nor be understood among, but by an interpreter. The apostles indeed were sent to many people of a strange speech, but they could not have done any good among them if they had not had the gift of tongues; but Ezekiel was sent only to one people, those but a few, and his own, whom having acquaintance with, he might hope to find acquaintance with; and this will make it more easy for him to their profit; for, (2 Cor. vi. 14.) they must come to God, or he will not come to them.

(3.) He must remember what God had already told him of the bad character of those to whom he was sent, that if he met with discouragement and disappointment in them, he might not be offended. They are impudent and hard-hearted; (v. 7.) no convictions of sin would make them blush, no de- nummulations of wrath would make them tremble. They were not only, (v. 1.) thoughtless of their obstinacy; (1.) They were more obstinate than their neighbours would have been, if the prophet had been sent to them. Had God sent him to any other people, though of a strange speech, surely they would have hearkened to him, they would at least have given him a patient hearing, and showed him that respect which he could not obtain of his own countrymen. The Ninevites were wrought upon by Jonah's preaching, when the house of Israel, that was composed but with so great a cloud of prophets, was unhumbled and unrefromed. But what shall we say to these things? The means of grace are given to those that will not improve them, and withheld from those that have would improved them. We must resolve this into the divine sovereignty, and say, Lord, thy judgments are a great deep. [2.] That they were obstinate against God himself; They will not hear me unto thee, and no marvel, for they will not hearken unto me, (v. 7.) nor regard the word of the prophet, for they will not regard the rod of God, by which the Lord's voice cries in the city. If they believe not God speaking to them by a minister, neither would they believe though he should speak to them by a voice from heaven; may, therefore they reject what the prophet says, because it comes from God, whom the carnal heart is ever set against, and is ever justly condemned against the law of God, and for that reason turn a deaf ear to his prophets, whose business it is to enforce his law.

(4.) He must resolve to put on courage, and Christ promises to steel him with it, v. 8, 9. He is sent to such as are impudent and hard-hearted, who will receive no impressions, nor be wrought upon, either by his voice or his actions; for he, who will take a pride in affronting God's messengers, uses to do the same in the message. It will be a hard task to know how to deal with them; but [1.] God will enable him to put a good face on it; "I have made thy face strong against their faces, ended thee with all the firmness and boldness that the case calls for." Perhaps Ezekiel was naturally bashful and timorous, but if God did not find him fit, yet by his grace he made him fit, to encounter the greatest and most difficult tasks. The more impudent wicked people are in their opposition to religion, the more openly and resolutely should God's people appear in the practice and defence of it. Let the innocent stir up himself against the hypocrite, Job xvii. 8. When vice is daring, let not virtue be sneaking. And when God has work to do, he will spirit men for it, and give them strength according to the day. If there be occasion, God can and will by his grace make the foreheads of faithful ministers as an adamantine, so that the most threatening powers shall not dash them out of countenance. The Lord God will help me, therefore have I set my face like a flint, Isa. i. 7. [2.] He is therefore commanded to have a good heart on it, and to go on in his work with a holy security, not valuing himself, nor measuring the power of his enemies; "Fear not, neither be dismayed at their counsel, nor at the noisome counsels that drive away a backbiting tongue, give any check to a reproving tongue."

(5.) He must continue instant with them in his preaching, whatever the success was, v. 11. He must go to them of the captivity, who, being in affliction, it was to be hoped would receive instruction; he must look upon them as the children of his house, the children of his heart. They were not the angry or not the angry counsels that drive away a backbiting tongue, give any check to a reproving tongue.

(6.) He must continue instant with them in his preaching, whatever the success was, v. 11. He must go to them of the captivity, who, being in affliction, it was to be hoped would receive instruction; he must look upon them as the children of his house, the children of his heart. They were not the angry or not the angry counsels that drive away a backbiting tongue, give any check to a reproving tongue.
are some so good, that we do not need to speak to them;" or, "Here are others so bad, that it is no purpose to speak to them;" but, however it be, deliver thy message faithfully, tell them, the Lord God saith so and so, let them reject it at their peril.

Full instructions being thus given to the prophet, pursuant to his commission, we are here told,

[3.] With what satisfaction this mission of his was applauded by the holy angels, who were very well pleased to see one, of a nature inferior to their own, thus honourably employed and intrusted. He heard a voice of a great rushing, (v. 12.) as if the angels were thronged and crowded together on the presentation of a prophet; for to them is known by the church, that is, by reflection from the church, the manifold wisdom of God, Eph. iii. 10. They seemed to strive who should get nearest to this great sight. He heard the noise of their wings that touched, or, as the word is, kissed, one another; denoting the mutual affections and assiduities of the angels. He heard also the noise of the wheels of Providence moving over against the angels, and in concert with them.

All this was to engage his attention, and to convince him that the God who sent him, having such a glorious train of attendants, no doubt had power sufficient to bear him out in his work. But all this noise ended in the voice of praise; he heard them saying, Blessed be the glory of the Lord from hence to hence: and it was repeated, and whenever his glory was now in vision descending, or whither perhaps it was now returning. Let the innumerable company of angels above join with those employed in this vision, in saying, Blessed be the glory of the Lord. Praise ye the Lord from the heavens. Praise him, all his angels, Ps. cxlviii. 1, 2.

Secondly, From the temple, his palace on earth, whither he was intrusted, he came to the temple of God, the sanctuary of the glory of the Lord. He said, Behold the glory of the Lord is now in the temple of God. Wherefore the temple was no more called the temple, but the house of God; and the law of God was no more called the word of God, but the word of the Lord, 2 Sam. vii. 25. He had received the assurance that God took him by name, and was sent, not to perform any work, but to fit him for it, to carry him through it, and animate him against the difficulties he would meet with; (so we may understand it) and when he found it so, he was better reconciled to his business, and applied himself to it; then he came to them of the captivity, (v. 15.) to some place where there were many of them together, and he would speak to them, which was the more occasion, or talking, and continued among them seven days, to hear what they said, and observe what they did; and all that time he was waiting for the word of the Lord to come to him. Note, Those that would speak suitably and profitably to people about their souls, must acquaint themselves with them, and with their case; must do as Ezekiel did here, must sit where they sit, must be familiarly to them of the things of God, and put themselves into their condition, yea, though they sit by the rivers of Babylon. But observe, He was there astonished, overwhelmed with grief for the sins and miseries of his people, and overpowered by the pomp of the vision he had seen: he was there desolate; (so some read it) God showed him no visions, men made him no visitations, and he was left to digest his grief, and come to a better temper, before the word of the Lord should come to him. Note, Those whom God designs to exalt and enlarge, he first humbles and straitens for a time.

16. And it came to pass, at the end of seven days, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 17. Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me. 18. When I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning, nor speakest to warn the wicked from his wicked way, to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity: but his blood will I require at thy hand. 19. Yet if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity: but thou hast delivered thy soul. 20. Again, when a righteous man doth turn from his righteousness, and commit iniquity, and I lay a stumbling-block before him, he shall die: because thou hast not given him warning, he shall die in his sin, and his righteousness which he hath done shall not be remembered; but his blood will I require at thy hand. 21. Nevertheless, if thou warn the righteous man, that the righteous sin not, and he doth not sin, he shall surely live, because he is warned: also thou hast delivered thy soul.

These further instructions God gave to the prophet at the end of seven days; that is, on the seventh day after the vision he had; and it is very probable, that both that and this were on the sabbath-day, which the house of Israel, even in their captivity, observed as well as they could in those circumstances: we do not find that their conquerors and oppressors tied them to any constant service, as their Egyptian taskmasters had formerly done, but that they might observe the sabbath-rest, for a sign to distinguish between them and their neighbours; but for the sabbath-work, they had not the convenience of temple or synagogue, only it should seem they had a river by the river side, where prayer was wont to be made; (as Acts xvi. 13.) there they met on the sabbath-day, there their enemies upbraided them with the songs of Zion; (Ps. cxxxvii. 1, 3.) there Ezekiel met them, and the word of the Lord then and there came to him. He that had been musing and meditating on the things of God all the week, was fit to speak to the people in God's name on the sabbath-day, and disposed to hear God speak to him.

This sabbath-day Ezekiel was not so honoured with visions of the glory of God as he had been the sabbath before; but is plainly, and by a very common similitude, told his duty, which he is to communicate to the people. Note, Raptures and transports of joy are not the daily bread of God's children, as was by the river side, where prayer was wont to be made; but the prophet's visions were not to be compared with them. We must not deny that we have true communion with God, (1 John i. 3.) though we have it not always so sensibly as at some times. And though the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven may sometimes be looked into, yet ordinarily, it is plain preaching that is most for edification. God here tells the prophet what his office was, and what the duty of that office; and this (we may suppose) he was to tell the people, that they might attend to what he said, and improve it accordingly. Note, It is good for people to know and consider what a charge their ministers have of them, and what an account they must shortly give of that charge. Observe,

What the office is to which the prophet is called; Son of man, I have made thee a watchman to the house of Israel, v. 17. The vision he saw astonished him, he knew not what to make of that, and therefore God used this plain comparison, which served better to lead him to the understanding of his work, and so to reconcile him to it. He sat among the captives, and said little, but God comes to him, and tells him that will not do, he is a watchman, and has something to say to them; he is appointed to be as a watchman in the city, to guard against fire, robbers, and disturbances of the peace; as a watchman over the flock, to guard against thieves and beasts of prey; but especially as a watchman in the camp, in an invaded country or a besieged town, that is to watch the motions of the enemy, and to sound an alarm upon the approach, nay, upon the first appearance, of danger. This supposes the house of Israel to be in a military state, and exposed to enemies, who are subtle and restless in their attempts upon it; yea, and each of the particular members of that house to be in danger, and concern to stand upon their guard. Note, Ministers are watchmen on the church's walls, (Isa. lxxii. 6.) watchmen that go about the city, Cant. iii. 3. It is a toilsome office; watchmen must keep awake, be they ever so sleepy, and keep abroad, be it ever so cold; they must stand all weathers upon the watch-tower, Isa. xxi. 8. Gen. xxxi. 40. It is a dangerous office; sometimes they cannot keep their post, but are in peril of death from the enemy, who gain their point if they kill the sentinel; and yet they dare not quitt their post upon pain of death from their general; such a dilemma are the church's watchmen in; men will curse them if they be faithful, and God will curse them if they be false. But it is a needful office; the house of Israel cannot be safe without watchmen, and yet, except the Lord keep it, the watchman waketh but in vain, Ps. cxvii. 1, 2.

II. What is the duty of this office. The work of a watchman is to take notice, and to give notice.

1. The prophet, as a watchman, must take notice of what God said concerning this people, not only concerning the body of the people, to which the prophecies of Jeremiah and other prophets had most application; but also concerning the children of Israel, sometimes, according as their character was; he must not, as other watchmen, look round to spy danger, and gain intelligence, but he must look up to God, and further he need not look; Hear the word at my mouth, v. 17. Note, Those that are to preach, must first hear; for how can they teach others, who have not first learned themselves.

2. He must give notice of what he heard; that he had eyes in his head, so he must have a tongue in his head; if he be dumb, it is as bad as if he were blind, Isa. liv. 10. Thou shalt give them warning from me, sound an alarm in the holy mountain; not in his own name, or as from himself, but in God's name, and from him. Ministers are God's mouth to the children of men. The preaching of the word must be a voice of warning; By them is thy servant warned, Ps. xix. 11. But because that which is delivered vivat voce—by the living voice, commonly makes the deepest impression, God is pleased, by men like ourselves, who are equally concerned, to enforce upon us the warnings of the written word.

Now the prophet, in his preaching, must distinguish between the wicked and the righteous, the precious and the vile, and in his applications must suit his alarms to each, giving every one his portion; if he did this, he should have the comfort of it, whatever the success was, but if not, he was accountable.

(1.) Some of those he had to do with, were wicked, and he must warn them not to go on in their wickedness, but to turn from it, v. 18, 19. We may observe here,

[1.] That the God of heaven has said, and does say, to every wicked man, that if he go on still in his trespasses, he shall surely die; his iniquity shall undoubtedly be his ruin, it tends to ruin, and will end in ruin. Dying thou shalt die, thou shalt die so great a death, shall die eternally, be never dying, but never dead. The wicked man shall die in his iniquity, shall die under the guilt of it, die under the dominion of it.

[2.] That if a wicked man turn from his wickedness, and from his wicked way, he shall live, and the ruin he is threatened with shall be prevented; and that he may do so, he is warned of the danger.
The wicked man shall die if he go on, but shall live if he repent. Observe, He is to turn from his wickedness, and from his wicked way. It is not enough for a man to turn from his wicked way by an outward reformation, which may be the effect of his sins leaving him, rather than of his leaving his sins, but he must turn from his wickedness, from the love of it, and the inclination to it, by an inward regeneration; if he do not so much as turn from his wicked way, there is little hope that he will turn from his wickedness.

[5.] That it is the duty of ministers both to warn sinners of the danger of sin, and to assure them of this by special instances; to set before them how miserable they are if they go on in sin, and how happy they may be if they will but repent and reform. Note, The ministry of the word is concerning matters of life and death, for those are the things it sets before us, the blessing and the curse, that we may escape the curse, and inherit the blessing.

[6.] That though ministers do not warn wicked people as they ought of their misery and danger, yet that shall not be admitted as an excuse for those that go on still in their trespasses; for though the watchman did not give them warning, yet they shall die in their iniquity; for they had sufficient warning given them by the providence of God and their own consciences; if they would have taken it, they might have saved their lives.

[7.] The warning of ministers should be faithful to their trust. If they do not warn sinners of the fatal consequences of sin, but suffer them to go on unreproved, the blood of those that perish through their carelessness, will be required at their hand; it shall be charged upon them in the day of account, that it was owing to their unfaithfulness that such and such people had come to destruction by their sins. But if they had had fair warning given them, they might have fled in time from the wrath to come: And if it contract so heinous a guilt as it does to be necessary to the murder of a dying body, what is it to be accessory to the ruin of an immortal soul?

[8.] That if ministers do their duty in giving warning to sinners, though the warning be not taken, yet they may have this satisfaction, that they are clear from their blood, and have delivered their own souls, though they cannot prevail to deliver theirs. Those that are faithful, shall have their reward, though they be not successful.

[9.] Some of those he had to deal with were righteous, at least he had reason to think, in a judgment of charity, that they were so; and he must warn them not to apostatize and turn away from their righteousness, v. 20. 21. We may observe here,

[1.] That the best men in the world have need to be warned against apostasy, and to be told of the danger they are in of it, and the danger they are in by it. God's servants must be warned, (Ps. xix. 12.) God's servants have need of the word of God's service. One good means to keep us from falling is, to keep up a holy fear of falling, Heb. iv. 1. Let us therefore fear; and (Rom. xi. 20.) even those that stand by faith, must not be high-minded, but fear, and must therefore be warned.

[2.] There is a righteousness which a man may turn from, a seeming righteousness; from which if men turn, they appear to be saints, and to be not liable to condemnation. One good means to keep us from falling is, to keep up a holy fear of falling, Heb. iv. 1. Let us therefore fear; and (Rom. xi. 20.) even those that stand by faith, must not be high-minded, but fear, and must therefore be warned.

[3.] When men turn from their righteousness, they soon learn to commit iniquity. When they grow careless and remiss in the duties of God's worship, neglect them, or are negligent in them, they become an easy prey to the tempter. Omissions make way for commissions.

[5.] When men turn from their righteousness, and commit iniquity, it is just with God to lay stumbling-blocks before them, that they may grow worse and worse, till they are ripened for destruction. When Pharaoh hardened his heart, God hardened it. When sinners turn their back upon God, desert his service, and so cast a reproach upon it, he does, in a way of righteous judgment, not only withdraw his restraining grace, and give them up to their own hearts' lust, but order them by his providence into such circumstances as are fitted to make them feel and see their ruin. There are those to whom Christ himself is a Stone of stumbling and a Rock of offence, 1 Pet. ii. 8.

[5.] The righteousness which men relinquish, shall never be remembered to their honour and comfort; it will stand them in no stead in this world or the other. Apostates lose all that they have wrought, their services and sufferings are all in vain, and shall never be brought to an account, because not continued in. It is a rule in the law, Pactum non dicatur, quod non perseveravit; We do that, and that only, which we do perseveringly, Gal. iii. 3, 4.

[6.] If ministers do not give fair warning, as they ought, of the weakness of the best, their aptness to apostasize, and the pernicious end of it, the people shall be left to themselves, and the fatal consequences of apostasy, the ruin of those that do apostatize will be laid at their door, and they shall answer for it. Not but that there are those who are warned against it, and yet turn from their righteousness; but that case is not put here, as was concerning the wicked man; but, on the contrary, that a righteous man, being warned, turns from his good walk, and does sin (v. 21.) for if you give instruction to a wise man, he will be yet wiser. We must not only not flatter the wicked, but not even flatter the righteous, as if they were perfectly safe any where on this side heaven.

[7.] If ministers give warning, and people take it, it is well for both; nothing is more beautiful than a wise reprover upon an obedient ear; the one shall live because he was warned, and the other delivered his soul. What can a good minister desire more than to save himself, and those that hear him? 1 Tim. iv. 16.

22. And the hand of the Lord was there upon me; and he said unto me, Arise, go forth into the plain, and I will there talk with thee. 23. Then I arose, and went forth into the plain; and, behold, the glory of the Lord stood there, as the glory which I saw by the river Chebar: and I fell on my face. 24. Then the spirit entered into me, and set me upon my feet, and spake with me, and said unto me, Go, shut thyself within thy house. 25. But thou, O son of man, behold, they shall put bands upon thee, and shall bind thee with them, and thou shalt not go out among them: 26. And I will make thy tongue cleave to the roof of thy mouth, that thou shalt be dumb, and shalt not be to them a reprover; for they are a rebellious house. 27. But when I speak with thee, I will open thy mouth, and thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God. He that heareth, let him hear;
and he that forbeareth, let him forbear: for they are a rebellious house.

After all this large and magnificent discovery when God had made all things to have a prophet, and the fulness that he had given him how to deal with those to whom he sent him with an ample commission, we should have expected presently to see him preaching the word of God to a great congregation of Israel; but here we find it quite otherwise. His work here, at first, seems not at all proportionable to the pomp of his call.

1. We have him here required for further learning. By his unwillingness to go, it should seem as if he were not so thoroughly convinced as he might have been of the ability of that him to sent him to bear him out; and therefore, to hearten him against the difficulties he foresaw, God will favour him with another vision of his glory, which (if any thing) would put life into him, and animate him for his work. In order to this, God calls him out to the plain, (v. 22.) and there he will have some talk with him. See and admire the condescension of a God in conversing thus familiarly with a man, a son of man, a poor captive, nay, with a sinful man, who, when God sent him, went in bitterness of spirit, and was at this time out of humour with his work! And let us own ourselves for ever indebted to the mediation of Christ for this blessed intercourse and communion between God and man; between heaven and earth. See here the benefit of solicitude, and how much it befriends contemplation! It is very comfortable to be alone with God, withdrawn from the world for converse with him; to hear him, to speak to him; and a good man will say, I am never less alone, than when thus alone.

Ezekiel went forth into the plain more willingly than he went among them of the captivity; (v. 15.) for he now knew, but he could not say, that God, with God, cannot but prefer that before any converse with this world, especially such as is commonly met with. He went out into the plain, and there he saw the same vision that he had seen by the river of Chebar; for God is not tied to places. Note, Those who follow God shall meet with his consolations, wherever they go. God called him out of Babylon, and he followed God, and showed him his glory, v. 23. We are not now to expect such visions, but, we must own that we have a favour done us no way inferior, if we so by faith behold the glory of the Lord, as to be changed into the same image, by the Spirit of the Lord; and this honour have all his saints. Praise ye the Lord, 2 Cor. iii. 18.

II. We have him here restrained from further teaching for the present. When he saw the glory of the Lord, he fell on his face, being struck with an awe of God's majesty, and a dread of his displeasure; but the Spirit entered into him to raise him up, and then he recovered himself, and got upon his feet, and heard what the Spirit whispered to him, which is very surprising. One would have expected, that God should send him directly to the chief place of converse, should give him favour in the eyes of his brethren, and make him and his message acceptable to them; that he should have a wider door of opportunity opened to him, and that God should give him a door of utterance to open his mouth boldly; but what is here said to him is the reverse of all this.

But, instead of sending him to a public assembly, he orders him to confine himself to his own lodgings: Go, shut thyself within thy house, v. 24. He was not willing to appear in public, and when he did, the people did not regard him, nor show him the respect he deserved, and, as a just rebuke to him and them, to him for his shyness of them, and to them for their coldness toward him, God forbids him to appear in public. Note, Our choice is often made our punishment; and it is a righteous thing with God to remove teachers into corners, when they, or their people, or both, grow indifferent to solemn assemblies. We find that the claim of Judah's visitation by, and before him, sometimes his house, (ch. viii. 1.) to be witnesses of his ecstasies; but it was not till ch. xi. 25, that he spake to them of the captivity all the things that the Lord had showed him. Note, Those that are called to preach must find time to study, and a great deal of time too; must often shut themselves up in their houses, that they may give attendance to reading and meditation, and so their profiting may appear to all.

2. Instead of securing him an interest in the esteem and affection of those to whom he sent him, he tells them that they shall put bands upon him, and bind him, (v. 25.) either, (1.) As a criminal; they shall bind him in order to the further punishing of him as a disturber of the peace; though they were thereupon sent into bondage in Babylon for persecuting the people, but met them with the sword; or, (2.) As a distracted man; they would go about to bind him as one beside himself; for to that they imputed his violent motions in his raptures. The captains asked Jehu, Wherefore came this mad fellow unto thee? Festus said to Paul, Thou art beside thyself; and so they said of our Lord Jesus, Mark iii. 21. Perhaps this was the way they saw him, when, in his greatest joy, he must keep within doors, and be not alone; or, otherwise they would bind him, under pretence of his being mad, and therefore he must not go out among them. Justly are prophets forbidden to go to those that will abuse them.

3. Instead of opening his lips, that his mouth might show forth God's praise, God silenced him, made his tongue cleave to the roof of his mouth, so that he was not able to speak. The pious captives in Babylon used this imprecation upon themselves, that if they should forget Jerusalem, their tongue might cleave to the roof of their mouth, Ps. cxxxvii. 6. Ezekiel remembers Jerusalem more than any of them, and yet his tongue cleaves to the roof his mouth; and he that can speak best is forbidden to speak at all; and the reason given is, because they are a rebellious house to whom he is sent, and they are not worthy to have him for a reprover. He shall not give them instructions and admonitions, for they are lost and thrown away upon them. He is before commanded to speak boldly to them, because they are most rebellious; (ch. ii. 7.) but since that proves to no purpose, he is now for that reason enjoined silence, and shall not speak at all to them. Note, They whose hearts are hardened against conviction, are justly deprived of the means of conviction. Why should not the reprovers be dumb, if, after long trials, it be found that the reproved resolve to be deaf? If Ephraim be joined to idols, let him alone. Thou shalt be dumb, and not be a reprover; implying, that unless he were dumb, he would be reproving; if he could speak at all, they would witness against the wickedness of the wicked.

But when God speaks with him, and designs to speak by him, he will open his mouth, v. 27. Note, Though God's prophets may be silenced awhile, there will come a time when God will give them the opening of the mouth again. And when God speaks to his ministers, he not only opens their ears to hear what he says, but opens their mouth to return an answer. Moses, who had a veil on his face when he went down to the people, took it off when he went up again to God; Exod. xxxiv. 4.

4. Instead of giving him assurance of success when he should at any time speak to the people, he here leaves the matter very doubtful, and Ezekiel must not perpety; and disquiet himself about it, but let it be as it will; He that hears, let him hear, and he is welcome to the comfort of it; let him hear, and his soul shall live; but he that forbears, let him forbear; his people, and in those words of the song, thou alone shalt hear it, ne'er God nor his prophet shall be any losers by it; but the prophet shall be rewarded for his faithfulness in re-proofing the sinner, and God will have the glory of his justice in condemning him for not taking the re-proof.

CHAP. IV.

Ezekiel was now among the captives in Babylon, and they there had Jerusalem still upon their hearts; the pious captives looked toward it with an eye of faith, (as Dan. ii. 7.) the presumptuous ones looked towards it with an eye of pride, and flattered themselves with a conceit that they should shortly return thither again; they that remained corresponded with the captives, and, it is said, they were willing with him, and this would yet well, as long as Jerusalem was standing in its strength; and perhaps upbraided those with their folly who had surrendered at first; therefore, to take down this conceit among the captives, the prophet, in this chapter, a very clear and affecting foresight of the besieging of Jerusalem by the Chaldean army, and the calamities which would attend that siege. Two things are here represented to him in vision, I. The fortifications that should be raised against the city; this is signified by the prophet's laying siege to the portraiture of Jerusalem, (v. 1.) and lying first on one side, and then on the other side, being the sense of the verse. II. Famine, which is signified by his eating very coarse fare, and confining himself to a little of it, so long as this typical representation lasted, v. 9. 17.

1. Thou also, son of man, take thee a tile, and lay it before thee, and pourray upon it the city, even Jerusalem: 2. And lay siege against it, and build a fort against it, and cast a mount against it; set the camp also against it, and set battering-rams against it round about. 3. Moreover, take thou unto thee an iron pan, and set it for a wall of iron between thee and the city; and set thy face against it, and it shall be besieged, and thou shalt lay siege against it. This shall be a sign to the house of Israel. 4. Lie thou also upon thy left side, and lay the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it: according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon it thou shalt bear their iniquity. 5. For I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity, according to the number of the days, three hundred and ninety days: so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel. 6. And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days: I have appointed thee each day for a year. 7. Therefore thou shalt set thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem, and thine arm shall be uncovered, and thou shalt prophesy against it 8. And, behold, I will lay bands upon thee, and thou shalt not turn thee from one side to another, till thou hast ended the days of thy siege.

The prophet is here ordered to represent to himself and others, by signs which would be proper to strike the fancy and to affect the mind, the siege of Jerusalem; and this amounted to a prediction.

I. He was ordered to engrave a draft of Jerusalem upon a tile, v. 1. It was Jerusalem's honour, that while she kept her integrity, God had given her upon the palms of his hands, (Isa. lxxix. 16.) and the names of the tribes were engraved in precious stones on them; and an engraving was made, and now the faithful city is become a harlot, a worthless, brittle tile or brick is thought good enough to pourray it upon. This the prophet must lay before him, that the eye may affect the heart.

II. He was ordered to build little forts against this portraiture of the city, resembling the batteries raised by the besiegers, v. 2. Between the city that was besieged and himself that was the besieger he was to set up an iron pan, as an iron wall, v. 3. This represented the inflexible resolution of both sides; the Chaldeans resolved, whatever it cost them, that they would make themselves masters of the city, and would never quit it till they had conquered it; on the other side, the Jews resolved never to capitulate, but to hold out to the last extremity.

III. He was ordered to lay upon him an iron pan, as it were to surround it, representing the Chaldean army lying before it to block it up, to keep the meat from going in, and the mouths from going out. He was to lie on his left side three hundred and ninety days, (v. 3.) about thirteen months; the siege of Jerusalem is computed to last eighteen months, (Jer. iii. 4.) but if we deduct from that fifteen months which was the length of the enemy's stay upon the approach of Pharaoh's army, (Jer. xxxvii. 5-8.) the number of the days of the close siege will be three hundred and ninety. Yet that also had another signification; three hundred and ninety days, according to the prophetic dial, signified three hundred and ninety years; and when the prophet lies so many days on his side, he bears the iniquity of the Chaldean army, which, with the house of Israel, the ten tribes, had borne three hundred and ninety years, reckoning from their first apostasy under Jeroboam to the destruction of Jerusalem, which completed the ruin of those small remains of them that had incorporated with Judah. He is then to lie forty days upon his right side, and so long to bear the iniquity of the house of Judah, the kingdom of the two tribes, because the measure-filling sins of that people were these which they were guilty of during the last forty years before their captivity, since the thirteenth year of Josiah, when Jeremiah began to prophesy, Jer. i. 1, 2. Or, as some reckon it, since the eighteenth, when the book of the law was found, and the people renewed the covenant which the house of Israel, the kingdom of the two tribes, had persisted in their impieties and idolatries, notwithstanding they had such a prophet, and such a prince, and were brought into the bond of such a covenant, what could be expected but ruin without remedy? Judah, that had such helps and advantages for reformation, fills the measure of its iniquity in less time than Israel does. Now we are not to think that the prophet lay upon his right side night and day upon his side; but every day, for so many days together, at a certain time of the day, when he received visitors, and company came in, he was found lying three hundred and ninety days on his left side, and forty days on his right side, before his portraiture of Jerusalem, which all that saw might easily un derstand to mean the close besieging of that city, and people would be flocking in daily, some for curiosity, and some for conscience, at the hour appointed, to see it, and to make their different remarks upon what they saw.

His being found constantly on the same side, as if bands were laid upon him, (as indeed they were by the divine command,) so that he could not turn him from one side to another till he had ended the days of the siege, did plainly represent the close and constant continuance of the besiegers about the city during that number of days, till they had gained the place.

IV. He was ordered to prosecute the siege with vigour; (v. 7.) Thou shalt set thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem, as wholly intent upon it, and resolved to carry it; so the Chaldeans would be, and neither bribed nor forced to withdraw from it. Nobuchadnezzar's resentments of Zedekiah's treachery in breaking his league with him, made him very furious in pushing on this siege, that he might chastise the insolence of that faithless prince and people; and this army promised themselves a rich booty of that pompous city, so that both set their faces against it, for they were very resolute. Nor were they less active and industrious, exerting themselves to the utmost in all the operations of the siege, which the prophet was to represent by the uncovering of his arm; or, as some read it, the stretching out of his arm; too little to be a mere figure of speech, and too little to make them bear his name, as in chapter x. 9. When God is about to do some great work, he is said to make bare his arm, Is. lii. 10. In short, the Chaldeans will go about their business, and go on in it, as men in earnest, who resolve to go through with it.

Now, I. This is intended to be a sign to the house of Israel, (v. 3.) both to them in Babylon, who would be sure to receive it, and then to them also who remained in their own land, who would hear the report of it. The prophet was dumb, and could not speak; (ch. iii. 26.) but as his silence had a voice, and upbraided the people with their deafness, so even God then left not himself without witness, but ordered him to make signs, as dumb men used to do, and as Zacharias did when he was dumb, as it were to declare what he had to say with apparent force. Thus, he that was the mind of God, to the people. And thus likewise the people were upbraided with their stupidity and dullness, that they were not capable of being taught as men of sense are, by words, but must be taught as children are, by pictures, or as deaf men are, by signs. Or, perhaps, they are hereby upbraided with their malice against the prophet: had he spoken in words at length what was signified by those figures, they would have entangled him with his own words. A common saying, that whoever would be heard, must talk, would have indicted him for treasurable expressions, for they knew how to make a man an offender for a word; (Isa. xxix. 21.) to avoid which he is ordered to make use of signs. Or, the prophet made use of signs for the same reason that Christ made use of parables, that hearing they might hear, and not understand, and seeing they might see, and understand what was plain, and therefore shall be taught by that which is difficult; and herein the Lord was righteous.

2. Thus the prophet prophesies against Jerusalem; (v. 7.) and there were those who not only understood it so, but were the more affected with it by its propriety so represented; for images to the eye commonly make a deeper impression upon the mind than words can; and for this reason sacraments are instituted to represent divine things, that we might see and believe, might see and be affected with those things; and we may expect this benefit by them, and a blessing to go along with them, while (as the prophet here) we make use only of such signs as God himself has expressly appointed, which, we must conclude, are the fittest. Note, The power of imagination, if it be rightly used, and kept under the direction of reason and faith, may be of good use to kindle and excite them in devout affections, as it was here to Ezekiel and his attendants. Methinks I see so and so, myself dying, time expiring, the world on fire, the dead rising, the great tribunal set, and the like, may have an exceedingly good influence upon us: for fancy is like fire, a good servant, but a bad master.

3. This whole transaction has that in it which the prophet speaks of, that by a splendid colour of reason, have hesitated at, and excepted against, and yet, in obedience to God's command, and in execution of his office, he did it according to order. (1.) It seemed childish and ludicrous, and beneath his gravity, and there were those that would ridicule him for it; but he knew the divine appointment put honour enough upon that which otherwise seemed mean, to save his reputation in the doing of it. (2.) It was tedious and tiresome to do as he did; but our ease and credit must be sacrificed to our duty, and we must never call God's service in any instance of it a hard service. (3.) It could not but he very much against the grain with him to appear thus against Jerusalem, the city of God, the holy city, to act as an enemy against a place to which he was so good a friend; but he is a prophet, and must follow his instructions to the letter, and must not only preach the ruin of a sinful place, though its welfare is what he passionately desires, and earnestly prays for.

4. All this that the prophet says before the children of his people concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, is designed to bring them to repentance, by showing them sin, the provoking cause of this destruction, sin, the ruin of that once flourishing city, much more than words could be expected to make them hate sin, and turn from it; while he thus in lively colours describes the calamity with a great deal of pain and uneasiness to himself, he is bearing the iniquity of Israel and Judah; "Look here," (says he,) "and see what work sin makes, what an evil and bitter thing it is to depart from God; this comes of sin, your sin and the sin of your fathers; let that sin there be the daily matter of your sorrow and shame now in your captivity, that you may make your peace with God, and he may return in mercy to you." But observe, It is a day of punishment for a year of sin; I have appointed thee each day for a year. The siege is a calamity of three hundred and ninety days, in which God reckons for the iniquity of three hundred and ninety years; justly therefore do they acknowledge that God had punished them less than their iniquity deserved, Ezra ix. 13. But let impenitent sinners know that though now God is long-suffering toward them, in the other world there is an everlasting punishment. When God laid bands upon the prophet, it was to show them how they were bound with the cords of their own transgression, (Lam. i. 14.) and therefore they were made to see the contempt of their High Priest.

But we may well think of the prophet's case with compassion, when God laid upon him the bands of duty, as he does on all his ministers, 1 Cor. ix. 16. Necessity is laid upon me, and we unto me if I preach not the gospel; and yet men laid upon him bonds of restraint; (ch. iii. 25.) but under both it is satisfaction enough that they are serving the interests of God's kingdom among men.

9. Take thou also unto thee wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentiles, and millet, and fitches, and put them in one vessel, and make thee bread thereof according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon thy side; three hundred and ninety days shalt thou eat thereof. 10. And thy meat which thou shalt eat shall be by weight, twenty shekels a day: from time to time shalt thou eat it. 11. Thou shalt drink also water by measure, the sixth part of a hin: from time to time shalt thou drink. 12. And thou shalt eat it as barley-cakes, and thou shalt bake it with dung that cometh out of man, in their sight. 13. And the Lord said, Even thus shall the children of Israel eat their defiled bread among the Gentiles, whither I will drive them. 14. Then said I, Ah Lord God! behold, my soul hath not been polluted; for from my youth up, even till now, have I not eaten of that which dieth of itself, or is torn in pieces; neither came there abominable flesh into my mouth. 15. Then he said unto me, Lo, I have given thee cow's dung for man's dung, and thou shalt prepare thy bread therewith. 16. Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, behold, I will break the staff of bread in Jerusalem; and they shall eat bread by weight, and with care; and they shall drink water by measure, and with astonishment. 17. That they may want bread and water, and be astonished one with another, and consume away for their iniquity.

The best exposition of this part of Ezekiel's prediction of Jerusalem's desolation is Jeremiah's Lamentation of it, Lam. iv. 3, 4, 8c. and ch. v. 10, where he pathetically describes the terrible famine that was in Jerusalem during the siege, and the sad effects of it. The prophet here, to affect the people with the foresight of it, must confine himself for 390 days to coarse fare and short commons, and that ill-dressed, for they should want both food and fuel. 1. His meat, for the quality of it, was to be of the worst bread, made of but little wheat and barley, and the rest of beans, and lentiles, and millet, and fitches, such as we feed horses or fatten hogs with, and this is mixed, as mill-corn, or as that in the beggar's bag, that has a dish full of one sort of corn at one house, and of another at another house; of such corn as this must the prophet's bread be made, while he underwent the fatigue of lying on his side, and needed something better to support him, v. 9. Note, It is our wisdom not to be too fond of dainties and pleasant bread, because we know not what hard meat we may be tied to, nor may be glad of, be very sorry for, any time we have not more than we deserve, and therefore must not be despised or wasted, nor must those that use it be looked upon with disdain, because we know not what may be our own lot. 2. For the quantity of it, it was to be of the least that a man could be kept alive with; to signify that the beshamed should be reduced to short allowance, and should hold out till all the bread in the city was spent, Jer. xxxvii. 21. The prophet must eat but twenty shekels weight of bread a day, (v. 10.) that was about ten ounces; and he must drink but the sixth part of a hin of water, that was half a pint, about eight ounces, v. 11. The stint of the Lessian diet is fourteen ounces of meat, and sixteen of drink. The prophet in Babylon had bread enough and to spare, and was by the river-side, where there was plenty of water; and yet, that he might confirm his own prediction, and be a sign to the children of Israel, God obliges him to live thus sparingly, and he submits to it. Note, God's servants must learn to endure hardness, and to deny themselves the use of lawful delights, when they may thereby be shielded by necessity. And in times of public distress and calamity, it will becomes us to make much of our selves, as those that drank wine in bowls, and were not grieved for the affliction of Joseph, Amos vi. 4.-6.

II. For the dressing of it, he must bake it with man's dung, (v. 12.) that must be dried, and serve for fuel to heat his oven with; the thought of it would almost turn one's stomach; yet the coarse bread, thus baked, he must eat as barley-cakes, as freely as if it were the same bread he had been used to. This nauseous piece of cookery he must exercise publicly in their sight, that they might be the more affected with the calamity approaching, which was signified by it; that in the extremity of the famine they should not only have to do with filthiness, but daintiness, but nothing that was cleanly, but about them, they must take up with what they could get. To the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet.

This circumstance of the sign, the baking of his bread with man's dung, the prophet with submission humbly desired might be dispensed with; (v. 14.) it seemed to have in it something of a ceneminal pollution, and a mark was a land that was defiled be covered with earth, that God might see no unclean thing in their camp. Deut. xxviii. 13, 14. And must he go gather a thing so offensive, and use it in the dressing of his meat in the sight of the people? "Ah Lord God," says he, "behold, my soul hath not been polluted, and I am afraid lest by this he be polluted." Note, The pollution of the soul by sin is what good people dread most, and what they would yet sometimes tender consciences fear it without cause, and perplex themselves with scruples about lawful things, as the prophet here, who had not yet learned that it is not that which goes into the mouth that defiles the man, Matt. xv. 11. But observe, He does not plead, "Lord, from my youth I have been brought up delicately, and never used to any thing but what was clean and nice;" (and there were those who were so brought up, who in the siege of Jerusalem did embrace dunghills, Lam. iv. 5.) but that he had been brought up conscientiously, and had never eaten any thing that was forbidden by the law, that died of itself, or was torn in pieces; "And therefore, Lord, do not put this upon me now." Thus Peter pleaded, (Acts x. 14.) Lord, I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean. Note, It will be comfortable to us, when we are reduced to hardships, if our hearts can witness for us that we have always been careful to abstain from sin, even from little sins, and the appearance of evil. Whatever God commands us, we may be sure is good; but if we be put upon any thing that we apprehend God would be angry with, we should argue against it, from this consideration, that He had always preserved our purity—and shall we lose it now? Now, because Ezekiel with a manifest tenderness of conscience made this scruple, God dispensed with him in this manner. Note, Those who have power in their hands, should not be rigorous in pressing their commands upon those that are dissatisfied concerning them, yea, though their dissatisfaction groundless, or arising from education and long usage, but should recede from them rather than grieve or offend the weak, or put a stumbling-block before them; in conformity to the example of God's condescension to Ezekiel, though we are sure his authority is in this that he and all his commands wise and judicious. God allowed Ezekiel to use cow's dung instead of man's dung, v. 15. This is an implicit reflection upon man, as intimating that, he being polluted with sin, his filthiness is more nauseous and odious than that of any other creature. How much more abominable and filthy is man? Job xv. 16.

Now this sign is particularly explained here; it signified 1. That those who remained in Jerusalem should be brought to extreme misery for want of necessary food; all supplies being cut off by the besiegers, the city would soon find a want of the country, for the king himself is served of the field; and thus the staff of bread would be broken in Jerusalem, v. 16. God would not only take away from the bread its power to nourish, so that they shall eat, and not be satisfied, (Lev. xxvi. 26.) but would take away the bread itself, Isa. iii. 1. So that what little remained should be eaten by weight, so much a-day, so much a-head, that they might have an equal share, and might make it last as long as possible. But to what purpose when they could not make it last always; and the besieged must be tired out before the besiegers? They shall eat and drink with care, to make it go as far as might be, and with astonishment, which made them appear to be more hungry, and increased the astonishment; and the event shall be as bad as their fears; they cannot make it worse than it is, for they shall consume away for their iniquity; multitudes of them shall die of famine, a lingering death, worse than that by the sword; (Lam. iv. 9.) they shall die so as to feel themselves die; and it is sin that brings all this misery upon them; They shall consume away for their iniquity; God will take vengeance of it. They shall continue hardened and impudent, and shall die in their sins, which is more miserable than to die on a dunghill.

Now, (1.) Let us see here what woful work sin makes with a people, and acknowledge the righteousness of God herein. Time was when Jerusalem was filled with the finest of the wheat; (v. cxlvii. 14.) but now it would be glad of the coarsest, and cannot have it. Fruits of bread, as it was one of Jerusalem's mercies, so it became one of her sins, Ezek. xvi. 49. The plenty was abused to luxury and excess, which was therefore thus justly punished with famine. It is a righteous thing with God to deprive us of such enjoyment which we have made the food and fuel of our lusts.

(2.) Let us see what reason we have to bless God for the wholesome fruits of the earth, but for the freedom of commerce, that the husbandman can have money for his bread, and the tradesman bread for his money; that there is abundance not only in the field, but in the market, that those who live in cities and great towns, though they sow not, neither do they reap, are yet fed from day to day with food commodious, and suited to their condition. God sees to it that all those who were carried into captivity should be forced to eat their defiled bread among the Gentiles, (v. 13.) to eat meat made up by Gentile hands, otherwise than according to the law of the Jewish church, which they were always taught to call defiled, and which they would not, as great an aversion to as a man would have to bread prepared with dung, that is, (as perhaps it may be understood,) kneaded and moulded with dung. Daniel and his fellows confined themselves to flesh and water, rather than they would eat the portion of the king's meat assigned them, because they apprehended it would defile them; (Dan. i. 8.) or, they should be forced to eat amid meat, such as their oppressors would allow them in their slavery, and such as formerly they would have scorned to touch. Because they served not God with cheerfulness in the abundance of all things, God will make them serve their enemies in the want of all things.

CHAP. V.

In this chapter we have a further, and no less terrible, denunciation of the judgments of God, which were coming with all speed and force upon the Jewish nation, which would utterly ruin it; for when God judges he will overcome. This destruction of Judah and Jerusalem is here. 1. Represented by a sign, the cutting, and burning, and scattering of hair, v. 1-4. II. That sign is expounded, and applied to Jerusalem. 1. Sin is charged upon Jerusalem as the cause of this desolation; contempt of God's law, (v. 5-7.) and profanation of his sanctuary, v. 11. 2. Wrath is threatened, great wrath, (v. 8-10.) a variety of miseries, (v. 12, 16, 17.) such as should be their reproach and ruin, v. 13-15.

1. And thou, son of man; take thee a sharp knife, take thee a barber's razor, and cause it to pass upon thy head, and upon thy beard; then take thee balances to weigh, and divide the hair. 2. Thou shalt burn with fire a third part in the midst of the city, when the days of the siege are fulfilled; and thou shalt take a third part, and smite about it with a knife; and a third part thou shalt scatter in the wind: and I will draw out a sword after them. 3. Thou shalt also take thereof a few in number, and bind them in thy skirts. 4. Then take of them again, and cast them into the midst of the fire, and burn them in the fire; for thereof shall a fire come forth into all the house of Israel.

We have here the sign by which the utter destruction of Jerusalem is set forth; and here, as before, the prophet is himself the sign, that the people might see how much he affected himself with, and interested himself in, the case of Jerusalem, and how near it lay to his heart, even then when he foretold the desolations of it; he was so much concerned about it as to take what was done to it as done to himself, so far was he from desiring the woful day. 1. He must shave off the hair of his head and beard, (v. 1.) which signified God's utter rejecting and abandoning of that people, as a useless, worthless generation, such as could well be spared, nay, such as would be his honour to part with; his judgment and punishment in the last day, in cutting them off from were, this sharp knife and this razor, that were proper to be made use of, and would do execution. Jerusalem had been the head, but, being degenerated, was become as the hair, which, when it grows thick and long, is but a burden which a man wishes to get clear of, as God of the sinners in Zemar, All I will cause me of mine adversaries, Isa. i. 24. Ezekiel did not cut off their hair only which was superfluous, but cut it all off, denoting the full end that God would make of Jerusalem. The hair that would not be trimmed and kept neat and clean by the admonitions of the pro-pless, must be all shaved off by an utter destruction. Those will be ruined that will not be reformed.

2. He must... and divide it into three parts. This intimates the very exact direction of God's judgments according to equity, (by him men and their actions are weighed in the unerring balance of truth and righteousness,) and the proportion which divine justice observes in punishing some by one judgment and others by another; one way or other, they shall all be met with. Some make the shaving of the hair to denote the loss of their liberty and of their honour: it was looked upon as a mark of ignominy, as in the disgrace Haman put on David's ambassadors; it denotes also the loss of the balance of joy. He that shews them his head upon occasion of great mourning; I may add the loss of their Naziriteship, for the shaving of the head was a period to that vow, (Num. vi. 18.) and Jerusalem was now no longer looked upon as a holy city.

3. He must... so that it might all be destroyed or dispersed, v. 2. (1.) One third part must be burnt in the midst of the city, denoting the multitudes that should perish by famine and pestilence, and perhaps many in the conflagration of the city, when the days of the siege were fulfilled; or the laying of that glorious city in ashes might well be looked upon as a third part of the destruction threatened, (2.) Another third part was to be cut in pieces with a knife, representing the manner in which some were slain by the sword, in their sallies out upon the besiegers, and especially when the city was taken by storm, the Chaldeans being then most furious, and the Jews most feeble. (3.) Another third part was to be scattered in the wind, denoting the carrying away of some into the land of the conqueror, and the flight of others into the neighbouring countries for shelter, so that they were hurled into some one way and some another, like loose hairs in the wind. But lest they should think that this dispersion would be their escape, God adds, I will draw out a sword after them; so that, wherever they go, evil shall pursue them. Note, God has variety of judgments wherewith to accomplish the destruction of a sinful people, and to make an end when begins.

4. He must preserve a small quantity of the third sort that were to be scattered in the wind, and bind them in his skirts, as one would bind that which he is very mindful and careful of, v. 3. This signified perhaps that little handful of people which were left under the government of Gedaliah, who, it was hoped, would keep possession of the land when the body of the people was carried into captivity. Thus God would have done well for them if they would have done well for themselves. But these few that were reserved, must be taken, and cast into the fire, v. 4. When Gedaliah and his friends were slain, the people that put themselves under his protection were scattered, some gone into Egypt, others carried off by the Chaldeans, and in short the land was taken from them; then this was fulfilled, for out of those combustions a fire came forth into all the house of Israel, who, as fuel upon the fire, kindled and consumed one another. Note, It is ill with a people when those are taken away in wrath that seemed to be marked for monuments of mercy, for then there is no remnant or escaping, none shut up or left.

5. Thus saith the Lord God, This is Jerusalem: I have set it in the midst of the nations and countries that are round about her. And she hath changed my judgments into wickedness more than the nations, and my statutes more than the countries.

tries that are round about her; for they have refused my judgments and my statutes, they have not walked in them. 7. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Because ye multiplied more than the nations that are round about you, and have not walked in my statutes, neither have kept my judgments, neither have done according to the judgments of the nations that are round about you; 8. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I, even I, am against thee, and will execute judgments in the midst of thee, in the sight of the nations. 9. And I will do in thee that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like; because of all these abominations. 10. Therefore the fathers shall eat the sons in the midst of thee, and the sons shall eat their fathers; and I will execute judgments in thee, and the whole remnant of thee will I scatter into all the winds. 11. Wherefore, as I live, saith the Lord God, Surely, because thou hast defiled my sanctuary with all thy detestable things, and with all thy abominations, therefore will I also diminish thee; neither shall mine eye spare, neither will I have any pity. 12. A third part of thee shall die with the pestilence, and with famine shall they be consumed in the midst of thee; and a third part shall fall by the sword round about thee; and I will scatter a third part into all the winds, and I will draw out a sword after them. 13. Thus shall mine anger be accomplished, and I will cause my fury to rest upon them, and I will be comforted: and they shall know that I the Lord have spoken it in my zeal, when I have accomplished my fury in them. 14. Moreover, I will make thee waste, and a reproach among the nations that are round about thee, in the sight of all that pass by. 15. So it shall be a reproach and a taunt, an instruction and an astonishment, unto the nations that are round about thee, when I shall execute judgments in thee, in anger and in fury, and in furious rebukes. I the Lord have spoken it. 16. When I shall... they shall bereave thee; and pestilence and blood shall pass through thee; and I will bring the sword upon thee. I the Lord have spoken it.

We have here the explanation of the foregoing similitude: This is Jerusalem. Thus it is usual in Vol. iv.—4 H scripture-language to give the name of the thing signified to the sign; as when Christ said, This is my body. The prophet's head, which was to be shaved, signified Jerusalem, which by the judgments of God was now to be stripped of all its ornaments, to be emptied of all its inhabitants, and to be destitute of all its beauty. They that are thus stripped of their privileges and the body of the laws of God, should not be surprised that they are thus stripped of the privileges of the body of Christ. 2. The head of one that was a priest, a holy man, was fittest to represent Jerusalem the holy city. Now the contents of these verses are nearly the same with what we have often met with, and still shall, in the writings of the prophets. Here we have,

I. The privileges of Jerusalem were most honourable, (v. 5.) I have set it in the midst of the nations and countries round about her, and those famous nations, and very considerable. Jerusalem was not situated in a remote, obscure corner of the world, far from neighbours, but in the midst of kingdoms that were popular, polite, and civilized, famed for learning, arts, and sciences, and which then made the greatest figure in the world. But there seems to be more in it than this. Jerusalem being the judgment and preferred among the neighbouring nations, and their cities; it was set in the midst of them as excelling them all; this holy mountain was exalted above all the hills, Is. ii. 2. Why leap ye, ye high hills? This is the hill which God desires to dwell in, Ps. lxxxix. 16. Jerusalem was a city upon a hill, conspicuous and illustrious, which all the neighbouring nations had an eye upon, some looking with envy, others with respect. Jerusalem was designed to have a great influence upon the nations and countries round about, was set in the midst of them as a candle upon a candlestick, to spread the light of divine revelation, which she was blessed with, to all the dark corners of the neighbouring nations, that from them it might diffuse itself further, even to the ends of the earth. Jerusalem was set in the midst of them nations, to be as the heart in the body, to invigorate this dead world with a divine life, as well as to enlighten this dark world with a divine light, to be an example of every thing that was good. The nations that observed what excellent statutes and judgments they had, concluded them to be a wise and understanding people, (Deut. iv. 6.) to be consulted as an oracle, as they were in Solomon's time, 1 Kings iv. 34. And when the Gentile world made this a right use of it, what a blessing had Jerusalem been to all the nations about! But, failing to be so, the accomplishment of this intention was reserved for its latter days, when out of Zion went forth the gospel-law, and the word of the Lord Jesus from Jerusalem; and there repentance and remission began to be preached, and thence the preachers of them went forth into all nations. And when that was done, Jerusalem was levelled with the ground. Note. When places and persons are made great, it is with design that they may do good, and that those about them may be the better for them; that their light may shine before men.

II. The provocations Jerusalem was guilty of. A very high charge is here drawn up against that city, and proved beyond contradiction sufficient to justify God in seizing his privileges, and putting it under military execution. 1. She had not walked in God's statutes, nor kept his judgments; (v. 7.) nay, they had refused his judgments and his statutes, (v. 6.) they did not do their duty, nay, they would not, they said that they would not: those statutes and judgments which their neighbours admired, they despised, and which their enemies directed their gaze, they turned behind their back. Note. A contempt of the word and law of God opens a door to all manner of iniquity. God's statutes are the terms on which he deals with men; they that refuse his terms, cannot expect his favours.

2. She had changed God's judgments into wickedness, (v. 6.) a very high expression of their profligacy, that they had not only broken God's laws, but had so perverted and abused them, that they had made them, even to their very principles, to be the very index of their wickedness; they introduced idolatries and unholy arts, and usages of the heathen, instead of God's institutions; this was changing the truth of God into a lie, (Rom. i. 25.) and the glory of God into shame, Ps. iv. 2. Note, Those that have been well educated, if they live ill, put the highest affront imaginable upon God, as if he were the Patron of sin, and his judgments turned into wickedness.

3. She had been worse, even when in her surrounding nations, to whom she should have set a good example; She has changed his judgments, by idolatries and false worship, more than the nations, (v. 6.) and she has multiplied idols and altars, gods and temples, multiplied those things the unity of which was their praise, more than the nations that were round about. Israel's God is one, and his name one; all other nations had more gods than one, and they, not content with this one God, multiplied their gods to that degree, that according to the number of their cities so were their gods, and their altars as heaps in the furrows of the field; so that they exceeded all their neighbours in having gods many and lords many. They corrupted revealed religion more than the Gentiles had corrupted natural religion. Note, If those who have made a profession of religion, and have had a good education, apostatize from it, they are commonly more profane and vicious than those who never made any profession; they have seven other spirits more wicked.

4. She had not done according to the judgments of the nations; (v. 7.) they had not acted toward their God, though he is the only true God, as the Ephraimites and their gods, their altars were false gods; they had not been so observant of him, nor so constant to his. Has a nation changed their gods, or slighted them, so as they have? Jer. ii. 11. Or, it may refer to their morals; instead of reforming their neighbours, they came short of them; and many who were of the un circumcision kept the righteousness of the law better than those who were of the circumcision, Rom. ii. 26, 27. Those who are not so vast as to believe that a nation, according to the judgments of many who had only the light of nature. Note, There are those who are called Christians, who will in the great day be condemned by the better tempers and better lives of sober heathens.

5. The particular crime charged upon Jerusalem is, profaning the holy things, which she had been both intrusted and honoured with; (v. 11.) Thou hast defiled my sanctuary with all thy detestable things, with thine idols and idolatries. The images of their pretended deities, and the groves erected in honour of them, were brought into the temple; and the ceremonies used by idolaters were brought into the worship of God; thus every thing that is sacred was polluted. Note, Idols are detestable things anywhere, but more especially in the sanctuary of God.

III. The punishments that Jerusalem should fall under for these provocations; Shall not God visit for these things? No doubt he shall. The matter of the sentence here passed upon Jerusalem is very dreadful, and the manner of expression makes it yet more so; the judgments are various, and the threatenings are repeated; that one may well say, Who is able to stand in God's sight when once he is angry?

1. God will take this work of punishing Jerusalem into his own hands; and who knows the power of his anger, and what a fearful thing it is to fall into his hands! Observe what a strong emphasis is laid upon it, (v. 8.) I, even I, am against thee. God had been for Jerusalem, to defend and save it; but miserable is its case when he is turned to be its Enemy, and fights against it. If God be against us, the whole creature is at war with us, and nothing can be for us so as to stand us in any stead; *"You think it only the Chaldean army that is against you, but they are God’s hand, or rather the staff in his hand; it is I, even I, that am against thee; not only to speak against thee by prophets, but to act against thee by providence. I will execute judgments in thee, (v. 10.) in the midst of thee, (v. 11.) in the midst of the city; not on the outskirts of the city; nor out on the borders, in but the bowels of the country." Note, Those who will not observe the judgments of God’s mouth, shall not escape the judgments of his hand; and God’s judgments, when they come with commission, will penetrate into the midst of a people; will enter into the soul, into the bowels like water, and like oil into the bones; I will execute judgments. Note, God himself undertakes to execute his own judgments, according to the true and full intent of them; whatever are the instruments, he is the principal Agent.

2. These punishments shall come from his displeasure. As to the body of the people, it shall not be a correction in love, but he will execute judgments in anger, and in fury, and in furious re-buke; (v. 13.) "Mine anger, which has long been withheld, shall now be accomplished, and I will cause my fury to rest upon thee; it shall not only light upon them, but lie upon them, and fill them as vessels of wrath fitted by their own wickedness to destruction: and, justice being hereby glorified, I will be comforted, I will be entirely satisfied in what I have done. The expression is as strong as could be warranted by the sins of men, he is said to be grieved, (Ps. xcv. 10.) so when he is honoured by the destruction, he is said to be comforted. The struggle between mercy and judgment is over, and in this case judgment triumphs, triumphs indeed; for mercy that has been so long abused, is now silent, and gives up the cause, has not a word more to say on the behalf of such an ungrateful, incorrigible people: Mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have any pity, v. 11. Divine compassion defers the punishment, or mitigates it, or supports under it, or shortens it, but here is judgment without mercy, wrath without any mixture or alloy of pity. These expressions are thus sharpened and heightened, perhaps with design to look further, to the vengeance of eternal fire, which some of the destructions wrought in them, and the executions of punishment were typical of, and particularly that of Jerusalem; for surely it is no where on this side hell that this word has its full accomplishment, Mine eye shall not spare, but I will cause my fury to rest. Note, Those who live and die impatient, will perish for ever unpitied; there is a day coming when the Lord will not spare. These punishments shall be public and open; I will execute these judgments in the sight of the nations; (v. 8.) the judgments themselves shall be so remarkable, that all the nations far and near shall take notice of them; they shall be all the talk of that part of the world, and more for the conspicuously the place and people on which they are inflicted. Note, Public sins, as they call for public reproofs, (Them that sin rebuke before all,) so, if those prevail not, they call for public judgments. He strikes them as wicked men in the open sight of others, (Job. xxxiv. 26.) that he may maintain and vindicate the honour of his government, for (as Grothus descants upon it here,) he would be suffer it to be said, See what wicked lives they lead, and how they despise the worshippers of the only true God! And as the publicity of the judgments will redound to the honour of God, so it will serve, (1.) To aggravate the punishment, and to make it lie the more heavy. Jerusalem, being made waste, becomes a reproach among the nations, in the sight of all that passes by, v. 14. Thus in the open sight, and to that great extent of the greater disgrace attends their fall; and that was Jerusalem’s case. The more Jerusalem had been a praise in the earth, the more it is now a reproach and a taunt, v. 15. This she was warned of as much as any thing when her glory commenced, (1 Kings i. 8.) and this was lamented as much as any thing when it was laid in the dust, Lam. ii. 15. (2.) To teach the nations fear before the God of Israel, when they saw what a jealous God he is, and how severely he punishes sin, even in those that are nearest to him. It shall be an instruction to the nations, v. 15. Jerusalem should have taught her neighbours the fear of God by her piety and virtue, but she not doing that, God will teach it them by her ruin; for they have reason to say, If this be done in the green wood, what shall be done in the dry? Judgment begin at the house of God, will it end? If they be thus punished, who only had some idolaters among them, what will become of us who are all idolaters? Note, The destruction of some is designed for the instruction of others. Malefactors are publicly punished, in terror—men—that others may take warning. (3.) A. The consequences, in the kind of them, shall be very severe and grievous. (1.) They shall be such as have no precedent or parallel. Their sins being more provoking than those of others, the judgments executed upon them should be uncommon, (v. 9.) "I will do in thee that which I have not done in thee before, though thou hast long since deserved it; ay, that which I have not done in any other city." Note, Providence is so wise as to be greater than that of Sodom, (Lam. iv. 6.) which was the sorest of all that went before it; nay, it is such as I will not do any more the like, all the circumstances taken in, to any other city, till the like come to be done again to this city, in its final overthrow by the Romans. This is a rhetorical expression of the most grievous judgments, like that character of Hezekiah, that there was none like him, before or after him. (2.) They shall be such as will force them to break the strongest bonds of natural affection to one another, which will be a just punishment of them for their wilful breaking of the bonds of their duty to God; (v. 10.) The fathers shall eat the sons, and the sons shall eat the fathers, through the sword, and through famine, or pestilence; as it shall be done by their barbarous conquerors. (3.) There shall be a complication of judgments, any one of them terrible enough, and desolating; but what then would be the case when they came all together, and in perfection? Some shall be taken away by the plague; (v. 12.) the pestilence shall pass through thee, (v. 17.) sweeping all before it, as the destroying angel; others shall be consumed with famine, or with fire; and many shall be eaten up, and accidentally waste away as men in a consumption; (v. 12.) this is again insisted on; (v. 16.) I will send upon them the evil arrows of famine; hunger shall make them pine, and shall pierce them to the heart, as if arrows, evil arrows, poisoned darts were shot into them; God has many arrows, evil arrows, in his quiver; when some are discharged, he has still more in reserve. I will increase the famine upon you; a famine in a bereaved country may decrease, as fruits spring forth; but a famine in a besieged city will increase of course; yet God speaks of it as his act; "I will increase it, and will break your staff of bread;" will take away the necessary supports of life, will disappoint you of all that which you depend upon, so that there is no remedy, but you must fall. Life here is full of weakness, is hithen, so that, if it have not daily bread for its staff to lean upon, it cannot but sink, and is soon gone if that staff be broken. Others shall fall by the sword round about Jerusalem, when they softly put out upon the besiegers; it is a sword, which God will bring, v. 17. The sword of the Lord, that used to be drawn for Jerusalem's defence, is now a destruction. Others are deserted by evil beasts, which will make a prey of those that fly for shelter to the deserts and mountains; they shall meet their ruin where they expected refuge, for there is no escaping the judgments of God, v. 17. And lastly, those who escape shall be scattered into all parts of the world, into all the winds, (so it is expressed, v. 10, 12.) intimating that they should not only be dispersed, but harrassed, and tossed, and driven to and fro, as chaff before the wind. Nay, and Cain's curse (to be fugitives and vagabonds) is not the worst of it neither, their restless life shall be cut off by a bloody death; I will draw out a sword after them, which shall follow them wherever they go. Evil pursues sinners: and the curse shall come upon them, and overtake them.

5. These punishments will prove their ruin by degrees; they shall be diminished, (v. 11.) their strength and glory shall grow less and less; they shall be bereaved, (v. 17.) emptied of all that which was their joy and confidence. God sends these judgments on purpose to destroy them, v. 16. The arrows are not sent (as those which Jonathan shot) for their direction, but for their destruction. God will accomplish his fiery upon them, (v. 13.) the day of God's patience is over, and the ruin is remediless. Though this prophecy was to have its accomplishment now, in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, yet the executioners not being named here, but the criminal only, (This is Jerusalem,) we may well suppose that it looks further, to the final destruction of that great city by the Romans, when God made a full end of the Jewish nation, and caused his fury to rest upon them.

6. All this is ratified by the divine authority and veracity; I the Lord have spoken it, (v. 15.) and again, v. 17. The sentence is passed by him that is Judge of heaven and earth, whose judgment is according to truth, and the judgments of his hands according to the judgments of his mouth. He has spoken it; he can do it, for with him nothing is impossible. He has spoken it, who will do it, for he is not a man that he should lie. He has spoken it, whom we are bound to hear and heed; whose word dixit—word commands the most serious attention and submissive assent; And they shall know that I the Lord have spoken it, v. 15. There were those who thought it a prophecy that spake it in his delirium; but God will make them know, by the accomplishment of it, that he has spoken it in his zeal. Note, Sooner or later, God's word will prove itself.

CHAP. VI.

In this chapter, we have, I. A threatening of the destruction of Israel for their idolatry, and the destruction of their idols with them, v. 1—7. II. A promise of the gracious return of a remnant of them to God, by true repentance and reformation v. 8—10. III. Directions given to the prophet and others, the Lord's servants, to lament both the iniquities and the calamities of Israel, v. 11—14.

1. And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 2. Son of man, set thy face toward the mountains of Israel, and prophesy against them. 3. And say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God to the mountains and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys, Behold, I, even I will bring a sword upon you, and I will destroy your high places; 4. And your altars shall be desolate, and your images shall be broken; and I will cast down your slain men before your idols. 5. And I will lay the dead carcases of the children of Israel before their idols; and I will scatter your bones round about your altars. 6. In all your dwelling-places the cities shall be laid waste, and the high places shall be desolate; that your altars may be laid waste and made desolate, and your idols may be broken and cease, and your images may be cut down, and your works may be abolished. 7. And the slain shall fall in the midst of you; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.
